Topics of the Time.

The annual college contest of physical endurance has just transpired on Saratoga Lake with more competitors, betting and newspaper attention than ever. For the patrons of the thirteen institutions entering the race and the score, more or less, that would be glad to, the time, energy and the cash spent in eight months rigid training suggest a question of utility. That the racers suffer in general culture from undue attention to big muscles and deep chests could be endured if thereby they could raise the standard of physical culture throughout our colleges. But the very fact of their attainment acts as a check in this direction; for the weak student finds nothing in their record but discouragement. There is truly a great lack of physical development among students, but wherein there is encouragement to hope that this may be remedied by an annual spurt at oars by two or three score trained athletes does not appear. The benefit cannot overbalance surely the immoral influence of a gambling crowd. The chief object of these college regattas seems to be a first class advertisement for a low grade of popularity, and for dull heads and full pockets.

The declaration of independence from the white race on the 4th of July celebration, by the President of a burst ed Freedman's Savings Bank at Washington and another gentleman who made a failure as President of Howard University, would at first appear rather amusing than noticeable. But the character and influence of the speakers, Frederick Douglas and Prof. Langston, gives importance to the fact. It is no doubt true, as these gentlemen say, that their colored brethren are being accustomed to lean upon the assistance of the North and many of them look upon this dependence as unmanly. But whatever there may be in this idea it does not warrant Mr. Douglas in charging knavery upon the missionary associations and teachers who have nobly aided his race. The election of Mr. Strieby, one of secretaries of the American Missionary Association, to the Presidency of Howard University in place of Langston, is the immediate occasion of this outbreak of discontent. It cannot last, but may cause great mischief, by encouraging a like feeling among the black race. The publication of a newspaper in their exclusive interest and their demands in some sections of the South for an equal division of the offices of trust and profit is establishing a color line more firmly than the frantic efforts of Southern whites.

Prophesy and assertion to the contrary notwithstanding the temperance agitation of three years past has proved successful to a remarkable degree. And of this we need no further witness than the National Brewers' Association lately held in Cincinnati. The chairman of that body said in his address:

"For the first time within the history of this association it has to be stated that the business has not only not increased during the preceding fiscal year, but that it has actually decreased."

The interesting details of this decrease are as follows, from another address:

"The local option law of Pennsylvania reduced the number of breweries in that State from five hundred in 1873 to three hundred and forty-six in 1874, thus destroying one hundred and fifty-four breweries in one year. In Michigan it is even worse, for of two hundred and two breweries in 1873 only sixty eight remained in 1874. In Ohio the crusaders destroyed sixty-eight out of two hundred and ninety-six breweries. Utah alone reports an increase in the number of breweries. In Indiana the Baxter law stopped sixty-six out of one hundred and fifty-eight, or more than one third of the whole number; in Illinois the decrease is thirty-seven in two hundred and ten; in Missouri, thirty-eight in one hundred and thirty; in New York, one hundred and thirty-two in four hundred and eighty-one; in Massachusetts, nine in forty-nine; in New Jersey, twenty-seven in eighty-one; in Kentucky, nineteen in fifty-three; in Minnesota, twenty-three in one hundred and thirty-two; in Iowa, seventy-nine in two hundred and eighty."

Here we have, in the single item of breweries, a slaughter of over seven hundred manufactories of death and sin, as the result of temperance agitation—a sure answer to the prayers and cross-bearing labors of our Christian women. In proportion to our faith and works may we who look for the deliverance of mankind from the spiritual bestowment of the lodge-worship see that evil abate.

Chicago Pulpit and Press.

"The Rev. Henry Morgan, a somewhat notorious preacher of Boston, has offered $200 in prizes for the best essays on "Why men don't go to church—What is the remedy?" We submit our essay right here: Men do not avoid church because the clergy have not talent or culture; neither that their sermons lack finish or depth. It is because the Christian clergy do not teach what they are advertised to do—Christianity; or, preaching it, do not enforce it by that electricity of spirit which comes only from the constant friction of the soul 'gainst the wheel of prayer—in private, not in public. Mr. Moody is an example. He is a preacher who fills the bill as advertised, and furnishes the right kind of electricity in his sermons; consequently no one stays away from church when he is around, unless the church is too small. Will Mr. Morgan please forward that $200?

Editor Christian Cynosure:

I notice the above item in the Chicago Daily Journal. This witness is true. And I fear the contemptuous tone of the secular press in regard to our ministry and churches finds an echo in the minds of readers generally. Sneering and skeptical editors publish the sermons of scholarly preachers under head lines indicating that they look upon the Sabbath services of the Chicago pulpit, as for the most part, a splendid sham, or the hypocritical travesty of some obsolete tragedy. Their words often indicate patronizing approval of the literary merit of the essay, if it ignores the cancer of human sin and the cross of Christ as the hope of the sinner. This item of the Journal is of a different shading; and it ought to be said that the Journal's notices, generally, have not the jeerang, demoniac aspect of the worst of our dailies. All this indicates that the acute observer, infidel though he may be, knows that the religion of our fashionable churches and ministers is not a true presentment of the religion of the New Testament.

But while this item of the Journal is true—more so than any that will get the prize of Mr. Morgan—yet it is not the whole truth; nor does it indicate a remedy for the present worldliness and hollowness of the cultured orthodox pulpit. Our very culture becomes a bane and not a blessing. It is so managed that it educates our young men out of sympathy with the common people, who heard Christ gladly, as they do such men as Moody and Major Whittle; and worse than that, it teaches "faith without works, which is dead." I do not mean such works as building churches and supporting ministers or professors in a gentlemanly style. Our agents and secretaries—some of whom are excellent men—become so eloquent on accepted subjects of benevolence, and on the suffering condition of our sinecure institutions, that many poor Christians work hard to lift a burden which is touched delicately by the fingers of those who receive the money, drive fine horses, and seek health in a vacation from exhausting labor of three hours per day. Faith without works is orthodoxy without personal self-denying duty. It is the Gospel without its reformatory labor conjoined. It is to leave labor for sinners, to preach essays to worldly saints. Such a gospel is a cheat and a lie. It sings a lullaby to respectable men who are sleeping over the precipices of Gehenna. Since the beginning of the world the true prophets, from Isaiah to Paul, and from Paul to Edwards and Finney and Moody and Bundy have been those who reproved the churches of sin, thus producing repentance and reform. Since the world began reform has been the evidence of true religion. No revival of religion in individual hearts or in churches ever occurred without accompanying reform from evil and worldly practices. Christian reform is the natural and constant result of spiritual religion, just as conformity to the world is the result of hypocrisy and Phariseeism in the pulpit.

What then do we need? and what ought we to do?

What we need first and most in the Northwest, is a faithful Christian newspaper like the New York Witness. A paper published at a very cheap rate and circulated among the laymen in all our churches. Our present denominational papers are conducted with ability, and meet the newspaper needs of the people. But they are printed and edited for money, they are merely the exponents of the worldly and literary religion of the times, not of the spiritual religion of Christ. We shall never through these papers be able to get any Christian reform fairly before the people.

Christian reform never gets a hearing through the popular religious press of the land. As in temperance, Anti-masonry, anti-slavery, the Sabbath and other reforms, these papers neither enter nor permit others, through their columns, to enter upon the path of duty. They will favor no Christian reform until it has succeeded through the efforts of faithful witnesses. All reforms must begin where Christ began, with the common people in the country, and work upwards. There is a widespread feeling at the present time that the tendency of popular religion is to the world, that the influence of our cities is corrupting, and that our seminaries and newspapers are giving uncertain sounds that prepare no one for the battle. NATHAN.

AN APPEAL
To the Christians of New Hampshire.

At the last session of the New Hampshire yearly meeting. representing 9,000 communicants of the Free Baptist denomination, held at Farmington June 8th and 10th, the Committee on Resolutions, G. F. Mosher, A. M., editor of the Morning Star, (the organ of the Free Baptist denomination,) Rev. Hosea Quinby, D. D , and Rev. E. W. Ricker, reported the following:

WHEREAS, All oath-bound secret societies, whatever incidental or personal advantages they may seem to afford, are unnecessary for the accomplishment of any good end, therefore

Resolved, That the jealousies which such organizations are calculated to excite, and the ease with which designing men may use them for evil purposes, render it inconsistent and unwise for the disciples of Christ to have any connection with them.

A committee on resolutions more distinguished for unfeigned piety, literary culture and sound judgment seldom ever served the N. H. yearly meeting. The preamble and resolution reported by them were in substance the same as passed by the Freewill Baptist General Conference of 1847, and reaffirmed in 1850 and in 1859. The tone was as inoffensive as possible and the language as mild as fidelity to the truth would permit. And yet the resolution was tabled with a spiteful and indecorous haste seldom if ever witnessed in the New Hampshire yearly meeting. Rev. O. T. Moulton, one of the oldest and most experienced members of the Conference, begged for delay and an opportunity for those who were interested in the resolution to be at least briefly heard. Debate was stifled, the ablest and most devoted ministers in the Conference were gagged, and the resolution tabled by a vote of 14 to 9.

By request of many brethren the writer of this appeal gave notice that those desired to enquire into the moral and religious influence of oath-bound secret societies would tarry for consultation at the close of the Conference. Rev. O. T. Moulton was chosen moderator of the meeting thus called, and the undersigned, clerk. The zealous Masons also tarried and in violation of all parliamentary rules and common worldly fairness, not to speak of Christian courtesy, three of them in turn attempted to glorify Masonry and ridicule its apponents to such length as to render the transaction of any business impossible. They were at last quieted and the meeting adjourned to the close of the evening conference.

At the adjourned meeting it was decided to form a NEW HAMPSHIRE CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION, auxiliary to the National Christian Association, to expose the evils of secret societies. A State committee of five was chosen, of which the undersigned was afterward made chairman, to confer with all other Christians not represented, to invite their co-operation, and to appoint the time and place of holding the first State convention. It is proper that the causes be stated which demand the formation of a New Hampshire Christian Association to expose the evil tendencies of secret societies.

1. The Gospel commands us to "have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness but rather reprove them;" and again: "Be not unequally yoked together with unbelievers."

2. It is also written: "Swear not at all;" and again: "Thou shalt not foreswear thyself." But in defiance of law and Gospel, oath-bound secret societies are decoying our young men and even ministers to trample under foot these plain precepts.

3. Our highest ecclesiastical assemblies have repeatedly and yet without complete success, warned and urged the disciples of Christ to have no connection with oath bound secret societies.

4. Freemasonry from the horrid oath of the Entered Apprentice to the sublimest degree of Masonic blasphemy tends to blunt the conscience, to render truthfulness and sincerity difficult if not impossible, to quench brotherly love and compel partiality among Christians, to undermine the first principles of moralty, to degrade Christ to a level with heathen false prophets, and to extinguish true Christianity from the earth.

Rev. Nathaniel Colver, D. D., one brightest lights of the American pulpit, testifies that when about to become a Royal Arch Mason, it was necessary to take an oath of which this is an extract:

"Furthermore do I promise and swear, that I will aid and assist a companion Royal Arch Mason when engaged in any difficulty; and espouse his cause so far as to extricate him from the same, if in my power, whether he be right or wrong."

Dr. Colver refused to take this iniquitous oath and thereafter bore a faithful testimony against Masonic wickedness. A cloud of witnesses confirm Dr. Colver's statement. Bad as the oaths of the lower degrees are, they are so sugar-coated as to deceive many well-meaning Christians and prevent them from understanding the anti-Christian nature of the institution which they are upholding. Satan has so contrived the snare that men's consciences are gradually blunted and their eyes blinded; his design being to lead them ultimately to reject Christ and the Bible for the idols of Masonry and its profane liturgy. In proof of which we quote from the instructions of one of the higher degrees of Masonry, called "Knights Adepts of the Eagle and of the Sun."

"If you ask me what are the requisite qualities that a Mason must be possessed of TO COME TO THE CENTER OF TRUTH, I answer you, that you must crush the head of the serpent of ignorance. You must shake off the yoke of infant prejudice concerning the mysteries of the reigning RELIGION. Behold, my dear brother, what you must fight against and destroy, before you can come to the knowledge of the true, good and sovereign happiness. Behold this monster which you must conquer, a serpent which we detest as an idol that is adored by the idiot and vulgar under the name of RELIGION.

One more extract from this degree will suffice:

"Question—What signifies the book, with the word Bible written in it? Answer. As the Bible is differently interpreted by the different sects who divide the different parts of the earth: thus THE TRUE SONS OF LIGHT, or children of truth, ought to DOUBT OF EVERYTHING AT PRESENT, as mysterious or metaphysics."

When ministers of the Gospel are sufficiently tamed "by degrees" to receive such instruction as leading to "sovereign happiness" and "the center of truth," no wonder they lose faith in prayer, in the atonement, in the inspiration of the Bible, and either make havoc in the churches by teaching heresy or abandon the pulpit for some more congenial and remunerative calling. The foregoing oaths and and instructions are vouched for by Rev. David Bernard, a worthy Baptist minister and reformed Freemason. That the oaths of the Knights of the Golden Circle who plunged our country into civil war, of the Ku-Klux Klan, those midnight assassins, of the White League murderers, and of Freemasonry, have been correctly revealed no honest investigator need doubt.

5. The secret lodge is practically a rival of the prayer room. Masonic encampments and balls lead astray and corrupt the choice young men of our land.

6. Our halls of legislation and even our courts of justice are invaded by the same poisonous influence. Defaulting thieves walk off unarrested and murderers go unpunished.

7. Freedom of debate in our ecclesiastical and other assemblies and the freedom of the press are in the greatest jeopardy, if not already gone.

8. The grip of a secret clan is becoming more potent to open the door of preferment in church and state than the most conspicuous merit. The same fell influence appears in all the channels of trade and the entire framework of society. As John prophesied, "that no man might buy or sell, save he that had the mark or the name of the beast, or the number of his name."

9. So many men are morally "hocked" by the secret lodge and other kindred influences that in many communities there are three or four women in the church to one man.

10. Our duty as watch-men on the walls of Zion and as Christians demand that we take immediate and effectual measures to explain to young men, in the lodge and outside, the real nature and dangers of secrecy, and especially the anti-Christian character and tendency of Freemasonry.

It may be asked, if these evils may not be removed by preaching the Gospel. We answer: That is the very thing we propose to do. May not the ordinary channels of church labor avail? We propose to use every established means of grace and enlightenment; but the church is almost as much paralyzed, to-day, by the lodge as it was, twenty years ago by slavery. We do not propose to lessen individual effort, but to seek that added strength which comes from concerted and united action. Will it be possible to resist the mighty power of the lodge and release society, state and church from this corrupting influence? Though it were certain we could not succeed in affecting deliverance from this gigantic evil, yet our duty would still be the same, to do all in our power to preserve the pure religion of Christ. But what Christian will admit that the devil is stronger than God? That wrong is mightier than right? Our Lord hath said: "I have overcome the world." We have only to enter into his victory, although it may be necessary for some of us to become partakers also of his sufferings. It is sweet to suffer for Christ and his cause. For "if we suffer with him we shall also reign with him."

The anti-secret movement bears a very striking resemblance to the anti' slavery reform. In that, terrorism and the gag were the only hope of the adversary; so in this. In that, free discussion was utterly prohibited in pulpit, press and forum; so in this. In that, aside from pure selfishness, the argument was all on one side; so in this. In that, the way of deliverance did not beforehand appear, but God opened the way in answer to prayer. So in this, we cannot see first how society is to be delivered from the palsying grasp of secrecy, but God will open the way. Will not this agitation hinder revivals of religion? No; revivals follow the preaching of a pure gospel. We expect the worshipers of secrecy will wince, but in no other way can they be reformed. Did the raving of the craftsmen of Ephesus hinder revivals in Paul's day? Did Luther's protest against the sale of indulgences hinder revivals? Did the testimony of our Puritan fathers check revivals of pure religion? Did the anti-slavery agitation, so far as carried on by Christians, lessen religious interest? Did the bold denunciations of Freemasonry by David Marks, of blessed memory, make fewer the stars in his crown of rejoicing? Is the great revivalist Hammond less successful because he has incurred the abuse and slander of the lodge room by refusing to join in their profane ceremonies? In short, did John the Baptist and our Saviour hinder revivals by opposing wickedness? It is alliance with sin, not opposition to it, that hinders revivals of religion. It was Achan's secret wedge and not Joshua's open testimony for the Lord that caused the defeat at Ai. Our Lord says: "Follow me, and lo, I am with you always."

All who are interested in the formation of a New Hampshire Christian Association, to enlighten the public as to the real character and influence of secret societies, are invited to correspond with the undersigned.

FISHER AMES says: "I will hazard the assertion that no man ever did or ever will become truly eloquent without being a constant reader of the Bible and an admirer of the purity and sublimity of its language."

Rev. J. L. Buchwalter's Address

AT THE IOWA STATE CONVENTION HELD AT CLEAR LAKE, JUNE 29, 1875.

[Published by order of Convention.]

After noticing former important reforms the speaker said: Again another important conflict is now on hand. Namely, that which is being waged against secretism, especially Freemasonry. And this calls for a more particular notice. Because the waves of this struggle are just beginning to rise, and the number willing to stand up for the truth are yet greatly in the minority. Also because our highest interests, civil and religious, are deeply involved. Many people think there is not much in this matter at which to be alarmed. This arises from a want of information, and a knowledge of facts on the subject. Hence the necessity of agitation, that this matter may be brought fully before the people. That organized, obligated and perpetual secretism is an evil in our country, seriously threatening the stability of our free institutions, the sanctity of religion, the purity of the Christian church. is very evident from its principles as revealed by faithful witnesses; and its practical workings as seen in its influence upon society.

Masonry has gathered in a little truth, with a great deal of falsehood. Some things seeming good and right with as much that is bad and very wrong. Hence it is a machinery well calculated to deceive the people. It boldly declares that it is of very ancient origin, claiming that Solomon, Hiram, St. John, and other Bible worthies were among its founders, and zealous patrons; that there was a grand lodge at Jerusalem; that at high noon the Grand Master would resort to the Holy of Holies (a thing utterly forbidden by the law of Moses) to draw diagrams for the workmen. All this is a sham; a grand falsehood. Neither the Bible or any other authentic history gives any account of this thing whatever.

The truth is, speculative Freemasonry dates no farther back than about 150 years, when it originated at a tavern in London, as reliable history testifies. Its boasted benevolence also is nothing but a pretense. Not near as good as that of any insurance company. While the latter applies its money as intended without vain parade, the former spends by far the larger amount for the building of temples, regalia, costly processions, and Grand Lodge taxes. The law of Masons and Odd-fellows both, requires the very opposite of Christian benevolence. By it no old person in dotage, or young person in nonage; no blind, sick, poor, halt or maimed person can become a member of the lodge, consequently can have no claim upon their funds. The very class of persons that most needs help isrejected. Is this benevolence? Indeed, men who have been members of the lodge for years, and paid in large sums of money, and through misfortune became bankrupt, were unable to pay their quarterly dues, have taken sick and died, could not and did not draw a cent of money from these men who are constantly boasting of what they are doing for the needy. Here the trust of these poor dupes did not only fail them in time of real need, but they also had the bitter mortification to know that they had lost their own money gathered in more prosperous days. Call this benevolence? Rather call it by any other name. These are facts that many of us can testify to by our own observation. Bible charity is universal, and impartial, and especially looks after the wants of the most needy. The Saviour requires us not to bestow our gifts upon the rich, who can do as much for us in return, but upon the poor and helpless, who cannot recompense us, and we shall be recompensed at the resurrection of the just.

Again the principle of secrecy which is the chief corner-stone of all secret societies, as they themselves maintain, is one of the most objectionable features of the whole thing. Although these societies are comparatively of recent date, yet it is evident that the root of them strikes far back into the former ages, when in Egypt, and other eastern countries, the corrupt pagan priests for the sake of power and dominion used the subtle charm of hidden mysteries to throw the clasp of power over the common people, and thus bind them in superstitious doctrine to the worship of their fabulous gods.

The gullibility of human nature is still a fruitful soil, in which the charm of secretism readily takes root. And wicked, deceiving men are not slow to use the element of power, to advance their selfish and clannish purposes. Wrong, despotism, error, sin and all manner of crime, have always, in all ages and countries, sought the aid of darkness and concealment, to accomplish their fiendish designs, and revel in their corruption. Disguise is the only element in which error can flourish, and wage a successful warfare against truth. Hence the danger to liberty and a pure religion in our country arising from this quarter. There is something in oath-bound, perpetual secrecy entirely at war with true Americanism, directly opposed to the teachings of the New Testament. Jesus says, "I ever spake openly to the world, and in secret have I said nothing." "This is the condemnation, that light is come into the world, and men love darkness rather than light because their deeds are evil. For every one that doeth evil hateth the light, neither cometh to the light lest his deeds should be reproved. But he that doeth truth, cometh to the light, that his deeds may be made manifest, that they are wrought in God." How forcible the logic, that truth seeks light, and wishes to be known; while error and sin seek darkness, and wish to be concealed. A more emphatic condemnation of secretism never was uttered than this, which fell from the Saviour's own lips. As to the ceremonies, oaths, grips, passwords, and other unimportant secrets of the lodge, they are all known to the world, as is well understood by every reading man. The danger to our best interests, however, is no less; it still lies chiefly in their secret meetings. Statistics show that there are over five hundred thousand Masons, and over four hundred thousand Odd-fellows in the United States, besides a great number belonging to minor secret societies; such as Ku-Klux, and the Grand Army of the Republic, etc. Who is so blind that he cannot see that so vast a number of men scattered all over the land, cemented together by the most binding obligations, meeting weekly, concealed behind tyler, lock and key, doing business and laying their plans in secret entirely beyond the inspection of the public eye, is, to say the least, very suspicious, if not very dangerous to the public welfare.

Again the blasphemous tomfoolery in initiation, and the horrid oaths of Freemasonry, are shocking to common sense, to say nothing about religion. In becoming a Master Mason, the candidate emphatically swears away his liberty, and binds himself in almost every possible particular unto the dominion of the lodge, in the most despotic manner conceivable: that he will always hail, ever conceal, and never reveal any part or parts, art or arts, point or points, of the secret mysteries of ancient Freemasonry. Never write, print, stamp, stain, hew, cut, carve, indent, paint, or engrave them on anything whereby they might be made known. All this under no less penalty than to have his throat cut across, his tongue torn out by the roots, and his body buried in the rough sands of the sea, at low water mark, where the tide ebbs and flows twice in twenty-four hours. Again he swears under no less penalty than to have his body severed in two in the midst and divided to the north and south, his bowels burnt to ashes in the center, and scattered before the four winds of heaven.

In the seventh or Royal Arch degree the candidate, in addition to all former obligations, doth promise and swear, that he will obey all regular signs, summons or tokens given, handed, sent or thrown to him from the hand of a companion Royal Arch Mason. Furthermore, he swears that he will aid and assist a companion Royal Arch Mason when engaged in any difficulty, and espouse his cause, so far as to extricate him from the same, if in his power, whether he be right or wrong. Also that he will promote a companion Royal Arch Mason's political preferment in preference to another of equal qualifications. Furthermore oth he promise and swear, that a companion Royal Arch Mason's secrets, given him in charge as such shall remain as secure and inviolable in his breast as in his own, murder and treason not accepted. To the faithful performance of which he binds himself under no less penalty than that of having his skull smote off, and his brains exposed to the scorching rays of the sun, should he willingly violate any part of his solemn obligation. In some of the higher degrees in case of unfaithfulness to the Masonic oath, they swear upon themselves a double damnation, of being both destroyed on earth and kept out of heaven forever. Also to follow any one who may divulge the secrets of Masonry to the ends of the earth, with the sword of vengeance, to ruin his business and character and persecute him unto the death.

Now, my hearers, just reflect for a moment upon this matter. Can anything be found more shocking to the better feelings of humanity? Indeed it would seem hardly possible to find anything in all the dark haunts of human wickedness and folly so horrible. monstrous and detestable as this. And yet it is said that there is nothing in all this contrary to pure religion, and the politics of our country. Just think of a Christian, and a Christian minister, too, slipping, after night, into a lodge; taking these shocking oaths; stripped half naked, hood winked, cable-towed, and, by the rope around his neck, led around the room, thus blinded, pretending to seek for light; to raise Hiram Abiff to life again; and a hundred other silly things in which there is not a word of truth, and every now and then, while going through this miserable, impious farce, kneeling dawn to offer prayers to Almighty God, for his blessing upon this excellent institution, and that the trembling candidate may make a good Mason. Would not Christ if he was on earth again say as he said to the hypocritical Pharisees, "Ye generation of vipers, how can ye escape the damnation of hell?" No danger to the purity and the stability of our government, when hundreds of thousands of men in our country are thus sworn, oath upon oath, to vote for each other in preference to other men; to keep each other's secrets, no matter how treasonable their intentions may be; and to extricate each other from difficulties, if it be in their power, whether right or wrong? Such a thought is perfectly ridiculous. Such ignorance is deeply criminal. It is easily seen that this state of things must greatly cripple the process of law and justice; and in a great measure, lock the wheels of government; and, if not remedied, shape matters for coming anarchy, despotism, and ruin.

Evidences well calculated to arouse such fears as above expressed, amid all the vigilant efforts at concealment, are strewn thickly all around us. For instance: When the secret men, in proportion to their numbers, should hold only one office of the people in fourteen, they have secured more than one-half of all the offices in the government. Thus in their rigid obligations to each other, and the secret workings of the order entirely concealed from public view they steal a march on, and gain the advantage over the outside world.

Forty-five years ago, for publishing Masonry, the Masons, true to their horrid oaths, stole Morgan away from his family and murdered him in cold blood. This was done by the sanction of high government officials, and ministers of the Gospel, and for five years after, during a highly excited state of the public mind on the subject, the State government instituted legal investigations, and made various efforts to bring the perpetrators of the bloody deed to justice; but failed every time. No power was found anywhere able to break the corrupt and mighty arm of secretism. Money was lavishly employed from Masonic lodges. Judges, sheriffs, lawyers and jurymen were always found connected with the several trials of these criminals, and, as they had sworn to do, they succeeded in saving their brethren from the punishment due to their crimes. A dozen or more of Masonic murders since that day have come to light, and the guilty ones have always gone unpunished. How many that have never come to light none but the recording angel can tell.

Circumstances are transpiring continually that ought to claim our most serious attention, such as the case given by Judge Whitney at Belvidere, Ill., where Masonic officials aided in the escape of the murderers of a young lady of that place; the statement of Senator Pomeroy of Kansas, at the Chicago Convention, of the easy acquittal of a Mason, the murderer of Mr. Reynolds—a colonel in the late war—in the face of clearest evidence of his guilt; and the escape of the arch-traitor Jeff. Davis, going free from punishment in defiance of all law on treason, at full liberty to plot another rebellion if possible. He has nothing to risk in doing so. Should he make the effort and fail again, he can just give the sign of distress and ten thousand sworn friends will run to his rescue. They invariably consider their Masonic oath more binding than their official oath. A Western sheriff says the arrest of a Mason is a signal for the order to rally to his relief. It is said that the French Revolution was the fruit of Masonic council. The present political troubles in Mexico are largely attributable to the same cause. And all are familiar with the secret doings, bloody and savage history of the Ku-Klux Klan of the South.

It is well known that if a man wants to get into office and continue therein he must as a general thing join some secret order. Rings and secret monopolies are becoming formidable and threatening in our country. All these things show most clearly that secretism aims to advance its leaders and place power into the hands of the few. The evident tendency of this is, as it has often been seen, to corrupt the courts of justice, intercept the healthy action of law, and, thereby injure, defraud and oppress the people. And is all this nothing to us as free American citizens? Can we see nothing in what is already open, and much more, and worse, in what is still concealed, to arouse us to action? Surely he that runneth may read. Surely any one who will at all examine the matter cannot fail to see that by this insidious foe, the very life-blood of this nation is being corrupted, fostering into strength in our very midst the elements of our own destruction. Could Washington and Adams come back again to visit this, their once well-beloved country, no doubt they would repeat with greater earnestness than ever the solemn warning they once gave to the people against secret societies in their deleterious influence upon a free country. As the star of history flashes its light along the ages, we should learn wisdom from its obvious teaching, and avoid the rocks on which other republics have so sadly made shipwreck.

Furthermore, secretism religiously, at best, is but a deism. Masonry and Odd-fellowship both require their candidates only to believe in a supreme being, and have a good moral character. This is their theory but practically they admit upon their common platform men of all creeds and sects, such as Jews, Mohammedans, pagans and Mormons, and infidelity in its various forms finds no difficulty in entering the lodges as all of us know by observation, They boast of this as very liberal and an improvement upon the narrow-minded superstition of former days. Now is it not very demoralzing to true religion for Christians to affiliate with and sanction the anti-Christian principles of these orders? For the New Testament emphatically commands us to have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness. Paul says: "Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers; for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness; and what communion hath light with darkness; or what part hath he that believeth with an infidel; and what agreement hath the temple of God with idols? Therefore come out from among them and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing and I will receive you."

What could be more clear than this on so important a question! But this is not all. They expunge the name of Christ from their ritual and studiously leave his name out of their written prayers. Thus to suit Jews and infidels they reject from the lodge the only Redeemer of men. What! Christians expel from the lodge the name of Jesus who is the very soul and body of that religion they profess? Yes, awful as it is, it is too true. Is not this the anti-Christ? The image of the beast spoken of by the Revelator? Christ assures us that we should honor the Son as we honor the Father. And that no man cometh unto the Father but by him. And that there is no other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved but the name of Jesus. And he that would get to heaven some other way the same is a thief and a robber. Yet it is said by professed Christians and Christian ministers that there is no harm in all this; forgetting that God is a consuming fire and that every prayer offered to him, unperfumed by the blood of Christ is an abomination in his sight. Are not such persons miserably deceived? Paul most solemnly declares that God shall send them strong delusions, that they should believe a lie, that they all might be damned, because they believed not the truth but had pleasure in unrighteousness. O what blindness! What strange infatuation!

We have now given a few of the many abominations of secretism, especially Freemasonry. And we have based our assertions upon reliable authority; upon the statements of such men as Webb, Dr. Mackey, Morris, and A. B. Grosh, their own acknowledged standard authors. Besides the testimony of hundreds of reliable men who have seceded from the orders; such as Bernard, Greene, Pres. Finney and others.

Now to sum up. We see that secretism assumes to be of Divine origin; that its laws and obligations are held to be more sacred than all other laws and obligations whatsoever; that it is superior to the church of Christ, because it offers salvation to all men of whatsoever creed or opinion if they are only faithful to the lodge; that its claims to antiquity and benevolence are false and a grand swindle upon society; that many of its rites and ceremonies are exceedingly wicked and ridiculous. That its perpetual concealment, its Christless and hypocritical nature, its monstrous oaths and barbarous penalties, its wicked, selfish, clannish spirit, and especially its history of deception, fraud and blood, force the sad conclusion upon us, that, since the monster slavery is out of the way, secretism is the next great enemy of liberty and righteousness that the Christian world is called upon to battle against. Forty-five years ago the Masonic Dagon fell flat upon his face before the Ark of truth and light, and States and churches passed interdictory laws against him, and many thought that he was about dead. But his votaries have slyly and carefully set him on his throne again; and, during these years of silence on the question, he has struck his roots deep into the soil again, and spread his branches all over the land, poisoning every department of civil and religious society. Who in public life does not feel the secret yet powerful influence of this monster evil? What is it that keeps such a deathly silence all over the world among nearly all the editors, journalists and book makers on these orders, except it be to praise them, while justice is perverted and thousands are annually decoyed into the lodges? What has stopped the mouth of almost every minister of the Gospel throughout the entire land, so there is scarcely ever a word said against this anti-Christ, this stealthy system of iniquity? Notwithstanding the Master's solemn charge to them all not to keep back any part of the truth, not to let sin rest upon our neighbors; but to cry aloud and spare not; and show the people their sins and the house of Jacob their iniquities. What has, to keep the mother of harlots in credit, bred such a countless number of minor secret societies, all over the land, like the frogs in Egypt reaching out their long slimy fingers to taint and press into their service, if possible, every good thing, such as temperance, charity, agriculture and even the pure and open religion of Christ itself? Is it not this Dagon? The God of this world, who is blinding the mind of those who believe not? But what are the signs of the times? A little bright cloud has risen in the West. Thank God the waters of reform are beginning to move and Christ is calling his faithful servants to the conflict. Now, my brethren, let us with courage buckle on the armor anew, and among them hold our position in the front of the battle, and by and by we shall see light and truth prevail, church and state cleansed from corruption, and the image of the beast with his head and arms broken off, brought flat to the ground before the ark of the Lord. And only the stump of this Dagon will be left unto them.

How to Shorten Life.—An eminent Dublin physician says: "If an end were put to the drinking of port, punch, and porter, there would soon be an end to my worldly prosperity. Physicians, surgeons, and apothecaries would be ruined, and disease would be comparatively rare, simple and manageable. Twenty years experience has convinced me that, were ten young men, when of age, to commence and continue daily, drinking one glass of ardent spirits or a pint of port or sherry, the lives of eight of them would be abridged twelve or fifteen years."—Selected.

Iowa Masons Reply with the Torch—The Residence of D. W. Lyons, Esq., at Mason City Burned to the Ground.

MASON CITY, Iowa, June 11, 1875.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

Masonry is on the war path in Iowa. Two weeks ago last night we were egged in this city while holding a street meeting, and it is positively known that leading Masons and one of them a practising physician were the leaders in that disgraceful mob. Since that our State convention has been held at Clear Lake, and the fraternity has been up to boiling heat. Some of them have said that any man who would expose Masonry ought to be executed according to Masonic penalty, and one man has boldly expressed his willingness to engage in the undertaking. Two or three nights ago there was an attempt made to set the barn of Mr. D. W. Lyons on fire and also a raid made on his residence; but some of the family being awake frustrated their designs. But this morning between one and two o'clock the alarm of fire was sounded and soon his beautiful residence, with much of its valuable contents, was in ashes, the family barely escaping with their lives, most of them without their clothes. Mr. Lyons is one of our active men in this reform and the lodge is on his track. No one hesitates for a moment to charge this crime to Masonic influence. Surely we are coming upon perilous times, when we are met by the torch and eggs from an institution claiming to be the most honorable as well as the most ancient of the world. Well might one of our prominent Iowa divines say in a discourse a few Sabbaths ago, when speaking against Masonry, that notwithstanding he had been one he wanted it distinctly understood that he was forever done associating with drunkards, libertines and the worst men our country afforded in the lodge. How long will men who claim to be called of God to teach sinners the way of life continue to be hoodwinked, cabletowed and become partners of the "worst men our country affords?" Away with all such teachers. Give me liberty or death. Yours for the war.

J. HANKINS.

Bradford County, Pa.—The State Agent's Report of the County Convention and Other Meetings.

LERAYSVILLE, Pa., July 9th. 1875.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—On Monday morning, June 28th, I left home for a two days drive over our northern Pennsylvania hills, to attend the quarterly-meeting of the Bradford County Anti-secret Society Association. Wednesday morning at 10 o'clock found me at the place of meeting, Herrickville Wesleyan Church.

The morning session opened with friends of the cause in attendance sufficient to appoint the committees and we spent the most of the forenoon in general conference, blended with prayer and singing. Your correspondent was made chairman of the convention. Our good, faithful brother, John Beardsley, was the efficient Secretary of the body, and greatly helped along the business and interest of the occasion.

At 2 P. M. the association re-convened and after devotion, I made an opening address, when the remaining time was occupied by other brethren in speaking of our reform, its duties and encouragements and its necessity. The attendance was larger than in the morning. In the evening Rev. H. Lounsberry, a Wesleyan brother lectured on the religion of Masonry, showing clearly its opposition to Christianity. This address was well received and only confirmed the audience in their knowledge of Masonry as a false and corrupting organization. After some closing remarks by myself, adjourned till Thursday morning.

At the appointed time we resumed business and spent most of the session in considering our political duty and discussed and adopted some resolutions. In the afternoon and evening sessions I gave a lecture presenting Odd-fellowship and speculative Masonry in some phases of their pernicious moral and social tendencies, and had the attention and approval of the congregation. Not many of the fraternities were present and we did not aim to give them any solid comfort. All our meetings were well attended by our friends from the vicinity and from adjacent towns. We took pleasant counsel together and are more determined than ever in our Christian work. The sober, thinking part of the people are investigating and the result of light will lead them away from the policy of silence, or of justification in regard to secret orders. In this township (Herrick) the general sentiment is very healthy and considerably strong against the dark-lantern orders. Our Baptist, Methodist, Episcopal and Wesleyan friends are not in fellowship with these secret powers. At East Herrick there is quite an awakening on the matter which will result in good and pure religion. Their minister is a Mason, Odd-fellow, and Good Templar, sent on the circuit against the wishes of the East Herrick charge, who prefer a man untrammeled by abominable secret oaths. Some of the faithful members of that church cannot now support the cause there, from a conscientious sense of duty, while others claim that these good brethren shall attend upon and support a Masonic preacher, or be ruled out of office in Sabbath-school and church work. This agitation and trial of faithful, earnest brethren and lovers of the church and of truth will result in good to the whole community. Our cause is decidedly onward here, and the Lord is leading the people to thought and research, and prayer and truth and religion always gain by these.

On Saturday and Sabbath the Wesleyan quarterly-meeting followed our convention, coupled with thorough, earnest preaching of Christian fidelity and of entire reliance on the saving work of Christ, the whole meeting and its influence was in harmony with, and furtherance of our aims.

On Tuesday and Wednesday evening of this week, July 6th and 7th, I gave lectures at the M. E. church in East Herrick. The attendance was small the first evening on account of showers. On the 2d evening had a good and interested audience. And at that meeting an old resident, a man of acknowledged Christian character, who had been made a Master Mason when a young man, arose and declared publicly that Morgan, Finney and Bernard give Blue Lodge Masonry correctly as he knew it by lodge experience. I can give you more particulars at another time. You will yet hear good news from East Herrick in their opposition to lodge influence.

Last night I lectured at the Wells' school house, to a good audience, exposing the grange and Odd-fellowship, the latter of which was made to flutter, but only to its own disadvantage.

To-night and to-morrow night I speak at Stevensville, some five or six miles from here. There are some good friends there, and more will enlist with us. Next week I go to Wysox, near the county seat, and at other places; and next week Saturday, if the Lord will, we have an out-door meeting at LeRaysville. I preached for four years in this village for the Congregational church and to the acceptance of all the community; but now, having come to oppose secret orders, no church or other place will be opened for free speech and Christian discussion. A little handful of Masons and their jacks control public sentiment, and the churches stand mute before the idol of secretism, or else bow down and worship the beast and his false teachings.

We propose to support the Pittsburgh nominees and think to select the candidates of the prohibitory party for our State standard-bearers. These are Rev. Robt. Audley Browne and Elijah F. Pennypacker. We believe these men are Christians and advocates of our principles and in this faith we recommend them to the Christian suffrages of our friends. We expect to hear from them soon. More anon,

JAMES W. RAYNOR.

LODI, Ill., July 15, 1875.

DEAR BRO: K.—We have had two important meetings in the Free Methodist church in this place on the evenings of the 13th and 14th inst. The audiences were good and both Masons and Anti-masons were out in force. I spoke first on the general subject of secrecy, and told how a man is made a Mason. On the second evening I spoke on the religion of Masonry and its relation to the Republican government. On both evenings I was replied to by the pastor of the Baptist church (Rev. Shepherd), who prostitutes his fine abilities to the ignoble calling of defending an institution of which he says he knows nothing. He however seemed to know, at least he affirmed that Christ and his apostles belonged to a secret society, and though he did not tell us that this was Masonry, yet he gave us to understand that it was quite a Christian act to shut out from the true light all but the regularly initiated. I wonder how long before this minister will have a tyler at the door of his church to keep off cowans and eavesdroppers? He told us moreover, that the Jesuits and some other secret societies were so bad and so dangerous, that it was an absolute necessity to have secret societies to oppose them; and he especially lauded the Know-nothing movement and the secret trades union, as having saved our country from the influence of foreigners and from the pauper labor of Europe.

All this was very interesting, especally in view of the fact that the speaker is himself a foreigner.

I will only add that the friends of the cause are well pleased with the result of the meetings, and are quite willing to have the case go to the great jury who will ere long bring in a verdict of guilty, and consign Freemasonry and its defenders to their merited doom. Yours for Christ.

H. H. HINMAN.

Bro. Hinman at Blackbury, Ill.

The Rev. H. H. Hinman delivered a very interesting lecture in the Baptist church last Sunday afternoon, on the subject of Freemasonry and kindred societies. After reading several appropriate passages of Scripture he took for his text the 14th 15th and 16th verses of the fifth of Matthew. He said that Masonry excluded from its lodges the old, the young, the cripples, and women. The invitations of the Gospel were to all, without distinction of age, sex, or physical condition, without money or price.

But I have not time to quote further. He had a respectable audience. Several of the leading Masons in the village were in attendance, and listened respectfully to the telling truths uttered by the speaker. I am sorry to say that Elder Tebbets, pastor of the church gave us the cold shoulder. He gave out the notice of the lecture, by saying that he supposed his audience had seen handbills posted up around the town, stating that Mr. Hinman would speak on the subject of Masonry in this church this afternoon; that the authorities had not given their consent; that he did not believe in discussing that subject on the Sabbath. He absented himself from the meeting, thereby betraying a moral cowardice inconsistent with the character of a Christian minister.

Elder Thomas, his predecessor, was an outspoken Anti-mason; an Anti-masonic lecturer was welcome, both at his home and in his pulpit. A large majority of the church are opposed to secret societies. J. P. B.

"And Some Fell on Good Ground and Produced an Hundred Fold."

Editors Christian Cynosure:

The fruits of your recent convention in Pittsburgh are being felt in our vicinity, to some extent at least, for it has called out one of the brothers in a very lame article in the Pittsburgh Gazette of a late issue (signed "A. Y. M.") from which we may learn the waters are being troubled, and I herewith present to you for publication a few comments thereon.

"A. Y. M." says, a gentleman from Ohio, to establish his veracity, gave the various obligations imposed in passing through seven degrees of Masonry. I think the term "veracity" is right, for I know some few, personally, who could scarcely get through the Apprentice's degree without feeling some of their veracity at stake, or at least locked up in secrecy; and if this is the case in the first, how much would be left for a man who would attain to the highest degrees, especially as he would then be paid well for his services. Verily, I think he would have just about enough to swear a brother out of the biggest scrape he could get into. But you know the command, "In honor preferring one another;" which, like Masonry, may be laid off in three degrees: that which is taught in the Scriptures; the code laid down for the duelist, which is just the reverse of the former; and that other one amongst thieves, compulsory honor. Now I hold that a rational man has the power at all times to choose between those three, and if he does not do so, it shows either one of two things, that he has found congenial spirits there, or after being induced to take the first degree and seeing no moral or other benefits, he is led to mount Jacob's ladder and as he advances higher the more spiritual he will get, until he is so oath-bound and conscienceless, that if he does withdraw in disgust, he has seldom the moral courage to "establish his veracity," as "A. Y. M." has put it.

He then says, "The psalmist David characterizes the good man, as one that sweareth to his own hurt and changeth not." This is satisfactory evidence that David was the High Priest of Masonry. It is quite admissable that Masons do swear to their own hurt, and the very worst of hurt too.

He then says Masons teach "truth to be a divine attribute." The Saviour says, "I am the way, the truth and life;" but he did not say, I am the secret way which you must keep in darkness, or the hidden truth which maketh not ashamed, or the life of him who walketh in darkness.

He also speaks of white and black lies, and I would just say, that a man who would be guilty of a white lie before going in, would, in my opinion, be able to tell a pretty black one after playing blindman's buff with them for six months. But as I have now written much more than I intended at first I will answer his Scriptural references by giving him choice selections.

1 Thess. v. 21 and 22: "Prove all things; hold fast that which is good. Abstain from all appearance of evil."

Jer. ii. 19: "Thine own wickedness shall correct thee, and thy backslidings shall reprove thee: Know therefore and see, that it is an evil thing and bitter, that thou hast forsaken the Lord thy God, and that my fear is not in thee."

And now for the violation of the Scriptures and the constitution of their country,—Matt. xxiii. 8th and 10th: "But be not ye called Rabbi, for one is your Master, even Christ, and all ye are brethren. Neither be ye called master for one is your master, even Christ.

Yours, JOHN BELL.

A Masonic Horse Thief.

CARTHAGE, N. Y., June 9, 1875.

The question has often been agitated whether the Masonic order was a protector or exposer of crime, and as it is for the interest of the community at large to judge of such a momentous matter which naturally involves the protection or our lives, liberty and property, we will briefly lay before the numerous readers of your excellent paper, (The Christian Cynosure) the following facts; and if they should ever be discredited by the most zealous friends of Masonry, we know that our statement can be corroborated by the leading citizens of this place, some of whom are Masons; but disgusted with the disgraceful affair which their order so prominently cloaked and protected, they have properly denounced it.

The subject of this sketch is a man by the name of Thomas L. Randall, claiming himself to be an agent for Moller & Shumann, manufacturers of varnish and japans, Brooklyn, New York. Said Randall left Ogdensburg after eight or nine days stay at a hotel in said city, forgot to pay his bill as some rascals do; footed it to Gouverneur, not stopping at any place to sell his varnish. There he hired a horse of H. Hoover, the proprietor of the livery to go to Somerville and Antwerp, fetched up at Philadelphia some seven miles further than he hired the horse to go, there staid all night, forgot to pay his bill in the morning; but left Hoover's horse and carriage there, and then footed it to this place (Carthage). Hired a horse of Mr. Ingraham, the proprietor of the livery here to go to Dainsville, claiming that he wanted to buy maple sugar, and if his man was not at home he would stay there until he came home. But he did not stop at said place but went to Glensdale about fifteen miles beyond Lowville.

Ingraham received a telegram from a friend that his team was there. Said Ingraham got out a warrant from Justice G. M. Allen for his arrest and brought Randall here. Then I. T. Peden, Police Justice, finding the prisoner to be a high Mason, and being one himself, got out a writ of habeas corpus, bringing the prisoner before himself to be examined. The said I. T. Peden went to Ingraham's council and told him that he had a brother Mason in trouble and said we must clear him at all hazards. He told the same also to a man by the name of Wm. Hutchinson. He (Peden) held the prisoner on the part of the people; commenced the examination, and in the meantime some of the Masons worked with Peden and Hoover until said Hoover realized some $36.75 for his damage. It was handed in by a man by the name of Lafford, an insurance agent. It was thought by many of our citizens that the Masons contributed the said amount. Hoover took the money and left for home. A man by the name of Wilkinson, an agent for selling apple trees and shrubbery, had a paper in his possession written on it "All right;" passed the said paper to the counsel of the prisoner, and he shoved it to Justice Peden. He read the paper and then tore it up. The prisoner testified to leaving Ogdensburg the same as above stated. Justice claimed that no testimony had been shown to convict Randall of any attempt to steal Ingraham's team, he striking out all the testimony of the prisoner. Peden said he had in his possession a telegram stating that the said Randall was in good standing in a certain organization, therefore he discharged him on the square. Then Justice Peden gave the prisoner this advice in the presence of good reliable men: that he hoped that he (the prisoner) would not get into another scrape, for he might not fall into as good hands.

We are happy to say in conclusion that Judge Emmes, who granted the writ of habeas corpus, took Justice Peden thoroughly to task for the bold and daring way in which he blazoned forth the fact that the prisoner was a Mason and the peculiar and artful dodge which was played to get him out of the hands of Justice Allen into his own hands so as to make a clear road for his escape. At one time the proceedings created an intense excitement here, and though it has now rather quieted down yet a stain has been left on the lodge in this village which will forever be a disgrace to their name.

A TAX-PAYER.

OUR MAIL.

Samuel Surface, Lafayette, Ind., writes:

"For the benefit of any who desire to visit Lafayette on business for the anti-secrecy cause, I would say, inquire for my house three miles west of the city, and you will have a home without money and without price. My Cynosure is the only one taken at this office. I will make an effort for more subscribers, for this whole city and county are deluged with the miserable curse of secret societies I am for the Cynosure and for the war against secrecy."

Eleazer Bales, Plainfield, Ind., writes:

"I feel a deep interest in the advancement of the cause in which you are engaged. Your meeting with opposition is no evidence that it is not a laudable and righteous work. I can only desire your encouragement and perseverance in the arduous labor."

Noah Thomas, Maryland, N. Y., writes:

"Had I no faith in the God of the Bible, the Lord Jesus Christ, I should expect Masonry to destroy our civil government, but thanks be to God, he has given me the assurance he will overthrow them."

John A. Dodels, New Galilee, Pa., writes:

"The Cynosure is about as unpopular here as the redemption of Jesus Christ in Turkey, but there is a good time coming for both."

P. Corl, Big Spring, Pa., writes:

"I like the Cynosure. I am in love with its principles. I hope and pray for it, that it may accomplish its mission and overthrow all false religions."

J. G. Stauffer, Milford Square, Pa. writes:

"I cannot do without your paper. It expresses my ideas better than any other paper I know. When I am through reading it I distribute it among my neighbors. Sometimes I translate articles from the Cynosure to put in the German paper. I belong to the Mennonites. They are all strongly opposed to secret societies. Some wish to have a lecturer in Quakertown, three miles from here."

James C. Laughlin, College Springs, Iowa, writes:

"I have no notion of dropping your paper. Will take it during life. Give the light and God will succeed the right."

Moses Gallup, Wasioja, Minn., writes:

"Your Cynosure came last week loaded with strong argument in favor of anti-secretism. I rejoice to see so many able writers enlisting in the cause. I get all I can to read the paper."

W. C. Day, Middletown, Ind., writes:

"I have been an interested reader of the Cynosure for some time and have always considered that it filled an important place among the periodicals of this country. The work it is performing is great and difficult, and I hope for it the greatest success."

Jacob Marlow, Kennonsburgh, Ohio, writes:

"John T. Kiggins gave us two lectures here on the evenings of the 23rd and 24th of June. He had good audiences. The craft was well represented on both nights, but kept their jewel. I think that the lectures here have done a great deal of good. If we had such a man as J. T. Kiggins to give us a lecture once a month the lodge would get but few converts."

Jacob Haffner, Franklin Center, Iowa, writes:

"I attended the Dover Sunday School a few Sundays back. Dr. Atkinson, the teacher, spoke of the 26th verse of St. John as being one the most valuable verses that we have. Dr. Atkinson joined the lodge some ten years ago, but told me when I asked him what I had better do as a young man, join the Masons or no, that he was a Mason and would not advise me to join them. He seemed astonished at my asking such a question. He said as soon as he learned their doings, he (as a Christian) asked them to excuse him and stepped out. Mr. Francis Sample of Dover lies sick, but seems to be gaining, and if God will permit will get his book written yet before he leaves this world. I am very glad that Hon. G. A. Loomis of Casey, who has been a Mason for thirteen years, has subscribed for the Cynosure. There are but three here that will read your paper, but readers of the Cynosure and all Christians, watch and pray."

A friend in Bedford, Iowa, writes his approbation and a late experience:

"The Cynosure meets the approbation of all its readers, and all others who are in sympathy with the workers of reform. Its only enemies are those who belong to the lodge or those who sympathize with it.

I regard the Cynosure as an instrument used to cleanse the souls of its readers from the vileness and corruptness that is abroad in our land. Its every number contains a portion of the true principles of life. How particular we should be in reading its pages and meditating upon its contents. How happy will we be when the Cynosure sets forth her political platform, and finds a President for the United States who will work for the overthrow of all these vile institutions.

Yesterday I was confidentially told by a Mason that all these books were false and did not contain one word of truth. He said he had read Morgan's exposition, and read it before he joined the lodge and found it to be as far from Masonry as day was from night. He said they had guessed at it and missed it too far to talk about. He said that a person could know nothing about the lodge unless he joined them, and that he could not leave without being turned out. He is our County Superintendent of Common schools and sealed his assertions with an oath, too. I said nothing and believed nothing. God speed the right."

The Sabbath School.

Lesson for August 1st, 1875—The Water of Life—John iv. 5-15.

5 Then cometh he to a city of Samaria which is called Sychar, near to the parcel of ground that Jacob gave to his son Joseph.

6 Now Jacob's well was there. Jesus therefore being wearied with his journey, sat thus on the well: and it was about the sixth hour.

7 There cometh a woman of Samaria, to draw water: Jesus saith unto her, Give me to drink.

8 (For his disciples were gone away unto the city to buy meat.)

9 Then saith the woman of Samaria unto him, How is it that thou, being a Jew, askest drink of me, which am a woman of Samaria? for the Jews have no dealings with the Samaritans.

10 Jesus answered and said unto her, If thou knewest the gift of God, and who it is that saith to thee, Give me to drink; thou wouldst have asked of him, and he would have given thee living water.

11 The woman saith unto him, Sir, thou hast nothing to draw with, and the well is deep: from whence then hast thou that living water?

12 Art thou greater than our father Jacob, which gave us the well, and drank thereof himself, and his children, and his cattle?

13 Jesus answered and said unto her, Whosoever shall drink of this water shall thirst again:

14 But whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him, shall never thirst; but the water that I shall give him, shall be in him a well of water springing up into everlasting life.

15 The woman saith unto him, Sir, give me this water, that I thirst not neither come hither to draw.

The Teacher's Manners.

The teacher who exemplifies in his manners the genius of Christianity, will, unknowingly, teach lessons of Christian courtesy to his scholars.

Soon, the boys we meet on the Sabbath will go out into the great world. If they have acquired the generous and noble virtues which it is the province of the Sabbath school to teach them, they will make better sons, brothers and husbands.

Even in business, politeness is an engaging and popular virtue. It is noticeable that the men who write books under such titles as "How to make money;" "A Practical Treatise on Business," etc., have dwelt much upon politeness. If the history of many successful business men were written, it would appear that in God's providence, "their manners made their fortunes." No man is thoroughly fitted to fill any honorable position in business, church or state, that has not acquired habits of politeness.

In a few years the girls will be young women. Let the teacher who has been instrumental in the conversion of her scholars look into the future and picture a fireside at which her former scholar, as a loving daughter or sister, is noticeable by a cheerfulness and exquisite kindliness of manner, that makes her more beautiful and lovable than if she were covered with jewels; or, picture another fireside, at which the same daughter or sister sits as a mother and a queen, her eyes speaking gentleness and kindliness as she teaches the little ones, who, tired of their play, nestle around her, beautiful lessons of charity, a husband the while standing by, filled with a happiness such as only the husband who has a Christian wife can feel.

In the school in which Christian courtesy is cultivated, the teachers themselves reap a rich harvest of blessings. What encouragement and sympathy the teachers are enabled to give each other! How their minds become broadened, brightened, stirred by exchanging views with each other! How gracefully kindly attentions can be shown to the sick; such as sending them kind words, books, etc. How welcome the teacher, as he visits the homes of his scholars in hours when sorrow or joy is there! Life-long friendships are sometimes formed. The school is a place of joy and gladness. —Pres. Worker..

A Presiding Elder's Confession.

With no small degree of doubt and pain I undertake to write up a little history of the progress of the great reform that is agitating the minds of Christian men and women hereabouts, (East Wilson Charge, Niagara County, N. Y.), as well as all over the country. east and west. Doubt in my ability to do justice to the subject; pain to know that in so doing I must speak derogatory of the influence of ministers and members of my own church (M. E.). I love that church. Upwards of thirty years ago I cast in my lot with her, having received from early ancestors a training and bent of mind in that direction. To-day I am not regretting my choice; no, verily. Glad that I found succor within her folds, yet I have a regret that is deep and pungent. It is that the most of the ministers of our church have found it necessary to make bosom friends of the devil and his dupes, ignoring entirely the command of God, to "come out from an ungodly world and be separate," but instead having joined the devil's crusade against Christianity (Masonry), and are giving their money and influence to build up one of the most gigantic evils that threaten this fair republic, as well as to undermine the Christian religion. Thousands of precious blood-bought souls are on the road to eternal death to-day, who can point to some minister of the gospel and say truthfully: His influence drew me into Masonry and has made of me an infidel instead of a Christian, a disbeliever in the divinity of Christ and a firm believer in the religion of Masonry; though once I firmly believed in Christ and his atonement, tried to follow his example in my daily life, to-day I belong to a secret oath-bound lodge that rejects him (and must of necessity), yet I am satisfied with it; that it is all the religion I need, and all any one needs. The writer has had these very words put into his mouth by Masons who were once Christians, but now far from it.

He has in his mind a certain doctor, who, but a few years since, was a devoted Christian, having an established rule not to converse over five minutes when meeting a person without introducing the subject of religion. Where is he to-day? High up in Masonry and a rank infidel, proclaiming openly that he thanks God he don't believe the Bible. The presiding elder (S. Hunt) on Niagara District, and the minister on East Wilson Charge (S. S. Ballou), are both very intimate and confidential friends of this same doctor. The former, after the services on a quarterly meeting occasion not long since, passed by many families (members of the church) and out of the neighborhood, to get his tea at the doctor's, where the fraternal grip would both be known and appreciated. No one questions the elder's right to take his tea where he had a mind; yet the propriety on Sabbath day and under such circumstances was certainly doubtful, and proves clearly the old adage "that straws show the direction of the wind." Elder Hunt is a very fine man, a smooth, easy preacher, and might be a good worker in the vineyard, were it not for Masonic fetters, which are sadly crippling his influence. Proof of this rests in the fact that men outside the church are heard to say "that all they want is to know that a minister is a Mason, and they just take seventy-five per cent. from him at once." (Not much capital left for good.) Still there is hope in the elder's case, which springs from a public confession, made on the occasion of a "Bible School Institute" held at Warren's Corners, Niagara County, May 11th and 12th, "that he was opposed to secret societies." This confession was drawn from him through a question some one put into the "Query Box" touching secret societies, to which the elder had to make some kind of answer.

Brethren, a word or two more, and I close this article. Masonry is beginning to limp badly on East Wilson charge. No minister tainted with it can reasonably expect any success here. Almost the entire membership are opposed to Masonry, not so much as to utterly refuse to pay the minister, simply because they can't believe it is so bad, whilst there are others who will not let the devil share in their contributions, nor allow that his calf (Masonry) has anything to do with religion or the M. E. church.—Reformer and Free Press.

"I do not pass an unqualified condemnation on all our books of fiction. A good selection of them, used in moderation, may be read with advantage to the understanding and the heart. But there is a large number, and those, unfortunately the most popular with a numerous class of readers, which are little better than spiced carrion, abounding in pernicious maxims, false views of life and prurient descriptions thinly hidden under mawkish sentimentalities—unredeemed by the least exhibition of fancy, wit, or knowledge of human nature. Even the delicate female sometimes contracts a taste for such offal, and may be found poring at midnight over pages she would not venture to read under the eye of a parent or a Christian friend. Such is the power of that horse-leech depraved curiosity, crying 'give, give,' that the silly young creature denies herself natural rest in the employment of corrupting her imagination, inflaming her passions, and destroying her native purity of sentiment."—Alex. McClelland.

The expense of maintaining the United States army in 1874 was $42,313,927, and the navy $30,932,587, making a total of $73,356,514. During the last ten years of peace it has been at least $750,000,000, to which may be added an equal or greater sum for pensions, interest on our war debts, etc.

And what have we received in return for this expenditure of $75,000,000? Our army has subdued Capt. Jack and killed a few hundred other Indians. It has been a constant menace and source of irritation, as standing armies always are. But as if this whole continent were not extensive enough for a field of carnage, we must needs pre-empt the oceans for battle-fields and maintain at an enormous expense a navy to defy and provoke neighboring nations. What is its use? What has it accomplished during the past ten years. It has almost plunged our country into a war with Spain by protecting that fillibustering craft the Virginius. And what else? Ah, and what else?—L.

Are the persecuted and abused children of God who are despised by those who profess his name to be encouraged in their separation from their friends? To them it is said, "Hear ye the word of the Lord, ye that tremble at his word; your brethren that hated you, that cast you out for my name's sake, said, Let the Lord be glorified; but he shall appear to your joy, and they shall be ashamed."

There is not a duty we are called upon to perform, not an evil temper we are required to vanquish, but we are directed in Scripture to seek for the aid of the Spirit of God, that our endeavors may be crowned with success.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JULY 22, 1875.

NOMINATIONS FOR ELECTION, 1876.

FOR PRESIDENT.

James B. Walker,
of Illinois.

FOR VICE-PRESIDENT

Donald Kirkpatrick,
of New York.

It cannot be too often or too deeply impressed on our minds that Christ laid the great stress of his doctrine on believing. "Go, preach to every creature;" "He that believeth shall be saved; he that believeth not shall be damned." Every other creed, system or trine therefore which gives men a set of observances or ceremonies by practicing which they are to be saved, is a religion of Satan "the God of this world;" and is therefore anti-Christ.

Some one has sent us the "Masonic prayer" of Rev. Dr. Trewartha, D. D., "Royal and Select Master" in Masonry, and Rector of St. Andrew's Episcopal Church, Chariton, Lucas county, Iowa. Whether for its supposed excellence we know not, but it is printed on a double leaf like a programme at an exhibition. It is a strictly deistical prayer such as any educated heathen might utter; addressed to "our gracious God," wholly ignoring Christ. It asks that Masons may "keep our mouths" and say nothing which Christian opposers of the lodge may take advantage of; "that this lodge may be careful in the selection of materials," so as to get in none but the respectability; and that every member of "this temple of antiquity and honor" may "be what he professeth, a good man ready to labor and willing to obey." "And when we are called to pass the river of death, may it be in sure and certain hope of a joyful admittance into the lodge not made with hands—eternal in the heavens. And to thy name, O Great Master of the Universe, shall be all the praise, world without end. AMEN AND AMEN."

Will some one send or hand a copy of this notice to this Episcopal clergyman, that he may know that enlightened Christian people regard such prayers as addressed to "the god of this world," and such false Christian teachers as himself as priests of Baal?

COLLEGE EDUCATION AND PARENTAL FATUITY.

Returning from our Pittsburgh anniversary we traveled with a Baptist gentleman who said he had two daughters in a Roman Catholic Collegiate school, governed and taught by priests. He said "They were under promise not to influence his daughters' religious views." Indeed! Teachers bound not to teach what they believe! Most wise and sensible arrangement! This gentleman was lavish in praise of their arrangements; and said two-thirds of the children there were from Protestant parents. If such parents were converts themselves to the Romish superstition their stupidity and inconsistency were far less.

The mockery of college education is not, however, confined to convent schools. The English universities, and first American colleges were professedly schools of Christ. Now, our stateliest State university is furnished by the "Historian" of each graduating class, with a wonderful funny Commencement Exercise, of which the following is a published specimen this year. The "historian" says of his class that "It sought to break away from old-time customs and inaugurate a new era in college 'scrapes,' but was no later than the first Saturday after entrance, than they were inveigled into a rush by the Sophomores, and thus their Freshman year was introduced by a 'rush on the stairs' which gave to them the victory. Pumpings were frequent, and cold-water baths in the waters of the mineral spring. One unfortunate Soph. while on his way to pay his respects to his sweetheart one moonlight night, was interrupted in his course, divested of his attire, bathed in the mineral spring, supplied with water enough internally to prevent his ever becoming sick, rerobed, bound, and left upon the door step of his fair one's home.

In the morning it was reported that a babe had been left on somebody's doorstep, and the Soph. left college in disgust. According to the historian, "that doorstep was the turning-point in his life. He was once an earnest Christian student; now he's an editor.' One night fifteen members of the class gained access to the chapel and varnished the seats of the Sophs. The next morning they (the Sophs.) took their accustomed places, and were disposed to retain them. Having assumed aposition, they felt called upon to adhere to it, notwithstanding those naughty Fresh men advised to take up their seats and walk. The choir sang, 'How Firm a Foundation,' and the Sophs. sat very still. They were not stuck up that morning; on the contrary they were stuck down most effectually. When at last they were pried up they didn't have so much cloth in their pantaloons as formerly. Six of the fifteen artists are with the class, and one of the brushes is preserved as a souvenir.'

So the 'scrapes' continued through the Sophomore and Junior years, with of course a proper 'let up' when they assumed the role of seniors."

Nothing short of absolute knowledge of the fact could convince us that ministers of Christ and professed Christians would send their sons to such a school. If American colleges have improved so in the first century of our country, where will a second century land them and us?

AN EXCELLENT DISCOURSE WITH A SAD OMISSION.

Rev. W. H. Brewster preached to his people in Geneva, Ill., and repeated in the Wheaton College chapel a Fourth of July discourse on the evils which threaten our country. His text was from Samuel's discourse, when he was giving up his administration of the Israelitish nation to Saul, particularly the words:

"Turn not aside from following the Lord, but serve the Lord with all your heart. And turn not aside, for then should ye go after vain things, which cannot profit nor deliver, for they are vain."—1 Sam. xx. 21.

The "vain things" were the false religions of that day, which omitted Christ, the Lamb on the true altars, and substituted contrived ceremonies. The Hebrew word is commonly translated "nothings," "vanities," and "vain things," i. e., empty ceremonies got up as Jeroboam did his calf-worships at Dan and Bethel, which, killing out the worship of God by Christ, by rivalship and substitution, exterminated the lost ten tribes in 254 years, so that their name and memory are perished.

Of course Mr. Brewster's object should have been to have shown how the false and Christless worships of that day destroyed the Hebrew nation by eviscerating their morals, destroying their oath, swearing their jurors by a cheat which they soon came to understand, and so destroying all confidence in each other and making government impossible in any form but mere force, till all society dissolved and broke down by the weight of its corruptions. It is not vices and wrongs which ruin a people, as Samuel said, but the loss of God by omitting Christ and worshipping their own inventions.

But if Mr. Brewster had properly interpreted and applied the Scripture which he spoke from, every one of his hearers would have seen that he was speaking of the lodge-worships of the time; even if he had not named one of them. But by this fatal omission an otherwise excellent discourse became like the play of Hamlet with the part of Hamlet left out. O when will the American people hear the truth on this subject from their pulpits! Our national salvation just as much depends on our "serving the Lord;" that is, keeping up Christ's worship, as did that of Israel, and our doom is as certain unless the American people are taught and heed it. Mr. Brewster is himself an able and popular minister who loathes the lodge and fears not to let the fact be known. This omission in his Fourth of July discourse is therefore the more noticeable and the more to be lamented.

INAUGURATION OF HON. NEWTON BATEMAN.

This gentleman has just been inaugurated President of Knox College. His inaugural delivered in the crowded hall of Galesburgh, has raised him in our esteem. It is a mass of illuminated thought, characterized by vigor, piety and sound sense. And, considered as a politic document, prepared for difficult surroundings and circumstances, it is one of the adroitest papers I have read for years. Five administrations of the college had preceded him, viz., Mr. Kellogg's, my own, that of Harvey Curtis, William Curtis, and John P. Gulliver. He names neither of his predecessors, which he could scarcely have done without offending somebody. He yet makes reverent mention of labors which had preceded his; and, in giving at large his ideas of college regimen, he is careful to condemn the unpopular errors of those who had preceded him; and by a graceful humbling of himself, as a new-comer, he disposes everybody, myself included, to exalt him. And if the theory of his inaugural shall prove to be the theory of his practice, the hand of a master is at length on the helm of Knox College.

Here I should prefer to stop; nor mar this beautiful speech by confronting its poetry by fact; its theories with practice in the realm of education.

The writer says, with equal truth and beauty, that the colleges on this continent are one continuous whole, as a forest is one; that "however modest the proportions of this (each) goodly tree, its branches interlace with others of like nature, and these again with others, so that the force which stirs the foliage of one is communicated to all." For this, and a thousand reasons, Mr. Bateman does not over-estimate the importance of his coming into the circle, as head of an American college. And for this, if for no other reason, we who have been already some time in that circle, owe him the utmost candor and fidelity of greeting.

In this spirit of Christian candor, then, let me say first, that this long, practical address omits, nay, cautiously shuns every practical question now crowding and clamoring at the doors of American education.

Shall our daughters be excluded from the College? Has Knox admitted them by a mistake? Shall the funds which feed our common school system (which the address eulogizes) be torn in pieces; giving Rome the lion's share? Must the Bible be turned out of the school, so compelling Americans to choose between schools without God and schools run by priests? Shall the secret "Greek fraternities" which nine college presidents condemn in President Hitchcock's Memoirs of Amherst; which Wm. M. Evarts recently condemned in his speech at Yale—fraternities such as killed young Leggett at Cornell University, while initiating him; and such as now control most American colleges; continue to defy faculties from their secret conclaves? The most careful reading of Mr. Bateman's inaugural, which tells us what he thinks the college should be and do, gives no clue to his ideas on these and similar topics. Perhaps we do wrong to require it. Perhaps we should take him upon trust. Though if Lincoln's inaugural had shunned all the practical points which divided the country over which he was to preside, he would have been scouted as an equivocator instead of being almost worshiped as a patriot.

On moral as on literal battle fields, cowards are condemned as traitors. Before slavery took arms Webster condemned it in his speech at Plymouth Rock. After the war was opened by ballots and bullets, this greatest of rhetoricians advised us to "conquer our prejudices" against the merchandise of men! A thousand American clergymen denounced slavery "in the abstract" before the system was practically assailed. It was under their theorizing that the slave system grew till it demanded the life of the Republic. And when the question became practical, they became silent or went to the wrong side. No finer eulogiums on Christ and Christianity were ever given than those of the Brooklyn preacher and his antagonist, Theodore Tilton. But their eulogiums were rhetorical.

Prophets, and after them Christ himself, complain of those whose lips honored, but whose acts denied Him.

Permit me, honored sir, to pass to the familiarity of a personal address, and to say, that though your situation prevented your taking any part in the great slavery discussion, while our nation reeled and rocked under it; though you have been a "Grand orator" of the Masons, and though you are now hailed as a Mason by the lodge organ of Galesburgh, there is a pathos and earnestness in your inaugural which penetrates me, and makes me hope that, as a child of the great and living God, you are casting off the "green withes" with which the lodge harlot has bound so many of God's children and champion's; and hat, as Gen. Harrison and Gen. Taylor, though born Southerners or representing slave-holders, towered above the Van Burens, Pierces and Buchanans of the North; so you may in your new post stand for Republicanism and the Cross against the despotism and (in the words of the New York Witness) the "deism of Masonry."

I need no stronger words, and can find no better than your own to move you to this course. You say: "There is no other freedom like that where with God in Christ makes his children free." But you know that "Christ in the blue lodge, is a forbidden word; and the whole system is one of sworn submission to unknown superiors!

You say: "If there is a sight to stir and gladden the soul it is when with one accord, and with shout answering to shout, the great guns of all the moral and literary fortresses of the land, pour their concentrated fire on the columns of ignorance and sin." To which I respond in one loud and long AMEN!

You further say: "College corporations, no less than others, should pay as they go." How truly my heart responds to this sentiment is evidenced by the fact that, at the close of each of the last five years of my administration, Knox College was reported by its treasurer free from debt; and they were the five years when the present buildings were erected.

You speak also of "Young men of scanty means," as "this preeminently desirable class of students." The great number of such students who attended Knox College in its earlier days, when it was a reform College; when the lodge was loathsome to the entire population of Galesburgh; and the highest places of influence in church and state which those once poor young men now fill, attest the soundness of your judgment in this, as in other respects.

And now, my respected brother, I have, I believe, in this writing, given my first words to the public concerning the administration of Knox College since leaving its Presidency. God is my witness, and you shall be, how fervently I wish you all possible success in realizing the magnificent conception of your inaugural; that you may escape the crime and curse so common alas! in our world, of those who

"Keep the word of promise to the ear
And break it to the heart."

And that you may be honored by God as a chief promoter in this State and country, of Christian culture, popular government, and the religion of Christ.

NOTES.

—An important proposition for the political work will be found in the Publisher's Department on the last page of this numbers.

—Special notice is called to the report of the Corresponding Secretary of the work in the field for the quarter ending June 30th. Our lecturers are abundant in labors; they should not fail of receiving a full pecuniary reward from the friends of the cause, for they have been worthy of their hire. Let any sums pledged for their support be promptly paid; and any contribution sent to the Treasurer of the National Association for any department of the work will be promptly forwarded.

—A good friend who has considerable experience in the examination of legal documents, thinks the correction given last week to a misapprehension of Mr. Carpenter's donation is not sufficiently clear. All we meant to say was that Mr. Carpenter's gift of a Publishing House is a gift, and nothing else. The Association is to pay nothing for it. But to carry on the work of the Association something more is needed than the four bare walls of a building, and with a wise forethought the donation is made contingent on the contributions of other friends needed to set the house in order and carry it on. If they are unwilling to do this it is hardly necessary to say that Mr. Carpenter would not be justified in placing his fine property at the disposal of the Association until they are; but we believe that this proof will soon be supplied.

—A cheering proof of the progress of our reform appears in the notices of three State meetings soon to be held, or in preparation, in Ohio, Missouri, and New Hampshire, and an important convention for a more thorough organization of the State of Pennsylvania. The work in New Hampshire shows a clear and remarkable direction of the Divine Providence, overruling the well-meant efforts of Christians, so that they might be turned into a new and broader channel. Let this new effort be everywhere remembered in prayer that the hand of the Lord may not depart from those brethren, and that no evil power may prevail to close the opened door of usefulness before them. Ways of contributing directly to the success of this new work may occur to many readers. Let no plan be untried which promises to be of assistance. The Corresponding Secretary of the National Association has started for the East, and we hope will be in the New England States during the last of August and able to render great assistance in the new organization.

—The news reported by the Iowa State Agent is of a truly startling nature. Have we in the lodge to oppose a sworn set of barn-burners? The ruin of character and property threatened by the lodge has not generally been understood to mean arson and possible murder, and if it has in this case departed from its hidden paths, the desperate act only proves the weakness of the system and its approaching dissolution. With every friend of the reform we sincerely sympathize with Bro. Lyon in this calamity, and if opportunity offers, will gladly aid him in bearing the burden of it.

—Into the Voice of Masonry of this city has now been incorporated the National Freemason of Washington City, and The Freemason of St. Louis; to the latter had been added by suspension or purchase the Evergreen of Iowa, the Masonic Mirror of California, the Masonic Mirror of Texas, the Masonic Trowel of Illinois and the Masonic Tablet of Mississippi. The Chicago organ is thus heir to the estates of eight defunct Masonic journals. If it will go on absorbing till none are left and then follow them into obscurity, the world will be the better for it. We wish no ill to its publishers, but a great good rather, that, like gamblers and saloon-keepers, they find some better business.

—The editor of the same paper was lately made ashamed of the emblems of his order, so as to express satisfaction that he was displaying none. The occasion was a swearing and be-jeweled Knight Templar. The swearing seems not to have been so bad, only a Masonic jewel was advertising from whence it proceeded.

—A letter has been received from Mr. E. J. Chalfant of York, Pa., replying to the severe attack on him in these columns a few weeks ago. As the letter is long and does not add anything of general interest to the controversy, we simply give its summary. Mr. Chalfant does not claim to speak for the U. B. churches of York but for himself alone. He has labored since 1868 among those persons who were afterward connected with the second church of that place, which was our understanding of his first letter. As for the report about Mr. Raber's funeral, we learn that the services were conducted by the bishops of the U. B. church and that no secret order, as such, was represented at the funeral.

Agents' Reports.

COMPILED BY C. A. BLANCHARD, COR. SEC.

During the quarter Rev. J. P. Stoddard has labored in the States of Ohio, Pennsylvania, Illinois and Iowa. All the labor of preparation for our Seventh Anniversary at Pittsburgh devolved upon him and was well performed. His constant traveling and large correspondence have lessened the number of lectures he has delivered. The itemized report is subjoined:

Lectures and sermons delivered	21
Cash collected on the field for lecture work	$ 73.45
Cash collected on the field for Pub. House	41.00
Cash collected for Convention at Pittsburgh	309.21
Notes obtained for Pub. House	880.00
Total	$1303.66
Expenses and Salary	$357.62
Received from Treasurer	238.00
Add collections on the lecture work	73.45
Total receipts on salary and expenses	$311.45
Balance due July 1st, 1875	45.17

It will be seen from the above report that the General Agent has raised in excess of his salary and expenses during the quarter nine hundred and forty-six dollars and four cents. It is to be remembered also that much time was occupied in arranging for the Anniversary.

Rev. H. H. Hinman during the three months April, May and June, labored in the States of Illinois, Indiana and Ohio, lecturing in the States last named on his way to the Convention at Pittsburgh. His report is as follows:

Number of lectures delivered	45
Cash collected for lecture work	$ 78.45
Notes collected for Pub. House	200.00
Total	$278.45
Expenses and salary	$179.48
Received from Treasurer	35.00
Add collections on lecture work	78.45
Total receipts on salary and expenses	$113.45
Balance due July 1st, 1875	66.03

An inspection of the above report will show that the Illinois Agent has during the quarter, raised above salary and expenses, ninety-eight dollars and ninety-seven cents. Mr. Hinman's journey to Pittsburgh probably lessened his collections somewhat. He is now laboring in Illinois between Chicago and Fulton.

Mr. Kiggins, State lecturer for Indiana has sent in reports for April and May and expects to send in that for June soon. He spent these two months in Indiana and reports as follows:

Lectures and sermons delivered	19
Cash collected for lecture work	$ 40.00
Notes obtained for Pub. House	100.00
Total	$140.00
Expenses and salary	$108.75
Less collections on the field	40.00
Balance due on April and May	68.75

The small number of lectures and sermons delivered is due to the fact that Mr. Kiggins was moving his family, attending to other personal matters and conducting a large correspondence for future meetings. It appears from his report that his collections were in excess of salary and expenses thirty-one dollars and twenty-five cents.

The friends of our cause can see that the Association is now indebted for these labors one hundred seventy-nine dollars and ninety-five cents. The Publishing House fund is now nearly six thousand and the friends of Christianity are doing nobly in the matter. Will not those who read this report send in to the general fund means to discharge these obligations and keep the work advancing? All donations can be addressed to H. L. Kellogg, 13 Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill.

PITTSBURGH CONVENTION.—The proceedings of the last National Convention at Pittsburgh, are now ready and will be furnished on application to the publishers at advertised rates. See 15th page.

IN common traveling, the strongest become weary if the journey be very long; but in the spiritual journey we are encouraged with hope of going on from strength to strength.

The Home Circle.

My Saviour.

Jesus, Saviour, make me be
Pure and holy, all like thee;
Freed from each polluting spot,
Purged from every sinful blot.

To thy cross my eyes I raise,
On thy face I fix my gaze;
Scourged, and bruised, and crucified,
Thou hast for the sinner died.

Weary, burdened, seeking rest,
In thy presence I am blessed:
Man of griefs, who died for me,
Through thy sufferings I am free.

What though troubles o'er me roll;
What though memory shames my soul;
What though scoff and scorn remain,
Blood has cleansed each guilty stain.

Meekly then I bear thy rod,
Scorned by men but owned by God;
In the dust my soul abase,
Lost by sin but saved by grace,

Family Failures.

1. Unhappy or discordant marriages; being "unequally yoked." God is disobeyed in the outset;—this is the chief cause of the multiplied, unscriptural divorces. God is not honored; duly acknowledged in the married relation. No wonder a curse follows it instead of a blessing.

"How can two walk together except they be agreed?"

What can be hoped for when husband and wife disagree, but disorder, confusion, and recklessness in the family circle?

2. Another hindrance to family order and Scriptural training, is idolatry; placing our affections unduly on objects forbidden. "Thou shalt have no other gods before me;" "Set your affections on things above, and not on things upon the earth."

How frequently, in mercy, does God snatch the idol from the mother's fond embrace to save the souls of both child and mother!

3. Another cause of failure in family culture is, the early and continued dedication process is not duly considered. Hannah, the mother of Samuel, understood this practically.

When a child is born into the world, what is the first thing? dedication? presenting it to the Lord, a living sacrifice, holy, and acceptable, as a reasonable, perpetual service? This child is not ours, but the Lord's, bought with a price infinite! "Take this child away and nurse it for me, and I will give thee thy wages." (Ex. ii. 9.)

4. Sickly charity, or false tenderness, is another stone or stumbling, a rock of offence. What does this lead to? healing slightly, daubing with untempered mortar, conferring with flesh and blood—"crying peace, peace, when there is no peace." Jacob stumbled here, so did Eli, so did David, and multitudes on multitudes, which no man can number.

5. Idolatry in dress, the tipping off, the wimples and crimping-pins, the artificial gewgaws, the gold, the pearls, the costly array. Do mothers know they are planting thorns in the pillows of their precious little ones for life, when they imitate the world in gay and fashionable costume? The seeds of pride and vanity are sown in the first buddings of infancy!

Gospel purity and simplicity in personal adornments should begin in the nursery—the very cradle of existence; and on forever. "Pride goeth before destruction." How many (who can tell?) are weeping and wailing, where hope never comes, in consequence of this one false step—pride of life, folly and fashion—begun and fostered in early childhood!

6. Another failure in training as God requires is, not subduing the will at once. The very instant the serpent self is manifested, the finger should be laid on the spot of this leprosy. The first movings of this ill-temper in a child should be checked, not suffered to live and breathe a single moment. This secret of all secrets, is the golden key to salvation here, salvation forever. When the will is thoroughly subdued, brought into sweet, heavenly, lamb-like subjection then many innocent indulgences may be granted, which otherwise might prove ruinous.

The will of every son and daughter should be so completely under the control of the parent, that a single word, a nod, a look, a lifting of the finger, would suffice to command instant and cheerful obedience.

7. Another prevalent hindrance to holy, heavenly family discipline, is the almost entire absence of Gospel purity; a holy atmosphere in a family circle. "Example kills, and example cures." Parents do not preach to their children daily, hourly, momentarily, by a holy walk and conversation, lying down, rising up, going out, and coming in, by every look, thought, word, action. Their example gives the lie to their profession; and their little ones become hardened in sin. Children perish—go down to the pit, from the very gate of heaven.

The first thing in "rearing the tender thought" is "holiness to the Lord," written on our foreheads, our doorposts, and upon our gates.

8. There is not talking enough about Jesus, heaven, the way of life, salvation on salvation, rising up, lying down, going out, and coming in, at the fireside, around the table at meal-times, morning, noon, and at night. (See Deut. vi. 7–9.)

The souls of parents are not alive in God—on fire "Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh."

9. Again, the habits of industry are not duly inculcated. Every child should be busily occupied in something interesting, useful, praiseworthy—that counts for mercy; mercy on mercy.

10. Another special reason why so few children submit to Gospel requisition is, ministers from the sacred desk overlook these lambs. They seem to forget that children have souls at all. They make no special preparation to give a portion in due season to the little ones. They come and go, and go and come, neglected and disregarded. They sit listless, restless, careless, wearied in the house of God, longing for the Amen! Is this Gospel?

11. Once more. The letting out of waters, the greatest of all hindrances in taking little children directly to Jesus, is lack of faith. "According to your faith, so be it unto you."

Not a step is taken in the right direction in household duty without confidence in the promises of God, a firm belief. It is our duty and privilege to train our children "in the way they should go," form early infancy, with the assurance that form this heavenly training they will not depart, that it is the will of our heavenly Father these children of ours should be sanctified from their birth, and grow up in the Lord.

Parents must also believe that the Lord holds them responsible for the character, conduct, and salvation of those delivered to them in trust.

Alas! how few parents believe this!

The false idea is almost universal, that children are to grow up in sin for future conversion. Therefore very little special, direct effort is made by parents to take their children in the earliest dawnings of accountability, to Jesus, for the washing of regeneration, the purification of their souls, that their garments may be unspotted—made white in the blood of the Lamb.—Author of "Apples of Gold."

The Luxury of Doing Good.

For many a weary month poor Mrs. W—— sat alone in her humble room. Unable to walk or help herself much, she seldom enjoyed the balmy air, or a sight of the glorious arch of blue, or, what she missed still more, the sound of the Gospel in the house of God.

A good Samaritan happening to call, asked her if she would like to take a ride in the park some day.

Almost overwhelmed at the thought, she scarcely knew what to say.

In a few days the friend came again, saying she would now accompany her, if she could get ready.

Feeble and trembling as she was, it took almost two hours to prepare for this, to her, great event. The folds and wrappings of an antiquated and shabby wardrobe were at length adjusted; the conductor of the street-car kindly helped her to enter, and in the course of half an hour to alight at the Eighth Avenue entrance to Central Park.

Soon one of the generous and capacious stages was found. An unwonted expression of tenderness passed over the faces of the policemen and drivers, as their eyes fell upon the aged form, and they kindly gave the needy assistance.

But, O! the joy, the ecstacy, that lighted those aged eyes, as the, to her, magnificent expanse of lawn, and lake, and sky broke upon her delighted sight.

"And such a night's rest I have not had for months," she said, the next day.

We envy the one who thus created an oasis in the desert life of this aged victim of poverty and pain, yet one who is the daughter of a King, who will one day proclaim to the assembled universe this trifling act of kindness shown to one of His chosen ones. Ye whose many hours are spent in seeking to devise means of enjoyment, whose appetites are cloyed with the good things of earth, whose eyes are wearied with seeing, whose ears with hearing, try this new expedient of pleasure, and learn the luxury of doing good.

So shall some aged heart, in attic or basement, whisper your name in prayer, and call down blessings upon your head.

What other expenditure of thirty five cents could bring such a return as this?

The poor have aesthetic tastes. It seems almost a pity, since they have so little means of gratifying them, but God, who knows best, has so created them.

We must not think we have done all when we have provided them with food and clothing—scantily enough sometimes.

We cannot tell how much good this tribute to a higher nature may do, and we have the sure word of promise that the smallest act of kindness shall not lose its reward.

God says, "Blessed is he that considereth the poor." The poorest need not lose this blessing. Happier is he who has it in his power to minister to them.—Christian at Work.

Saved from Suicide.

"Faith, if it hath not works, is dead, being alone."—James ii. 17.

Some years ago, a minister in one of the Eastern cities preached a faithful sermon from the above words. By many apt illustrations he showed the utter worthlessness of faith without works. One of his hearers, a lady with a small family, listened to the discourse with close attention. The stirring words of her pastor went into her heart.

On Monday morning, while working on her sewing machine, the words, "Faith without works, is dead, being alone," sounded in her ears. The machine stopped as she asked herself—"Did I ever win a soul to Christ? Was there ever a poor sinner led to repentance through me?" Pleading guilty before God, on this question, she wept and prayed. Sincerely she asked the Lord Jesus, "What wilt thou have me to do?" She now desired to lead some one to Jesus. Thinking over many of her friends and acquaintances, who were without Christ, she thought of the proprietor of a shoe store, where for the last four years shoes had been purchased for herself and children. "He is a wicked man, and never once have I spoken to him about his soul." She resolved to go and speak to him.

Laying aside her work she brushed away those frivolous excuses Satan often brings, such as being busy, tired, having family cares, and daily family duties on her hands. It was noon. Perhaps the store may be full of customers. Entirely disregarding all these suggestions, this Christian mother, after an earnest prayer for the grace of Christ to assist her in her message, soon entered the shoe-store. Providentially no one was there but the proprietor.

Stepping up toward him, as he stood behind the counter, she said, "Mr. B——, I've come in this morning to talk to you about your soul." Had a voice from heaven spoken, this man could scarcely have been more deeply affected. He bowed his head on the counter, and wept like a child. After a few moments the lady inquired the cause of his grief. He replied, "I am the most miserable man in this city. I am not fit to live, and I'm sure I'm not fit to die. But just as you came into the store I was resolving to commit suicide, either by poison or the pistol. Life is a burden. What shall I do?" She advised him at once to repent and believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and he would certainly be saved.

After a few more faithful words, spoken with wondrous tenderness, the man's heart was broken. He then said to the lady, "Won't you pray for me?" Sinking down on his knees and burying his face in his hands, there was no alternative left for her but to pray.

And the Spirit helped her infirmities in a wonderful manner, that the poor distressed man arose, thanking her and saying, "God sent you here to-day! I will seek his mercy! I will become a Christian!" Very soon this man came out on the Lord's side, confessed his faith in Christ, and was admitted into the church. Since then he has been an earnest worker in the Master's vineyard, and rejoices in leading others to Jesus. "Is not this a brand plucked from the burning?"

As for this dear Christian woman, she has been ever since showing her faith by her works. "Always abounding in the work of the Lord" is better understood and fully practiced. The case is most remarkable from the fact that this lady had never spoken or prayed in the prayer-meetings of her church. Now her voice is often heard entreating her sisters to "Rescue the perishing. Care for the dying. Snatch them in pity from sin and the grave." Oh! Christian brother or sister, go and do likewise.—Christian Press.

The Howling Dervishes.

On the heights of Scutari, one of the suburbs of Constantinople, there stands a convent, or Tekke, of the Howling Dervishes. In the court of the Tekke the chief ornament is a fountain shaped like a tomb, recalling to mind the coffins covered with cashmere that are visible through the gratings of the funeral chapels of the Sultans. The hall in which the Dervishes perform their ecstatic dances, and to which strangers are freely admitted to witness their strange religious ceremonies, is a simple parallelogram, devoid of architectural embellishment. Upon the bare walls are suspended a number of huge tambourines, with tablets bearing inscriptions from the Koran, while above the carpet where the Iman, or chief of the Dervishes, sits with his acolytes, is exhibited a horrid array of darts, spikes, pincers, and other barbarous instruments of torture. With these the Dervishes wound and torment themselves when they have attained the climax of their religious delirium.

At the beginning of the peculiar devotional exercises of the Dervishes the Iman appears first upon the scene and gravely takes his seat on the carpet, while his attendants station themselves behind him. The Dervishes then file into the room and range themselves in front of the Iman, where for a time they occupy themselves with preliminary prayers, and chants of a serious and elevated character. They then repeat in unison a sort of litany, intoned by one of their number in a stentorian voice, the remainder beating time to the measure with a movement of the head backward and forward. Gradually the chant increases in volume, the oscillations of the head quicken accordingly, and the faces of the fanatics grow livid, and their bosoms heave with swelling excitement. The leader of the chant redoubles his energy, and the Dervishes, as one by one they are wrought up to the requisite degree of fervor, sway their heads with such violence that they seem momentarily in danger of snapping them off from their trunks. Presently all are standing, and the fierce tumult of song and dance breaks forth without restraint.

From M. Gautier, the brilliant French writer, who visited the Tekke in 1853, we borrow a description of the remainder of the exciting scene:

They now formed a chain by putting their hands on each other's shoulders, and began to justify their distinctive name by heaving up from the very depth of their chests a hoarse and prolonged cry, or howl, of Allah-hon! which hardly seemed to come from any human voice.

The whole band, animated as it were by one feeling retired one step simultaneously, and then threw themselves forward with an equally simultaneous plunge, shouting in a deep tone, which resembled the growling of a menagerie when the lions, panthers, and hyenas are all enraged by some unexpected postponement of their feeding-time.

Little by little the inspiration comes. Their eyes begin to shine like those of wild beasts in the depths of a dark cavern; an epileptic foam gathers about their lips: their countenances are distorted and shine lividly through profuse perspiration. The whole line falls back at once, before some invisible gust, like reeds before a tempest, and then rises again as suddenly; and always at each forward plunge the terrible "Allah-hon!" bursts forth with increasing fury. How shouts of such unearthly violence, repeated during more than an hour, could fail to burst the osseous frame of the chest and flood the lungs with blood from ruptured vessels, is inexplicable.

The shouts became after a time mere roarings; and one Dervish in particular, with a face of miraculous sallowness and leanness, a gigantic fleshless frame to match, and a voice deep and cavernous beyond expression, balanced his head amid its matted locks of long black hair, and tore up, as it were, from his skeleton chest the growls of a tiger, the roars of a lion, the yells of a wounded wolf bleeding in the snow, cries full of rage and yet of longing, the vague utterance of some fierce and unknown voluptousness, blended sometimes, with sighs of human sorrow and weakness,—protests of the frail body, burned and bruised by the fiery and restless soul.

Excited by the feverish ardor of this infuriated devotee, all the troop threw themselves back again in one mass, and then formed, like a line of intoxicated soldiers, yelling out at the same instant, one "Allah-hon!" with a sound comparable to nothing earthly, unless the voice of some mammoth or mastodon buried amid the colossal herbage of an antediluvian marsh. The floor trembled beneath the measured tramp of the frenzied band, and the walls seemed ready to tumble in ruins about us, like those of a second Jericho, shaken to their foundations, by the tumult and uproar of these horrible and tremendous clamors.

And now the exhibition has reached its climax. The howls, or shouts, succeeded each other without interval or cessation, and a sort of wild-beast odor was emitted from them, as of heated and sweltering bodies. Through the dust raised by their trampling feet gleamed vaguely, as through an ensanguined mist, visages convulsed, distorted, and frenzied, illumined by white eyeballs and delirious smiles.

The Iman continued standing before the mirab, encouraging the growing frenzy by voice and gesture. A youth detached himself from the group and advanced towards the old man, and now we saw the use of some portions of the terrible instruments suspended from the wall. The assistant of the Iman took from the wall an exceedingly sharp sort of spike, or skewer, and handed it to their superior, who instantly transfixed with it both cheeks of the young devotee, without his showing the least sign of suffering. This operation performed, he returned to his place, and continued his movements as before. It is difficult to imagine anything more strange in appearance, than this herd thus "spiked;" and it would have seemed like a trick of some pantomine, but for the horrible consciousness of its reality.

Two other fanatics now sprung into the centre of the hall, and were supplied with two of these darts, (already described) terminating in leaden hearts, and garnished with numerous small chains of iron. Taking these in their hands, they began a sort of poniard dance, full of extraordinary and violent movements; but, instead of shunning the points of the darts, they sought every opportunity to wound themselves with them, and to scourge themselves with the iron chains, until they fell exhausted to the ground, reeking with blood and perspiration, and foaming like horses goaded to the utmost by the spur, and falling with fatigue before reaching the goal.

As we issued from the hall, we encountered the young man whose cheeks the man had transfixed with the skewer. He had withdrawn the instrument of torture, and seemed none the worse for the operation; a small spot of purple on either cheek being the sole remaining indication of the passage of the iron.

Children's Corner.

Seeking Mother.

A lady was riding in her carriage among the mountains, when they came upon an old woman, with a funny little hood on her head and a staff in her hand, walking on all alone. She was neat and clean, and her skin was soft and delicate, but her back was bent and she was barefoot.

The lady saw she was shoeless and stopped the carriage.

"Here is some money," said the lady, in a tender tone.

"What for?" said the woman, looking up pleasantly.

"To buy shoes for your poor feet. Do you not want a pair of shoes?"

The woman laughed a little low laugh which seemed to come from a heart filled with simple happy, thoughts.

"Don't you want a pair of shoes?" asked the lady, a little hurt.

"I s'pose I do," said the woman, "but I didn't think of anybody's giving em to me."

"Take this bill, please, and buy you a pair," said the lady.

"God bless and reward you!" answered the woman, heartily.

The carriage drove on, and the lady sank back on the seat with tears in her eyes.

"Oh," said she, "I thought I saw my own mother in that dear old lady. She had just such a sweet face and pleasant voice. You don't know how I felt when I thought of my mother, old and feeble, walking with bare feet over the rough, rocky road."

If we all saw fathers and mothers, brothers and sisters, in the poor, cold, and the hungry, what a world this would soon be.—Child's World.

The Rebuilding of St. Peter's at Rome.

Everybody knows that Michel Angelo repaired to Rome a second time, at the solicitation of Pope Julius II. Tha latter wished to construct a mausoleum for himself superior to any that had ever been erected. Michel Angelo was charged with the work, and thereupon commenced a design worthy of himself and patron. This design was a "parallelogram, and the superstructure was to consist of forty statues, many of which to be colossal and interspersed with ornamental figures and bronze bassirelievi, besides the necessary architecture, with appropriate decorations, to unite the composition into one stupendous whole.' The Pope was pleased with the design, and enquired the expense. "A hundred thousand crowns," said the artist. "Let it be twice that sum, if need be," continued Julius, and he immediately gave orders to execute the work.

It was suggested to the Pope that such a monument ought to have a special chapel built expressly for it, and that St. Peter's, being an old church, was not at all adapted to the purpose.

"I will rebuild St. Peter's!" exclaimed the Pope. This was the beginning of an edifice which took a hundred and fifty years to complete, which consumed the fortunes of millions, gave rise to the sale of indulgences, and, though unexpectedly, laid the first stone of the Reformation. Albeit, it is now the grandest display of architectural splendor that adorns the Christian world.—The Galaxy.

Magnitude of Ancient Works.

Nineveh was 14 miles long, 8 miles wide, 46 miles round, with a wall 100 feet high, and thick enough for 3 chariots abreast.

Babylon was 50 miles within the walls, which were 75 feet thick and 109 feet high, with 200 brazen gates.

The temple of Diana at Ephesus was 420 feet to the support of the roof —it was 100 years in building.

The largest of the pyramids was 481 feet in height and 858 feet on the sides. The base covered 11 acres. The stones are about 60 feet in length, and the layers are 208.

The labyrinth of Egypt contains 300 chambers and 12 halls.

Thebes, in Egypt, presents ruins 27 miles around, and contained 350,000 citizens and 400,000 slaves.

The temple of Delphos was so rich in donations that it was plundered of $50,000,000, and the Emperor Nero carried away 200 statues.

The walls of Rome were 13 miles around.

Saving the Sawdust.

Mahogany tables are not made of solid mahogany; nor are rosewood bureaus made of solid rosewood. They are veneered; that is, thin slices of rosewood or mahogany are glued on common wood. A few years ago, they sawed a stick of rosewood or mahogany into strips for veneering. Of course a great deal of the valuable wood was lost in sawdust; as much as half of it was wasted. But a machine has been invented which does away with the saw in this work. It shaves instead of saws, and by shaving off the slices nothing is lost, and the saving on a log of rosewood is said to amount to not less, in some cases, than five hundred dollars.

Perhaps you would have said, "What is the need of caring about a little sawdust? The waste is not much." Waste counts up. Here were five hundred dollars' worth wasted, or saved. Yes, boys, waste counts up. Waste minutes, waste opportunities, waste words, waste pennies, they count up. A person is a great loser by them; and it makes all the difference in the world as to what his character is worth, whether he has wasted or saved the sawdust of his life—fritted it away, or used it in little advantages and smaller means.

A Screw Loose.—When I hear a boy speaking of his father as "the old man," or "the governor," I know there is a screw loose, and the boy has taken a long step towards the bad. And the girl who pouts when reproved by her mother, and jerks off her bonnet in a pet when restrained from going abroad, has already mutinied against the law of heaven, a road that leads to a gulf from which there is no return.

A Letter From Elder Freeman.

Montague, N. Y.

Dear Bro. Kellogg:—Your card came to hand yesterday, which informed me that I was elected as member of the corporate N. C. A. Much obliged, and hope I can serve the interests of the good cause, in which we are engaged, in that as well as in other capacities. And yet I know and feel, it is very little I can do; but that little shall be willingly and earnestly done My heart is in it, as well and as much as in any other department of Christian enterprize. To oppose Christian effort to oath-bound secretism as found in Masonry and other similar societies is just as necessary and just as much enjoined by, and acceptable to, God, as against any other form of sin. This form of sin is stupendous and gigantic as both Catholicism and paganism; for it has all the animus and energy, if not the dimensions of both. It also like them boasteth great things and undertaketh great evils—and has most skillfully planned its hurtful designs. On the one hand it holds out menaces, slander and abuse; also persecution in derangement of business, crippling men's honest and honorable enterprizes; and even assassination to coerce men into submission to its control; and on the other it flatters, bribes and seduces men into its embraces by untold ways and means. To say that it is Janus-faced is tame and fails to tell the hundredth part of the truth. It seldom fails to see the most successful means for accomplishing its wicked and ungodly purposes and having no conscience it has no moral check on its worst wishes and designs.

Considering these facts together with man's readiness to yield to fear, flattery and interest (or supposed interest), in his fallen state, it is not strange that there is so little interest felt (or at least manifest, if felt), in opposing this world-wide wrong. Still, it does not seem strange that there is so much apathy on the part of the Christian world, as if some deadly opiates had been administered; for it is against Christianity, meeting it at every avenue at which it seeks to enter and bless the world, that this colossal enemy aims its blows. Strange anomaly! It chains men's fears by making prominent real grounds for fear. It says, keep still, show no opposition and you shall not be harmed, while the chains are being drawn tighter around its victims and threatens destruction if there be opposition. I have been very much interested in reading the doings and addresses at the meetings in Pittsburgh in June. So far as I understand, I approve of all that was done, especially the nomination of J. B. Walker for the Presidency of the U. S. I am most devoutly thankful that God has given us such a man for such a time. He gave us a Washington and a Lincoln for their times, and now I hope the nomination of Prof. Walker may be taken as a foreshadowing of Divine mercy upon our country in coming years.

Great apathy is felt in this part of the country on the subject of secretism. The Masonic lies are too stupendous, too terribly sworn to, too religiously affirmed, and with too much seeming innocence told, to be believed to be lies. It is astonishing how secretists have taken the public mind captive, and lead the populace as they will. And yet there is a latent undercurrent of doubt among the masses shading up into strong colors of belief among the few, that emboldens them to speak out their convictions. O that this conviction may bleach out that credulity that believes Masonic lies! that conviction of the truth may take Masonic falsehood, the prison-house of public credulity, and demolish it and liberate its willing and unwilling victims, for both are there!

Yours with all good wishes and prayers for your welfare and success in your work. A. D. Freeman.

Temperance.

The Results of the Crusade.

When the temperance crusade was most absorbing the hearts of the people, there were not wanting some who said that women were out of their sphere; that the home circle would be destroyed; that they had never been commissioned to preach; that the clergy were leading them and interfering with what did not concern them; that business interests would be hopelessly crippled; that public opinion was in favor of drinking, else laws would be enforced; that the labor would be worse than wasted, for if an attempt was made to restrain men they would be more effectually steep themselvest in sin; in short, they predicted that the movement would be a failure, and now, that during the heat of summer the praying bands have discontinued this branch of their work, these rise up with one accord, and say, "Two dram-shops are open for every one before the crusade; there is more liquor sold, more drunkardness than ever, and society is in a worse condition." Strange to say, some newspapers, some organs even of the party that accomplished such grand results in the anti-slavery war, are making the above assertions, not because the editors believe them, but because a newspaper printed in a locality where whiskey votes are in the majority, must, to make the most money, as they think, echo the wishes of such majority.

Is it true that two dram-shops are open now for every one before the crusade, and has the number of saloons increased or decreased? We have written to thirty or forty towns.

Steubenville had 125 saloons before the crusade began; now 44. The McConnellsville ordinance, which prohibits the sale of wine and beer, which sale our Ohio law permits, to the sorrow and shame of the State, closed forty of these, besides those who gave their pledges to the women never to sell again. Of course this ordinance was the direct result of the sentiment created by the crusade.

In Warren, where six were closed by the women and so remain, the prohibitory law has also been passed, and the remainder of the saloon-keepers are carrying on their business under peculiarly trying circumstances, some of their customers having to ascend to the house-tops to drink their beer, and even this has been declared breaking the law, which forbids selling upon or about the premises.

In Hillsboro, the women closed eight by their entreaties. Three new saloons have opened, but of course there are five less than before. Logan had seventeen saloons—now eleven; New Lexington thirteen—now four; Morrow, a place of 1,200 inhabitants, had fourteen saloons—now eight; Zanesville had one hundred and fifteen—now forty-six. (Sale of whiskey decreased forty-seven per cent., beer twenty-seven per cent.) Clyde had eleven—now five; Millersburgh ten—now six. Oxford had twelve. All were closed. Three have re-opened. Of these, one, having received more visits from the women, closed again, and the other two are selling according to law. Statements like the above, with but two exceptions, where the number was declared unchanged, were received from all the towns.

We wrote to the nineteen Internal Revenue Districts of Ohio for number of saloons, and amount of collections on distilled and fermented liquors for May, June and July, 1873, before the crusade began, and for corresponding months of 1874, the praying bands having generally ceased their work in March or April.

Reports are given from all those heard from.

In every district heard from there is a decrease in number of saloons save in 9th, including Sandusky, where the women were apparently restrained from the work by their Republican (?) press.

The amount of collections on distilled and fermented liquors in the thirteen districts heard from shows a decrease of $174,707, for May, June and July, 1874, as compared with the same months in 1873 before the crusade.

These figures do not show that saloons or drinking have increased. But the good accomplished is not computed by dollars and cents.

Social drinking is not so popular. Where, as in Cleveland, 1,000 young ladies of the highest social position form themselves into a "temperance league," pledging never to use liquors of any kind; nor to offer them to others, and to discountenance the habit among young men of using them, the good effects are readily apparent. Instances like the following are not unfrequent. A party of four had taken a pleasure ride to one of lake resorts, and were at supper. All had taken champagne repeatedly together. When it was ordered, the girls said, "We are members of the League, and shall never never use it again." The young men expressed their surprise, but said "Neither will we," and they came home with clear brains and better principles.—Advance, Oct. 8 74.

Religious Intelligence.

—The Baptists of Kentucky have 51 associations, 1,118 churches, 517 ministers, and upwards of 130,000 members, 30,000 of whom are colored.

—There are said to be 1,000 Scandinavian Baptists in the United States. They held a conference recently at Cokato, Minn.

—The National Union Convention for the Promotion of Holiness, will meet with the National Temperance Convention which opens at Sea Cliff, July 13, and continues about ten days. The meeting will be one of unusual interest.

—An invitation is being extensively signed in Brooklyn, under the auspices of the Young Men's Christian Association, by clergymen and prominent citizens, which is designed to be sent to Messrs. Moody and Sankey, in the hope that they may spend some time in that city when they return from England.

—The most recently published statistics of the missions of the United Brethren (Moravians) are as follows: Ninety-two stations—in Labrador, Greenland, among Indians of North America, Mosquito Coast of Central America, the West Indies, Surinam, South Africa, Australia-Thibet; 333 missionary agents, of whom 28 are natives; 1,389 native assistants. Of the total number of the persons belonging to our Mission (69,322), 2,745 are Esquimaux, 1,344 Indians, 9,328 South Africans, 55,750 negroes, 154 natives of Australia and Thibet.

—There is a rapidly growing sentiment among English Methodists in favor of lay representation. The Methodist calls for such a concession to be immediately made to Scotch Methodists, as a necessary condition of growth in a locality where Presbyterian laymen are eligible to office and representation. The following, however, is the report of the Committee of the Wesleyan Conference, to which the subject was referred: They come "to the unanimous conclusion that, while the time is now at hand when some comprehensive plan for the direct and adequate representation of the laity throughout the connexion in the transaction of all the business of the Conference (except only that which is regarded as ministerial) must be adopted, and the sooner the better, several years must elapse before a complete and well matured scheme could be brought into practical operation."

—In the Theological Seminary of the Reformed Presbyterian church at Allegheny, Pa., 22 students attended the sessions the past year, 4 of whom were since licensed to preach. The Senior Professor, Rev. Thos. Sproull, D.D., has been appointed Emeritus Professor, with the understanding that he would continue to share the labors. Rev. D. B. Wilson, of Allegheny, has been appointed an additional Professor.

—The late General Assembly of the United Presbyterian church at Wooster, Ohio, made the following appropriations to Foreign Missions for the ensuing year: For Egypt, $35,000; Syria, $4,200; India, $14,400; China, 1,600; outfits, traveling expenses and salaries of new and returning missionaries, $10,000; and miscellaneous, $1,000, being a total in currency of $66,200.

—The Second Baptist church of Chicago, in charge of Revs. E. J. and T. W. Goodspeed has received during the year 149 members making a net gain of 58, and giving a total membership of 1,340, which is said to be the largest membership, except colored, in any Baptist church in this country.

—Says a committee of prominent Baptists, there are probably five hundred Baptists churches in Kentucky who have no Sunday school.

—Twenty Episcopal ministers have been displaced from the ministry during the past year, most of them having gone into the Reformed Episcopal church.

—A considerable number of the churches of New York having been closed while their pastors take a vacation, the Young Men's Christian Association, recognizing the spiritual wants of the season began an outdoor meeting Sabbath before last. Mr. Bohan of the House of the Evangelists, led the services. The locality was well-chosen, and a large number of persons from the thickly populated neighborhood soon collected. Doubtless many a poor person rejoiced that he could join in the hallowed exercises; and the work was progressing decently and in order, when suddenly it was interrupted by a party of intoxicated Germans and others, and no police appeared to keep order until they had been quieted by others. These meetings are to be continued.

—Messrs. Moody and Sankey are not likely to lack for opportunities on their return to this country. The ministers and other Christians of Chicago, of New York, and of Cincinnati have severally united in earnest invitations to them to labor in those places the coming year. They are expected to start for this country about August 4th. Mr. Moody is expected to seek the much needed rest at his mother's home in Massachusetts.

—Bishop Baltes of Alton, Ill, has placed under ban all societies in his congregation whose members send their children to public schools, or give balls or picnics at which intoxicating liquors are sold.

—The German Government, it is said, has in preparation a measure to be laid before Parliament prohibiting processions throughout the empire. This measure is intended to apply particularly to religious processions.

—A protest against ritualism has been presented to the Archbishop of Canterbury from the county of Kent, signed by 2000 communicants. Among these are ten peers, five peer's sons, four baronets, and eighty-one magistrates.

—The meeting of the Evangelical Alliance will be held in Belfast, in October next. A number of distinguished visitors from America and the Continent will be in attendance.

—Bishop Smith, the presiding bishop of the Episcopal church in the United States, has impanelled a preliminary court, which will shortly meet in Baltimore, for the trial of Bishop Whittingham, on the charge of refusing to summon a court to try two clergymen of Mount Calvary church in that city for using prayers for the dead, which the accusers assert involved the doctrine of purgatory.

—Rev. C. F. Hawley, pastor of the Wesleyan church of Millbrook, Pa, was one of the active members of the late National Convention. Since his return home he has been sorely afflicted by the death of his eldest son, a lad of twelve or fourteen, quickly followed by that of his second son. The disease was a malignant scarlet fever.

News of the Week.

The City.

Whether the work of rebuilding the Chicago Custom-house is to be continued or whether the portion already erected will be torn down, cannot be decided until after the next Congress meets, Secretary Bristow having referred it to that body. He thinks that it would be folly to complete such a building, as the commission appointed by him to examine its condition reported very adversely.——In connection with P. T. Barnum's show exhibited here last week, a pleasant and successful balloon ascension was made on Wednesday afternoon by Prof. Donaldson accompanied by four reporters. On Thursday, with a reporter from the Evening Journal, Donaldson again ascended, and was carried in a northeasterly direction over the Lake; and up to Tuesday morning nothing positive had been heard or seen of the aeronauts or the balloon. A severe storm from the north came on about midnight and it is feared both perished. Vessel masters report seeing the balloon near the water on Thursday evening and on Saturday what might be portions of the balloon afloat.——The police war continues although the Supreme Court has affirmed the decision of Judge Farwell against the Police Board. That body refuses to give up its authority and in spite is making public some of the dark bargains between the police and the thieves, gamblers and prostitutes of the city.

General.

At Lawrence, Mass., on the 12th as a lodge of Orangemen were returning from a picnic in commemoration of the Battle of the Boyne, a crowd of several hundred Irish met them at a steamboat landing, and soon began throwing stones. The Orangemen were driven to the police station, and were stoned all the way thither, a distance of more than half a mile. Mayor Tewksbury harangued the crowd, but his voice was drowned amid groans and hisses. He then came out and headed the police in escorting the Orangemen home. The crowd threw stones, bottles, etc., striking nearly every one in the procession. At the corner of Union and Spring streets the mob made a furious onslaught on the party, when nearly all the police and Orangemen were knocked down. The latter then, in self-defense, drew their revolvers and began firing on the mob, who quickly dispersed. No one was killed, but upwards of twenty persons were seriously injured.——A meeting has been held for the purpose of taking measures towards establishing a weekly journal in Washington, to be managed exclusively by colored men, and devoted to the interests of the colored people. Frederick Douglass, Professors Langston and Wilson, and other prominent men of that race earnestly seconded the proposition.——The National Educational Association, of which Dr. W. T. Harris, of St. Louis, is the President, will hold its fifteenth annual meeting at Minneapolis, Minnesota, on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, the 3d, 4th, and 5th days of August, 1875.

Foreign.

London, July 12.—Messrs. Moody and Sankey's farewell meeting took place at Mildmay's Hall. The Earl of Shaftesbury and Cavan, Samuel Morley, M. P., Cowper Temple, Mr. McArthur, and seven hundred clergymen were present. Of these 188 were clergymen of the church of England, who far outnumbered those of any other denomination. Canon Conway occupied a seat on the platform. All those present were deeply affected. Mr. Moody, while speaking, was so overcome with emotion that he had to stop and was unable to conclude. To a suggestion that a memorial of some kind be presented to Messrs. Moody and Sankey, Mr. Stone, on their behalf, replied that it would not be accepted, and nothing would give them more pain than such a step.——A meeting was held in Hyde Park on Sunday to protest against the grant for the Prince of Wales' visit to India. Twelve thousand persons were present. Bradlaugh made a violent speech and concluded by offering a resolution of a similar character. The resolution was almost unanimously adopted. Eight persons who voted against it were set upon by the crowd and the police had to interfere for their protection.——Lady Franklin, the widow of Sir John Franklin, died Sabbath night.——Continuous heavy rains have fallen in various parts of Great Britain, swelling the rivers and streams, and causing them to overflow and inundate the surrounding country.

In some districts the floods have been attended with loss of life, and heavy destruction to property.

Twenty persons have been drowned in Monmouthshire and much property destroyed.——Official advices report that the Carlists are surrendering in large numbers. The Carlist army officers are becoming discouraged and their forces demoralized.—Accounts are received of a furious outbreak among the lower classes of the city of San Miguel, in the Republic of Salvador. The riot grew out of a religious disturbance between church and state, the latter refusing to allow the Catholic Bishop's pastoral, in tone hostile to the Government, to be read in the churches; while the action of the civil authorities in regard to the location of a new market-place still further fanned the discontent, which was finally wrought to the pitch of violence by an inflammatory pulpit address by a priest named Palacios. Thus incited, a mob of overpowering numbers took possession of San Miguel, a city of 40,000 inhabitants, broke open the public prison and liberated the inmates, attacked and killed the small body of troops garrisoned in the city, murdered and mutilated Gens. Espinoza and Castro, assassinated several prominent citizens, and then fired the town with kerosene, burning sixteen houses, and by fire and pillage causing a damage of about $1,000,000. Nothing but the opportune arrival of a British man-of-war and the assistance afforded by her marines put a stop to the terrible work of slaughter and destruction. Then there was some more slaughter, but it was of the right sort, many of the rioters being caught and shot. At last accounts, President Gonzales had arrived on the scene, and vigorous measures of punishment were under way.

Postage on the Cynosure.

The postage on the Cynosure must be paid at Chicago. It is twenty cents a year.

The cost of postage now depends entirely on the size and weight, and therefore some smaller papers charge but fifteen cents; and others about the size of the Cynosure charge twenty-five cents a year for postage.

If the subscription price of the Cynosure was $2.50 or $3.00 a year, the price of many religious papers containing no more reading matter, we might afford to pay the postage ourselves, but at $2.00 a year we cannot do this with our present Subscription list.

Therefore let all send the postage, 20 cents a year, 10 cents for half a year with their renewals.

The commission on one new subscription for a year will pay the postage on your own and the new subscriber's paper. We would rather have the postage paid by commissions than in any other way.

When postage is not paid we shall have to shorten the time of subscription sufficiently to pay it.

Home and Health Hints.

Cherries.

The common cultivated cherry is of Asiatic origin, and is said by Pliny to have been introduced into Italy from Pontus, a province of Asia Minor, about 10 years before Christ, and about 120 years afterward it was introduced into Great Britain. The Romans had but eight varieties of the cherry, while in our catalogues there are more than three hundred. The common wild cherry is one of the largest trees in our American forests, and rivals the mahogany in the beauty of its wood. From the fruit of this tree cherry brandy is made.

The cherry is almost the only fruit which we share with the birds, and since that is the case, it would seem generous on the part of man to make ample provisions for the feathered tribe that so delight in it. Worms, too, love cherries, unfortunately for us, and for that reason this delicious fruit has to be carefully picked over and is generally cooked before it is brought upon the table. As the kernel of the cherry contains prussic acid, it should be removed before preserving or canning the fruit; but if the cherries are sound, it does no harm to stew them whole for immediate use.

Cherry Jam is one of the most delicious sweetmeats this fruit affords, and being so it should be made in the most enjoyable manner. Let the fair confectioner, with neatly combed hair, clean calico dress and ample apron, sit in the shade while stoning the fruit. Then take equal weights of white sugar and cherries, make a sirup of the sugar, simmer the cherries slowly in the sirup for twenty minutes, take them out with a perforated skimmer and spread them on dishes to cool, boil down the sirup till it is quite thick, put the cherries back and let them boil up once, then seal in glass cans.

Canned Cherries may be put up like any other fruit in a fourth of their weight of sugar, or even less than that; they should be thoroughly cooked, and sealed when boiling hot.

Cherry Pudding.—Scald a quart of milk and stir it into a pint of cornmeal; when cool, add half a pint of Graham flour or a little less of fine flour with which a teaspoonful of yeast powder has been thoroughly mixed, four well-beaten eggs, and a pint of ripe, unstoned cherries which have been washed and rolled in flour while damp. Wring the pudding-bag from cold water, flour the inside well, put into boiling water, and boil steadily for two hours. Place an inverted plate at the bottom of the kettle under the pudding, and as the water wastes add boiling water. Serve with a sauce of sugar and cream.

Pickled Cherries.—White ox-hearts are preferred for pickles. The stems should be left on and the pits in; for eight pounds of fruit take four pounds of sugar, two quarts of the best vinegar, a little cloves, cinnamon, mace and ginger-root. Boil the vinegar, sugar and spices together, skimming thoroughly; strain it over the fruit, and boil very slowly till the cherries look like cracking open; take up carefully into jars and keep in a cool place.

Dried Cherries.—Take large cherries, not too ripe, remove the pits, take equal weights of cherries and sugar. Make a thick sirup of the sugar, put in the cherries and boil them a minute, and spread them on an earthen platter till next day, strain the sirup, boil it down thick, put the cherries in and boil five minutes, spread on a platter as before; repeat the boiling two more days, then drain, lay them on wire sieves and dry in a nearly cold oven.

Cherry Pie.—Stone the cherries, make a paste in the ordinary way, put in the fruit, add sugar and a little water. Stir a tablespoonful of flour smoothly into two of water and spread it evenly on the edge of the paste: put on the cover and bake till done. All fruit pies can, by using this mixture of flour and water, be kept from running over in the oven.—N. Y. Tribune.

If you have been picking or handling acid fruits, and have stained your hands, wash them in clear water; wipe them lightly, and while they are yet moist, strike a match and shut your hands around it so as to catch the smoke, and the stain will disappear.

Farm and Garden.

Sun-burned Hay.

The effect of sun-burning hay is to change the succulent grasses into woody fibre, a substance that the maws of animals cannot dissolve, and which therefore is little more nutritious than so much finely splintered wood. The loss to our country within the last century by too much sundrying of hay, has been immense; and it was not till within a few years that the error of over sun-burning hay was discovered by a few observing farmers, who had noticed that such of their hay as had been put in the mow or stack rather green, to save it getting wet by the showers, turn out the best in the Winter, the most greedily devoured by the cattle, and evidently the most nutritious. Probably Bullard's hay tedder has had much to do with improving the hay in our country, by insuring its expeditious gathering. Sound judgment is its use is however required. It should not be drawn over the meadow too early in the morning after rains or heavy dews. It is better not to touch grass cut from six to nine in the morning, till nine o'clock, or a little later if the morning has been at all cloudy or foggy. This in order to give the fallen grass time to evaporate whatever dew is on its surface; for it is not the natural juice of the grass, but rain water or dew, that causes hay to mould in the mow or stack. But while the tedder should move lively for an hour or two after the dew has evaporated, it may move slowly as soon as the hay is nearly made, as otherwise the foliage and shields of the grass will be lost on the meadow; and the horse that draws the tedder will readily agree to this, as by this time he will naturally become leg-weary, and quite willing to take another gait.—Nash.

The curing of hay should be a precise imitation of the curing of herbs. The housewife cuts the mint and thyme and sage and catnip while they are in flower, and dries them slowly in the shade. Hay should be cut in flower also and dried with as little exposure to the sun as practicable. In this respect, as in many others, the husband may take a lesson from the wife. Were hay cut early, the aftermath would be very much better, and the roots of the grass would be far stronger to resist the winter. It is seeding which weakens plants and to let the grass run to seed greatly injures the present crop of hay and weakens the plants and the ground for the future. —Ex.

Why Clover Improves the Soil.—Prof. Voelker thus explains the action of clover in increasing the fertility of the soil:

"All who are practically acquainted with the subject must have seen that the best crops of wheat are produced by being preceded by crops of clover grown for seed. I have come to the conclusion that the very best preparation, the best manure, is a good crop of clover. A vast amount of mineral manures is brought within reach of the corn crop, which otherwise remains in a locked up condition in the soil. The clover plants take nitrogen from the atmosphere, and manufacture it into their own substance, which on decomposition of the roots and leaves produce abundance of ammonia. In reality the growing of clover is equivalent, to a great extent, to manuring with Peruvian guano."

Levington's Key to Masonry.

This is Rev. Mr. Levington's last, and in the judgment of its author, best work on Masonry. The contents of the first chapter are as follows: "Commencement and growth of Speculative or Symbolic Freemasonry—A table showing the thing at a glance—The use that the Atheists made of it—Identical with Illuminism—Its connection with the French Revolution, and with the Irish Rebellion—The action of the British Parliament with regard to it—Proofs of its diabolical purposes—Its Introdnction, doings, progress and designs in the United States."

The contents of the Eleventh chapter are thus startling:

"Knights of the Golden Circle—Graphic account of them by a seceding Knight, and remarks thereon, showing the identity of the order with Masonry—Quotations from Sir Walter Scott."

This work is thrilling in statement, and powerful in argument. 425 pages,

Price. $1.35.

Platforms of the American Party.

G. A. Loomis of Casey, Iowa, writes: "What can you furnish platforms of the American Party for, by the hundred? We want to procure some for circulation in this county now and just before the election. Let me hear soon."

We wish we had a thousand more such letters as the above. If every one of the subscribers of the Cynosure will go to work in earnest for our ticket and make nominations early and have them printed on the bottom of our platform, and put one of them in the hands of every voter in your county, which can be done at a trifling expense and without great labor if all take hold, we can as certainly elect a great number of town, county and State officers as this experiment is fully tried. These platforms, with ten to twenty names of local nominations printed on the bottom. will be furnished by Ezra A. Cook & Co., as follows: 1,000 for $2.00, 2,000 for $3.00. 3,000 for $3.75, 5,000 for $5.00. Shall not a million of these platforms be put in the hands of voters before January next?

ELASTIC Thread Cutter.

PATENTED NOV. 4, 1873.

The ELASTIC THREAD CUTTER is the most useful attachment for the Sewing Machine; can be used at every seam that is sewed, and is very convenient; always at the right place to cut the thread in an instant when desired without looking for the scissors, which are very often misplaced, and in their absence the thread is often broken off by hand, and frequently a needle is sprung out of place unnoticed until the machine is operated again, then the needle will break. This device will cost no more than a dozen needles and save a great deal of time, vexation and trouble in replacing them. It is also a good Ripper and Button Hole Cutter.

This attachment is hooked on the bed-plate of the Sewing Machines, with the knife under the elastic, and when wanted for use slack the thread a little, pull the fabric out from under the presser foot and raise the knife with one hand and with the other pass the thread on the edge of the knife as shown in the engraving, then give the thread a little twitch on the edge of the knife from you.

Topics of the Time.

Since the days of Wesley and Whitefield, Great Britain has seen no religious work to compare with that of Mr. Moody during the last few months. When we regard the agents and results there are no rules of worldly calculation that give any adequate measurement of the case. In London alone during the four months past, it is estimated that the aggregate of the different audiences attending his meetings has amounted to nearly two million people. From other cities which he has visited reports come of the progress of this revival in perfecting the zeal and purity of the churches. The effect of this work upon the friendly relation between us and Great Britain will take more than one war to destroy. It cannot be over-estimated. And yet the evangelists were less noticed in the public press and by the upper classes than the American marksmen now practising in England. The English people are so devoted to sporting that to meet superiors on their peculiar field, rouses an ovation immediately.

The attack of the Romish priests on the public schools is beginning to have a decided influence in politics. While the warfare was on the use of the Bible in schools the public was disinclined to engage in it, as Protestant charlatans were dividing common opinion on the subject. But when the school system itself is assailed there is too great a union and pressure of opinion not to show itself politically, especially as the papal force have in some States harnessed the Democratic party to their Juggernaut car of images and traditions. In State conventions held in Ohio, Pennsylvania, California and Texas the free school dogma has been urged, either publicly or in caucus, as fundamental. It will not long be denied that the papal power has a political arm as well as spiritual, and while the palsied hand of the Pope has dropped the scepter in Italy, his cunning agents are not unmindful of the abuse of power to the advantage of their system in other lands.

While the political conventions are agitated by the onsets of Rome, that dark power enters the privacy of the home, unsuspected and unopposed. William Hogan, a former priest connected with St. Mary's Catholic church, Philadelphia, has written a letter in which he says that it was usual at his morning services for from three to eight children of Protestant parents to be presented for baptism by Roman Catholic nurses, and gives his belief that in Boston nearly all "the children where there are Roman Catholic nurses are baptized by their priests and bishops." Such a ceremony is, to be sure, like Paul's idol, "nothing in the world," and the careless parent may pass it by as such. But it cannot be trivial when nuns disguised as servants creep into families and conspire with priests for their spiritual ruin. American mother's cannot safely neglect the spiritual necessities and tempers, either of their children or their servants, and kitchen doors need watching as well as the portals of capitols.

Prof. Marsh of Yale, whose success as a fossil hunter in the Black-Hills gave him momentary notoriety wil become more famous as an Indian fighter at Washington, not against but for the red man. His charges, which are in particular against the management of Saville, an Indian agent, more or less effect the whole Indian management and the Department of the Interior, have been placed in the hands of a commission to be thoroughly investigated. There is, meanwhile, great confidence expressed by the best papers in the character of Mr. Smith, the Commissioner of Indian affairs, and doubts of Prof. Marsh's integrity have been aroused from his long arguments to the public through the New York Tribune, which would have been in better taste spread before the committee of investigation.

Charles Francis Adams and the Bunker Hill Centennial.

The centennial celebration of the battle of Bunker Hill with its procession and pageant has passed and gone. The centennial of the first battle of the Revolution was an event to be commemorated, for there was demonstrated the ability of the undisciplined yeomanry of the colonists to resist British regulars and to dispel the imaginary doubts of those who heretofore had considered them invincible. Washington then on his way to take command of the army, inquired eagerly how the militia withstood the charge of the regulars and being told of their noble conduct, replied, "The liberties of the country are safe." This battle gave the colonists a consciousness of their strength and an impulse to their cause that was felt to the end of the struggle.

There is a circumstance connected with this celebration that has attracted the attention of the press in various localities.

Why was not Charles Francis Adams selected for the orator of the day?

For reasons which every school-boy well understands, he, above all others, seemed to be the proper person for that occasion. The gentleman selected to follow Webster in the two great orations of his life was not only without any national reputation, but comparatively unknown even in Massachusetts. I have not seen any explanation of this. Let us see if we can find one.

In a small volume entitled "Brochure of Bunker Hill with Heliotype views," published by Osgood & Co. of Boston, we read, page 28:

"The Freemasons have the honor of taking the initiative in a structure to commemorate the heroic death of their Grand Master, Joseph Warren. In 1794 King Solomon's Lodge of Charlestown erected a Tuscan column of wood elevated on a brick pedestal eight feet square and surmounted by a gilded urn, bearing the age and initials of the illustrious dead encircled with Masonic emblems. The whole height of the pillar was twenty-eight feet. The face of the south side of the vase bore the following inscription:

'Erected A. D. MDCCXCIV, by King Solomon's Lodge of Freemasons, constituted in Charlestown 1783, in memory of Major General Joseph Warren and his associates, who were slain on this memorable spot June 17, 1775.'

'The enclosed land given by the Hon. James Russel.'

A model of this monument stands in the present obelisk with this inscription: 'This is an exact model of the first monument erected on Bunker Hill, which, with the land on which it stood, was given, A. D. 1825, by King Solomon's Lodge of this town to the Bunker Hill Monument Association that they might erect upon its site a more imposing structure. The Association. in fulfilment of a pledge at that time given, have allowed within their imperishable obelisk this model to be inserted with appropriate ceremonies by King Solomon's Lodge June 24, A. D. 1845."'

Thus we see how Freemasonry glorifies itself in erecting its cheap structure of wood and brick and claiming the honor of erecting the first Bunker Hill monument. On page 24, we read:

"The Masonic apron worn by Joseph Warren as Grand Master, has also come into the possession of the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts and will be worn on the centennial by Mr. Percival L. Everett, G. M.

"The Masonic apron worn by Lafayette during the ceremony of laying the corner-stone is now in the possession of the Grand Lodge of Masons of Massachusetts, to whom it was presented by Mr. Whiston. It will be worn on the centennial by the Deputy Grand Master."

It is true that in 1826, when the corner-stone of the Bunker Hill monument was laid, Freemasonry was an institution existing quite extensively, and unknown except to its own members. By them it was represented as a system, inculcating among its members a spirit of universal benevolence and the purest morality. It was called the patron of science and the handmaid of religion. Upon all public occasions the fraternity appeared with their symbolic regalia, and in the foundation of public buildings the corner-stone was tried and pronounced square and true by men who had no knowledge whatever of real masonry. In the month of September, 1826, a citizen of New York was murdered by this order. This outrage, and others growing out of it, caused an excitement which extended over the whole Union and introduced a new era in the history of Freemasonry. This society which heretofore had been suffered to exist and its principles taken upon trust, now began to be an object of suspicion, as all societies certainly will be which find it necessary to surround themselves with such an impenetrable veil of secrecy. People are prone to suspect where all is not open, all is not honest. Petitions were presented to the legislatures of several States, demanding an investigation of this order and the obligations assumed by its members.

In New York the Masonic oath was found to be a shackle upon the ministers and officers of justice. The lips of witnesses were mysteriously sealed and jurors were influenced in their verdict by an obligation more powerful than their oaths as jurors. Legislative committees were appointed to investigate, summoning before them members of the order and in some instances officers of the Grand Lodge. Their obligations were found not only without warrant of law, but compelling those who assumed them to disregard and violate the law. They were pronounced blasphemous and opposed to public morals. The penalties attached to the violation of them were forbidden by the Constitution of the State and of the United States. Among the statesmen, the jurists, the theologians and poets of New England, the conviction became general that the safety of government and religion, the rights of the citizen and the impartial administration of justice required that the institution should be suppressed by law. In Massachusetts, Connecticut, Vermont, and Rhode Island, laws were passed, prohibiting the administration of the Masonic oath.

This institution thus suppressed, after having become almost extinct, is again secretly working its way into favor and power. Of the causes of this, time and space will not permit me to discuss.

Every feature which made it so objectionable forty years ago is unchanged. All the objections urged against it then, apply with equal force at the present day. In all probability if Daniel Webster were alive he would be taboed by the Masonic managers of the Centennial for his decided utterances against Freemasonry.

It remains to be seen whether enough of the spirit of Bunker Hill yet exists to determine whether Massachusetts is one of the States of a free Republic, or the province of a secret and despotic empire. NEW YORK.

Principle and Practice.

BY GEO. H. VARCE.

Right principle is indeed a great thing, right practice is greater. But a solid combination of both is the greatest. As it is a matter of fundamental importance that none should mistake this idea, it may be well to state that inasmuch as it is possible and very probable that one can possess principle without practice, so is it possible and very probable that one can practice without principle. But no one can practice rightfully without some previous knowledge and possession of right principles. Right principle, if operated, must of necessity result in right practice. Hence, if the antecedent be right, it follows that the consequent will be also.

Again, it is not good morality for any one to practice that which has not for its basis a right principle. But as many do claim to be practitioners of morality, that fact is highly suggestive of right fundamental principles. However, to claim to be thus and so, without the requisite evidence, is naught but mere pretension, and mere pretenders are often nothing more than mere quacks.

Now then, in operative Freemasonry, there are both principles and practices. And to reason a posteriori from what there is to be known of the practices, most certainly do we arrive at the conclusion that the very foundation principles of that order are not what they should be. Are the workings of Freemasonry dark and infamous? Then depend upon it, its principles are none the less so. Do the operations of that order conflict with the Holy Bible and its precepts? Then are its suggestive principles also in conflict. Bad principles if carefully observed, always end in evil practices. And such evidently is characteristic of Masonry.

I am a professor of both the principles and practice of Christianity. At first I looked at the principle of the thing, weighed it carefully, looking away ahead to see where the results would lead me, and then being well satisfied of its righteousness, I at once incorporated the principles with the various faculties of my constitution, and by the grace of God became what I am.

Now in practical Christianity I find everything necessary for my moral good, both here and hereafter. Do you suppose that any man-made concern could induce me to exchange my religion for it. Not so weak, I trust, where I ought to be strong. I am well aware that what little talent I may possess, is demanded of God in his vineyard. So I have none to spare for anything outside of that. Besides I am confident that God has the first, best, and in fact the only right to myself. If I possess the least particle of light, God has commanded me to "let it shine." Then what would I be doing with my light in the dark, secret chambers of the midnight conclave? Practically hiding it under a bushel, contrary to the direct counsels of my God. When not otherwise righteously engaged, my companion has the right to my company and if I am what I ought to be, as a professor, yea more, as a preacher of the Gospel, I will act the part of a Christian with my wife, giving her my counsels, attention, assistance, keeping nothing from her that is good; and that which is not, I do not want myself.

Convention Correspondence — Letter From Isaac Preston, Esq.

LOCKPORT, Ill., June 7, 1875.

Pres. Blanchard,

MY DEAR AND HONORED FRIEND:—Six weeks ago it was my determination to attend our Christian Convention at Pittsburgh this week, but the subsequent state of my health and some other circumstances have induced me to change my mind and very reluctantly to give it up. But my spirit is with you and my earnest desire and prayer is that the deliberations and acts of the convention may be guided by that wisdom which is from above and result in great good to the cause in which we are engaged.

I would not trouble you or any of our friends, only that I wish to ask you to call the attention of our convention particularly to one of the great evils growing out of the overshadowing influence of Freemasonry in our country and one which I think has not hitherto had its proper share of attention from the opponents of the order. I allude to the influence of the order over our general system of jurisprudence.

More than forty-eight years ago my attention, in common with that of the people of the Northern States generally, was called to this feature of the subject. I need not refer to the evidence of the influence and power of this fraternity over the consciences of its members, as brought out by the Morgan trials and its effect on the administration of justice under the civil law. These are patent to every observer. But from that period to the present my own observation and experience have been such as more and more fully to convince me that the Masonic fraternity is the most powerful organization to circumvent the ends of justice that has any existence in Christendom.

A few years ago in an adjacent county, a case came before the grand jury of which I was a member, where the party complained of was an ex-sheriff of the county and a high Mason. The evidence was clear and unequivocal, sufficient to convict. The jury consisted of sixteen. It required twelve to find a bill, and there were five Masons in the pannel, every one of the eleven others voted for a bill, and the five voted solid against it, and the bill was lost.

The other day I fell in with a gentleman, a member of the Cook county bar, and a Knight Templar. In conversation on this subject he frankly acknowledged that lawyers and parties in court well understood the advantages Masons had over others and that they did and had a right to avail themselves, and challenged me to show him a man that would not do it, and offered a bounty to see such a man.

I have seen the influence of these institutions in church and state; in politics and business; in circles, civil, religious and social, in the local Christian church and in the district school. A few years ago an excellent Christian minister of a church of which I was then a member, refused to recognize the Masonic fraternity as such at the funeral of one of his parishioners. When the congregation were moving out of the house, a venerable officer of the church, who was also a venerable member of the lodge, said to a brother Mason, "this sermon will unsettle Mr. ——" (the minister), and in a few months he was unsettled.

I certainly would not suffer a friend, being a Mason, for whom I had any personal esteem, to go on a jury in a case of mine, my opponent being a Mason, for the very plain reason that if I sm honestly entitled to a verdict and he accords it to me, he violates his Masonic oath. But if he gives his verdict against me and against law and evidence he is guilty of legal perjury.

But I have already said more than I ought to and will only add that I do most earnestly wish that this subject may be brought before the convention for its serious consideration.

The fitness of men who have taken these oaths and obligations and adhere to them, to sit as jurors where one party is a Mason, and also their fitness to serve as grand jurors, or as judges or civil magistrates where one party is a Mason, is the question. I hope, sir, the convention will recommend to all our friends throughout the country to petition the legislatures in all their different States to enact laws, making it legal to challenge and reject all men as jurors who are bound by these extra-judicial oaths, and also to demand change of venue in all cases where the court and one of the parties are so bound.

The influence of these societies on the church and the general interests of religion and morality is terrible. This I freely admit. But the attention of our friends and the religious press, as far as it is not muzzled, has been especially called to these features of the case; while their influence on the general administration of justice has, I think, been entirely too much overlooked.

I hope our friends will go home from this convention determined to make this work of petitioning our next legislators a speciality; and I would recommend that every solicitor carry a copy of Morgan's book in his pocket, or some other authentic copy of the Masonic oaths, obligations and penalties to exhibit to every citizen who questions the propriety of such a measure.

Most truly and fraternally yours,

ISAAC PRESTON.

American Patriots and Principles Dishonored.

BY SAMUEL D. GREENE.

General Washington's letters to Rev. Mr. Snyder, of September 25th, 1798, of which Mr. Sparks, President of Harvard College, in his Life of Washington has certified to a copy, says: "I preside over no lodges nor have I been in one more than once or twice within thirty years." In confirmation of the above, I find among my papers a letter from an officer of Fredericksburgh Lodge, dated October, 15th, 1825, in which he says: "For my own satisfaction, I searched and took a full record from the books of Lodge No. 4, Fredericksburgh, Virginia." George Washington was made a Mason Sep. 1st, 1752; on March, 3d, 1753, passed to Fellow Craft; August 4th, 1753, raised to a Master Mason; September 1st, 1753, he attended the lodge and January 10th, 1755. In the treasury book is this entry: 'Received of George Washington for his entrance 2*l.* 3*s.* November 6th, 1752." This was sent to the editor of the Christian Herald, June 20th, 1829. These are all the times that Washington ever attended the lodge. He was born February 22d, 1732, initiated, September 1st, 1752, when he was twenty years and seven months old; visited the lodge twice afterward; no more. He thought it "child's" play.

Now hear his language in his farewell address to the people of the United States, September 17th, 1796. He says: "All abstructions to the execution of the laws, all combinations and associations, under whatever plausible character, with the real design to direct, control, counteract, or awe the regular deliberation and action of the constituted authorities, are destructive to this fundamental principle (obedience to the established government), and of fatal tendency.

Now does not Freemasonry meet this view exactly? British tyrranny never more completely swayed the destinies of America than Freemasonry does now. That ruled openly; this rules secretly. This threatens all we hold dear, our liberty of speech and of conscience; our political and religious institutions, our confidence in men, our trust in God. No confidence can be placed in the word of a man while the gross falsehoods of Freemasonry pass current with him. No faith in the Lord Jesus our Saviour can exist and be cherished, where the filthy abominations of Freemasonry are allowed and practiced. Here is an institution founded at the Apple-tree Tavern by four clubs of bricklayers in 1717, one hundred and fifty-eight years ago. Twenty-six years after it was transported to North America. It was of so bad a character that it was proscribed by the republic of Holland in 1738. In 1745 it was proscribed by the republic of Switzerland. In 1775, one hundred years ago, Masons laid the corner-stone of their first hall in London, with the blessing of their Grand Chaplain, Dr. Dodd, who was hung at, Tyburn for crime in 1777.

Now, one hundred years after their first lodge was dedicated to Freemasonry in London and after being proscribed by two republics they are parading and presenting their military forces at the centennial celebration of Bunker Hill battle on the 17th of June, at the very time when the Christian National Association and much of the country is alarmed at their corruption both as to the laws of our Republic and also to the church of Christ.

The Grange and Farm Laborers.

[Correspondence Chicago Tribune.]

The astonishing growth of the grange order has surprised the civil world; and, while many sagacious minds discovered, at an early stage of its life the seeds of future dissolution, yet the powerful order has not sprung into existence for naught. The gigantic corporations that were springing up all over the land threatened to control the political machinery of the nation,—to usurp the legislative and judicial functions of the country; and the warning they have received may not be without good results.

The unpleasant features of grangerism, however, lie in the secrecy of the order, and the arrogant manner in which they ignore all rights but their own. With the check given to railroad monopolies, they manifested a spirit to break down the manufacturer and the country merchant, and to reduce the wages of the laborer. I know they have strenuously denied the latter charge, as they well know that their death-knell (as a secret order) is sounded when the laboring element of the country is arrayed against them, as it surely will be. I am aware that, in their State Conventions, they have passed high-sounding resolutions, favor the right of labor to its just reward, denouncing the usurpations of capital, etc., etc.; yet the instinct of the laboring men teaches them that the grange organization is not laboring in their interest.

The farmer hopes to reap two advantages: To increase the selling price of his productions, and, at the same time, keep down the wages of labor. I have clipped from a late number of the Wilmington (Del.) Commercial the recommendations of a prominent grange in that State, and, if more testimony is needed, similar resolutions (recommending a maximum rate of monthly wages) were passed by a local grange some months since. I saw the paragraph in a Chicago daily at the time, but forget the name of the grange.

GRANGE AND FARM WAGES.—Queen Anne's County Grange recommend that, wages heretofore charged for harvesting grain being out of all proportion to the price of grain, they be reduced this harvest to the following figures: For cradlers, $1.50 per day; binders after cradlers, 75 cents per day; after reapers, $1 per day; shocking, $1.25. These rates were recommended to the farmers of the county for their adoption.

In view of the above, I ask if the laborer is not justified in demanding the abolishment of a monopoly as grinding as any the grangers have denounced. If they are to be allowed to fix 75 cents as a harvester's wages with wheat at $1.35 (Delaware price), what must wages be if wheat should fall to $1? If the grange can arbitrarily fix wages at 75 cents (in harvest), what is to prevent 50 cents or 25 cents per diem being adopted?

It is evident that the grangers have started out with a determination to bring all interests in subserviency to their own. The proud claim that they feed the world is true, but their own condition would be little better than the Digger Indian were it not for the progress of other interests as vital to human prosperity and happiness as their own. Competition is the great leveler of exorbitant profits, and the condition of the farmer this day, financially, is far less deplorable than the depression which has overtaken the mercantile, manufacturing, and commercial interests of the country. If the granger can take comfort from the present condition of affairs, or by any form of resolution or action can get increased prices for his productions from the hundreds of thousands unable to even pay present ones, I am unable to see how it is to be accomplished. I believe the elements of our prosperity are identical; and that the free air of a Republic will prove death to a society whose cornerstone is secrecy, and whose foundations are built upon prejudice.

Secret Societies in Sicily.

A correspondent of the Daily News writing from Rome, in the middle of June, gives an account of a debate in the Italian House of Assembly in regard to an organization flourishing openly, though having its roots deep down in secrecy, and the end of which we may be sure is not far off when the legislature has begun to discuss it. This organization is called the Maffia, and is recruited from the class intermediate between the tillers of the land and the land-owners; and its objects are to oppose the laborers and resist and intimidate the proprietors of the soil. The result is that the landlord is almost invariably an absentee or a passive upholder of the Maffiose system; being its creature even in the capacity of juryman, magistrate, or prefect. The Maffia is not brigandage, though it leads thereto, for the ground-down peasant is fain to enroll himself among the brigands, either to enable him to meet usurious claims or else to get rid of a brutal taskmaster. But he often finds he has flown from a comparatively omnipresent power, the ramifications of Maffia extending into the brigand haunts. He thus becomes more than ever the slave of the Maffia, and thousands are disciplined to carry out the illegal, usurious, plundering designs of their greatest enemies. It is an ally of brigandage, and it knows how to use "the good green-wood" and to keep in hand a Friar Tuck, who is not infrequently a negotiator between the brigands and the "warneo" landlord or the rich friends of a captive. It is even said that English engineers have had to avail themselves of the intervention of a priest in order to "square" the Maffia to allow them to proceed with their lines of rail. But the union of Italy has begun to play upon this mass of corruption. The Maffia has, therefore, had to resort to fouler instruments, braving where it formerly cajoled the law, murdering where it formerly menaced; and so vigorous are its efforts to secure itself, that in many places Sicily is in a state of terror.

In the Presbyterian of a late date, "An Elder" says: "Some years ago it was inquired, 'Why is the General Assembly not invited to New York?' It was answered by a prominent minister of that city, that many of the families objected to entertaining the delegates because of their tobacco habits. More recently a lady was requested to entertain some members of a Synod. She assented, but added, 'Do not send tobacco men.' A few weeks ago I entertained a minister of some note, who was a great advocate of moral reform, especially of temperance, but was himself an acknowledged slave to tobacco and admitted it to be an evil. Now, I beg leave to recommend to all tobacco-using ministers and elders, and to private Christians, who may read this, in the words of politicians to put 'that and that together, and lay them alongside of conscience.'"

The following letter, to the same paper, gives a financial view of the question:

DEAR SIR: Enclosed is three dollars, the price of one five cent cigar a day for three months, which please place with the Relief Fund for disabled ministers. I cannot spend money for tobacco when so many of our worn-out ministers need bread.

It is not enough that we swallow truth; we must feed upon it, as insects do on the leaf, till the whole heart is colored by its qualities, and show its food in every fibre.

Should we not live with the great truth constantly in mind, that unless we live in the glory of God and the highest good of our fellow-men life would be to each one of us a failure.

The Binding of Satan;

OR AN ELUCIDATION OF THE FIRST PART OF THE TWENTIETH CHAPTER OF REVELATION.

BY HIEL LEWIS.

"And I saw an angel come down from heaven, having the key of the bottomless pit, and a great chain in his hand. And he laid hold on the dragon, that old serpent which is the devil and Satan, and bound him a thousand years, and cast him into the bottomless pit, and shut him up, and set a seal upon him, that he should deceive the nations no more till the thousand years should be fulfilled; and after that he must be loosed a little season." Rev. xx. 1,3.

In this article I will endeavor to show what I consider to be the true meaning of the "binding of Satan;" that Jesus Christ was the angel whom the revelator saw symbolized; and when this binding took place. I will show from Scripture, that Satan, from the remotest antiquity exercised a supernatural power, and through those that sold themselves to his service, such as the magicians, witches, necromancers, those that had familiar spirits, and those that ministered at the altars of the pagan gods, etc. and by these means deceived the nations of the earth.

See Exodus, viii. 11 and 12: "Then Pharaoh called the wise men and the sorcerers; now the magicians of Egypt they also did in like manner with their enchantments, for they cast down every man his rod and they became serpents; but Aaron's rod swallowed up their rods."

The opinion of Dr. Clark is, "that the serpents were brought by the ministry of a familiar spirit," and considers it perfectly rational to allow that these magicians had familiar spirits, who could assume all shapes, and change the appearances of the subjects on which they operated. Thus the magicians, by or through this power of the devil, succeeded in counterfeiting the first three miracles wrought by the hand of Moses.

See also 1 Samuel, 28th chapter, where Saul visits the witch of Endor and requests her to bring up Samuel.

Dr. Benson on this passage says, "May we not believe that evil spirits really assisted on such occasions, might, and did come to the aid of such execrable wretches, sold to their service like this woman? Be this as it may, contrary to all her expectations, the moment Saul had mentioned the name of Samuel, the woman saw a venerable figure before her which made her shriek out with astonishment." That is, before the witch could bring her familiar (evil spirit) to personate Samuel, that prophet in reality appeared before her, which was the cause of her terror and alarm.

On this passage Dr. Clark remarks: "The woman meant no more than making her familiar personify whomsoever the queerest should wish. In the evocation of spirits, this is all that, according to the professed rules of their art, such persons pretend to, for over human souls in paradise, or in the infernal regions, they have no power. If we allow that there is such an art, founded on true principles, all it can pretend to do is to bring up the familiar, cause him, when necessary, to assume the form and character of some particular person, and to give such notice relative to futurity, as he is able to collect."

To further show that God permitted Satan to inspire the false prophets, and those that ministered at the altars of the heathen gods, and the heathen oracles, we may turn to 1 Kings, 22d chapter:

"Then the king of Israel gathered together the prophets about four hundred men and said unto them, shall I go against Ramoth-gilead to battle or shall I forbear? And they said, Go up; for the Lord shall deliver it unto the hand of the king. And Jehoshaphat said: Is there not here a prophet of the Lord, besides, that we may inquire of him?" And when Micaiah came, and was put under oath to speak nothing but the truth in the name of the Lord, he said: "Hear thou therefore the word of the Lord: I saw the Lord sitting on his throne, and all the host of heaven standing by him on his right hand and on his left. And the Lord said, Who shall persuade Ahab, that he may go up and fall at Ramoth-gilead? and one said on this manner, and another said on that manner. And there came forth a spirit and stood before the Lord and said, I will persuade him." (Just as Satan appeared before the Lord in the case of Job.)

Here it is plain that Satan exerted his power through these false prophets to deceive Ahab, and that both Ahab and Jehoshaphat knew that these four hundred prophets were not prophets of the Lord.

See also Isaiah viii. 19.—"And when they shall say unto you, Seek unto them that have familiar spirits, and unto wizards that peep and that mutter: should not a people seek unto their God, for the living to the dead? To the law and to the testimony; if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them."

Again in Daniel, ii. 2.—"Then the king commanded to call the magicians, the astrologers, and the sorcerers, and the Chaldeans, for to show the king his dream."

Many other passages of Scripture might be cited, but these are sufficient to show that this kind of devil-worship and manifestation of the supernatural, was practiced all over the world, from remotest antiquity till the time of Christ. This is also shown by profane history which gives us accounts of the doings and sayings of wizards and witches, of priests and priestesess that ministered at the altar of the heathen gods, and of the various oracles, in all principal cities, which were consulted on all matters both public and private, past, present and future. An extract from Rollin's Ancient History, in his chapter on oracles, will be in place here. He says: "The wonderful facility with which demons can transfer themselves almost in an instant from place to place, made it not impossible for them to give their supernatural answers, and to seem to foretell in one country what they had seen in another."

Turtullian gives his opinion thus: "Now admitting it to be true that some oracles have been followed precisely by the events foretold, we may believe that God, to punish the blind and sacreligious credulity of the pagans has permitted demons to have a knowledge of things to come, and to distinctly foretell them, which conduct of God though much above human comprehension, is frequently attested by the Holy Scriptures." Now if that was ever certain and uniform in any thing, it is on this point, for all the fathers of the church and ecclesiastical writers of every age, maintain and attest that the devil was the author of idolatry in general and of oracles in particular.

Just here let us consider this peculiar sentence in Rev. xx. 3.—"That he (the devil) should deceive the nations, no more till the thousand years should be fulfilled;" that is, that this power by which he had deceived the nations, was to be suspended, or sealed up. And this is the kind of power we have been describing; this is what is referred to in Rev. xvi. 14, "For they are the spirits of devils working miracles, which go forth unto the kings of the earth," etc. In this verse the Revelator is describing the same power that should be developed again as soon as Satan should be loosed out of his prison, as we propose to show in a future article.

We have introduced this quotation to show that this was the same power that Satan had so successfully used to deceive the nations, and so establish himself as the god of the world, the prince of the power of the air, the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience.

Much more from Scripture and history might be cited to identify this power and its exercise in the world; and when Christ came to earth, this power was largely developed, especially in the control of the bodies of mankind; and the devils knew that they had but a short time, and must soon be commanded to depart into the deep, or bottomless pit.

We propose to show that Christ was the angel that came down from heaven, having the key of the bottomless pit, and a great chain in his hand and laid hold on the dragon, that old serpent the devil and Satan, and bound him a thousand years.

That Christ did come down from heaven, few will disbelieve; so we will make but one quotation, John iii. 13: "And no man hath ascended up to heaven, but he that came down from heaven, even the Son of man which is in heaven." And to identify Christ as this angel we will refer first to Gen. iii. 15; "And I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed; it shall bruise thy head and thou shalt bruise his heel." Here we have the declaration of war between the serpent and the "seed of the woman," and all concede that Christ was the "seed of the woman." Even devils recognize him as the angel that was to bind him, for they say, "Jesus thou Son of God, art thou come hither to torment us before the time?" Here the devils recognize the fulfillment of Gen. iii. 15, and that the declaration of war then made, was soon to go into effect. They knew the doom that awaited them, and sought to postpone the execution of the sentence by telling Christ that the time had not yet come.

Again in Luke viii. 31, "They besought him that he would not command them to go out into the deep." This word is rendered "bottomless pit" in all but this and Rom. x. 7: "Or who shall descend into the deep, that is, to bring Christ again from the dead;" and in Robinson's Lexicon this word is defined as "that part of Hades in which the souls of the wicked are confined." It is evident that the great horror of these devils arose from the consciousness that Christ was about to command them to go into the deep or bottomless pit, the prison house of wicked spirits, and that their fears were well grounded we will proceed to show.

Luke ix. 1: "Then he called his twelve disciples together and gave them power and authority over all devils." Christ could not have given his disciples this power, if he himself had not been in possession of it; consequently he had that great chain and the key. See also Luke x. 17: "And the seventy returned again with joy, saying, Lord, even the devils are subject to us through thy name. And he said unto them, I beheld Satan, as lightning, fall from heaven." Dr. Whedon renders this passage thus: "I was beholding, and describes it as an action going on while another action is being performed, that is, while you were subduing demons, I was beholding and contemplating Satan himself falling from heaven." This was a visible revelation. See also the same author on John xii. 31: "Now shall the prince of this world be cast out." That is, Satan, whom the fall has enthroned on earth and whom the hearts of men so willingly obey, is here pronounced to be, not by right, but in fact, the prince of this world. 'Cast out,' that is, the seed of the woman shall bruise the serpent's head now."

As the war was declared in Eden so here it is being carried into execution, and is so recognized by both parties. Christ, the angel that came down from heaven, is laying hold on the dragon, bruising the serpent's head, and casting them out into the deep or bottomless pit.

Satan was the god of this world, not only as to rule, but was worshiped by nearly all mankind under various names of gods. See 1 Cor. x. 20: "But I say that the things that the Gentiles sacrifice, they sacrifice to devils and not to God;" and to secure to himself this homage he (the devil) exercised a supernatural power, for he had the power, even, to transform himself into an angel of light.

That this power totally and absolutely ceased, at least in the Roman empire, during the ministrations of Christ and his apostles, is a fact attested by both Christian and pagan writers. Rollin writes as follows:

"The learned apologist for the fathers, shows that all that they allege is, that oracles did not cease till after our Saviour's birth, and the preaching of his Gospel, not on a sudden, but in proportion as his salutary doctrine became known to mankind. This unanimous opinion of the fathers is confirmed by the unexceptionable evidence of great numbers of the pagans who agree with them as to the time when the oracles ceased."

The Religious Encyclopedia on "Oracles" says, "That oracles were silenced about, or soon after, the time of our Saviour's advent, may be proved, says Dr. Leland, in the first volume of his learned work on the necessity and advantage of revelation, from the express testimony not only of Christian but heathen authors." Lucan, who wrote his "Pharsalia" in the reign of Nero, scarcely thirty years after our Lord's crucifixion, laments as one of the greatest misfortunes of that age, that the Delphian Oracle, which he represents as one of the choicest gifts of the gods, was become silent. Porphyry, in a passage cited from him by Esculius, says, "The city of Rome was overrun with sickness; Esculapius and the rest of the gods having withdrawn their converse with men, because since Jesus began to be worshipped, no man had received any public help or benefit from the gods." The Encyclopedia Britannica, says: "Augustus, having consulted the oracle of Delphos, could obtain no other answer but this: 'The Hebrew child, whom all the gods obey, drives me hence, and sends me back to hell; get out of this temple without speaking one word.'"

From the foregoing it is plain that the seed of the woman, Jesus Christ, the angel that came down from heaven, had laid hold on the dragon, that old serpent, which is the devil and Satan, and had cast him into the bottomless pit.

On the Road—From the Corresponding Secretary.

Toledo, O., July 22, 1875.

Leaving Chicago, on the Lake-Shore and Michigan Southern, a ride of one hundred and sixty or seventy miles brought me to the little town of Wauseon, Ohio. Here Bro. Miller and other friends met me at the depot and we at once proceeded to his hospitable home. After prayer we had a consultation which resulted in the determination to raise all that was possible for the Publishing House now, and to have a course of lectures in Fulton Co. in September next, ending with a Convention to be held in Wauseon.

Here also are some friends of Wheaton College and after preaching on the Sabbath for the Methodist Episcopal brethren, when Monday came the Secretary of the National Christian Association called on them and secured a little aid for that institution. The subscriptions here foot as follows:

For Publishing House: Bro. Miller, $50; brethren Zimmerman, Knepper and McQuillen, $25 each.

For Wheaton College, Bro. A. H. Smith, $21; Bro. E. Ross, $5 cash.

Brother Adam Andre also contributed one dollar toward the expenses on the road.

At Delta, the second station east from Wauseon, we had two lectures in the Free Methodist church, which were very well attended. Brother Wilson, the pastor, is a true friend to our cause, as also is Bro. Gates, and others might be named. Explaining the Publishing House enterprise brethren assisted somewhat, though they are heavily burdened in carrying on their own work. The list of subscriptions is as follows: Samuel Houge for Publishing House, $50. Jacob Koos for do., cash, $5.

Brother Gates paid a subscription to the general fund of $5 and furnished a home to the "Anti-mason." Three friends subscribed for our paper, The Cynosure, and on Thursday the cars carried the Corresponding Secretary to Millbury.

From the Indiana Agent—Labors and Experiences.

Remington, Ind., July 14, 1875.

From Belpre, leaving brother Vinton Alderman, and brother Smith standing on the platform, I went by way of Marietta, renowned as the first settlement in Ohio, to Cambridge, where after waiting some hours I learned that in order to reach Salesville, where I was to meet friends to convey me to Kennonsburg, it would be necessary to go past to the next station, and then come back, as the only available train was a fast train which did not stop at all stations.

I acted accordingly and was agreeably surprised, upon entering the coach to meet Dr. L. Davis, President of the Union Biblical Seminary, at Dayton, and formerly for many years President of Otterbein University. Those who are acquainted with Dr. Davis know him to be one of the strong, and polished pillars of the U. B. church, and of pure Gospel faith. In his company the time passed rapidly, and before parting he promised, if possibly he could find time to spare from his school, to be present at our State Convention in October. He is a speaker of great ability, and holds an audience under a spell of eloquence and the manifest presence of God's Spirit while he speaks. His presence will be a source of strength to our good cause. He spoke of the remarkable fact that "after the U. B. church had stood for so many years opposed to the lodges, just when some of them grew disaffected, and were demanding a change, God raised up this movement outside to give it moral assistance in maintaining its integrity." Would that every God-loving and devil-hating United Brethren man and woman in the land would see the hand of Him who is thus extending help, as this true prophet sees it.

I arrived at Salesville late in the afternoon, but found brethren Henry Wilson, and Isaac Marlow awaiting me. We soon reached Kennonsburg, where I spoke in the Town Hall, to a good audience. After speaking I went with Thos. Marlow, where I had a pleasant home till I left. On the second evening I spoke in the M. E. church, which was filled. I was pleased to see two of the Horton family, from Summerfield, a son and a brother of Rev. Richard Horton, author of the famous "Image of the Beast," pronounced by all "a strange and wonderful book." In the morning I waited a good long time to see brethren Rownd and Taylor who at Pittsburgh had engaged me to speak twice at Sarahsville and twice at Summerfield, and promised to make the announcements, and either come, or send some one for me. They had, through the county papers announced that I would speak twice at Sarahsville, and once at Caldwell, but not at Summerfield. No one came, and thinking something might have hindered providentially, I prevailed upon the same brethren to take me away who had brought me there. At Sarahsville I spoke twice in the Wesleyan church on secrecy, and preached on Sunday in the forenoon. I found a good home with brother Steward and many kind friends who spoke words of encouragement.

On Saturday evening, having no word from Dr. Taylor, or brother Rownd, I was greatly perplexed, not knowing what the arrangements were at Caldwell. I hesitated about going to that place, as there were no friends of our reform living there. Just when I was most perplexed, brother Thompson of Senecaville came, and soon invited me to visit his place before leaving. I accordingly sent an appointment by him for Sunday and Monday evenings, which I filled, making my home at his house, and enjoying with him and his very interesting family a "feast of reason and a flow of soul." The meetings were not largely attended, and so far as my ability to interest, and the attendance of the people was concerned, were nearly a failure. But God is able to make our weakness strength.

The tobacco traffic is the curse of this otherwise fair country. It is the staple product; is raised, bought and sold; smoked, chewed and snuffed by men, boys, women and girls.

On Tuesday I started on my way to Clifton to my next appointment, but arriving at Xenia on Wednesday too late for the early train, I found that by no train could I reach Clifton until late at night, and so disappointed and chagrined I was left to do but one thing—go home. This I did, stopping at Richmond, Dublin, and Newport, and arriving at home on Saturday, July 3rd.

I will next give an account of my present tour to the prairies of western Indiana, where I now am. Sincerely,

John T. Kiggins.

The Mason City Incendaries.

Mason City, Iowa, July 19, 1875.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

I wrote you a week ago of the burning of Mr. Lyon's residence, and of the fact that Masonry was charged with the affair; and now for some of the reasons why it looks dark for them. No one pretends to deny that the mob and egging of two weeks before was instigated and largely (if not wholly) conducted by the leading Masons of our town, and it is such a short step from that to the fire that it makes it very unfortunate for them, to say the least of it. Then the presence of a number of the fraternity on the ground at an early stage of the fire from very remote parts of town, when as yet no alarm scarcely had been given, indicating by their dress that they had not been undressed, and the contemptible sneer seen on the faces of some of them as they met and looked—all indicated their approval, if nothing more.

Mr. Lyons had been during the week talking up matters looking to the establishment of a county organ to enable us to get to the people with what we wanted them to know, and this move greatly alarmed the fraternity and their tools, both of the city papers, and they saw that something must be done to deter Mr. Lyons and others from that enterprize, and if he was once burned out, and the family could be so frightened that they would not even venture to rebuild, and such a pressure brought to bear as perhaps to drive them from the place, a stop would be put to that enterprize for a time at any rate.

Now Mr. Lyons having gone to the southern part of the State, where his sick wife had been for some time under medical treatment, and having no opportunity of communicating with him, I do not know how far the fire has been successful in the direction indicated above, only that some of the family who are here have expressed fear in regard to rebuilding or trying to live among this people.

Such is Masonry, and anyone well acquainted here can see a difference in the countenance of every one of them everywhere. If the world was to be burned up, it could not make a more preceptible change in the countenance of the craft. They are afraid that their day is short in this county, for be it known that we have the numbers, influence, money and brains, when we get our arrangements made, to make these Masons take back seats while we will look into some of the reasons of our enormous taxes and other burdens too intolerable to be much longer borne.

Yours for the war, J. HANKINS.

Correspondence.

The True Issue.

In the Cynosure of July 8th it is claimed that the "charm and glory of our political movement is our platform." It is always hard to dissent from our friends, especially if in most things we cordially and most heartily concur with them. We attended the Pittsburgh convention, and in the main approved of what was done there except the action which infringes upon our Constitutional guarantee of religious liberty, and which is claimed now as an issue; "Heathenism or Christianism," a "Sabbath or beer-gardens," "Godless schools or Christian schools."

We are among those who believe that our Fathers in establishing this government laid the broadest foundations of civil and religious freedom. The political and religious revolution of '76 sealed the death-warrant of the union of church and state. This new movement in favor of putting God in the Constitution belongs to what may be called the dogmatical age of Christianity, the age when it was thought our religion might be strengthened by constitutional provisions and legal enactments, which would prove an elixir of life to whoever would vote for it.

In the practical workings of our great nation we have come to learn that Christianity is not a dogma, not a creed, but a spirit; that its essence is the spirit of its Divine Founder; that it is of little importance how we pronounce the shibboleth, or what church a man belongs to, or what forms of doctrine he subscribes to, but the supreme love of high moral perfectness shining forth in the life and teachings of Christ; and this doctrine and spirit are safe where our fathers left them. To this great idea of reason and revelation of the understanding and the heart, of experience and philosophy; to this great truth of an advanced civilization, religion enforced by law stands in direct hostility. How sure then it is to fail! The declaration of principles against secret oath-bound combinations of men; against the deadly rum traffic; in favor of universal suffrage without regard to sex; these last articles named can be confidently spread before the people claiming their support on the basis of advanced Christian civilization. But compulsory legislation to recognize God and enforce the Sabbath would be regarded as a retrograde movement by enlightened civilization.

J. HEATON.

An Old Man's Experience.

OTSDAWA, Otsego Co., N. Y.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

At the request of Nathan Bingham, of Oneonta, I write you some of my trials with the institution called ancient Freemasonry. About the last part of February, 1826, I met with a change of heart, being born again, "not of corruptible seed but of incorruptible," by the Word of God that liveth and abideth forever. I was then thirty-seven years old, and when it took place I was about three miles from home, and in returning home and passing by the lodge-chamber where I had received the three degrees of Masonry, and looking up at that hall, and remembering the abominations committed there in that so-called worshipful lodge, I said within myself, "I never can enter that lodge again."

Time passed on until sometime in the summer I was called on by the Junior Warden for absenting myself from attending their lodge. I replied to him, "I have met with a change of mind that forbids me from ever going with you any more; not that I owe you any ill will, for I would do you a lawful kindness quicker than ever before. You teach us that it is a worshipful lodge erected to God falsely. When our Lord says, "When they shall say, Lo! he is in the secret chamber believe it not' and 'go ye not after them,' and again by the apostle saying 'have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them for it is a shame to even speak of the things that are done of them in secret.' Sir, I can never attend your lodge again. I am strictly forbidden to ever go after you again."

He turned away from me saying, "Well, I do not want anything better in this world nor in the world to come, if only lived up to." I replied, "Oh, you poor creature! the more you live up to it the worse you are off;" and he left me. Time passed on and there came a summons to attend the lodge, but I did not attend. Again I received a notice to attend a lecture at the Presbyterian meeting-house by priest Coale, from the adjoining town and lodge, but I paid no attention to them. The Senior Warden was sent to reclaim me and overcome my opposition to the craft, but of no avail. I said, Sir, I am forbidden in the Gospel to work in your fellow craft in any degree, for our Lord says, he that is not for me is against me and he that gathereth not with me scattereth abroad.' I feel within me that your institution must fall; for our Lord says that there is nothing hid that shall not be revealed neither kept secret that shall not come abroad; and the apostle says 'the mystery of antiquity doth already work, and only he that letteth will let until that wicked be revealed which the Lord shall consume by the spirit of his mouth and destroy by the brightness of his coming," and then he was so enraged that he threatened me, saying, "You know the obligations you have taken." "Yes sir, and the penalty annexed to them; but our Lord says, 'Fear not them that can kill the body and afterward can do no more, but rather fear him that is able to destroy both body and soul in hell; yea, fear him.'"

After this sharp interview I entertained fears about my safety, for the individual members manifested such a malicious spirit towards me, yet I neither turned to the right or to the left, but still remembering the words of our Lord to fear them not, and of the apostle, "For ye have not yet resisted unto blood striving against sin." Now the reader of this letter will remember that these trials took place before the abduction of William Morgan in September, 1826. When his revelation of the three degrees I had taken came out in pamphlet, my mind was somewhat relieved, although it cost him his life, for I well knew that he had suffered the penalty of those obligations.

In the fall the people took issue with the institution and the excitement ran very high on Masonry and Anti-masonry for the space of two years, so they had to close the most of the country lodges in this State, and the Anti-masons were elected by great majorities; but soon the people fell asleep to the danger they were in and I fear they will sleep on until it costs them a more fierce and bloody civil war than slavery has, for the reason that it will be all over the United States, and can not be held as slavery was, in the Southern States.

Yours, G. A. CHAMBERLIN.

Items for Grangers.

BAKER, St. Clair Co., Mo.

Upon the authority of an ex-granger, who has been an officer in the order, and whose veracity is unimpeachable the Grange Exposition lately published in The Cynosure is correct and true to the letter. The grangers through these parts have been trying to deny that they had to take an oath in order to become grangers, but the following sentence from the June number of The Monthly Talk, a journal published for the grangers of the State, by the Executive Committee of the State grange, at St. Louis proves the contrary an editorial headed "Duty of the hour." After admitting that dissatisfaction does exist and that too many members are talking against the order, the members are spurred to fealty by the following: "The Patron is under solemn oath to promote the objects of the order, as also not to willingly injure another so long as he remains a Patron;" which shows plainly that the leaders regard it as an oath and use it as such to keep their many dupes under subjection.

A short time ago the wife of an aged and influential Baptist minister in an adjoining county, died and was buried with the honors of the grange. The reading of the Scriptures and prayer at the grave was done by the grange chaplain, a man who is an habitual drinker and very profane. She was a member of the church and no doubt a Christian. Now if the conducting of the religious service at the grave of a departed Christian, by an inveterate hater of the Author of Christianity is not a disgrace to the Christian religion and an outrage upon our Christian civilization then I can't see clear.

Mr. Walker's Letter of Acceptance.

MALLET CREEK, O., July 19, 1875.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

I want to ask every good man and woman to carefully and prayerfully read the letter of acceptance of Hon. J. B. Walker in your paper of July 1st. None such can read it without profit, I am sure. Let all our friends use their influence to get that letter republished in all the excellent family papers in the land, of which we have many. Especially would I urge its publication in the New York Daily and Weekly Witness.

SAMUEL HALE.

Discussion Must go on.

We see the Seventh Anniversary of the National Christian Association opposed to secret societies, and especially to Freemasonry, now an incorporated body, together with an organization of some twelve States or more as auxiliaries, and especially a publishing house through the generosity of Hon. Philo Carpenter, one of God's noblemen, which is or will be secured, and a national paper, together with additional strength arising on every hand. It is settled that the question, the true principles of Freemasonry have got to be examined thoroughly, and all other secret societies, and shown as conspiracies against the laws of God as published in his Word and the laws and constitution of the government of the United States. Not all the parades of Freemasons or other secret organizations, to bury the dead, to enjoy a festival or have a ball, to assume the right to lay all the corner-stones in all the prominent buildings in the country can prevent it. Neither can the glittering of their paraphernalia, or the wearing of Warren's or Lafayette's apron at the celebrations of the 17th of June at Bunker hill; neither the monument erected by fraud, nor the Masonic lie that lingers about it. They should not be suffered to parade at the centennial, our national birth, for they are more and more offensive in the sight of God, as the heathen nations practicing their idolatry were to his true Israelites. Freemasonry, in its initiation of a member, is degrading to humanity; then by fraud, heaping oaths after oaths, promising some future knowledge or benefit that is never realized, save the simple fact that death in the most frightful manner and the double damnation of his soul is to be expected if he becomes a Christian or an honest citizen and disregards these degrading ceremonies or these inhuman oaths which a savage would despise, or would not knowingly take. The rejection of Christ, the Creator of all things, and the recognition of a god who looks upon good, bad and indifferent all alike; this is acknowledged in their own books. An investigation commenced years ago was political because Freemasonry has assailed the rights of a citizen. It was a revolution commenced, which never goes back, but always increases and gains strength as evils are discovered and overcome. SAMUEL D. GREENE.

OUR MAIL.

Aaron C. Salisbury, Cherokee, Iowa, writes:

"If you continue to advocate the same true principles that you have since I became a reader of your valuable paper, I will be a life-subscriber. No lectures have been delivered here which would aid in getting subscribers, but I have the promise of more after harvest."

Thos. Gibb, Dora, Ind., writes:

"Send the Cynosure to M. W. Fisher, Monument City, Ind. Mr. Fisher says he expects to be a subscriber for life. He never saw the paper until recently; says it is just what he wants. Two of his brothers have just joined the lodge. I gave them a Cynosure and Free Press to read, also loaned them the Broken Seal and Morgan's Expose, hoping their eyes will be opened thereby. Your paper is doing much good. I believe the abominable institution will yet succumb."

"Ashur Peck, Ringgold, Ind., writes:

"I have been a reader of your paper ever since it was published though it has not been sent in my name. I have been an Anti-mason since the days of Morgan. I was living near Canandaigua when he was kidnapped and murdered. I have been an outspoken Anti-mason ever since. I rejoice in the political movement. It is the only way that we can ever obtain our rights."

W. Sommerworth, Berwick, Novia Scotia, writes:

"I have more papers than I can read, but I am decidedly opposed to secretism, which is rampant in our province, and would not like to weaken your hands by stopping your paper. I wish you success."

J. S. Yankey, Fayetteville, Pa., writes:

"I am with you in this, God's cause; with you heart and hand; with you in my prayers. I am sorry I cannot do more towards circulating your excellent paper."

E. E. Burnside, Earlsville, N. Y., writes:

"I would gladly send a long list of subscriptions could I procure them, but our people are not awake to the importance of Anti-masonic literature. Our church, the Baptist, has but two members who were ever Masons, and they have long since abandoned the lodge. Hamilton village, a few miles from us, has a strong lodge, but our cause is not without friends there. Rev. Mr. Cross, pastor of the Cogregational church in that place, lately preached a telling sermon against the institution. The late Rev. Dr. Weston of Hamilton, remarked to a friend shortly before his death: "Masonry is such an enemy to the church! We must meet it. I do not know just when or how, but it must be met!

The Sabbath School.

Lesson for August 8th, 1875—Jesus at Bethesda.

SCRIPTURE.—John v. 5-15. Commit 5-15; Primary Verse, 8.

5 And a certain man was there, which had an infirmity thirty and eight years.

6 When Jesus saw him lie, and knew that he had been now a long time in that case, he saith unto him, Wilt thou be made whole?

7 The impotent man answered him, Sir, I have no man, when the water is troubled, to put me into the pool: but while I am coming, another steppeth down before me.

8 Jesus saith unto him, Rise, take up thy bed and walk.

9 And immediately the man was made whole, and took up his bed and walked: and on the same day was the Sabbath.

10 The Jews therefore said unto him that was cured, It is the Sabbath day: it is not lawful for thee to carry thy bed.

11 He answered them, He that made me whole, the same said unto me, Take up thy bed and walk.

12 Then asked they him, What man is that which saith unto thee, Take up thy bed and walk?

13 And he that was healed wist not who it was: for Jesus had conveyed himself away, a multitude being in that place.

14 Afterwards Jesus findeth him in the temple, and said unto him, Behold, thou art made whole: sin no more, lest a worse thing come unto thee.

15 The man departed and told the Jews that it was Jesus, which had made him whole.

WAYSIDE FLOWERS.

1.—Wilt thou be made whole? A man must will—must desire to be made whole, or there is no help for him. Matt. xxii. 2, 3; xxiii. 37; John i. 11; 3: 19; xii. 37-41.

2.—But all that we can do is to desire—to cry out for help. We can have faith in the great Healer, but he alone can effect the cure. The sinner is utterly helpless, made impotent by sin. It is only the power of divine grace that can give him strength to rise: "For when we were yet without strength in due time Christ died for the ungodly." Rom. iii. 20, 27, 28; iv. 16; v. 6; xi. 16; 1 Cor. i. 29-31; Eph. ii. 5, 8, 9.

3.—But after the miracle of healing has been performed, or, rather, simultaneously with it, comes the command: "Rise, take up thy bed, and walk." We are to be erect in a new manhood—not only to be free, but to show others we are free. Rom. vi. 4; xiii. 12-15; 2 Cor. v. 17; Gal. vi. 15; Eph. ii. 10; iv. 22-32; Col. iii. 10; 1 Tim. vi. 12.

4.—It is a happy thing for us that Christ's power was made manifest in some of the worst cases. Happy, too, that it is evident that he came for such. "They that are whole have no need of a physician, but they that are sick"; "I came not to call the righteous but sinners to repentance"; "For the Son of men is come to seek and to save that which was lost"; "And you he hath quickened who were dead in trespasses and sins." Surely no one can say that he is worse off than those who were "dead" in trespasses and sins. It was meant that man should see that there is hope for those who esteem themselves beyond hope of eternal life—dead in their sins. John v. 24; Rom. v. 6; Eph. ii. 1, 4-6; Col. ii. 13; 1 John v. 11-13.

5.—To every one who hath been healed is the injunction: "Sin no more lest a worse thing come unto thee." Matt. xii. 43-45; Luke xii. 47, 48; John xv. 22; Heb. vi. 4 6; x. 26, 27; 2 Pet. ii. 20, 21.—Nat'l S. S. Teacher.

Masonic Explanation of the Twentieth Degree.

GRAND MASTER OF ALL SYMBOLIC LODGES.

In this degree exemplification is given in brief, but much important instruction of the true manner of conferring degrees in the Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite is impressed on the candidate; and he is instructed in the lecture as follows:

Less than two hundred years ago Masonry was simple and altogether moral; its emblems, allegories and ceremonies easily understood.

Innovators and inventors overturned that primitive simplicity. Ignorance engaged in the work of making degrees, and trifles, and gewgaws, and pretended mysteries, absurd or hideous, usurped the place of Masonic truth. Oaths, out of all proportion with their object, shocked the candidate, and then became ridiculous, and were wholly disregarded. Acolytes were exposed to tests, and compelled to perform acts, which, if real, would have been abominable, but being mere chimeras, were preposterous, and excited contempt.

In the heterogeneous mass of over eight hundred degrees called Masonry, was found superstition and philosophy, philanthropy and insane hatred, a pure morality and unjust and illegal revenge, strongly mated and standing hand in hand within the temples of peace and concord; and empty and sterile pomp, with lofty titles arbitrarily assumed and to which the inventors had not condescended to attach any explanation that should acquit them of the folly of assuming temporal rank, power, and titles of nobility, made the world laugh and the initiate feel ashamed.

Some titles we retain; but they have with us meanings entirely consistent with the spirit of equality which is the foundation and peremptory law of its being—of all Masonry. The Knight, with us, is he who devotes his hand, his heart, his brain to the science of Masonry, and professes himself the sworn soldier of Truth. The Prince is he who aims to be chief (princeps) —first or leader—among his equals, in virtue and good deeds. The Sovereign is he who, one of an order whose members are all sovereigns, is supreme only because the law and constitution are so which he administers, and by which he, like every brother is governed. The titles Puissant, Potent, Wise and Venerable, indicate that power of virtue, intelligence and wisdom, which those ought to strive to attain who are placed in high office by the suffrages of their brethren; and all our other titles and designations have an esoteric meaning, consistent with modesty and equality, and which those who receive them should fully understand.

The degrees of the Ancient Accepted Rite form a connected system of moral, religious and philosophical instruction: sectarian of no creed, and drawn from the ancient mysteries of Egypt, Persia, Greece, India, the Druids, and the Essenes, as vehicles to communicate the great Masonic truths.

We teach the truth of none of the legends we recite. They are to us but parables and allegories. They teach us wisdom, and are the vehicles of useful and interesting information. Every one being at liberty to apply our symbols and emblems as he thinks most consistent with truth and reason, and with his own faith, we give them such an interpretation only as may be accepted by all. Our degrees may be conferred in France or Turkey; at Pekin, Rome, or Geneva; upon the subject of an absolute government or the citizen of a free State; upon sectarian or theist. To honor the Deity, to regard all men as our brethren and equally beloved by the Supreme Creator of the Universe, and to make himself useful to society and himself by labor, are its teachings to its initiate in all the degrees.—Hebrew Leader.

A Masonic Conglomerate.

A correspondent of the Hebrew Leader furnishes a list of members of the highest body in Masonic rank fifty years ago in this country. It shows the stultifying influence of the system on the religious character when men of such opposite religious beliefs can practice such idolatrous ceremonies in harmony:

Samson Simson, New York, forty-six years of age, Jewish lawyer, Sov. Gr. Commander.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JULY 29, 1875.

PLATFORM AND NOMINATIONS FOR 1876.

FOR PRESIDENT

James B. Walker,

of Illinois.

FOR VICE-PRESIDENT

Donald Kirkpatrick,

of New York.

PLATFORM.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage, is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. The charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

5. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by article 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate.

6. That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

7. That to cultivate the intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

8. That land and other monopolies should be discountenanced.

9. That the Government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency, and a return to specie payment as soon as practicable.

10. That maintenance of the public credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. And finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of Electoral Colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-president of the United States.

THE MORGAN FALSEHOODS.—Rev. W. M. Love of Baker, Mo., writes that the Masonic falsehood invented about Morgan's being in Van Dieman's Land, and his son seeing him there, has just been set abroach in that part of Missouri.

This is but one of many cool, deliberate falsehoods respecting the fate of Morgan after the Masons murdered him and to cover that murder and confuse the popular mind. What are not men, sworn as they are, capable of? There can be no moral restraint to a mind which has cast off God by taking and keeping a counterfeit oath. Not two weeks had elapsed after our nomination of Charles Francis Adams before Freemasons filled the press with statements that he was a Freemason, giving the lodge and date of his initiation. We were weak enough to write at once to his son for authority to contradict this circumstantial falsehood, and received and published the statement of C. F. Adams, Jr., that no one of the family ever belonged to any lodge. Its followers worship the father of lies and conform to and copy him.

MUZZLING THE OX.—The work of securing the funds necessary to obtain possession of the Carpenter donation goes bravely on, but in the meantime our lecturers are likely to starve, unless some relief is speedily sent to the general fund. It would, it strikes us, be nothing more than simple justice for the Directors to allow a drawback of ten per cent. to keep our lecturers alive while they are collecting the Carpenter fund. That fund is so popular that almost all the money now subscribed goes to it and there is nothing in the treasury to keep our lecturers going. Will not the directors write their views at once to the treasurer on this subject, or shall a meeting be called?

THE CROPS—THE CYNOSURE.—The crops are the heaviest in this region they have been for years. But the harvest of the farmer is anything but harvest to the printer. Every one who has grain and grass is striving to secure them and the editor and publisher must wait till the grain is in market. Can not the "women folks" do something for the paper while the men are in the fields? Mrs. Cook, whose gentle touch in the paper has made so many heart-strings vibrate, has retired a little while, but she hopes soon to be back at her post and every lecturer will hear her footfall when she re-enters the office. Meantime, good friends, do something for those who keep doing in this holy cause.

BELLY AND LIMBS.

Everybody remembers the fable of the rebellion of limbs against stomach, because the latter received all the food; and how the limbs shrunk away when the stomach was starved. If the present lodge control of this country is ever overthrown, there must and will be somewhere, a head-quarters of the reform. No great movement on mind ever succeeded without one. The central committee of this reform was providentially located at Chicago. I strove to get Oberlin and Dayton to take it but failed. Four or five able men have been applied to to take the secretary-ship and general supervision without success. The present arrangements are strictly temporary, till others can be made. The way to prevent the men at the center of a movement from doing wrong is not to deprive them of the power to do any thing, but to see that they are men who will do right; God-fearing, self-denying men.

My attention is called to this subject by a letter from a State agent, saying that some are concerned lest the National Christian Association is not "amenable to its constituency." In my opinion it is amenable; perfectly so. If not, let it be made so. But no paper arrangements can make us do right if we are greedy, selfish men. If Philo Carpenter of Illinois, Nathan Callender of Pennsylvania, Lemuel N. Stratton of New York, with the forty or so like men who are corporate members, and who will still elect others like themselves, cannot be relied, then no men on earth can be relied on. They are neither 'fools nor blind,' and they are giving thousands to the cause and will not willingly see their alms, prayers, and labors wasted or thrown away. Every transaction of the Association is open and above-board, and reported at the National Anniversaries to the last shilling; and few enough indeed have those shillings thus far been.

No one objects, or has a right to object to wholesome and constant vigilance. But if there be whisperings, back-bitings, or bitings-in-the-back, by narrow and malignant minds who have neither capacity or self-denial for any but schemes which center in themselves. Such men are likely to do very little good, but to prevent much.

Brethren let us not "give place to the devil." It will require all we can do and all we can give to secure a National Publishing House and home of reform in the city of Chicago, and if we have one it must be somewhere. The lodge has three buildings in Philadelphia, New York, and Boston whose aggregate cost is near four million dollars Mr. Stoddard and others are toiling with great industry and self-denial to secure this Carpenter property. Let us secure it and trust God and good men that it will be used for good and holy purposes.

GODLESS GOVERNMENT—GODLESS SCHOOLS—GODLESS LIBERTY.

Read Mr. Jacob Heaton's article in this number. We have so long known and loved Mr. Heaton that we had almost rather err with him in theory than be sound in belief with men of another spirit. Without stopping to answer his article we say just this:—

1. "Our fathers," with Jefferson's help made the Declaration of Independence, containing four recognitions of the God of the Bible, which is all our platform or any one asks. The Constitution thirteen years later committed the French mistake of "no God." "The fathers" are on our side, not on Mr. Heaton's. Jefferson was a sort of liberal Christian like Frothingham. If our good brother Heaton can't stand his "Declaration of Independence," then he can't stand us, and there is no help. The Cynosure will not go back on that Declaration.

2. Mr. Heaton says: "Our fathers laid the broadest foundation for religious freedom." In what, we ask, did they lay it? In atheism? In no-Godism? And what is "religious freedom" in a government recognizing no religion?

3. We go just as vehemently against "Religion enforced by law" as Mr. Heaton can; and think we have at least half as much sense. And in our judgment, it needs but half as much sense as he has to see that putting a thief in the penitentiary; binding men and women in marriage; and exempting laborers from work one day in seven is not "enforcing religion by law"; though Christ commanded all these by himself and his apostles.

4. There is no God-in-the-Constitution in our platform as it now stands, only a simple declaration that "The God of the Bible is the author of civil government." The phrase was altered to calm those who are haunted by the church-and-state ghost.

5. Finally, we are not to be backed out of our senses by the devil in the role of the chief apostle of religious liberty. There is neither government nor religion where no God is recognized. Beecher, Bowen, Tilton, Woodhull & Co., ought by this time to have convinced Mr. Heaton and the world that there is neither virtue, liberty, peace or righteousness in their infernal no-creed-ism.

THE WHEATON MASONIC RAID AND BANK.

A CARD.—Inasmuch as an individual has caused to be published in the Christian Cynosure, so called, certain statements in regard to a bank heretofore existing at Galesburg for the purpose, probably, of injuring our bank at Wheaton, we desire to say:

FIRST: Our business is conducted in such a manner that if the depositors were compelled to look to the assets in bank alone for security, no risk would be incurred by them.

SECONDLY: Unlike incorporated banks, each member of our firm is liable to parties transacting business with us.

THIRDLY: Our firm is pecuniarily able to pay ten times the amount deposited aside from the assets in bank.

FOURTHLY: The most satisfactory evidence of the truth of the above statements will be furnished to any one who desires it. Very respectfully, MINER, GARY & WEBSTER.

To the Citizens of Wheaton:—

The last Wheaton Illinoian, our village paper, contains the above "card" signed by the proprietors of the Wheaton bank, censuring an editorial in the Cynosure of July 8th.

The editorial was not written with the intention of injuring their bank, and, on reviewing it, I think it can properly bear no such construction. If any one thinks otherwise, I end the matter by disavowing any such purpose or construction. I have no doubt the bank is sound and its proprietors solvent. All that I know of Mr. Miner is in his favor. I know nothing against Mr. Elbert H. Gary but that he is a Freemason; and, though nearly, or quite non-affiliated for years, he is represented as lately having renewed his interest in the lodge; and, if so, he is part and parcel of the raid by which the lodge proposes to take possession of the business interests of Wheaton, and silence or subdue every man, woman and child of us who believe the lodge to be abhorred of God and destructive of the best interests of men for time and eternity. Mr. Webster is a steady and successful business man, not a Freemason, with whom I have had none but agreeable relations, except that he accosted me, as I think, improperly about my reference to his bank.

But the "card" of these gentlemen tenders a false issue. I do not wish to injure the bank, but to prevent the bank being injured by the contemplated removal into a building owned by adhering Freemasons, and placed under their lodge. The one point made in my editorial was, that if men will swindle in the third story of a building, they will swindle in the first story of the same building if they have a chance. The truth of that statement is apparent on the face of it.

But does the lodge swindle? I answer, Yes. Every candidate initiated is a swindled man. The lodge sells him secrets which are not secrets. It thus gets his money upon false pretenses, and that is swindling; and as it is attended with solemn prayer and revolting oaths, it is swindling of the vilest and wickedest stamp conceivable or possible.

The citizens of Wheaton who were here fifteen years ago, raised and paid me three thousand dollars to induce me to remove to this place and preach two years. Mr. Jesse C. Wheaton was the first man in Wheaton who ever gave me money, and he did it knowing my hostility to the lodge as well then as now. Before Mr. Wheaton paid me that money, unasked and unexpected by myself, he knew that I was invited here to aid in building up a college on the basis of excluding Freemasonry as a worship of devils or evil spirits, for I had declared and defended that doctrine in the crowded college chapel, and I think Mr. Wheaton sat before me; certainly he knew it, for the thing "was not done in a corner." Mr. Wheaton has likewise declared his approbation of our principles in open board. At my first conversation with Elbert H. Gary, Esq., also, I had a right to infer that if he did not dislike the lodge in his heart. he was decidedly indifferent to it.

What secret motives the lodge has supplied, if any, to induce these gentlemen to go back on themselves and on me I know not. I have received many kindnesses from Mr. Wheaton and the college more, and all since and while he knew that we were committed to abhorrence of the lodge. Mr. Gary is a younger man, but like myself a member of the church of Jesus Christ, under covenant as deep as our salvation or damnation to follow and obey Him, who "in secret said nothing." I am proud of his talents as a rising young lawyer, have voted for him and we are friends to-day, but for this accursed den and spawn of anti-Christ.

But I think too much of these gentlemen to be indifferent to them, and, though they may have themselves yielded to the lure of the lodge, I know they would despise me in their hearts if I should follow them. They may hate me, ridicule me to their listeners on the streets; call me "a fool," albeit I am their brother in Christ. But I prefer all this to the sober thoughts of these gentlemen, if I should stand silent here in Wheaton, sworn teacher of public morals as I am, and see put up a "Central Block" in our now rising village with a perpetual swindling shop in the third story and the bank in the first!

Citizens of Wheaton: If they finish, furnish and rent the lodge and chapter and commandery rooms in that block and no alarm is sounded, the business of this town will be nearly as much under the power of that lodge as the cab factory was after H. C. Childs entered it and put every laborer at a discount or dismissed him, if he would not swear fealty to whom he know not. Then Mr. Childs was their "Master." Now they have a "Master" with whom I have no acquaintance, but I cannot learn that he worships God in any Christian church.

Citizens of Wheaton, if I should stand silent and see ministers of Jesus Christ deceived and sworn into such a devil's cabal, bowing on bare knees with bandaged eyes before a man whose actions show his contempt of Christ and his worship; if I should hold my peace and see our boys as they become young men, driven by ignorance and indirect pressure into that evil thing, their blood would be on my hands and my head, and I prefer to bear the wrath of the parents to their children's blood.

These gentlemen will not dare deny one word which President Finney says of Freemasonry; and Edmond Ronayne gave it the very same in the College Chapel a few weeks ago. Mr. Ronayne is Past Master of Keystone Lodge, Chicago, and knows well all the principal Masons of Chicago. He is fully endorsed under seal of his lodge up to the time of his leaving.

But this is wasting words. Mr. Elbert H. Gary knows that we tell you the truth of the lodge and he will not deny it. If he should deny the substantial truth of the revelations of Masonry, he would just as surely send his soul to hell as "all liars have their part in the lake that burneth with fire and brimstone."

But Mr. Gary does not, will not deny the truth of these revelations; and I hope that his uncle, Mr. Jesse C. Wheaton, will never unman himself by saying he "knows nothing about Masonry." God will surely hold him responsible for such utterances. He knows what Masonry is as he knows other things for the knowledge of which he depends on the testimony of his fellowmen.

I have conversed in private and written to these brethren Gary and Wheaton, and have sincerely prayed to God for them. If I have wronged them in aught I am ready to make reparation. And if they dare to persist in giving their money, and talents, and moral influence to fasten this damning curse on our pleasant town in this the hour of its blossoming, mark my words, the living God will not hold these men guiltless! and, for myself, I prefer reproach and a prison with the prophet Micah, to being eaten of dogs with Ahab. Theodore Tilton and Henry C. Childs were once my friends, and I prayed for and resisted both. And just so truly as the Christians of Wheaton pray to Christ against the lodge, their prayers are going to be heard.

NOTES.

—Elder J. L. Barlow, State Agent and Lecturer for New York, dropped into our office quite unexpectedly on Friday morning. As this season is so entirely occupied with severe labor in the harvest and hay fields he finds it necessary to discontinue efforts in the lecture field for a brief season, and will remain in Illinois until September. Other agents are experiencing a like temporary obstruction to their work. Friends wishing to correspond with Elder Barlow may address him at 342 Vernon Ave., Chicago.

—We are also pleased to mention a visit from Rev. H. Cogswell of Mansfield, Ohio. He preached in Indiana Avenue Christian church on Sabbath week. Bro. A. Robinson of Indianapolis, Ind., was in Chicago also last week and called on the Cynosure.

—The Wesleyan has a touching account of the final interment of the remains of the loved Adam Crooks which have lain for nearly six months in the receiving vault of the Oakwood Cemetery. Bro. H. Wilcox donated the burial plot, and the interment took place on July 8th. Revs. D. S. Kinney, L. N. Stratton, J. L. Barlow, Foster, and Dempsey took part in the exercises.

—The Gazette of Bunker Hill, Ill., in noticing the nomination of Hon. J. B. Walker, patterns after the well informed Chicago Tribune and asks, like the multitude in the time of Christ, "Who is this?" A correspondent quickly appears with a reply of which following is part:

"He is not a politician; he is not an army officer, hence he is not known in certain directions.

He is the author of 'The Philosophy of the Plan of Salvation,' used as a text book in many colleges of the North and South, of which Hugh Miller says, 'We would not hesitate to put his Plan of Salvation side by side with Butler's Analogy as a specimen of close and unanswerable reasoning.' Also 'Doctrine of the Holy Spirit,' better known in Europe than here, although it has gone through several editions in this country."

The Chicago Evening Journal says: "We regard Dr. Walker as the most profound and rational of all our evangelical writers. Neither Jonathan Edwards, John Calvin, Martin Luther or Augustine ever penetrated so deeply into the mysteries of the Christian religion as Dr. Walker."

—Wherefore has the lodge invaded the socially sterile regions of the Indian Territory? Does it propose to lend the gentle influence of its sweetly-worded obligations or the refining powers of its amiable ceremonies to the civilization of the red man, or has it a direct interest in assisting the white-faced villains who hang upon the agencies for plunder? At any rate the new Consolidated Agency building at the Red Cloud agency is to have a Masonic setting out at its corner-stone laying in a short time.

—The last report of the Pennsylvania Grand Lodge of Odd-fellows has a few noteworthy items. The increase of membership is less than one and seven-tenths per cent on the last report: over six thousand have been suspended during the year, an increase of 718 over the previous year; and the decrease in initiations foots up to 1,907. But small degree of prosperity surely after their own standard of worldly policy.

News of the Week.

The City.

The fate of the lost balloonists, Donaldson and Grimwood, was not known up to Saturday more than a week after their ascension. No traces of the balloon have been found on the Lake, though if lost upon its waters something from the wreck of the balloon would float, and would hardly escape the numerous vessels now watching for them.——Chicago University has been given an unenviable noteriety since its commencement from the difficulties arising between the respective friends of Dr. Burroughs, the former President and Chancellor for the year past, and Dr. Moss, the President. At the last meeting of the trustees Mr. Burroughs was reinstated and Mr. Moss put out of office. The difficulty is by no means settled, and seems to be one of long standing.

General.

The explosion of a large tank in the paper mill at Iowa city last week killed six men and greatly damaged the works. The tank which was of boiler iron weighing over two tons, was blown to a great height with one of the employees. The explosion was caused by chemical action.——On the 22nd a premature fire at the trial of a fire extinguisher at Newark, O., caused a violent explosion and 22 persons were severely and 27 slightly burned, the Mayor of the city being one of the sufferers.——The rival political factions in the Cherokee nation near Fort Smith, Indian Territory had a serious encounter last week in which three desperadoes were killed.——The trial of the Mormon leaders for the Mountain Meadow massacre in 1857 is proceeding in Beaver, Utah. Eight of the jury are Mormons.——Prosecuting Attorney Fisher of the District of Columbia was removed lately by order of the Attorney General. Pres. Grant countermanded the order, but returning to Washington from Long Branch last week the case came up in cabinet meeting and the attorney was removed. He was notoriously incompetent, beside being connected with the infamous Shepherd ring.——At a heavy fire in Cincinnati last Tuesday about a dozen firemen were buried under falling walls; one was killed and others severely injured, the chief of the fire department being one.

Foreign.

The Steamer Abbotsford of the American Line was stranded on the coast of Wales on Friday morning. No lives were lost——Mr. Plimsoll, the member of Parliament who has interested himself in behalf of sailors and to work a reform in the English coasting vessels many of which are suffered to sail while dangerously unseaworthy, has shown a violent temper in the Commons, charging the government with playing into the hands of maratime murderers.——Although the Spanish Constitutional Committee has passed the act of religious toleration, a plan is believed to be in execution to force active Protestants to leave Spain. This plan, inspired by prominent persons in Madrid, is being executed by the clergy, who hope by indirect pressure to expel resident American evangelical ministers. The impression also prevails that the Madrid Government hopes to conciliate the Papal Nuncio and moderates with this underhand persecution, while apparently pursuing a liberal policy regarding public worship.

The Home Circle.

An Old Woman's Advice.

What's the use o' stewin', and fumiu',
And fussin', and fretin' round?
You won't make things any better,
Nor smoother, I'll be bound.

Your husband and children ain't perfect,
Of course that's very true;
But Martha, think a minute,
Think seriously—be you?

And s'pose they're a good deal ailin',
Like plants that don't half grow,
What'll you do with 'em Martha—
Keep 'em covered with snow?

S'posin the boys are careless,
And don't do as you say;
You've got to win 'em by lovin',
There ain't any other way.

Not love that's all wishy-washy—
That ain't any love at all—
But love that is strong and sunny,
Like a Southern garden wall.

If you don't make home as happy
And bright as a place can be,
Them boys will be discontented,
And go outside, you see.

For you can't manage human creatures,
As if they were made of dough;
They've got God's breath in 'em, Martha,
And are bound to stretch and grow.

What you think mothers are giv' for—
To fry, and bile, and bake,
And wash, and sew for nothin'
But the dyin' body's sake?

They're giv' to nuss the spirit,
And make it strong and true,
And to do that nussin', Martha,
Your own must be strong too.

An' you've got to make it a business
To find out the best way,
Or your work will turn upon you
Like a sarpint, some fine day.

It's very well to be careful—
I ain't ag'in bein' neat—
And clo's has their own valy,
And so has things to eat;

But God looks out for the in'ard,
And lets the outside come
Natural like and easy—
The child and then the hum.

Bringin' up child'en, Martha,
Is like any other thing—
Easy, if you only handle
The natural end of the string.

But we must allus remember
That they don't belong to us—
God is their rightful Father,
And they're given out to nuss.

He knows the little creatures,
And will tell us about our task,
And, Martha, it's my opinion
That you'd better go and ask.

The Family School.

I often doubt indeed whether, with all the vast machinery of modern days for the training of the young, they are not losers by the abandonment of these old customs. Can the Sabbath-school, with its festivals and banners, its libraries and illustrated papers, take the place of the good old influence of the fireside with its ceaseless parental training, or the catechising which brought them into immediate contact with their spiritual guide?

The Sabbath-school may be made a most useful auxiliary in training the children of the church, but it must be only an auxiliary. At the present day there is danger lest it furnish an excuse for the neglect of more important duties. The public worship of the church is a divine institution. The Sabbath-school is not. When, therefore, the latter interferes with the former, it is working a serious injury. If the children, for any reason, can attend but one, let it be the church, and not the school.

Christian parents, are your children found by your side in the house of God? Can you say, as you present them there each Sabbath, "Behold, I and the children thou hast given me?" If not, where are they during these consecrated hours? A few years more and they must go forth into the world. Will it not be without the settled principles and habits which can guard them in the warfare of life? A little while longer and you must leave them, and without your guiding hand they must go forward "sounding on their dim and perilous way." Your influence then will be confined to the chain of memory which runs back to the past. Will their recollection then recur to hallowed hours when you sat together in God's temple so that they feel they cannot abandon the habit which you have inculcated, or coldly turn away from the worship of their father's God?

Our Lord lays it down as a proof of our love for him—"Feed my lambs!" The children are the hope of the church; but with the fearful influences now abroad—coldness at home and skepticism without—what will the next generation become? We believe the day is not far distant when the church, in sorrow and penitence, will awake to an acknowledgement of the truth that the "old paths are the best"—that the divinely constituted institutions of the church and the home can alone truly train the young for Christian life—and that if for them are substituted the novelties and excitements of this age of experiments all will prove but a delusion and a snare.—Exchange.

"Have you Written to Mother?"

It was in answer to the first call of the President for troops to suppress the great rebellion, that my brother responded by enrolling his name among the volunteers to go and battle for the defense of our beloved country. Sad indeed was that parting; and each one enjoined over and over again the earnest entreaty, Write; write often, write to each, write to all. The only thought that could afford any comfort at that time was, we can write. Thank God for the privilege we have of thus conversing with our loved ones when far away.

Time passed, and soon a letter came. The questions and answers followed each other in succession:

Who from? Brother. Who to? Father. What news? Well and hearty. All joined in the rejoicing over the prosperity of the absent one.

Soon after another letter came just like the first, only this one was addressed to brother Charley. Then came another, and this time addressed to me. O, how delighted I was! I skipped about in the house and clapped my hands for joy.

I was a very small girl then, but by the help of my mother I succeeded in answering my brother's letter, and we became quite regular in our correspondence. But during all this time he had neglected to write to mother.

She did not complain for a long time; but one day as she saw me opening a letter, she said sadly, "You all get letters but me;" and then she turned away and wept.

I was deeply moved by her distress, and immediately wrote to my brother, telling him of her anxiety to receive a letter from him.

As soon as my letter reached him, he sat down and wrote to her; but in the meantime she was taken suddenly and violently ill; and the same carrier that brought my brother's letter, brought with it our mother's coffin. O, how my heart was wrung as I took that letter, and kneeling beside the lifeless form of the one dearer to me than life itself, sadly read it over.

So full of love and tenderness; words of comfort and cheer; just such a letter as a mother would wish for from her absent boy. But alas! It came too late. The heart that would have bounded with joy had that letter come twenty-four hours sooner, had now ceased to beat.

I folded the letter up and laid it away in a little box in which I kept my most valuable letters, with the determination that my brother should never know that it came too late.

But, as there are hundreds of young readers who have left their homes and gone to try their fortunes in distant lands, of them I would inquire, "When have you written to mother?" Do not neglect this duty. Wherever you are, and however hurried you may be, find time to write to mother. Whether in health or sickness, in prosperity or adversity, in joy or sorrow, do not forget your mother's anxiety on your behalf, and keep her constantly informed as to your welfare.

To those who have no mother in whom to confide, I would say, remember Him who hath said, "As one whom his mother comforteth, so will I comfort thee."—Golden Censer.

Going to Law.

A farmer cut down a tree which stood so near the boundary line of his farm that it was doubtful whether it belonged to him or his neighbor. The neighbor, however, claimed the tree, and prosecuted the man who cut it for damages. The case was continued from court to court. Time and money were wasted, temper soured and temper lost, but the case was gained by the prosecutor. The last of the transaction was, the man who gained the cause came to a lawyer to execute the deed of his whole farm, which he had been compelled to sell to pay his costs. Then houseless and homeless, he could thrust his hands into his pockets, and triumphantly exclaim, "I've beaten him!"

This reminds us of a little story. Forty-three years ago a young man was teaching a country school. He had not been in the place one quarter before he acquired a reputation for knowing more than he did know, but he was wise enough to take no pains to disabuse the popular mind of the favorable impression. If there was one study that he was more deficient in than another, it was surveying. But he taught it as well as he could, and his pupils learned. Two farmers had a chronic dispute as to the line between their lands, and for many years they had contended as to the right of possession in a little strip. Both of them were warmly interested in the young school teacher, and in a happy moment it occurred to them to ask him to examine their titles and maps, and to decide as to the true running of their dividing line. He took the papers, gave "his whole mind" to the question, made a map with the line where he believed it should be: both parties accepted it, set their fence according to it, lived in peace, and to this day, after the lapse of nearly half a century, the school-master's line is undisturbed though the lands have changed hands frequently. The line will doubtless never be disturbed. How much better is this than to go to law, consume their property in vexatious ligitation, alienate families, fret themselves, and bequeath a feud to successive generations. Both the farmers have long since gone to sleep with their fathers, but the young school-master, who judged between them, lives to make this the first record of his decision.—N. Y. Observer.

"Na Fallen Far Farrad!"

When we hear the Psalmist exclaim: "My soul followeth hard after thee," (Psa. lxiii: 8), there does not rise before our mental vision the figure of a gentleman at ease, or of a man sauntering along with his hands in his pockets, but of one in such real earnestness that he walks or runs rapidly, looking and leaning forward, intent on gaining the object of his supreme affection. Such bent forward Christians are likely to accomplish something.

We were reminded of these words of David by the statement we saw not long since, that at Mr. Moody's farewell meeting at Inverness, Scotland, last August, one of the ministers mentioned a woman, who in 1859, at a meeting, stood up and begged to be prayed for; and said that he met her some years after, and asked her "if any of the converts of that time had fallen back," when she replied: "There are none fallen back but those had na fallen far farrad!"

That answer reveals the trouble with many of the professed converts of our day,—they do not fall sufficiently far forward to make backsliding hard. They do not get out of the spirit and practice of the world enough to know what separation means. 2 Cor. vi. 14–18. They are only borderers; and "those who walk on the borders of Satan's kingdom need not expect to enjoy much of the sunshine of Immanual's land."—Messiah's Herald.

The name of Jesus is not only light, but also food. It is likewise oil, without which all of the food of the soul is dry. It is salt, unseasoned by which whatever is presented to us is insipid. It is honey in the mouth, melody in the ear, joy in the heart, medicine to the soul, and there are no charms in any discourse in which his name is not heard.

The Earl of Argyle.

The Earl of Argyle was the leader of the tribe of Campbell: among the Highlands he was called MacCullum More. His father, the Marquis of Argyle, as the head of the Scotch Covenanters, had used his power to hasten the downfall of Charles the First. After the tide had turned, and Charles the Second held the scepter, the Marquis was put to death; but the son inherited the ancient earldom, and became one of the greatest nobles of Scotland. For twenty years the Earl pursued a course of conduct so moderate, and, in some respects, so yielding, as to offend the rigid Presbyterians. Then the Duke of York, as Viceroy of Edinburgh, displayed the cruel disposition afterwards so terribly revealed in his reign, and led men of all parties to speak with horror of the bloody assizes in the time of King James.

As the Duke of York could not gain over to his side the Earl of Argyle, it was determined to rid the country of his presence. On frivolous charges he was tried for treason, and sentenced to death. In disguise he escaped, and found a retreat in Friesland. Though an exile, and penniless, "he was still, in some sense, the most powerful subject in the British dominions." His patriarchal authority remained; and should he appear among his clansmen, an army devoted to his service would speedily rally around him.

"Of all men living," said King James, as tidings of an attempt against his throne reached him, "Argyle has the greatest means of annoying me, and of all places Holland is that whence a blow may be best aimed against me."

The Scotch and English fugitives assembled at Amsterdam, and concerted a plan for overthrowing the authority of James. Monmouth was to invade England, Argyle, Scotland. But a faction of exiled Scots, jealous of the power of Argyle, sacrificed the common cause to party feeling and envious dissentions. The Earl held the nominal command, while a committee controlled the expedition. The journey ended. The same spirit which had led to disputes in Holland, continued to rule in the ill-fated council. Argyle's plans were thwarted again and again, mismanagement and confusion reigned in the camp, the provisions were wasted, the Highlanders in want of food deserted, disastrous marches followed, military order was lost, the army became a mob, and at last disappeared. The war was over and the chieftain fled for his life. In the dress of a peasant he was arrested; he acknowledged himself to be the Earl of Argyle, hoping that the announcement of that great name would lead his captors to respect and pity. They were touched, even melted to tears; yet the reward offered, and the fear of an offended government, overcame their tender emotions.

And now the character of Argyle shines forth with undiminished luster. The expedition had miserably failed; in accepting the position without the authority of a general, the mistakes of others had involved him in reproach and disaster. But now, though in captivity, he had regained the liberty of acting for himself, he stood forth a free man; the shackles that had bound him were broken. The revengeful conquerors seemed determined to exert all the means in their power to humble the lofty spirit of the high-minded nobleman. He "was dragged through Edinburgh in triumph." He walked bareheaded up a long street, and the hangman marched before him. He was placed in irons, and informed of his approaching end. He was not tried for the recent offense, but it was determined to put him to death under the sentence of years before, which was so unjust that even hardened lawyers considered it disgraceful. His fortitude was severely tried; he was closely questioned by order of the Privy Council. He replied as far as he could without implicating his friends, and then refused to give information. He was threatened with torture, but threats were useless; his trust in God supported him, and his enemies could not shake his sublime patience and lofty courage. The torture was not applied. "God," he said, "had melted their hearts," as his persecutors treated him more kindly.

A few hours before his death, he wrote, "I have named none to their disadvantage. I thank God he hath supported me wonderfully."

Much of the remaining time was spent in devotion and affectionate conversation with his friends. The historian relates that, "so effectually had religious faith and hope, co-operating with natural equanimity composed his spirits, that on the very day on which he was to die he dined with appetite, conversed with gayety, and, after his last meal, lay down, as he was wont, to take a short slumber, in order that his body and mind might be in full vigor when he should mount the scaffold.

A councillor demanded admittance to his cell, and was told that the Earl was asleep. Thinking this was an evasive answer, he still demanded entrance. "The door of his cell was softly opened, and there lay Argyle on the bed, sleeping in his irons, the placid sleep of infancy."

Overcome by the sight, the "renegade" fled from the castle and yielded to remorse. From his groans it was thought he had become suddenly ill; a remedy was offered him, he refused, but when questioned, replied, "I have been in Argyle's prison. I have seen him within an hour of eternity, sleeping as sweetly as ever man did. But as for me—"

The Earl rose from the bed and prepared for the final suffering. He was brought to the Council House, a short interval was to elapse before the execution. He asked for pen and ink, and left these words for his wife: "Dear heart, God is unchangeable. He hath always been good and gracious to me, and no place alters it. Forgive me all my faults; and now comfort thyself in him, in whom only true comfort is to be found. The Lord be with thee, bless and comfort thee, my dearest. Adieu."

He left the Council House; the ministers who accompanied him "were not of his own persuasion," but he listened to them in a courteous manner, and exhorted them to caution their flocks against those doctrines which all Protestant churches unite in condemning."

He ascended the scaffold and addressed the people in the spirit of "serene piety." He said he "forgave his enemies as he hoped to be forgiven." Then he bade farewell to his friends, giving them some mementoes for his wife and children. He "prayed for a little space," and gave the fatal signal.

Thus died the heroic chieftain, the triumphant Christian, Archibald, Ninth Earl of Argyle —National Baptist

The First Ripe Strawberries.

A little girl once had a bed of strawberries. She was very anxious that they should ripen and be fit to eat. At last the time came.

"Now for a feast," said her brother to her one morning, as he picked some beautiful berries for her to eat.

"I can't eat these," she said, "for they are the first ripe fruit."

"Well," said her brother, "all the more reason for our making a feast. for they are so much the greater treat."

"Yes, but they are the first ripe fruit"

"Well, what of that?"

"Why, you know the Bible says we must 'honor the Lord with all our first fruits.' And dear father says that he always gives God the first out of all the money he gets, and that then he always feels happier in spending the rest, and so I wish to give God the first of my strawberries too."

"Ah! but," said her brother, "how can you give strawberries to God? And even if you could, he would not care for them."

"Oh, but I've found out a way. You remember how Jesus said: 'Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me.' So I mean to take them to Mrs. Perkins' dying child. She never gets strawberries, they're so poor."

Then away ran the children to give the strawberries to the sick child. And when they saw her put out her thin, white arms, and take the ripe, round, juicy fruit in her little shriveled fingers; and when they saw her eyes glisten, and her little faded lips smile, they felt as if they had a far richer treat than if they had kept the ripe fruit for themselves. And they were sure that God had accepted their offering. Ex.

Children's Gardens.

I wish every mother in the country knew the the great satisfaction to be derived from the little plots of land the children cultivate as their own. No matter how small, it has a peculiar charm, and its mixed and incongruous plantings often yield astonishing results. No radishes so crisp as those your little son will lay beside your plate, the reward for his toil and care. No flowers so beautiful as those your loving daughter in some bright spring morning nurtured and tended by her own hands. The earliest hepatica of the woods grows serenely in the shadow of "May's tree," and wild violets flourish in Annie's gentle care. In our home each child has a plot of ground and an apple-tree, the fruit of which, always fair and beautiful, is shared generously, and the surplus sold for pocket-money. Sometimes an early melon finds its way to our table from the garden of one of our industrious boys, and is praised and appreciated as a reward for his labor. Little two-year-old has a garden too, and while we try to teach him not to pull up the unhappy family of flowers and vegetables that thrive there, we delight in his glad murmer as he roams like a true Bohemian in the summer sunshine, saying, "My gardee, my gardee," and taking a whole potato from the cellar where his restless feet often wander he plants it just deep enough for the hens to pick out, and nothing daunted sows a handful of peas over it. But as he grows older he will learn that this is not the road to success, and try to copy the care and vigilance displayed by his elders. Even "Baby Hope" has a little circle filled with sweet wild flowers, brought from the woods this Spring, "to be ready when she can gather them," the children say—and our eager young botanists are ever ready to search for a new flower to transplant into "Hope's garden." By such innocent pleasures home is made happy and beautiful.—Rural New Yorker.

LEGEND OF DELAY.—A hermit was conducted by an angel into a wood where he saw an old man cutting down boughs to make up a burden; when it was large, he tied it up, and attempted to lift it on his shoulder and carry it away, but finding it very heavy, he laid it down again, cut more wood, and heaped it on, and then tried again to carry it off. This he repeated several times, always adding to the load after trying in vain to raise it from the ground. In the mean time the hermit, astonished at the old man's folly, desired the angel to explain what he meant. "You behold," said he, "in the foolish old man an exact representation of those who, being made sensible of the burden of their sins, resolve to repent, but soon grew weary, and instead of lightening their burden, increase it every day. At each trial, they find the task heavier than before, and so put it off a little longer, in the vain hope that they will, by and by, be more able to accomplish it. Thus they go on, adding to their burden till it grows too heavy to be borne; and then, in despair of God's mercy, and with their sins unrepented of, they lie down and die. Turn again, my son, and behold the end of the old man whom thou saw heaping up a load of boughs." The hermit looked, and saw him in vain attempting to remove the pile, which was now accumulated far beyond his strength to raise. His feeble limbs tottered over the burden; the poor remains of his strength were fast ebbing away; the darkness of death was gathering around him; and after a convulsive and impotent attempt to lift the pile, he fell down end expired.

Let us consider another passage of Scripture that has an important bearing on this subject. "And the dragon gave him (the beast) his power and his seat (throne) and his great authority." Rev. xiii. 2. Why did the devil give his throne, his power and great authority to the pope or papacy, (which is acknowledged to be symbolized by the beast)? Simply because he (the devil) was shut up in hell, the bottomless pit, and could not occupy it himself. He had made an offer to Christ to give him all the kingdoms of the world and the glory of them, if Christ would fall down and worship him. The object of this offer was a peace measure, a compromise, to stop the war which Christ was waging against him. But now the leasing of his throne and power, was for a very different purpose. Satan was bound, or restrained, so that he could not exercise it himself, so he procured a substitute, the pope, and leased his throne and power to him for forty and two months (1260 years,) "And power was given unto him to continue forty and two months; and it was given unto him to make war with the saints, and to overcome them." Rev. xiii. 7. History tells us how well the papacy filled the mould of prophecy, putting sixty-eight and one-half millions of saints to death, drove the church into the wilderness and clothed the civilized world with ignorance, superstition and worse than Egyptian darkness.

Satan was to be bound a thousand years. Albert Barnes on this passage says: "The term 'a thousand years' can be understood in only one of three ways: 1st, literally, a thousand literal years; 2d, figuratively, a long, indefinite period of time; or 3d, prophetic time, a day for a year, or 360,000 years." Dr. Clark says, "It is not likely that the thousand years is to be taken literally here." It is evident, too, that more than a thousand solar years have expired since Satan was bound.

There seems to be no dispute among commentators that the "fifth vial" was poured on the seat of the beast somewhere about the year, A. D. 1798, and the temporal power of the pope has been wasting away till A. D. 1870 or 1871, when it totally ceased, and the pope lost all that "power and great authority" to make physical war on the saints. In view of these facts, we are shut up to the adoption of the second definition of Barnes, i. e., an indefinite period of time.

The Revelator says: "After that Satan must be loosed a little season." We may look for the re-appearance of those Satanic influences that were restrained, soon after or while the power of the pope was being wrested from him. And these powers which were exercised by the magicians, these that had familiar spirits, oracles, &c., which were restrained, have reappeared in the form of spiritualism, papacy, secrecy, etc. "For they are the spirits of devils, working miracles, which go forth to the kings of the earth, and the whole world to gather them to the battle of the great day of God Almighty."—Rev. xvi. 14. We here have the exact description of these same powers, and they are working with an energy and success that should rouse every lover of Jesus to gird on the whole armor.

Here is where those who are looking for a millenium before the judgment greatly err, for it is declared in a vast number of places in the Bible that the church shall not be free from persecution till the ancient of days shall come; and that the beast will not be destroyed till Christ shall destroy him with "the brightness of his coming."

But some will say that Satanic influence has never been totally suppressed. In answer I would affirm without fear of successful contradiction, that the Scriptures nowhere, when rightly understood, give any intimation that Satanic influence will be wholly withdrawn till the judgment sits, only the partial binding of Satan's power was promised to our parents in Eden: the seed of the woman "shall bruise," not kill the serpent.

We have seen that Satan did exert an influence or power, by which he deceived all nations, and secured to himself the homage and worship of a vast majority of the human family, and was the "god of the world;" and that this state of things continued till the ministrations of Christ and his apostles; that Christ had power over devils; that he saw Satan as lightning fall from heaven; that the prince of this world was then cast out; that the devils knew Christ and knew that he had come to command them into the bottomless pit; that they acknowledged that the "Hebrew child" whom all the gods (devils) obey, had sent them hence and shut them up in hell. Here we have the concurrent testimony of inspiration, of sacred and profane history, ancient and modern, ecclesiastical and pagan, of Christ and the devils, all converging to the same point, and consider our theory well grounded.

This question of the continuance of Satanic influence is fully settled in the 13th chapter of Matthew, where Christ explains the parable of the tares of the field. "The field is the world; the good seed are the children of the kingdom; but the tares are the children of the wicked one; the enemy that sowed them is the devil; the harvest is the world; and the reapers are the angels." Thus clearly showing that Satan is to sow and cultivate tares until the harvest or judgment day. Any number of passages of like import might be cited if necessary.

Temperance.

In his exposition of the Sabbath school lesson for July 18th, Dr. Taylor in the Working Church has the following interesting comment:

ANCIENT WINES.

It is well known to students that many of the wines so often mentioned in what are called the classics were very different from what are called wines now-a-days. A large proportion of the ancient wines were so thick or syrup-like in their consistence as to require a large admixture of water before being used, just as is required by the various fruit syrups now-a-days. These wines were dried or inspissated by heat, a process which would effectually drive off any alcohol had it been present, and prevent its formation if the grape juice were immediately subjected to it. So far was this process sometimes carried that mention is made of a wine which required six waters, not on account of its alcoholic strength, for then it must have been stronger than high wines, but on account of its concentration or thickness. Other wines are mentioned which were concentrated to a paste or cake for journeys. Such wines could have no alcohol in them unless it were added as in cordials now-a-days; but as distillation was not then known it could not be so added.

In examining the lesson let us bear these facts in mind, and the farther fact that the chief portion of the grape crop is still used in Syria, as it doubtless always was, in this thickened unfermented condition. When thus used it was not called by the same name as intoxicating wine in the Hebrew Bible, and is not now called by the same name in the East, though there appears to have been generally no distinction in name in the Greek Testament between fermented and unfermented, juice of the grape.

Bearing all these facts in mind, do not we find a much simpler and more probable view of the miracle than that usually entertained? The six waterpots were used to dilute the thick syrup called wine, and the first supplies were mixed in the ordinary way, but when the supply failed and more was needed the Lord ordered the attendants to pour in water just as if the wine had been first put in, and the miracle consisted in bringing out a richer, fuller-bodied wine than the previous supply. The governor of the feast alluded to the custom of diluting the wine to a greater extent after the company had been well supplied (as is often done with tea at festivals), and expresses surprise, not that the wine the Lord made was more intoxicating, as is often taught, but that it was richer in the pure unfermented juice of the grape.

Many will object to this simple explanation that men would not continue to drink unintoxicating wine, but fruit sherbets are the great luxury of the East now, and such was the Roman liking for the well-watered wines we have described that one man got the name of triconguis or three-gallon man, from the vast quantities he could drink at a sitting at their long-continued feasts.

It is evident that there could be little or no alcohol in this wine, or such a dose would have proved fatal. There is also a modern counterpart of this ancient excess in the German passion for lager beer, which leads some to drink as much as eighty or a hundred glasses a day. Lager, however, has a small proportion of alcohol, and is consequently a dangerous drink, which those inspissated wines of the ancient world could not be. We would not be understood as saying that all ancient wines were thick and free from alcohol; on the contrary, there was plenty of fermented wine that in the language of Solomon, "moved itself aright," and "gave its color in the cup," but that kind the wise man enjoins his readers not even to look upon.

The statements about ancient wines above given are quoted from memory from a very elaborate work, published before the Temperance Reformation was heard of, entitled, "Henderson's History of wines."

Religious Intelligence.

—According to the latest English statistics, there are 14,000,000 Methodists throughout the world.

—The past year is said to have been preeminently a revival year among the Congregational churches in Canada.

—The First Reformed Episcopal church in the State of Ohio has just been organized in Put-in-Bay.

—The United Methodist free churches of Great Britain have now 68,649 members 6,060 probationers. Their net increase of members during the last Conference year was 1,278.

—Twelve years ago, in London, there were but 37,000 sittings in the Methodist churches. There are now 91,000. And within that period forty-four large churches, capable of seating 1,000 persons each, have been built.

—The English Baptists are prosecuting their foreign missions with energy and success. During the past year 3,546 converts have been baptized. In Santhalistar the Norwegian missionaries have had wonderful success. 1,000 Santhals have been baptized during the past year.

—A noticeable event in the annual meetings of the Wesleyan Missionary Societies this year was that two of their chairmen contributed $500 each to the funds of the Societies. One of them had been twenty-four years a collector for the Wesleyan Missionary Society.

—The preliminary business meeting to arrange for the Pan-Presbyterian Council will be held in the English Presbyterian College, London, on the 21st inst. Delegates will be present from various countries, the American General Assembly having appointed its three last Moderators Howard Crosby, D. D., L. L. D., Samuel J. Wilson, D. D., L. L. D., and Edward D. Morris, D. D., with Dr. Hadfield, the Assembly clerk, and such other elders and ministers as they may select.

—By the will of the late James McQuestion, of Plymouth, the American Home Missionary Society received a very large but very peculiar bequest. After liberal provisions for his family, the balance of the estate is committed to the care of six trustees, and their successors to be appointed by the Probate Court, who are to manage his property until the sum at their disposal reaches $150,000. Then $100,000 is to be invested in a business block in Boston, and the rents are to be paid to the missionary society. The $50,000 is to accumulate again until it amounts to $150,000, and so the process is to go on. Should the Society ever cease to exist, any similar organization for the same general purpose may receive the income, or it may be applied to aid churches in Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, and Massachusetts.

—In Rome, a man who is a nephew of one of the Cardinals, and was himself a Catholic priest, is about to be baptized in the Baptist church, which now has ninety members.

—The Fourth Avenue Presbyterian church in New York, has for some years carried forward a useful mission among the Chinese in that city. The school, which is the main instrumentality, has sessions both day and evening. A well supplied reading room is one of the appliances of the mission.

SECRETISM,

Unorganized and Organized.

[A Sermon Preached by Rev. R. T. Cross, May 30, 1875, in the Congregational Church, Hamilton, N. Y. Published by request.]

"And this is the condemnation, that light is come into the world, and men loved darkness rather than light, because their deeds were evil. For every one that doeth evil hateth the light, lest his deeds should be reproved. But he that doeth truth cometh to the light that his deeds may be made manifest that they are wrought in God." John, iii: 19-21.

The word "secretism" is not found in Webster. It has recently been brought into prominent use, if not into existence, by the opponents of secret orders to express what they believe to be a perverted secrecy, especially in its tendency to organization. Secretism is always wrong; scerecy is not always wrong. All secretism is secrecy, but not all seerecy is secretism—just as all murder is killing but not all killing is murder. Secretism is the opposite extreme to gossip and tale-bearing. The golden mean lies between the two. The gossiper and tale-bearer tells those things which ought not to be known, or which if known will do no good; the secretist refuses to tell those things which ought to be known by others, or which, if known, will do no harm. Secretism is the opposite of that cordial, free, open-hearted frankness which ought to exist between us and our fellow men.

Secrecy is sometimes right. We all ought to be cautious about what we say to others. I do not expect a member of my family to go and tell everybody he meets everything that is said and done in the family. But my family would not be an acceptable and agreeable family in the neighborhood if all its members were everlastingly silent about family affairs, and it would be a natural object of suspicion if all its members were known to be under oath not to tell any thing about its affairs. It is not necessary or prudent to tell everybody all about our business affairs, yet men naturally suspect those who never tell anything about their business. Doctors are not expected to tell everybody what ails everybody else. Ministers are obliged to listen to a great deal about the faults and sins of others, but there would soon be trouble in the church and community if they told to others all that they heard about others. In times of war there must, for the time being, be some secrecy about the movement of armies. But in all these cases the secrecy concerns something which others have no right to know, or which will do no good, or from which harm will come if known. Sometimes it is right for us to promise, not to take an oath, not to say: "I hope to drop dead," or any such thing, but simply to promise on our honor to keep a secret a longer or shorter time, though it is not right to make such a promise beforehand unless we know what the nature of the secret is. On the other hand, secrecy becomes secretism when it concerns things that ought to be known by others, the knowing of which will do good or prevent evil; also when it concerns things which it is natural for men to inquire about and know according to that frank confidence which should prevail among men and that interest which they naturally and rightly take in one another's affairs. We all like frankness when it goes with a good-natured kindness, and we all dislike the opposite. Why should any person, man or woman, be anxious to conceal his age, unless, for some purpose or other, he wishes to to deceive others in the matter? Why should men be so anxious to conceal the amount of their property or the profits of their business? We can easily see what the reason is when men are living far beyond their means and wish to give the impression that they are worth much more than they are, or when they are living far below their means and wish to make people believe that they are worth much less than they are, or when they have made or are making their money in a way which will not stand the test of exposure. But a man who has no such bad motive ought not to be so secret about his property. When a natural and proper curiosity about such things is not gratified there is sure to be suspicion and exaggeration.

If I make a discovery that is going to benefit humanity I have no right to keep it secret. If any secret society has, as we all know that they have not, any knowledge not possessed by the world at large, or any principles beneficial to humanity, they have no right to be so secret with them and withhold, them from the very persons who most need them. So we ought not to keep secret any evil or wrong-doing or sin that ought to be known, the knowing of which is necessary to the highest welfare of the family, the community, the school or the State. And yet these are the very things that secretism tries to hide by throwing around them its veil of darkness. Men love darkness whenever their deeds are evil. The thief, the burglar, the seducer, the murderer, the counterfeiter, the traitor, is necessarily a secretist, and so is he who shares the secrets of a lawbreaker.

If I know that a person is going to commit a crime against you to-night, or that he did commit one against you last night it is my duty and no possible obligation can make it otherwise, to let you and the officers of the law know it, that you may be on your guard, and that, for the sake of the public good, the offender may be brought to justice. All admit the truth of this as applied to murder, burglary, and such things. Why should not the same principle apply in lesser offenses? There is a common feeling among students that it is dishonorable to report to the proper authorities the misdeeds of their fellow students. It is dishonorable when it is done simply for the sake of currying favor with the authorities, or for the sake of getting their fellow students into trouble. But when it is done for the common good of the school, then it is right and duty. If I see a fellow student trampling under foot a law the observance of which is necessary for the good of the school, a proper regard for the common good, which includes my own good, makes it my duty to let the proper authorities know of it. In an experience of several years as a teacher, with many hundred young men, I have invariably found that the most faithful, law-abiding, diligent, Christian young men were the ones most ready to let me know of any wrong doing that was endangering the the welfare of the school; while the most reckless, law-breaking young men, who seemed to have not a particle of true honor, were the ones who had most to say about its being dishonorable to inform the teacher of wrong doing. And the same is true of those who break the laws of the State.

There are, it seems to me, two causes for secretism. One is a desire to cover up evil. "Every one that doeth evil hateth the light, lest his deeds should be reproved. But he that doeth truth cometh to the light that his deeds may be made manifest." The presumption is against those who cover up their doings from their fellow men, and it rests upon them to prove that they have good reason for their secrecy. The other cause of secretism is the charm there is in it to human nature; and this cause accounts for those cases where persons use secretism without an evil object in view. Somehow there is a charm to poor human nature in knowing, or making believe that we know, something which others do not, even though it be a thing of no earthly consequence. You have all heard little children say, with an air of very conscious superiority and importance, "I know something that you don't." Men and women are only children of a larger growth, and how often we see them acting, if not saying, "I know something that you don't."

But thus far I have been speaking of unorganized secretism, secretism as it lies around loose in individuals. I shall be touching only the hem of the garment of my subject if I make no mention of organized secretism, which I believe to be far more dangerous to society and religion than unorganized secretism, just as any evil is more dangerous when organized, when those who practice it are banded together for its support. I have studied the subject and opposed the evil too long, young as I am, not to know what it is that I am opposing and what risk I run. It brings me into opposition to the views and practices of some of my Christian friends, an opposition which endangers, though it need not destroy, Christian fellowship; while I run the risk of being assailed by others with a kind of argument, or want of argument, to which one cannot well reply, because it comes from the dark and goes back to the dark. But I oppose this evil because, after much thought and study and prayer, I have come to believe very strongly that organized secretism is one of the great enemies and obstacles to our Republican form of government and the pure Gospel of Christ.

We find then in our country a large number of secret organizations; hardly a village without one or more of them. They differ widely in their objects, their organization and their membership. They are of all gradations of secrecy, from the Good Templars and Grangers, whose avowed objects are good, and which are perhaps the least objectionable of any, up, or rather down, through college fraternities, Odd-fellowship, Freemasonry, White League, Ku-Klux Klans and Jesuitism. And yet, diverse as they are, secretism is the chain that runs through them all and binds them all together. Their initiations, their obligations, their methods of recognition, are kept secret from all outsiders. And yet these things have been substantially revealed of every such society of any size or importance. The member of such a society who denies this is either very ignorant or else he falsifies. For, aside from the undeniable facts of the revelation, it is impossible, human nature being what it is, for men to form a secret society of widespread membership without taking in some person who, for good or for bad reasons, will reveal its secrets.

I do not say that a secret organization is never necessary, nor do I assert that it is. In very despotic and tyrannical governments, in times of persecution, or among slaves, a temporary secret organization, lasting only while the necessity lasts, may be useful. But I do say that in free governments, especially in a Republican government, secret societies are not only unnecessary but positively harmful. And I propose to give some of the reasons that lead me to this conclusion:

1. They give organized form to secretism, a bad principle of human nature. They are based on it; it is their characteristic. The evils and evil tendencies of secretism are bad enough when unorganized; they are still worse when it is given a distinct form and organization.

2. The Bible argument. A Christian cannot carefully study the words which I have taken for a text and then feel that it is according to the letter or the spirit of those words for him to join a secret society. Before the Christian joins such an order he should read those words of Christ over and over again on his knees. And let him also read such passages as the following if he would know whether joining a secret order is in accordance with the spirit of the Book which he has promised to take as the man of his counsel: "O, my soul, come not thou into their secret; unto their assembly, mine honor, be not thou united." "I spake openly to the world, and in secret have I said nothing." "I have not spoken in secret, in a dark place of the earth." "God shall bring into judgment every secret thing." "Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them. For it is a shame even to speak of those things which are done of them in secret." "They are those that rebel against the light; they know not the ways thereof, nor abide in the paths thereof. For the morning is to them even as the shadow of death; if one know them they are in the terrors of the shadow of death." "Hide me from the secret counsel of the wicked, who whet their tongue like a sword, and bend their bows to shoot their arrows, even bitter words, that they may shoot in secret at the perfect; suddenly do they shoot at him and fear not. They encourage themselves in an evil matter; they commune of laying snares privily; they say, 'Who shall see them?'" "Wherefore if they shall say unto you, 'Behold he is in the secret chamber,' believe it not." "For there is nothing covered that shall not be revealed, neither hid that shall not be known. Therefore whatsoever ye have spoken in darkness shall be heard in the light; and that which ye have spoken in the ear in closets shall be proclaimed upon the house-tops." "Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven." The application of most of these passages is of course to the principle of secretism.

Platforms of the American Party.

G. A. Loomis of Casey, Iowa, writes: "What can you furnish platforms of the American Party for, by the hundred? We want to procure some for circulation in this county now and just before the election. Let me hear soon."

We wish we had a thousand more such letters as the above. If every one of the subscribers of the Cynosure will go to work in earnest for our ticket and make nominations early and have them printed on the bottom of our platform, and put one of them in the hands of every voter in your county, which can be done at a trifling expense and without great labor if all take hold, we can as certainly elect a great number of town, county and State officers as this experiment is fully tried. These platforms, with ten to twenty names of local nominations printed on the bottom, will be furnished by Ezra A. Cook & Co., as follows: 1,000 for $2.00, 2,000 for $3.00, 3,000 for $3.75, 5,000 for $5.00. Shall not a million of these platforms be put in the hands of voters before January next?

FREE TRACTS.

A Tract Fund for the Free Distribution of Tracts

HAS BEEN SECURED AND SHOULD NEVER BE EXHAUSTED. A friend has pledged this fund a dollar for every otherdollar received, so EVERY NEW SUBSCRIPTION TO THE TRACT FUND COUNTS DOUBLE, and thus $10.00 pays for 20,000 pages of tracts.

The distribution of these tracts has already saved hundreds of young men from the lodge, but there is a great lack of funds to supply the constantly increasing demand for Free Tracts.

During the year ending July 1st, 1875 a little less than 150,000 pages of Cynosure Tracts were gratuitously sent out, mostly in very small lots. The present demand is fully 100,000 pages per month, but funds are lacking to meet it.

Many of our most earnest workers in this cause of God are poor men, who would be glad to circulate thousands of pages of Antimasonic literature if they could have them free.

SHALL WE NOT HAVE AN INEXHAUSTIBLE TRACT FUND?

"THE ANTI-MASONS SCRAP BOOK."

Contains 24 Cynosure Tracts, bound together and is just the thing to select from. Price 20 cents. See advertisement page 15.

Enoch Honeywell Esq., pays for an unlimited number of his tract addressed "TO THE YOUNG MEN OF AMERICA." It is an excelent tract, bearing the printed endorsement of Executive Committee of the National Christian Association. He has furnished the public over 150,000 pages of these tracts during the past year.

Home and Health Hints.

Taking it Coolly.

One of the most disagreeable companions on a hot summer's day is a hot stove, and yet how many women who read this article feel compelled to spend many hours out of every twenty-four with this black, silent, fiery kitchen partner. Is there no escape? Suppose the kitchen door opens on an ample porch, with a roof over it and a honeysuckle in front of it, or a grape-vine, or a hop-vine, or morning glories, or flowering beans clambering up a trellis and shutting out the ardent rays of the sun. What a nice place that would be for carrying on the various activities of a summer's morning. One could wash there, spread the ironing table beneath the growing grapes, set the dinner table there, shell peas, stone cherries, and do a thousand other things in the open air while keeping an eye on all that goes on in the kitchen. If there is but a step from the house to the ground, two or three large trees just at the door are better even than a porch. We lived in such a kitchen once, and spent all the pleasant summer days in the open air. The cradle had a little awning over it, there was no clatter of shoes on the grassy sod beneath, no slops on the floor, no furnace heats, nothing but rural peace and quiet shade.

It does not occur to a great many women that there is any better or easier way of doing than the one to which they have become accustomed. The tendency of housework is to settle into a fixed routine and wear deep ruts, to go out of which is no easy matter. But it is not a bad plan to start inquiries in every department of domestic industry, and try experiments until one finds out the easiest way of accomplishing the matter in hand. In the winter of course the nearer the ironing and baking table is to the stove the fewer steps will be required, but this is not the first consideration in summer, and if one will have a high chair to sit in while ironing or baking on a low table, the distance from the stove will not amount to much. Beside, children of five or six years old can be taught to take steps.

There is another matter not very well understood by American cooks. We use entirely too much fuel, we cook by too hot a fire, we eat too much hot food, we boil our soups and our vegetables furiously, when all we want is simply to raise the temperature of the liquid in question to 212 degrees. which can be done with a moderate fire and no inconsiderable saving of stove-lining, coal, and physical discomfort. It is calculated that one-third of the power generated in any machine is consumed in overcoming the friction, and one great problem with machinists is to reduce the friction to its minimum. Let us apply this problem to housekeeping, and begin by studying all the ways in which we can keep cool.—N. Y. Tribune.

Summer Drinks.

No beers, or wines, or brandies—nothing alcoholic! They are carbonaceous, and increase the heat and fever of the system; they clog up instead of lightening; they debilitate instead of giving strength. The tendency of the system in all lands, in summer, is to biliousness—to bilious diseases; we call them fevers. This is because we eat more than we wear out by exercise or labor; hence the body becomes too full.

Everybody knew that fruits and berries were cooling—were "healthy;" but how they were, was not definitely known until within a few years. The wisdom and benevolence of our Maker in this thing, surely, will command our affections, in that he has provided these fruits and berries in such generous profusion, and combined a necessary quality with such a delicious taste, that every soul of man is perfectly ravenous for them, and we can eat them without harm, to our utmost fill, if ripe, raw and perfect, and taken alone.

In the absence of fruits and berries, we may obtain the needed natural acid from the lemon, diluted with water; but the most universally available acid drink for summer as a natural aid to the liver is buttermilk, not an ounce of which should ever be wasted, to be taken at meal times, or between meals when thirsty.

For outdoor labor, buttermilk is the safest, most healthful and cooling of summer drinks, to be taken at the temperature of the air. If a mouthful is swallowed at a time with a distinct interval, the thirst will be better satisfied with a quarter of a pint, than if a whole cupful is taken without being removed from the lips.

A palatable and safe summer drink for outdoor workers is water, of the natural temperature, sweetened with molasses. All root beers are pernicious. —Hall's Journal of Health.

Farm and Garden.

LIGHTNING RODS.—As the peripatetic nuisance, the lightning rod peddler, will soon begin his tour of devastation, we give the following from a correspondent of the Michigan Farmer, as to what the rod should be and how it should be erected. In order to render rods efficient they must project into the air some distance beyond the highest point of the building to be protected. They must be of sufficient thickness to carry off the discharge without fusion. This is insured by the use of a copper rod not less than half an inch, or wrought iron three-fourths of an inch in diameter. The pieces composing the rod should be in metallic contact with one another throughout their length, so as to make a continuous surface, since electricity experiences much resistance in passing through links and interrupted joints. At the bottom the rod should terminaet in two or three branches, in a bed of moist earth; or, better still, in a well or body of water. If any considerable metallic mass, such as a leaden roof, form part of the building, it should be connected with the conductor by branch rods, and also be furnished with branch conductors into the earth. If the building has a chimney, it is best, when possible, to attach the rod to it, for it needs peculiar protection, both on account of its prominence and because the products of combustion, smoke, watery vapor, etc., are conductors of electricity. The rod should terminate above in a sharp point; as these points are liable to lose their sharpness, and have their conducting power impaired by rust, they can be protected from corrosion by being covered with gold leaf or silver-plate. The law of protection laid down by some French writers is, "that a conducting rod will protect a circular arena having a radius double the height of the conductor above the highest point of the building."

Rods may be made of smaller size than above described; but, if so, there should be a proportionately greater number. All the torsion and various means to increase the surface of the rod is of no use, for electricity is conducted through the metal and not on the outside. When rod-men dwell in copious detail upon the inconceivable value of those little glass rings as insulators, they are using spurious oratory. Damp glass, as it must necessarily be in a damp atmosphere, is a good conductor of electricity. The rod should be fastened directly to the building; the metal is so much better conductor than the wood that the electricity is not likely to leave the rod.

Lightning-rods are of service, not so much in receiving a discharge when it comes, as diminishing the number of discharges in their vicinity. They continually carry on a silent communication between the two electricities, which are attracting each other—the one in the clouds the other in the earth; the electricity flows off from points abundantly, and mixes with the opposite kind in the air, so that a village well furnished with rods has few discharges of lightning.

The contents of the Eleventh chapter are thus startling:

Postage on the Cynosure.

THE POSTAGE ON THE CYNOSURE MUST BE PAID AT CHICAGO. It is twenty cents a year.

The cost of postage now depends entirely on the size and weight, and therefore some smaller papers charge but fifteen cents; and others about the size of the Cynosure charge twenty-five cents a year for postage.

If the subscription price of the CYNOSURE was $2.50 or $3.00 a year, the price of many religious papers containing no more reading matter, we might afford to pay the postage ourselves, but at $2.00 a year we cannot do this with our present Subscription list.

Therefore let all send the postage, 20 cents a year, 10 cents for half a year with their renewals.

The commission on one new subscription for a year will pay the postage on your own and the new subscriber's paper. We would rather have the postage paid by commissions than in any other way.

When postage is not paid we shall have to shorten the time of subscription sufficiently to pay it.

Topics of the Time.

On the body of one of the mob of papists engaged in the recent massacre of Protestants at San Miguel, Central America, was found a passport signed by the bishop of San Salvador, running thus: "Peter! open the gates of heaven to the bearer, who died for his religion." Some of the Catholic papers are indignant that any such endorsement of the horrid butchery should appear, and hope that "non-Catholics" will cease to be so sure that all offenses against public order by papists are at the bidding of the pope or his under officers. But aside from carte blanche "passports" to murderers, the pope and his priests are certainly and directly responsible for the system which educates men for just such horrid butcheries.

Should the papacy obtain popular control both of religion and education as in San Salvador, it would very soon appear, to the satisfaction of professed "liberals," that it was the same savage beast here as there, now as two centuries ago. And it does not argue well for our guardianship of free churches and free schools, when men of Gen. Howard's standing openly propose Catholic teachers for the Indians; and when it causes a greater shock to learn that the priests are trying to drive the books of the strongly anti-papal firm of the Harpers, from the public schools of Chicago, than their long and loud uproar against the Word, the Book of the ever-living God.

The last move of the telegraph ring will go far to prove that the government can carry on the entire system with more economy and honor to the business of the country than the present private management, even if expenses are not met immediately. It has for some time been known that Jay Gould has aimed to satiate his ambition by controlling the telegraphic connection of New York and China. In this scheme his old enemy Vanderbilt was across the path with eleven millions of the stock of the Western Union line owned by himself and friends. Gould would get but seven and a half millions; but to compensate, it is believed that he bought up the rival Atlantic and Pacific lines, and has now consolidated it with the Western Union. The business of the country was greatly relieved while the rivalry of the two lines kept their rates within due bounds; but if it must again shoulder this 'Old man of the sea", it may turn at length for relief to a government ownership of the telegraph system. A great source of opposition to this plan, recommended by Pres. Grant in his last address but ignored by Congress, is the powerful daily press. Depending to a great degree upon their dispatches, an understanding has evidently been made with telegraph managers; so their voice has been uniformly against government ownership. This will be changed when the monopoly oversteps its cautionary bounds, and if the consolidation of the great lines under Jay Gould has been effected, the day of cheap telegraphing may not be far distant.

The British government has been again defeated. Not in her armies but in the person of her prime minister. Plimsoll, by his warm-hearted zeal for the lives of the sailors, unwittingly took the very means to arouse the public opinion into a storm upon the head of Disraeli. The decision of the government to put off the shipping bill to another season was too much for the sailors' advocate, and his strong denunciations and fist-shaking brought a vote of the House of Commons for his removal from the body, a measure which could not fail to draw public attention if a calm discussion, on which hundreds of lives depended, did not. As a result Mr. Plimsoll's project for the protection of sailors against the rapacity of vessel owners will be carried in some modified form. The present English law holds that sailors who have once shipped must go to sea. If they quit the ship they may be arrested, put in prison and sent to sea in duress. No matter if they have discovered that the vessel is unseaworthy, water-logged, rotten, worm-eaten, a floating coffin, sure to get to the bottom in the first storm. Mr. Plimsoll has for years been collecting statistics of the traffic in sailors' lives by British merchants sprung up under this law, and the people are well satisfied he is right if he has shown himself a reformer of too warm a heart and courageous a zeal for milords of Parliament.

Convention Correspondence.

LETTER FROM REV. GEO. CLARK.

To the N. C. A., assembled at Pittsburgh:

BELOVED BRETHREN AND SISTERS OF THE CONVENTION:—Unable to be with you bodily by reason of ill health, be assured I am with you in spirit, and will pray Him who has called us to this work and led us hitherto to preside over your convention.

The circumstances under which you meet are far different from those under which we met seven years ago. Then, the judgment day of the nation had come, and retributive justice had answered the long cry of the slave, with a wail in every home; and his blood, with the blood of a million men. In that dark and awful day, the few long-hidden fugitives of the lodge true to their instinct taking advantage of our struggle and sorrow, crept from their hiding places and began their work of darkness anew. Before we were aware, they had so far subsidized the press, that it is doubtful if one political paper could have been found that would willingly have uttered a word against Masonry. It had crept into the church also, till the pulpit was largely under its ban. In the Methodist church especially, it was affirmed that it had swindled the majority of preachers into its blood, oaths, pagan rites and worship, and held them fast by the life-pawns they had given.

The battle-scarred veterans who had laid the sod over Slavery, saw the conspiracy that had prolonged the war and sacrificed thousands of their comrades to this infernal league against justice, and came together to ask counsel of God and one another.

Then, we had no organization, and not a bugle or a drum to summon us to form for action. Now, we have eleven State and sixty county and local associations, and a trumpet that gives no "uncertain sound," and, like the celestial Cynosure it was named for, a guide for all eyes to the only safe anchoring ground for the church and state.

Then, what Anti-masonic literature had not been secretly destroyed by the trained cunning of the lodge men, lay scattered on unused shelves like hated records that smelt of blood. These chronicles of Masonic conspiracy against justice and life have been recovered out of the rubbish and are being republished. Our national trumpet sounds its alarm from some two thousand post offices in thirty-two States and five Territories; from the rock-bound shore of Nova Scotia to where the Queen of the West looks through her Golden Gate upon the Pacific. Besides we are scattering tracts and books by the million, and are gathering a library that will enrich that God-given donation, the Carpenter Block, and attract friends and enquirers to its rooms.

Then, few saw the midnight tracks of the Baal worshipers, and so prayed little for them. Now, daily prayer from closet, family altar and the social meeting ascends to God for them.

Then, we had no agents. Now we have a General Agent peculiarly adapted to this great work, eight State agents and twenty-seven others.

Then, we knew little of our own strength in the number and might of our friends in the seven religious denominations who prohibit fellowship with members of secret societies. Now we learn they have 4,857 preachers, and 641,693 communicants besides the Wesleyan Methodists, Friend Quakers and others. And besides this, numerous religious bodies have passed strong resolutions against Masonry.

Then, few tickets got Anti-masonic scratches. Now, we are discussing whether the time has not come to put into the field a platform and ticket of our own.

What reform so difficult has moved forward with greater success? But though we are massing our columns and are sure of victory we need the "whole armor of God," for there is hard fighting before us.

The lodges demand to be let alone. So do all evil doers. "Let us alone," said the malevolents who tormented the maniac of Gadara. "Let us alone," said the "lords of the loom and the lash;" and the Southern press and pulpit responded, "Let us alone." "Let us alone," said the Castle Garden Committee. "Let us alone," said the National Government as it bound Massachusetts' State House in chains, and pointed its cannon on the friends of liberty as they thronged close up to the iron links and chambered grape. That day saw liberty herself in chains. "Let us alone," said Masonry as it planned and executed the murder of the conscientious and amiable Morgan, and then secreted the assassins it had appointed by ballot to slay him. And shall we let it alone? till we ourselves are bound in its despotic chains?

Already it numbers half a million men armed and drilled. Its yearly revenue is counted by millions. Our government is practically under its control since it holds most of its offices. Its principles are broad enough for all emergencies. It has a Masonic conscience, and appropriates to its purpose both the sacred and the profane, even purloining and using the sacred name and titles of God himself and excluding the worship of Christ from its ritual and lodge-worship by law; proclaiming salvation by Deism; invading Christian marriage; obtaining money under false pretenses; forging history and annually on the 24th of June openly celebrating the collusion of the holy Evangelist John with its own studied deception, pagan rites and worship, its rejection of Christ and bloody oaths, thus putting him on a level with Judas. It lays its wicked hand on the press and the pulpit, the halls of legislation and executive authority, on the caucus and the ballot, the constabulary and the jury, the witness—bench and bar. We cannot let it alone, for it will not let us alone. We may tolerate an error, but never a crime; false theories, but not the setting fire to the crowded ship at sea. To let alone a known plot to throw a train from the track is complicity in the crime. We cannot, therefore, let alone this known conspiracy against Christ and society.

And we shall succeed; for no league of iniquity can balk the Infinite Will that leads history. That old and awful prophecy—"The kingdom and nation that will not serve Thee shall perish;" and that other—"Every plant that my Heavenly Father hath not planted shall be rooted up," keep step with the ages. His government still revolves around the Cross, rooting up and grinding to powder anti-Christian institutions. It matters not that they are entrenched behind walls of tradition, usage and law high as Babylon. What God promises, shall not by one minute fail of its time.

Masonry is indicted and doomed in God's own Book. Already the "handwriting" is on the wall, and the air is astir with alarm from the Masonic organ of the great North-west, warning of danger from the present Anti-masonic movement, and summoning its clans, both to defense and aggression. And what but a response to that call was the gathering of plumed Knights in your city last week? What but to anticipate and neutralize your convention. This marplot of secretism arming and drilling its clans, is not without a serious purpose looking to future contingencies.

"The German empire is peace." But Kaiser William, Bismarck and Von Roon mean something serious when they arm and drill their citizens. The Masonic leaders who discussed and ordered the murder of Morgan, secreted the murderer of Ellen Slade, and threatened the life of Judge Whitney, meant something serious, as did the Knights who charged on Allyn with their swords at his throat, threatening his life because he refused to drink the fifth libation from a human skull, forcing him to do it. These weapons are, and will be used, just as far as the despotic leaders dare.

Nevertheless, this reform must go on to victory, for Christ leads it. The age of means has not passed, and no more has the supernatural. The power before and behind the temperance crusade; before and behind and in Moody and Sankey in London, and the Gospel message in every true revival, is the same that carried the three thousand on the day of Penticost, and saved John B. Gough and Richard Weaver; and which alone can reach the consciences and hearts of the members of this anti-Christian league. It was no Cromwellian sentiment, but God's own order that was sent down the lines on the eve of a great battle: "Trust in God, but keep your powder dry." Let not unbelief hinder our march or drive us behind our intrenchments. FORWARD is the word flaming from every banner in Christ's army. We are under marching orders and have no responsibility beyond obedience. Christ assumes all responsibility for success. Let us not imagine the Anaks mightier than our "Lord" the "King of kings;" for, "they that be for us, are more than they that be against us."

Your Bro. in Christ, GEO. CLARK.

The Rationale of Revivals and Camp-meetings.

BY GEORGE N. HAMMOND.

There can be few rational and intelligent persons who will deny that religion, in the widest acceptation of that word, proposes to itself a work which is the highest degree beneficent to society. For, in practice, it works to smooth down all that is socially mischievous in men's characters; to render circulatory intercourse among men smooth, agreeable, and helpful to all. So that, if we regard it as one of the higher enterprises of our social life, religion has claims on the interest of every body, and ought to be allowed to retain whatever principles and appliances will lend it strength and prevalence.

Both camp-meetings and revivals are to be considered as extraordinary efforts to raise the key, and increase the fervor of religion. It is found that when a church treads on from week to week and year to year in even tenor, it inclines to forget the vim and spirit of its creeds and lapses into heartless formalism. The whole of its religious life consists of so many habits and formulas which compose, as it were, a system of channels through which the spirit of religion circulates. An uneventful monotony, as it were, brings along a drought in the circulation; and the church goes on repeating and faintly renewing the mechanical accommodation of religion (when it is there), though its courses are, in fact, empty and collapsing. The history is much like that of words in a language. They should ever be vehicles of some thought. But when we have used them often and hackneyed them, as we say, they begin to grow stale and unmeaning. So, we sing an old song, which, when first we heard it brought a divine charm into our soul; we sing it down, till at last it is a flat and soulless thing.

Hence it is no wonder that we cannot continue repeating the same religious forms, praying the same prayers, singing the same hymns, observing the same rounds of meetings, without feeling the need of some new stir, some quickening of the spirit of the thing, some recalling of its lost meaning, some rod on our rocky hearts to call forth afresh the rushing water of life into its wonted courses. In literature it is observed that, lacking great geniuses to inspire the fraternity of writers, composition dwindles and degenerates; but every century or so there is an appearance of "great lights," who diffuse, first, an excitement, then an everywhere increased enthusiasm, and quickened industry, and finally these effects are confirmed to present and to coming generations, by great works accomplished. In like manner in national governments, when not chained in the reliefless monotony of a tyranny, the people, in spite of important services and exemplary conduct on the part of the old, find a periodical need of talent and energy in the governing cabinet. And we know it is the same in business. A "fuss" or bother must be raised now and then to enliven and restore things. We can't help it; this is the order of things here below. To our fallen humanity, uniformity means gradual decline. Motion is the great spice and leaven of life; and this is often motion from one extreme to another and back. Uniform equipoise is unknown to us. Now we sway this side, now that. Although exact equipoise is our ideal, the only way in which we can keep in sight of it, is to take care to sway as far out of it on this side, as we did on that.

Philosophers have been apt to compare the even, duteous tenor of a good man's life to the orbit of a celestial planet. The forces that keep a star in its orbit are partly in itself and partly without it. There is on one side a force and energy of onward motion it has in itself; and on the other, a combination of outside attractions that keep it from flying off at a tangent, and startling all the rest of the universe: and that bend it to its course, not only out of a straight line, but not even in a uniform circle, in an ellipse. The movement of our religious progress is the result of similar influences. Emotion throws us off at a tangent; we are bent to a moderately, though by no means strictly uniform course; by a compound of considerations, mostly obeisances to external conditions, named Common Sense or Rationality.

You remember the kind of road the Pilgrim traveled in Bunyan's book; now it led him over hills of elation, and again down deep in the valley of the shadow. Changing a little the application of the allegory, we may say that in religious life, emotional fervor exalts us on the hill-tops; common sense and rationality tumble us in valleys and bottoms. But we must take care that over indulgence in skeptic-breeding rationality, does not sink us in bogs beyond help or salvation; and at the same time that we do not rise so high into the noxious imaginations of superstition as to perish from the very thinness of religious air. We shall answer the conditions of our nature in action and reaction between the extremes.

As to the effect, in practice, of the emotional enginery of revivals and camp-meetings, what we have to say is this: that, whereas emotion is the nominal imparter of energy; and whereas it is undoubted, that a man never opens eyes into a religious life at all, except by some more or less sudden breaking up of the crust of his egotism (which might be compared to the breaking up of the shell of a hen's egg before the chick sees light; or to the relaxing of the cords of the paralyzed, or the cutting of those of the tongue-tied), so there is no other medicine of religious conversion beside revivals, or accidental happiness of the same nature. The Sunday-after-Sunday church services are not intended for this work; and certainly they are not adequate to it. They may feed the religious growth when it is once started; they may cultivate the morality which is, as it were, the language of religion; but as for giving birth to it, we repeat, they are not adequate to it.

It happens, oh! in how many cases, that men attend church and sit under the eloquent preacher regularly, and yet are converted to no greater extent than a smooth and not very fearful morality. Whereas as soon as they are wrought on by the revivalist, they awaken to themselves, as strangely as blind Bartimeus who began to see trees walking about as men. Some are moral before they are converted; some after. Without morality religion could not get on at all, for morality is the legs that religion walks with, the body through which it circulates; like the gentle beauty of the natural universe, which is an earthly tabernacle to the soul of God.

It is more than ever necessary in our busy times; that those who wish to make progress in religion, should have a sort of "going into the wilderness to pray." Camp-meetings held amidst the fresh simplicity of nature make it easier to draw near the Creator of the universe than it can be amidst the meretricious attractions of great cities. Such meetings are not more extravagant in idea, than family reunions to foster family affection. If any are too selfish to offer the same facilities to their Christian brethren for the fostering of that higher piety, we think they must look at home for the reason of such prejudice. Such gatherings in a nation are guarantees of success. They afford that steadying conscienciousness to a nation, which otherwise could only grow out of humiliation and natural disaster. Religion will always pay; whether looked on as duty, as economy, or as the only safety.

A correspondent of a contemporary writes a very interesting and able article on Masonry. He certainly knows what he is talking about, and speaks as one who feels the importance of that which he discusses. The following sentence, taken from the body of the contribution, will show his style of discussion, and as it relates to a painful feature of Masonic prostitution, it is worthy of a very extensive circulation: "In the name of all that is sacred and decent, what has a minister of Christ to do with that compound of heathenism, infidelity and tom-foolery, called Freemasonry?" That is stating it plainly and to the point. But the editor, doubtless fearing that such plain talk will ruffle up some weak brother and tempt him to drop the paper, hastens to disclaim any endorsement of his friend's opinion, in doing which he also states his belief that Masonry is now very different from what it was forty years ago. Masonry different! Why it is an insult to a member of the craft to say so!—United Presbyterian.

A Fatal Substitution.

I was in a store lately and two men were in conversation, one assaulting, tho other defending the Bible as a revelation of God to man. After the sceptic had gone, another gentleman affirmed that the sceptic had spoken strangely, for he was a Mason and must have sworn that he believed in the Bible before he could become one. It soon appeared that the new speaker was also a Mason, and that his object was to win the favorable opinion of the defender of the Bible. Let me call this Mason M. and the other C.

The conversation continued by M. saying, "That man is wrong. He is a Mason, and all Masons should believe in the Bible. They must do so when they join the lodge anyhow." C. said, "Oh! I thought Freemasonry claimed to be a universal brotherhood, and—yes—I know—they believe in a God, but so do others who are not Christians."

M. They do. But if Masons act up to what they are taught in the lodge, there would be very little use for churches.

C. Ah! Do you mean that the lodge may be a substitute for the church?

M. Well; I believe so. For a good Mason must be a good man and believe in God.

C. Yes, but you admit Jews, don't you? and how can the Jew and the Christian unite in the same worship? The Jews don't believe in the New Testament.

M. No, but we don't exclude the New Testament. If the Jews don't like that, they can leave. Besides, Freemasonry existed before Christ, and we all admit the Old Testament and worship the same God.

C. But the Old Testament worship has been superceded by the authority of Christ, and how Christians and Jews can unite in the same worship of God in the lodge I really can't see.

Some one entered, so the conversation was here interrupted, and M. slipped out. C. remained, and the talk was resumed by another man who said he was a Mason, and had been for a number of years, but had not thought of it in the way he had just heard. In fact he had been much more in his church than in the lodge, and felt the force of the inconsistency just expressed, for of course Christians should worship only through Christ, and Jews could not. He had joined the lodge years ago, but had taken very little interest in it for a long time, and could never think of it as in any way worthy of being put in comparison with the church.

Thus, gentle reader, Freemasonry includes sceptic, formalist and believer, and all may be Masons, for the best Mason is not necessarily a Christian at all. Nor, according to their organ of St. Louis, is it at all necessary for any man who is "born right and lives right" to believe in and obey the Lord Jesus Christ that he may be saved. The lodge is a delusion and a snare and a den of darkness where the true light shines not; where men are secretly taught to rely upon their own righteousness as the ground of acceptance in the Grand Lodge above; and while they profess worship of God, they are not taught that faith in and obedience to the sinner's Redeemer is the true foundation for the sinner's hope of welcome to the joy of their Lord. "Every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself even as he is pure." Christian, the popular delusion is strengthened by thy poverty in good works. Go work in thy Master's vineyard, and be like thy Master.

T. Heardem.

Standing Armies.

Five million men are under arms in Europe. These five million include the very flower of the population, those least liable to death under the natural and normal conditions of life and it is proved, proved beyond doubt by army physicians, that in our military hospitals, as, for instance, in that of the Val de Grace at Pasis, that the mortality of soldiers is double and treble that of the remainder of the population of civil life. How much of valuable labor does this system take away from the workshop, the hearth, and the family? And during this time what becomes of the 5,000,000 women who ought to be companions of these men, and of the families which should be the fruit of their marriages?

When throughout the surface of the civilized world, we see every year the return of spring, and renovated life everywhere, then also at the sound of the drum, and at the summons of the trumpet, the young men, our laboring youth are called to present themselves, in each district, before the representatives of the central authority of the country. They come in parties with ribbons in their hats. These young men are but food for cannon, and those representatives of authority are only ordered to judge of the quality of the supply. And when they have them ranged like beasts for sale, they compel them to take off the garments which protect their modesty, and to do violence to their feelings of shame. They make them naked in each other's presence, like brutes. Then they examine them, they handle them, they turn them around, they open their mouths as if they were horses or dogs, in order to see their teeth, and finally they draw them up in two flocks like the sheep and goats in the Gospel parable. On the one side are the robust, the handsome, the agile, those whose hands are clever in the use of tools, and whose vigorous blood is fitted to multiply upon earth a healthy and strong race; and on the other side are the weak, the lame, the maimed, the deaf, the one-eyed, all those who may be considered as the ones to be eliminated, (if it were permitted to use the term in speaking of the sacred subject of human nature.)

And all this accomplished, then the public authorities assume a grave countenance, and pronounce those youths, whom they have so carefully selected, as the best to be found "good for slaughter" ("Bon pour Boucherie"). Yes, good for the slaughter of the battlefield, and for the deadly demoralization of the barracks.

And then they say to the others, to those whom they do not deem fit for the bullet or for the bayonet thrust, "You are good enough for marriage, and for labor!" Alas! that such things should be done in this nineteenth century, and amongst the greatest nations in the world, amongst Europeans calling themselves civilized and Christian! These things show the reason why the population of France is not increasing, or, at least, why it increases so slowly. And yet we wonder at the misery and degradation of our populace, at their suffering, and their vices.—Speech by M. Passy, of Paris.

It is None of your Business.

BY H. H. HINMAN.

It is often said that the secrets of Masonry are like the privacies of the family, that they concern no one but the members of the order, and that it is simply impertinent to ask any questions, or to assume to know anything about them. Now it is granted that there may be privacies in the family into which no one has a right to enquire; but even these privacies are not immoral, and if they were they would be rightful subjects of investigation; for a secret immorality is as truly wicked as though it were open. It is my right to know whether my brother in the church is living in the practice of immorality; and if I learn on credible evidence that he has bound himself to conceal crime, or to espouse the cause of a companion whether he be right or wrong, and has sworn that he will do this under penalty of having his body severed in two or his skull smote off; and if he has blasphemously asked God to help him do this wickedness, then it is my right and duty to ask him if this is true, and it is his duty to give me a candid reply. He has no right to say it is none of my business. It is my business, for I am my "brother's keeper" and I have no right either to "suffer sin upon him" or to leave him to be unjustly accused; and when in reply to my inquiries he tells me that this s a Masonic secret and is none of my business, he insults me and wrongs Christ and his cause.

The time has past for longer evading this question; and the church member that pretends that he may rightfully conceal the immoralities of the lodge because they are secrets, ought to be held to be guilty of these immoralities and treated accordingly. He ought also to be held to be guilty of contumacy, in refusing to hear the voice o the church and to respond to the admonitions of his brethren.

My First Written Lecture on the Masonic Excitement and Murder of Morgan.

BY SAMUEL D. GREENE.

Noticing in the Cynosure of the 8th of April, and following numbers, under the head "Forty Years Ago," a discourse at Woodstock, Ct., Sept. 11th, 1829, by Rev. Daniel Dow, of Thompson, brings to my mind incidents transpiring on and about that time.

Arriving at Providence, R. I., at my wife's mother's in the latter part of August, 1829, I was soon after invited to go with an acquaintance of mine (a Mason) over to Pautucket, to an Anti-masonic meeting that was to be held there. I consented. (See "Broken Seal," page 160 to 164.) After my extemporary lecture at Fanueil Hall on the 8th of September, the excitement was so great in Boston that I left at 3 o'clock the next morning. I took stage for Connecticut. Arriving at Thompson the evening of the 10th of Sept., at Mr. Reed's, the father of Herbert A. Reed of Leroy, N. Y., a seceding Mason, I learned that the Rev. Daniel Dow was to deliver a sermon on Freemasonry at Woodstock, on the 11th, and that Jacob Allen, from Braintree, Massachusetts, was to expose Freemasonry by opening a lodge of Entered Apprentice, Fellow-craft and Master Masons. Having an acquaintance years before with Mr. Dow, I was very anxious to hear his sermon, and as it might be expected that I should give some account of the outrages committed at Batavia, I concluded to put my thoughts and some facts concerning the outrage, on paper. I therefore spent the night in writing an address to deliver at Woodstock, if requested. I finished my first written lecture in season to be at Woodstock at the opening of the meeting, and was invited into the pulpit with my old acquaintance to listen to his sermon. At the close of the sermon I was requested to deliver my address as follows:

Ladies and Gentlemen:—When we meet generally, it excites no suspicions nor does it create any alarm or surprise. If we meet to call the attention of the public mind upon the subject of temperance, upon missionary enterprises of the day, upon the abuse and sufferings of the aborigines of our country, or to alleviate the distresses of the suffering Greeks, to express our decided disapprobation of any public measure, or to enter our protest against, or humble petitions that any national sin or calamity may be averted—it does not cause any special alarm; but when we meet as in the present case to seek information and to investigate the principles of an institution sustained by a combination of men, who are exerting a powerful influence in our country, it creates both alarm and surprise. You must not expect from me eloquence. I am disposed to talk to you and tell you an unvarnished tale, and give you what information I have upon the principles of Freemasonry, and the outrages committed in New York.

The immediate agents in these transactions were magistrates, representatives, senators, high sheriffs, constables, military officers, and—I blush to say—ministers of the Gospel, deacons, and members of churches, comprising some of the most respectable men in society in that part of the country, for wealth, talent, station and character. This I assert from personal knowledge and subsequent acquaintance with this transaction. These outrages were perpetrated on the life, liberty and property a of free and unoffending citizen, —only as Freemasonry was offended— with the knowledge, approbation and assistance of all the Masonic bodies in that part of the State, beside the Grand Lodge of New York which is composed of officers of all the subordinate lodges. Here is a secret power composed, not of scavengers, but men of high standing in church and state, under solemn oaths both to God and man, to preach the Gospel and administer the laws of the country in which they reside, violating the sacred oracles of God and the laws of our nation. These things I affirm too, were done in strict conformity to the laws and usages of the Masonic fraternity, and were justified on that ground; and inducements were held out for the commission of crime, and whoever would obey was promised impunity. If detected, they never would be convicted, as all the officers of justice were Masons, and if indicted, or found guilty, they would be pardoned, as the pardoning power was in the hands of the highest officer and Mason in the State who would be bound to exercise it in their behalf. These facts I knew from individuals concerned and from personal observation.

More than three years have passed away since Freemasonry usurped this power and arrayed herself against the laws of the people, and of God, and committed her depredations on the liberty and life of Captain William Morgan, and on the person and property of Col. David C. Miller. Yet there is comparatively little known or felt on this mysterious affair at this distance from the scene of action, and few are prepared to act or to take decided measures to investigate this Masonic assumption, or to hinder the repetition of a like offense. What reason shall we assign for all this ignorance and apathy? It is, fellow citizens, the effects of Freemasonry, a banditti, a creature of darkness. It hates honesty and truth, and the light would put its eyes out. Its members have gradually increased by fraud adding to its catalogue both wealth and character without much inviting either our applause, censure, or jealousy. Thereby it is less suspected of evil or of danger in the execution of its laws. Nevertheless, by numbers it is strong, and weight of character in its members gives it power. The consequence is the obligations have a greater binding influence on its subjects; all tending to make a favorable influence on the public mind. Thus it claims to wield the mind and the press is by its formidable organizations; so that on the whole it has become a monster of prodigious growth and power, and when it has become known in the awful execution of its laws, the press and the people must speak in its favor or not at all. For dare they call in question the character of the institution or publish its deeds of death and of wrong? then the designing in the use of this power will awe into silence. But if a free people should have the presumption to think and act contrary to its views, their business is deranged and their motives are impeached; the best of principles called a delusion; untruth will be circulated for truth; and honest inquiry named excitement. In this manner the press has maintained a silence as profound as the grave. Comes fame borne upon the wind proclaiming in feeble and uncertain accents, all is not right; yet while the people wait for a louder voice, both strong and true, to come, the craft use their cunning artifice to make it of doubtful character.

Thus, fellow citizens, at this distance from the outrages you stand untaught from the press, and no special messenger is commissioned to bring you the facts. And you are like a ship at sea, without helm or compass, doubtful what course to pursue. But ladies and gentlemen, I come to you from the citadel of Freemasonry, bringing a helmsman, and I will endeavor to furnish your ship with a compass, and like a faithful pilot, rescue you from the quicksand of this motley host. I have been in the furnace of affliction. I have passed over the threshold into a Masonic lodge and have submitted to the degrading ceremonies of initiation, and received subsequently all the words, signs, tokens and benefits of the three first degrees, as Masons would say directly; but indirectly, but with greater certainty, if possible, many of the higher orders and an ineffable degree; and, fellow citizens, if you can believe human testimony, and without it, you can believe nothing, the secrets of Freemasonry as given in the different orders to forty-eight degrees are before the public. I stand before you and solemnly declare the three first degrees as disclosed by Morgan, and published by Miller, are substantially true. The others stand equally vouched for by men of substantial character and by legal testimony. Then you have in tangible form the oaths and secrets of the craft. All the by-laws of the lodge are made for the purpose of, and tend directly to an observance of all the ancient usages and customs of the order, and the execution of the penal part of the obligation upon any violator of its requirements. In strict observance of these oaths and for the preservation of these secrets the unhallowed conspiracy on Morgan and Miller were perpetrated.

I shall now endeavor to give you a detail of this affair, as I was an eye witness to much of it. I was personally acquainted with Capt. William Morgan, and Col. David C. Miller, and a member of the same lodge with Morgan; and at that time a resident of the village of Batavia, governed by trustees, and was principal officer over the village. About the last of July, or the first of August, 1826, a letter was received by the Junior Warden of the lodge from Mr. Mix, the surrogate of the county, that Morgan was writing the secrets of Masonry, and that Col. Miller was about to publish them, and that David E. Evans had been applied to for money to enable them to accomplish their object When this intelligence was presented to the lodge, it created in the breasts of many apparent unpleasant sensations. Should I attempt a description of all the boisterous feelings and blustering on this occasion, I should do but feeble justice in the representation. They knew that unless suppressed, their secrets were to be published and the lodge would be brought into disrepute and Masons would loose their idol. If you can imagine what would be the feelings and the conduct of the pilgrims who resort yearly to Mecca to worship, should they be met on the way and deprived of their gods, you can better behold the conduct of the members of this lodge than I can otherwise describe it. They boasted of their power, saying the officers of justice were under their control. They expressed their means of communicating information. They talked of their advantages over that portion of community which was not intrusted with their secrets. Many inducements were also presented to encourage the unprincipled to perpetrate deeds of wrong and of death. Some committees were chosen to consult with other lodges and concert plans for the suppression of the work; and a single man informed me at the rising of this lodge that a high military officer had offered him one thousand dollars to cut Morgan's throat. That Masons would defend him, and that he could flee into another country, and he would never want. He promptly refused to perpetrate the deed, for though it might be hid from man he believed it would be set to his account, for which he must answer at the judgment seat of Christ, and he shuddered at the thought and abruptly left his company. Suits were immediately commenced against Morgan and Miller, and on the 19th of August, 1826, Morgan was arrested and lodged in jail. At which time the Royal Arch degree was obtained, and it was carried up into our lodge-room and those above the Master and who were Royal Arch Masons were permitted to examine it. This degree was dispatched by Charles C. Church to Canandaigua, and from thence to New York, to the Grand Chapter which was then in session. This fact I knew from information at the time. Morgan, while in jail was apprised of his danger. I went to the jail and assured him he was in danger; but he could not believe it, for he said he believed the laws of his country had greater control over Masons than Masonic oaths. He, like myself, and thousands of others, have indulged this opinion until by sad experience we have found it to the contrary.

Reform News.

Jottings From the New York Field.

Dear K.—Having had a call from Daniel Mabee, Esq., to visit Spencer, Tioga county, I at last found myself entering that place in a late train, arriving after the friends had given me up, but still in time for a lecture. Finding no one in waiting, I entered the hotel bus and was driven quite a distance into the village. Upon inquiry I learned that an appointment was out and that somebody was expected to deliver a lecture at Dodge's Hall, some half a mile away. I got the direction as well as I could, and started in haste. Coming to a street crossing, and desiring a clearer clue, I asked the way of one standing by with a musical instrument under his arm. He answered me readily by directing me down a street running at right angles with the one I was then on. I had gone this way but a few steps when I became suspicious and seeing a man carrying in wood, I again made inquiry and was directed back to the way I had just left. Here I looked in vain for my musical friend, who had executed a rapid staccato movement, which placed him out of the reach of the discord he might have been assailed with, had I reached him in time.

A few moments of rapid walking brought me to the place of meeting which I found to be a good-sized, but unfinished hall, in the rear of a large house, likewise unfinished, belonging to a good Baptist brother by the name of Dodge. If I am rightly informed, this hall was begun for a billiard hall, and for other kindred amusements; but the proprietor becoming a Christian, the hall is now consecrated to holier uses. Here I found a few in waiting and gave them a lecture which was listened to with close attention by all. The craft was represented, but no disturbance was made. The next evening a larger audience was out, with more of the lodge men in attendance. Again I had the close attention of the people and a profound impression was made on many minds. No noteworthy disturbance was made in the hall, but there was much stormy discussion outside. A Methodist brother, who had on him the vows of the lodge, was declaiming loudly against the lecturer, and declaring all I had said to be false, to the great delight of some and to the disgust of others. Among the latter was one who finally said to the noisy declaimer, "I belong to the same church and to the same lodge that you do, and have taken the same number of degrees with yourself, and I say the lecturer told the truth, and you know it." This bold utterance silenced our party of the "first part," who after one look of blank astonishment at his brother craftsman, settled his hat upon his head and left the crowd without one word of reply, while the crew of applauding "jacks" followed suit. Now which of these Masons told the truth, the man who accused me of lying or the one who said I had spoken the truth? Can there be any reasonable doubt as to the answer? The one who accused me of falsehood was the better Mason and the worse man. The other was the better man, but the worse Mason. May God help him to cast off his mystic shackles and to become a truly free mason.

During the days of my stay, there was much excitement in town, and the very atmosphere was full of slander, vituperation and threats. The Methodist house of worship had been promised for our meetings, and it had been so published in the handbills; but the second thought had closed the door against us. The pastor of this church is a craftsman and glories in his shame. The pastor of the Congregational church also is a cringing worshiper at the altar of Masonry. He, as well as his Methodist confrere, gave me a wide berth, and the former, according to his own confession, ordered his members to stay away, saying that he "was not in the habit of running after tramps," or words to that effect.

My third lecture was largely attended, with no disturbance, save the falling of a stove-pipe, which might not have been accidental; and that caused by a couple of youngsters, who all at once commenced a fearfully earnest game of "fisticuffs." At the close I gave opportunity for reply, but none was forthcoming; so giving out an appointment for a meeting the next day to organize a town association, I closed my public work for this place, having sown seed which is producing fruit still.

The next day a spirited organization was formed, which immediately entered upon reform work by raising a fund for tracts for gratuitous distribution, weekly meetings for prayer, etc.

The Baptist church, which at this time was without a pastor and which up to this time had been nominally opposed to Masonry, soon after obtained a pastor who was and is a Mason. This places all three of the churches under the control of the lodge. The new pastor accepted the call of the church though a minority of 25 or more were opposed to him. The managers in effecting this settlement knew there were some who could not conscientiously hear and support a Masonic minister, yet in spite of this they fastened such a pastor on the church; and, as I learned a few days since, were, without any proper Gospel steps, moving to expel these Anti-masons from a church which had for scores of years taught the principles for which wise men now suffer! And strange to say, these Antis are the aggressors! It is the "wolf and the lamb" over again.

A certain deacon of this church was warm in his expressions of sympathy with my work, and in his denunciations of Masonry. He became an active member of the town society, and in their meetings and elsewhere spoke of his opposition to the lodge and of his determination never to support a Masonic pastor. That deacon is now one of the warmest supporters of a pastor who loves the lodge and its Christless affiliations and one of the fiercest prosecutors of his Anti-masonic brethren and denouncing me as a breaker-up of churches, and wishing I had never visited Spencer. Now what has caused that deacon thus to go back on the record of nearly half a century? Does he believe that Masonry has, or can, change for the better? Have the damning facts against Masonry, of which his memory is full, and which his tongue has spoken into mine and other's ears ceased to be facts? And has that, which for more than forty years has been to him, without a shadow of doubt, a great evil, a Christless abomination, all at once become a great good, and opposition to it a great sin? Whenever good Deacon W—— shall answer these questions with an honest affirmative, may I be there to see and hear. Alas, deacon! do you think He whom you serve is thus changeable?

While I was in Spencer, I received much kindness from Daniel Newman, Esq., and his wife, Daniel Mabee, his son-in-law and daughter, whose name I cannot recall, the Dodge brothers and their families, with others whom I cannot name, but for whom I pray that they may have grace to stand by the truth until victory shall come; "and having done all, to stand."

J. L. Barlow.

Uniondale, Pa., July 24th, 1875.

Dear Cynosure:—Resuming my account of work in Bradford county on Friday and Saturday evenings, July 9th and 10th, I lectured at Stevensville to good audiences; had quiet and attentive hearers, and am glad to say that there are a good number of men and women here well-wishers to our cause. The secret orders have some devotees, and the grange has entrapped some for a season, but the better sentiment of the people is decidedly in our favor. As a Presbyterian, I would be glad to see the Presbyterian church here take open Christian ground against the false worship of the secret orders. I was entertained here by our earnest coworker Allen White, and by another friend of our cause, Mr. Holmes Stevens. Preached on Sabbath afternoon for my Presbyterian brother, Rev. Thos. Thomas, and at this service, and the prayer meeting in the evening, aimed to apply great moral principles of duty to our work, and to the cause of temperance.

On Monday and Tuesday evenings, July 12th and 13th, lectured in the new Presbyterian church at Wysox. This was the first time the cause had ever been presented here, and as I had formerly preached for two years to this people, I was thankful to bring important truth before them respecting lodge corruption and despotism. The truth found a response in many minds present, though some noise was made the first evening by those under lodge influence. A good impression was made here, and the community will be better prepared to consider this subject on some future occasion.

Wednesday morning, July 14th, drove to the home of our excellent brother, E. C. Spencer, and enjoyed his hospitality and Christian welcome till time to leave for my evening appointment on the State Road, some four to five miles distant. Bro. Spencer's heart and conscience are enlisted in this noble reform, and he stands up boldly for God's cause against opposition in the church (M. E.) to which he belongs, and in all his relations to society. We need more men as consistent and generous as he to carry our work onward to success, and the Lord will raise them up; for such men are a blessing in any community. My lecture here was in the Baptist house, the attendance was good for this busy season. Some grangers got excited and "biled over," but the most of the audience enjoyed the lecture, and the "sputter" of the opposition. There are some good friends of our cause here; Deacon Sam'l Chamberlain, and Deacon David Sherman, Baptists, and John Lennox, Wesleyan.

Thursday morning, 15th, I started for Rome, and reached our good brother S. Elliott's at 10½ A. M. This brother and his wife, members of the M. E. church at Rome, have been constrained to protest against its connivance and complicity with secretism, as brother Spencer has at Myersburgh, and they have to withhold their support from the churches they have helped to build and been connected with for years because the Masonic Baal dominates in them so often to the injury of a pure Christianity. A ticket for county officers was nominated, so that the friends of our cause in Bradford Co. are fully equipped for the contest with good and true men for candidates on the National, State and County ticket, and the opponents of secret conclaves are an earnest, determined band of Christian men and women.

We are greatly interested in the cause of temperance, as well as in opposition to secrecy, and hence we are glad to be able to support the candidates of the prohibitory party, as we do by the following resolution:

Resolved, That we recommend Hon. R. Audley Browne, and Elijah F. Pennybacker to all our friends and fellow citizens as worthy of their suffrages for the offices of Governor and State Treasurer. If we can have such upright Christian men in places of trust, our land will enjoy prosperity, for righteousness will prevail, and God's blessing be our portion.

Past Master Ronayne of Chicago in Warren, Ill.

The lovers of light and truth in Warren, Jo Daviess Co., Ill., hearing from Mr. Ronayne, Past Master of Keystone Lodge, Chicago, that he was on his way to Iowa, and if desirable would lay over in this town, immediately set to work and secured the Library Hall, and issued hand bills for a lecture, having it also published in the various churches.

On Monday evening, therefore, July 26th, a large, respectable and apparently appreciative audience assembled and Mr. Ronayne lectured for two and a half hours to the delight and satisfaction of the great majority of those present, but to the dismay and chagrin of the members of the craft, who came to hear their pet institution receive such a scorching as it seldom or ever received before in this "devil's headquarters" of secretism and infidelity. He enumerated the various rites established from time to time in Freemasonry, gave their origin and history, showed the false claims of the institution to antiquity. Conclusively proved its benevolence a sham, and clearly demonstrated its anti-Christian and anti-Republican character and tendencies, and, to cap the climax, he publicly initiated a candidate in due form into the mysteries and privileges of the Entered Apprentice degree, with hoodwink, cable-tow, slipper, drawers and all the paraphernalia of the supreme farce known by the name of Freemasonry.

On the following evening he delivered another lecture to a still larger audience, on the nature of the Masonic obligations, and the duty of Masons both to their God and to their country in violating them so far as secrecy is concerned and demonstrated from the Bible—the great light of Masonry—that no man, whether lay or clerical, can be a Christian and a Freemason. On this occasion also he publicly raised a candidate to the "sublime" degree of Master Mason, and appealed in strong emphatic language, carrying home conviction to every mind, to enlist themselves henceforth as Anti-masons, and neither support a minister nor vote for a politician who may be a Freemason.

These lectures cannot fail to do much good in this town, and at this writing depend upon it there is much shaking among the dry bones of the Masonic fraternity in and around Warren. The audiences on both occasions were more than ordinarily respectful and nothing occurred to mar the pleasure of all present with the single exception that some mean, low Mason or Mason's jack sneaked into the compartment used as an ante-room and stole away the candidate's clothes leaving only his coat and shirt. But this is Masonry; what else can be expected. Mr. R. leaves here for Iowa accompanied by the best wishes and blessings of every good man and woman in this place, and we hope it shall not be very long before he again pays us another visit.

North-western Iowa Awake.

Little Sioux Mission,
Woodbury Co., Iowa, July 19, 1875.

Dear Cynosure:—Your last number has just been received, and it gives the friends courage to hear and know that the good work is steadily moving forward in our State. All glory and praise to Almighty God, for the success that attended the late convention at Clear Lake. It cheered our hearts and gave us fresh courage when we learned that the friends of Cerro Gordo county were still active and determined. Truly we would have been glad to have been represented in convention, but we do hope and pray that the day is not far distant when every county in this State will be represented in convention to unite their efforts in tearing down the false "isms" and exterminating all of these cunningly devised fables.

But we would say for the benefit and encouragement of these engaged in this glorious warfare, that we have a few faithful ones in this part of north-western Iowa who are determined to "know nothing but Jesus Christ and him crucified." Secretism is on the wane, the grange is dissolving like snow in a summer sun. Quite a large majority of those that were captured by its net are now thoroughly disgusted with it. It may be interesting to many of your readers who live in Cerro Gordo Co., and more especially to those of Clear Lake to know that Rev. James Williams, who renounced Freemasonry at Clear Lake three years ago is still faithful and true. He is the Presiding Elder of the Dakota district of the North-western Conference, M. E. church. Enclosed please find late accounts from him. Hoping that our Dakota Missouri Conference may be represented in our next State convention at Western Iowa, I bid you adieu for this time.

Yours in Gospel bonds,

A. N. King.

[The following clip from a local paper is enclosed.—Ed.]

"Elder Williams, of the M. E. church, preached a sermon at a school-house south of this place on the Fourth of July, in which he went for secret societies in general, and Masons in particular. The lodges here, when they heard he had turned loose against them, thought they were certainly doomed to be eradicated from the face of the earth, and did not know but what it would be best to surrender their charters at once and be members of secret societies no more. But, on mature deliberation, they thought better of it, and concluded that, notwithstanding they were thus denounced, they would be able to live through it, particularly when they recollected that four-fifths of his support came from these same terrible secret orders that he so foolishly proceeds against, aided by a few others of the same narrow-minded views as himself.

A Fierce Skirmish.

SPRINGERTON, Ill., July, 1875.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—There are a few names even here in South-eastern Illinois which have not, nor ever will bow the knee to Masonry, either in grange or lodge form.

I accepted an invitation to lecture on the grange at Turney's Prairie church, 10th inst., 3 o'clock P. M., a fair audience was out for such unusual rainy weather. A granger "traveling in search of light" took position in front of me and utterly denied my first statement that candidates for grangery are blindfolded in an anteroom preparatory to further initiation, and proposed to leave it to the vote of those present (grangers in majority), as to whether his or my word should be credited. I was not there among strangers to be so easily gotten away with. So I explained that that gentleman was bound to his clan by a solemn obligation to conceal, cover, hide, if you please, the internal workings of the order, and so he was only on duty, on guard, fulfilling his mission, his obligation by thus denying every revelation of their order if these revelations are true. The fact of their denials prove that we are right. I moved on them with all the zeal that my Heavenly Father's tactics would allow, and at one time some four or five were interrupting at once, They were "called to order" by some friends of truth. I called their attention to the fact that they could not serve two masters. "Call no man Rabbi" (master). "Neither be ye called masters for one is your master even Christ." I here gave them choice to denounce their "Master of the grange" or Christ, their Divine Master. So far as I could see they chose the grange master; joined like Ephraim to their idols. Here they are, poor rebels, rejecting Christ, "without God and without hope in the world." These plain and beautiful words of Christ were urged upon them and they called on to decide which master they would heed. They were dumb. But at the close on being called on by me to defend their band one arose and spoke of the merchants' private mark on goods. Then another said all we wanted was for them to buy all their goods of us. The balance all responded by heavy stamps on the floor, until I was reminded of a certain people that cried vehemently for the space of two hours. All that they said so far as we are informed was "Great is Diana of the Ephesians."

I was to have lectured at night on Masonry, but was hindered by continued rain falls. An egg dispensation was threatened, whereupon I informed them that I went wherever duty called and had no fears. I announced that I would prove by good authority that the grange, Masonry and Mormonism are closely allied. If the Lord will I shall "try again." Your servant for Christ's sake, JAMES SPRINGER.

Correspondence.

Hear Bro. Post.

DEAR BRO. BLANCHARD:—While we do adhere to the divine precept, "Be careful for nothing," yet it does seem justifiable to be uneasy at the wonderful indifference manifested on the part of men of wealth in a multitude of instances, who profess to apprehend the enormity and danger of secret societies. How they lavish on themselves and how the cause suffers in consequence, and some of these are professedly lovers of Jesus. Indeed they will not even subscribe for the Cynosure, nor for any like paper, though in so doing they might turn the scale and bring success.

I remember at a certain election one ballot elected a suitable man to office. One more Cynosure subscribed for and put in circulation, may be like "the stone that smote the image to pieces till it became like chaff which the wind carried away." "Will a man rob God" who has bountifully lavished upon him wealth? "The liberal soul shall be made fat." "There is that withholdeth more than is meet but it tendeth to poverty;" but "He that hath a bountiful eye shall be blessed." These are Scripture sayings, not human devices. They cannot be disregarded without serious loss. Of course this is known and yet how many of us seem to forget it. It is time that men desiring reform should awake, for the infidelity of Romanism and Freemasonry and their twin sisters is endeavoring to throttle our young Republic, by casting out the germ which gave it birth, the blessed Bible from our public schools. What do secret societies care about God's word? Not a fig. It rebukes them too severely for them to love it.

What would we think of a man who should profess to be in perfect accord with President Grant in principle and government, but despise and reject his son and the officers chosen by him to execute his will? Common sense would denominate such evolvings sheer hypocrisy. The scribes and pharisees were superb in profession and taught many truths and were mighty men, but Jesus called them a generation of vipers. Is Freemasonry and its kindred any better which professes to acknowledge and honor God but rejects and despises his beloved Son? Is it not high time that men of large fortunes who intend to do well, bestir themselves and haste to save their sons from prodigality and ruin by largely helping to scatter truth broadcast throughout the land and building up the waste places?

Ho! ye rich men and women, dry up the tears of those who are praying and pleading for needed funds and bless your own souls, and please God and avoid his displeasure by laying down $30,000, a mere pittance of your vast wealth God has bestowed, at the apostles' feet, who are ready to press to the front and receive scars, and scorn, and be counted the "filth and offscouring of all things," and let you, if it is duty, enjoy your easy arm chair at home, and when your heart aches and brow burns, as do theirs often, recline upon your "sweet home" couch and take your rest. Perhaps God calls you to these comforts and to make money, and we are glad you are so blest. But if battles are to be fought soldiers cannot "entangle themselves with the affairs of this world." They are ready to bleed and die, but they must have weapons to fight with. Is it not therefore incumbent on you to arm and equip these men of war. Send in speedily before your riches are corrupted and your garments are moth-eaten and your gold and silver are cankered, and the "rust of them be a witness against you;" even now while you are in health and strength and perhaps casting about you what to do with your great possessions. The door is open wide; help a struggling cause. The battle is raging. The "seven" trumpets have sounded. Seven volleys have been hurled into the camp of the enemy and we have heard (recently at Pittsburgh) the rumbling of their chariot wheels, dragging heavily. Fear is taking hold of them. It is now victory or death. Help in the name of God to break down the bulwarks of the secret foe whose vigilance demands our sleepless energy. Tear down to build up. Be good "Carpenters" to erect and sustain a superstructure—a redoubt from which hardy soldiers may deploy, out of which shall issue a terrible enginery of death and flashing of light like the noon-day sun, to destroy the works of darkness and shed the light of life throughout the land.

If the able and noble men and women who in heart wish for the downfall of the abomination which maketh desolate, will boldly run to the rescue, there need not a tear be shed over pleadings and prayers for the thirty thousand dollars needed to put the National Christian Association on a permanent basis to carry on a successful aggressive and defensive warfare against the great foe to our civil and religious institutions and the Holy Bible.

Who will be the first to respond? I labored with a rich and Anti-masonic man to contribute a few hundred dollars to the cause. He could not. Only a hundred then. No, he could not. At last he was entreated to send a dozen or two Cynosures, weekly, to ministers. No, he could not. The next time I heard from him he had lost thousands of dollars and with that lost the blessing that might have come to him and his family and others, from just $100, forever. But enough has been said. Yours truly,

WOODRUFF POST.

Just Escaped.

WAKEMAN, Ohio, July 24, 1875.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

On turning over the leaves of the "Memoirs of David Marks" to-day, my eye fell on the following on page 183. Before I quote it, however, let me say that the Rev. David Marks mentioned, whom many of your readers will remember, died in Oberlin in December, 1845 or 6. His name is a tower of strength among Free-will Baptists, and in Oberlin he was greatly beloved. President Charles G. Finney preached his funeral sermon and his remains now lie in Westwood cemetery in that village.

Elder Marks writes:

"MY SECOND JOURNEY TO LONDON DISTRICT, UPPER CANADA."

"Monday, May 12, 1828. I left Canandaigua for Upper Canada and in four days preached in Greece and Parma, thrice in Clarkson and once in Royalton. Sabbath, May 18, I attended two meetings six miles east of the village of Lewiston and was affectionately received by brother T——, who related the following particulars of his conversion. He said that being a Royal Arch Mason, he became acquainted with some facts connected with the abduction and murder of William Morgan, who was carried by his door and confined in the magazine at Niagara, till the installation of the Royal Arch chapter in this town. He was called to Canandaigua as a witness, and resolved, agreeably to his Masonic obligation to swear 'he knew nothing of the affair.' He said he felt conscientious and doubted not that he was doing right, till unexpectedly the trial was adjourned and he was dismissed. Then he hasted to be alone; the thought of his narrow escape rushed on his mind like a flood. He said that in a moment it appeared to him had it not been for the mercy of God in thus saving him, that his ruin would have been effected for time and eternity. Then he added, 'I fell on my knees for the first time and returned thanks to Almighty God and promised to renounce my allegiance to Freemasonry, to the world and to sin, and to seek the salvation of my soul.' He returned home, confessed his resolutions to his wife, and published his renunciation of Masonry. This awakened his companion, and they sought the Lord till he spoke peace to their souls. Several of their neighbors became concerned, a revival followed and was still progressing. This man and his wife appeared to be humble converts and much engaged in the service of the Lord." C. C.

Not Willing to Disfellowship.

FALL RIVER, Wis., July 21, 1875.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

I agree with Bro. Atwood in your issue of July 1st, that secretism is evil, only evil and that continually. I have seen it in courts, in politics, in religion and all the social relations of life, and especially in churches, and it may be the duty of some members to leave their church but I have not seen it to be mine yet. It is quite probable a few of my brethren would be pleased to have me leave, but I am not disposed to accommodate them.

I was told forty years ago that my church was pro-slavery, and that I ought to leave it. I said I knew it to my sorrow, but thought I ought to stay in it and try to make it better. I tell my Masonic preachers that if they have secrets too good for me my money is too good for them.

I was told by a brother that he did not carry religion into politics. I told him he was not as good a Christian as I thought he was. I carried mine into all the walks of life. The moral care of my country is one of the great duties of my life. I have not voted for a Mason or Catholic in the past forty-five years, knowingly, nor shall I in the future.

The "old handmaid" has just given a Christian manifestation to us by a basket picnic and dance, but she will gain no strength by it. The evils of secretism are becoming manifest and to be hated it needs only to be seen.

OUR MAIL.

Wm. M. Casteel, Princeton, Mo., writes:

"I never keep one of your papers on hand, but give them to my neighbors. There are a good many anxious readers here, but still the Beast has a strong hold in this county."

Wm. Whitaker, Foxboro, Mass., writes:

I have been a subscriber to the Cynosure from almost its start and I like it more and more every year, and as I look back and see what it has passed through, I am compelled to think that the hand of Providence is in the work against secret societies, especially through the Cynosure; for what power would have carried it through the fire and each time it was burned out it had a glorious resurrection. I was very much pleased with the doings of the Convention at Pittsburgh and hope I can have the privilege of voting that ticket for our next President."

Elihu Parks, Cooperston, Ill., writes:

"I am a Mason. A year ago I saw a copy of the Cynosure in the hands of a friend. I wish to investigate the matter."

A. M. Cannon, Birmingham, Mich., writes:

"This community is almost wholly under the influence of secret societies, and those who are not connected with them seem afraid to run counter to them. I am desired to send for a copy of the Cynosure by a young man who has been solicited to join them."

A. Baker, Tiskilwa, Ill., writes:

"Freemasonry has been struck a very heavy blow in this place. It is so unpopular I don't think we shall be troubled with lodge clergy much more. I send your paper in every direction. We will do our best to help you fight the battles of the Lord, and will do all we can financially. The cause is truly prospering."

Peter Crandell, Mendon, Mich., writes:

"If one of your best lecturers could come here and deliver a course of lectures it might awaken an interest in the cause, but men seem to think that nothing can be done against so great an enemy. I love the Cynosure and the principles it advocates."

Isaac Preston, Lockport, Ill., writes:

"We have in our village two news-depots at which the general varieties of newspapers or periodicals are sold. I have to-day arranged with both to sell or rather expose for sale the Cynosure. I furnish the paper and they pay for what they sell. I don't know as any will sell, but somebody will see them and it may raise some inquiry. I would suggest that you ask our friends in other villages and cities to do the same. The cost of the trial is but little, and if the papers sell they will pay for themselves, if not we can have them for gratuitous distribution, and thus the seed will be sown. One word on the subject of the influence of Masonry on our general system of independence. I feel a consciousness that next after the church the administration of justice suffers more from the influence of secret societies than any other one of our institutions or interests in the land."

Lesson for August 15th, 1875—The Bread of Life.

SCRIPTURE.—John vi. 47-58. Commit 47-58; Primary Verse, 50.

47 Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that believeth on me hath everlasting life.
48 I am that bread of life.
49 Your fathers did eat manna in the wilderness and are dead.
50 This is the bread which cometh down from heaven, that a man may eat thereof and not die.
51 I am the living bread which came down from heaven: If any man eat of this bread, he shall live forever: and the bread that I will give is my flesh, which I will give for the life of the world.
52 The Jews therefore strove among themselves, saying, How can this man give us his flesh to eat?
53 Then Jesus said unto them, Verily, verily, I say unto you, Except ye eat of the flesh of the Son of man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you.
54 Whoso eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, hath eternal life; and I will raise him up to the last day.
55 For my flesh is meat indeed, and my blood is drink indeed.
56 He that eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, dwelleth in me, and I in him.
57 As the living Father hath sent me, and I live by the Father; so he that eateth me, even he shall live by me.
58 This is that bread which came down from heaven: not as your fathers did eat manna and are dead: he that eateth of this bread shall live forever.

WAYSIDE FLOWERS.

1.—The great danger, against which men are warned over and over again, is that of setting their affection upon the things of this world—of laboring only for the meat that perisheth—of letting the demands of the body stifle the cry of the soul. 1 Ch. xxii. 19; Ps. lxii. 10; cxix. 36, 37; Matt. vi. 19; Luke xii. 15; Rom. viii. 5, 6; Phil. iii. 19; Col. iii. 2; 1 Tim. vi. 17, 18; Jas. iv. 14; 1 John ii. 15, 17.

2.—Men often feel that if they could have seen the miracles that Jesus performed they would then have believed on him. Did the Jews do so? Miracles may convince the reason, but they do not convince the heart. That must lay hold upon Christ before the soul acknowledges its Redeemer. John vi. 44; Matt. xvi. 16, 17; xi. 25, 26; Rom. x. 9, 10.

3.—"He that cometh to me shall never hunger, and he that believeth on me shall never thirst." The promise is that we shall be satisfied—satisfied—satisfied! No desire of the soul shall remain ungratified—no longing that shall not be completely met. Ps. xvi. 11; xvii. 15; xxxi. 19; Is. xxvi. 3; lxiv. 4; John xiv. 27; 2 Cor. 3: 18; Phil. iv. 7.

4.—The great boon of salvation is obtained merely by believing—and by nothing else. No works, no goodness of our own entitle us to everlasting life—nothing but faith. Whoever can say, "I believe," though he has also immediately to add, "God help my unbelief," has the key of heaven. Mark xvi. 16; John iii. 16-18, 46; v. 24; vi. 47; Acts xvi. 30, 31; Rom. iii. 20, 27, 28; xi. 6. 1 Cor. i. 29-31.

5. Doth Christ dwell in us? Then we shall show it by having his spirit. The "witness" that we are the sons of God shall be within. We shall show forth the indwelling of that divine life by our walk, by our conversation, by our countenances even. John xiv. 23; Rom. viii. 16; 2 Cor. xiii. 5; 1 John iii. 24; iv. 13-16; v. 10.—Nat'l. S. S. Teacher.

A long stride towards better teaching will be taken, when a teacher has come to admit that the chief cause of his troubles in the class, is to be found in his own inefficiency, not in the stupidity, or waywardness, or careless habits of his scholars. If he fails to interest his scholars, he is somehow at fault, and he should set himself to discover and correct his special lack. This point is emphasized in a series of valuable "Hints on Teaching," by Principal Morrison, of the Free Church Normal School, Glasgow, in The Sunday-school Chronicle. He says: "It may almost be assumed as an axiom in teaching, that inattention in the scholars is the fault of the teacher. Something in his manner, in his voice, in his want of sympathy, in his want of illustrative power, in his want of clear, graphic description—to these may be traced the inattention of a class; and the thoughtful teacher will not merely seek the aid of his superintendent to keep his class in order, he will far more endeavor to discover his own defects, and set himself vigorously to remedy them."

Masonic.

A Masonic Tribute to Edward Everett.

[The Grand Master of Tennessee who is an "unprejudiced" person in this case publishes the following.—ED. CYN.]

It is melancholy to contemplate how great men belittle themselves in the eyes of unprejudiced men by ignoring facts and history when speaking of their country or individuals, in order to pander to their own prejudices or opinions. Great men become exceedingly small when they purposely refuse to act and speak justly. It is a weakness that Masonry can overlook but in time it detracts from the honor and glory of the man that would otherwise pass down to history to beautify and adorn its pages. Edward Everett was a great man, but who can read the following from the Masonic Review and not think less of his greatness, nobility and manliness?

"Edward Everett was not a Mason. On the contrary, he was uncompromising in his hostility to the order. He was identified with the Anti-masonic party, while that party lasted, and did all he could in opposition to Freemasonry.

"The Old Chair well remembers how indignant it felt, after listening to Mr. Everett's magnificent lecture on Washington, that no notice was taken of Washington's connection with Masonry. And this effort to totally ignore the institution was not confined to that lecture.

"When the statue of Warren, erected on Bunker Hill, was dedicated, Mr. Everett delivered the oration, but took especial care not to mention the fact that Warren was a Freemason. He knew that Warren was Grand Master of Masons at the time of his death; he knew that Masons buried him; that they gave the ground on Bunker Hill on which the monument stands; that the Masons laid the foundation of the first monument, and dedicated that as well as the second; he knew that the Masons, in their official and organized character, have been present on Bunker Hill on every public occasion since their Grand Master died on it in defense of his country, and were then present when Mr. Everett delivered his oration—but the great orator ignored them and the order entirely.

"This was the spirit of Anti-masonry, as exemplified by one of the foremost men of his day. Mr. Everett was a great man, a great orator, a ripe scholar, and able statesman; but he drank at the foul pool of Anti-masonry, and his whole life was tinctured with the poison. The Old Chair regrets that such a man should be injured by such an ism, but the truth must be told."—Masonic Jewel.

Temperance.

A SIMPLE CURE FOR DRUNKENNESS.—At a festival at a reformatory institution recently, a gentleman said of the cure of the use of intoxicating drinks: "I overcame the appetite by a recipe given to me by old Dr. Hatfield, one of those good old physicians who do not have a percentage with a neighboring druggist. When I called on him he said, 'Now that you have the moral courage, I'll tell you the tonic which I have used with effect among my friends for twenty years.' I expected, of course, some dissagreeable medicine stuff; but no; he prescribed an orange every morning, a half hour before breakfast. 'Take that, and you will neither want liquor nor medicine.' I have done so regularly, and find that liquor has become repulsive. The taste of the orange is in the saliva of my tongue, and it would be as well to mix water and oil as rum with my taste."

No liquor is sold in Vineland, New Jersey, a town of ten thousand inhabitants, and the account stands thus: Almost nothing paid for relief of the poor; one indictment for a trifling case of battery during the year; one house burned in a year; yearly police expenses $75. Against this, note a New England town—vouched for by Zion's Herald, but name not given—with 9,500 inhabitants. This town has four liquor shops, and it kept busy a police judge, city marshall, assistant marshall, four night watchmen, and six policemen. It costs $3,000 a year for a fire department; support of poor $2,500; debt of the township, $120,000.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, AUG. 5, 1875.

PLATFORM AND NOMINATIONS FOR 1876.

FOR PRESIDENT

James B. Walker,
of Illinois.

FOR VICE-PRESIDENT

Donald Kirkpatrick,
of New York.

PLATFORM.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage, is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. The charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

5. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by article 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate.

6. That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

7. That to cultivate the intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

8. That land and other monopolies should be discountenanced.

9. That the Government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency, and a return to specie payment as soon as practicable.

10. That maintenance of the public credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. And finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of Electoral Colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-president of the United States.

A SPAVINED AND RING-BONED PEGASUS.

We incline to think the Masons keep Rob. Morris, L. L. D. for a double purpose: amusement, and to disarm the fears of sensible people by the impression that such a weak old joker cannot be very dangerous to church or state. Such however, should remember that devil-worship, the world over, is the merest balderdash, and yet the mind of the vast majority of the human race is cowed, crippled and corrupted by it. Considered as an intellectual performance, a Masonic display is not above the level of a respectable circus. And yet it is curious to note how the knowing ones with more than half a relish for the grim sport themselves, regarded the ceremonies as well enough for the vulgar, as a priest in the chapel of the College Seminaire in Quebec, said to me that the skull and bones in a glass case on the wall were "kept for effect on the masses," while he and I were at liberty to consider ourselves on philosophic heights above them. How different this from "One is your Master even Christ, and all we are brethren."

But to Dr. Rob. Morris. This gentleman is on exhibition as a poet. He tells us that "It is a common expectation, through Eastern lands, at the close of time, King Solomon will return and inspect Freemasonry, all over the world." And the poet tells us that "in a vision which his very marrow froze" he saw

"The Phantom of the Son Of King David, Solomon."

It was on the 24th of June, he was going home from the lodge, as he tells us, sober, by the light of moon and stars when he saw this phantom King of Masonry. He adds:—

First, I took it for the devil; but I spied the Mason's gavel, Held aloft as Master's hold it in the East;
And the phamtom let it fall, as we do the Setting Maul
With a clatter that the frogs their noises ceased,
Such a vim have mortals none
As Grand Master SOLOMON!

On his left hand and his right were the Wardens clothed in white,
As we see in every mystic gathering;
Each a proper Badge did wear, each displayed the silver square,
So I knew them,—"Widow's Son" and "Hiram King:"
Hiram King and Widow's Son
Walking with King SOLOMON!

There is much more to like effect all found in The Square, New York, July, 1875. But this will do. I once saw a gang of pick-pockets invade a street car in Chicago—when they kept a part of their force cutting up their antics and playing jokes on the passengers while the others were feeling for their pockets. So with the dark hordes of the lodge, amusing and robbing the masses.

The same paper contains the following clipped from an article entitled, "History of FREEMASONRY IN ENGLAND."

"Henry, Duke of Lancaster, taking advantage of King Richard's absence in Ireland, caused the Parliament to depose him, and the following year had him assassinated, that he might occupy the throne, which he at once did, taking the title of Henry the Fourth.

Recognizing the importance of the Society of Freemasons in contributing toward the grandeur of his realm, the king decided to encourage them, and appointed Thomas Fitz Allen, Earl of Surrey, Grand Master. The Masons, under the direction of Surrey, built the famous Guild Hall of London."

Obituary.

S. C. FEEMSTER.

The Christian Republic for July brings us sad news of the death of its editor and proprietor, Rev. S. C. Feemster, on July 16th at his home in Columbus, Miss. Bro. Freemster's labors as pastor and editor have been severe for his feeble constitution and for some time it was evident to his friends that consumption was doing its fatal work. He has been a fearless standard bearer of reform in a dark region and no trials or favors caused him to waver. At the annual convention of the National Christian Association his name has been several times presented for Vice-president of his State, and he was re-elected at Pittsburgh. The Christian Republic will still be published by Mr. Paul S. Feemster at Home, Tenn. A sketch of his life will be presented next week.

NOTES.

—Interesting editorial correspondence with letters from Wisconsin and Indiana are reluctantly laid over for another number, for lack of room in this.

—The discourse on secretism by Rev. R. T. Cross of Hamilton, N. Y., concluded in the present number, is one of the clearest arguments yet published, and so derived from plain facts of experience and common sense that it must prove convincing to every reader. Our friends will thank the publishers of the Cynosure for republishing it in convenient and permanent form, which they propose to do.

—Past Master Ronayne's lectures at Warren last week roused the ire of the lodge nearly to the point of outbreak. Bro. Williams writes that their glaring eyes and shaking fists spoke most plainly of the vengeance it was in their heart to inflict.

—Ezra S. Cook, the senior member of our publishing firm has undertaken a journey to California for the benefit of his health which confining labor has seriously impaired, and word has been returned of his arrival on the Pacific coast. It is hoped that the influences of climate and rest will have the same favorable effect with Bro. Cook as upon so many others in like condition.

—"Father" Preston of Lockport, Ill., one of the oldest and most earnest workers in this reform is carrying out a plan for the circulating of our paper which promises a considerable degree of success, and worth trying in every town where a news stand is kept. This plan is spoken of in "Our Mail." Let thousands try it.

—Several important meetings will be held during the next fortnight. The Ohio State meeting next week has important business connected with the State work to perfect. Bro. Stoddard and Dr. Wishart are using every means to make the meeting a success. The convention at Mercer, Pa., is also of considerable moment. Dr. Milligan and Prof. Blanchard make addresses and numerous brethren in different denominations in Pittsburgh and and through the western part of the State are interested. The political situation in Pennsylvania may furnish an important topic.

—Last Thursday evening was an occasion which will long be remembered by the friends of Hon. J. B. Walker. It being his 70th birthday and having lately retired from the active duties of the pulpit, the ladies of Wheaton arranged a reception at the College, to which the citizens were generally invited. A generous collation was spread in the large dining hall to which full justice was done. Then followed the presentation of a beautiful cylinder desk, Prof. Webster making the gift in behalf of the ladies. Passing to the chapel the audience was entertained by Dr. Walker with the story of his eventful and industrious life. Among the numerous friends present we noticed Dr. J. E. Roy and Hon. Z. Eastman of this city, also Mr. Cushing, a member of one of the oldest firms of the city, and one of the old line abolitionists. Rev. Mr. Brewster and lady from Geneva, Ill., were also present. The narrative of events in connection with Dr. Walker's history was of great interest to all, especially those who now in the decline of life once formed part of them.

—Last Thursday Bro. Hankins of Mason City, Iowa, received the following written on a postal card and mailed in the Mason City office:

Mr. Hankins,

SIR:—If you attempt to lecture again in this place you will either leave the State of Iowa or will walk Lime Creek on your head. Yours respect, COMMITTEE."

Bro Hankins is not the man to run from his work for a threat, and this will not greatly influence him in any way. But in the light of recent occurrences at Mason City the lodge there seems a gang of desperadoes who may not scruple to carry the struggle to violent ends.

—Gen. O. O. Howard, now stationed in Oregon, has been visiting Alaska and sends to the commissioner of Indian affairs his opinion that two missionaries with their families among the Indians of that province would be of the greatest influence in maintaining a peaceful spirit among them, and urges him, if there is no appropriation to be used to "ask the Presbyterians, Congregationalists, Methodists, Baptists, Episcopalians, Catholics, or other working Christians, to send us teachers for these tribes." With the late experiences in San Salvador and the history of the Roman Catholic missions in New Mexico before him we cannot understand why Gen. Howard should recommend Romish teachers, unless he has been liberalized into fellowship with the "man of sin."

THE GALAXY for August is overloaded with novels and the moral tone of some other articles adds nothing to the reputation of the magazine. The sketch of London society is valuable. Scribner and Co., New York.

THE NATIONAL SUNDAY-SCHOOL TEACHER helps on the lessons for the month with contributions on Old Testament Predictions of Christ, The Water of Life and The Rescued Sabbath. The notes and various lesson helps are good, as usual.—Adams, Blackmer and Lyon Pub. Co., Chicago.

THE SANITARIAN.—This sterling health journal has valuable discussions of School Hygiene, Nutrition of Children, Water Poisoning, Army Hygiene, Homes for the Laboring Classes, etc. The Editor's Table has a valuable review of health statistics of the country. Pub. office 234 Broadway, N. Y.

J. W. SLAUGHENHAUPT, Tarrytown, Md., is the author and publisher of two fine sacred quartettes, "Sweet Home of Rest" and "Day-star of Hope," which may be had for ten cents each, by addressing him.

THE CHRISTIAN REPUBLIC, see obituary of editor, is removed to Home, Greene county, Tenn. This excellent reform monthly is furnished for 75 cts. per annum, with reduction to clubs.

On the Road.

BY C. A. BLANCHARD, COR. SEC.

Leaving Delta a few hours ride brings us to Milbury where fast friends of our cause are to be found in brother Miller and his wife. They have taken the Cynosure, labored and prayed for years, and their labor has not been in vain in the Lord. The Methodist Episcopal church was secured for a lecture with the unanimous consent of the trustees and one lecture delivered there on Friday, the 24th, to a fair audience.

A canvass of the village yielded six subscribers to the Cynosure and one Mason who said he hadn't been in a church for six years except to a funeral and that he didn't intend to go again. Being asked if he thought Masonry would save him, he answered: "Yes, it's all out of the Bible." I then asked him if the story of the third degree was taken from the Bible, he said "Yes." "Where is it found?" "Well now, stranger, when you talk about the Bible you've got me, for I don't know much about it, but they told me so and I believe it."

Leaving the hospitable shelter of brother and sister Miller's home on Saturday morning, at 12:30 P. M. we reached Painesville. Here Franklin Paine is the main spoke in the wheel. He was two years old when the French Freemasons cut off Louis Sixteenth's head, twenty-one years old at the beginning of the war of 1812, eight years old when Washington died, and at the present time has counted eighty-five years. In 1854 or 5 he was elected recorder of this county, three years after he was a candidate for re-election. Four Masons, one of them, Mr. Schofield, now post-master here, came and asked him if he didn't want to come back to the lodge (he had seceded). He said, "No." "Then," said they, "You can't be elected." He was informed that they "worked Masonically" on the county for several days, but he was elected. In 1860, Mr. Paine wrote Gerrit Smith about founding a paper, and lectured in a hall here himself against the lodge.

Yesterday Prof. Ellis of Oberlin preached in the Congregational church here from the text: "Sin, that it might appear sin." It was an able and pre-eminently Gospel sermon that could do nothing but good. The analysis was as follows:

1st. Sin does not appear sin because men judge from outward act and not from intent of the heart as God does.

2nd. Because we think more of what we do and less of what we omit; whereas oftentimes "our not-doings are our darkest deeds."

3rd. Because many sin. It is hard to believe that multitudes are destined to punishment for sin. It is easy to do wrong in a crowd.

4th. Because we judge of acts as affecting men and not related to God. If we injure no man we think we do well.

5th. Because we are accustomed to sin in ourselves and in others.

Lesson.—We must have sin appear sin in order to be free from its power and accepted with God.

We are to have a meeting to-night in the Hall in this place. May God bless his truth, let it have free course, run and be glorified.

FREE TRACTS.

A Tract Fund for the Free Distribution of Tracts

HAS BEEN SECURED AND SHOULD NEVER BE EXHAUSTED. A friend has pledged this fund a dollar for every other dollar received, so EVERY NEW SUBSCRIPTION TO THE TRACT FUND COUNTS DOUBLE, and thus $10.00 pays for 20,000 pages of tracts.

The distribution of these tracts has already saved hundreds of young men from the lodge, but there is a great lack of funds to supply the constantly increasing demand for Free Tracts.

During the year ending July 1st, 1875 a little less than 150.000 pages of Cynosure Tracts were gratuitously sent out, mostly in very small lots. The present demand is fully 100.000 pages per month, but funds are lacking to meet it.

Many of our most earnest workers in this cause of God are poor men, who would be glad to circulate thousands of pages of Antimasonic literature if they could have them free.

SHALL WE NOT HAVE AN INEXHAUSTIBLE TRACT FUND?

"THE ANTI-MASONS SCRAP BOOK."

Contains 24 Cynosure Tracts, bound together and is just the thing to select from. Price 20 cents. See advertisement page 15.

Enoch Honeywell Esq., pays for an unlimited number of his tract addressed "TO THE YOUNG MEN OF AMERICA." It is an excelent tract, bearing the printed endorsement of Executive Committee of the National Christian Association. He has furnished the public over 150.000 pages of these tracts during the past year.

Fight the Good Fight.

Ye captains of a heavenly host,
Ye princes of a heavenly hall,
Stars of the world in darkness lost,
And judges at its funeral—

Lights rising o'er a wintry night,
With tidings of eternal youth,
On error's long-bewildered sight
Emerging with the lamp of truth—

Captains—but not of spear and shield,
No rebel hosts with steel to tame,
No arms of eloquence to wield,
Naught but the lowly cross of shame.

The chain is riven and broke the rod,
The world's long stern captivity,
And we are free to serve our God,
Whose yoke alone is liberty.

To distant lands His heralds fleet
By God's mysterious presence led;
How beauteous are their passing feet,
Like morn upon the mountain spread!

To Father, Son, and Holy Ghost
All glory be as was of old,
Who calleth us, in darkness lost,
His saving glory to behold.

The Revival in Britain.

It is now more than a year since the coming of Moody and Sankey to this city. Glasgow has never before experienced such a year of spiritual prosperity. The mid-day evangelistic prayer-meeting, in Ewing Place Chapel, has been kept up during the year without any apparent abatement of interest. It was entirely fitting that the anniversary should be marked by more than ordinary gathering. The committee had arranged for an all-day meeting, which, in this country, means from twelve till four o'clock. "Prayer," "Praise," "What further efforts can be made for evangelizing the masses?" "Rewards," were the subjects for conference, an hour being devoted to each. Dr. Thompson, Mr. Arnot, and Mr. J. Robertson of Edinburgh, and Mr. Bonar of Glasgow, all well-known and earnest ministers, presided in succession. Each one occupied the first half hour in his address, while the remaining time was taken up with singing, praying and speaking; no one being permitted to occupy more than five minutes. The chapel, which holds more than a thousand, was crowded during the whole time. The entire mass of the people, and especially the speakers, seemed to be deeply in earnest. The meeting was one long to be remembered.

I have not fallen in with these evangelists from Chicago since coming to this country, but I have been in Montrose, Dundee, Edinburgh, Glasgow, Belfast and Manchester, after they had left those cities, and have gone to the daily prayer-meetings set agoing by those brethren, and in many ways have been a witness of their work. I do not wish to make a glowing, but a calm and considerate statement of this whole movement.

I was in Ireland during the revival in 1859. I have visited that country twice since that time, and I find in talking with wise and judicious men, that not a very great deal of good was accomplished. This movement is widely different from that. There is no swooning, no shouting, no crying out in meetings. No excitement at all, except a general anxiety in the community to get to these meetings, and a dead earnestness in hearing the word preached.

Mr. Moody excels in presenting Gospel truth, simply, fully, and earnestly. I believe his preaching is what we would call orthodox. He is eminently practical and intensely in earnest. No foreigner ever won his way more successfully and triumphantly to the hearts of the people of this country than he. I think I may safely say that no other man in the country can so touch and move the great Christian heart of this people. And no other man can draw together such immense multitudes to hear the Gospel preached. The tidal-wave of interest has been constantly rising so that he begins in each new place with greater multitudes than at the preceding, till at length no place is found large enough to accommodate the eager masses who rush to the meetings. Bingly Hall, in Birmingham, that holds fifteen thousand persons, could not nearly accommodate the multitudes who came.

I must briefly enumerate what I regard as the fruits of this revival:

(a.) Many thousands profess to have been converted under his preaching, or in the inquiry meetings. From four hundred to ten thousand, in almost every town where he has been, have given in their names as converts. He could well say, with gratitude, as he did a few days ago at Birmingham, that God had given him more souls in 1874 than during the previous seventeen years of his preaching.

(b.) Multitudes of Christians have experienced a time of reviving. I say literally multitudes. This manifests itself in more regular and conscientious discharge of duty, and more abundant work for Christ.

(c.) Ministers especially have experienced a most delightful reviving. I have seen evidences of this on every hand, and have heard repeated declarations that under his expounding of the Scriptures, Bible truth has come to them with all the power of a new revelation. Like those ministers in Ohio, who were engaged in the great temperance movement, they preach with ten-fold the power they did. Indeed, it has produced a most decided revolution in the method of preaching in this country. Heretofore it had been entirely too close and formal.

(d.) He has succeeded in calling out and developing, in a manner and to an extent unprecedented, the talents of the lay members of the church. Thousands of them, who before never thought of active exertions for the salvations of the perishing, are now actively engaged in holding Bible meetings and expounding to sinners the way of life.

(e.) Everywhere there is manifest improved organization in carrying on Christ's work. Mr. Moody is one of the best of generals. One of his latest feats was the districting of Manchester, and setting in motion a scheme by which every family in that great city would be visited by a Christian messenger. Sabbath-schools and Young Men's Christian Associations have been greatly helped by his counsel and method of organization.

(f.) Unity and harmony of Christians, and co-operation in Christian work. Ministers and people of different denominations have worked together with a heartiness that is very gratifying.

(g.) A most remarkable revival of music in the church. I find everywhere a most gratifying change in this respect. Mr. Sankey has given this department of the worship a new and mighty impulse. But I cannot refrain from expressing my surprise and grief that Scotland, especially, should have been so readily captured by the hymns, and, that they should thus supplant, to such an extent, the grand old songs of inspiration.

(h.) Greater sympathy for the lapsed masses,—greater efforts to lift them up. In this city of Glasgow, a great deal has been done. During the Summer a breakfast was given in a tent on the green, to the poor; as many as two thousand, sometimes, received breakfast and then had the Gospel preached to them. Since the cold weather came on, the breakfast is provided in the Drill Hall. It has about the same capacity that the tent had, holding about three thousand. That Hall is now filled four times each Sabbath, when earnest men hold up to them Jesus. The City Hall is also used for the same poor class on Sabbaths; and just now the Prince of Wales' Theatre is opened for evangelistic work, on Sabbath evening. I have spoken once in the tent, once in Drill Hall, and once in the City Hall, and I think I never addressed such an audience before. Hundreds of them are ragged and filthy. In Summer, especially, hundreds of them sleep on the green, and come in the morning. I heard a minister say that he found ninety-three one morning himself, and invited them into the tent to breakfast.

(i.) But not the least of the fruits of this movement, is a revival of the temperance cause—especially in this city. You can scarcely have an idea of the unpopularity of this cause. But it is fast coming to the front as the great social question of the age, pressing itself upon the notice of the Christian church. Every Saturday night an immense temperance prayer-meeting is held in Drill Hall—mostly of the poorer classes. On the 18th of January an all-day conference on this subject was held in the Ewing Place chapel, under the management of the Evangelistic Committee. Yesterday Mr. Arnot came out in such strong terms against the drink traffic, that it was almost impossible to suppress the enthusiasm of the people from breaking out into rapturous applause. He held that this was the great barrier that prevented progress in Christ's work among the masses—that drink was the great gulf fixed between them and us,—that if we had the wealth of the nation at our disposal, we could not feed or clothe the masses, for it would go directly into the public houses and pawn-shops. Mr. Robertson, who presided after Mr. Arnot, came out equally strong, and said that he agreed with Mr. Moody, that next to asking a man to say yes to Christ, he would try to get him to say no to strong drink.—Our Banner.

A Word to Fathers.

We have read a story of a little boy who when he wanted a new suit of clothes, begged his mother to ask his father if he might have it. The mother suggested that the boy might ask for himself. "I would," said the boy, "but I don't feel well enough acquainted with him." There is a sharp reproof to the father in the reply of his son. Many a father keeps his children so at a distance from him that they never feel confidentially acquainted with him; they feel that he is a sort of monarch in the family; they feel no familiarity with him. They fear and respect him and even love him some, for children cannot help loving everybody about them, but they seldom get near enough to him to feel intimate with him. They seldom go to him with their little wants and trials. They approach him through the mother; they tell her everything. They have a highway to her heart on which they go in and out with perfect freedom. In this keeping-off plan fathers are to blame; children should not be held off; let them come near. Let them be as intimate with father as with mother. Let their little hearts be freely opened. It is wicked to freeze up the love-fountains of little one's hearts. Fathers do them an injury by living with them as strangers. This drives many a child away from home for the sympathy which his heart craves, and often into improper society. It nurses discontent and mistrust, which many a child does not outgrow in his life-time.

Open your hearts and your arms, oh fathers; be free with your children; ask for their wants and their trials; play with them; be fathers with them truly, and they will not need a mediator between themselves and you.—Apostolic Times.

Sound Doctrine on Divorce.

One of the leading sins of the day, and one to which the churches of the land have given but little attention, is the sin of the modern divorce system. Slow as the church of God has been, and is, in taking her true position with regard to other prevailing evils, more slowly does she assume her place in opposition to this.

The regular system of divorce that obtains in most of the States is, practically, but a license to immorality. The iniquitous system is in plainest violation of the law of God. That law only permits the putting away, for one specific cause, and then forbids the guilty one thus put away to remarry. With this unequivocal prohibition before her, how can the church endorse this evil? How can she tolerate it, even under protest, in her membership?

Again, the system is in violation of the marriage formula used by the various churches in the land. How can a minister consistently declare that the persons to be united are to be one "as long as ye both do live," and become a witness to the pledge "to have and to hold . . . till us death do part," while knowing that such union may be broken in a very short time for incompatibility, or any like pretense? How can the church allow her minister to use the ritual, when so plainly at variance with legal custom?

To be consistent, the church must either, 1st, forbid her ministers to perform the marriage ceremony; or, 2d, change her ritual; or, 3d, (what she certainly should seek to do,) effect a change in the civil law that shall prevent divorce, except for crime.

If I mistake not, the F. M. church is the first that has taken official position against this evil. Now what church will, with us, forbid its members to contract, and its ministers to perform, such adulterous marriages?

The air is rank with the miasma of this gross iniquity. "The church cannot escape it unless she fights it. America is fast becoming as bad as Jerusalem in the days of Christ, when all a man had to do was to give his wife a writing stating that he had divorced, and, to set her adrift." Under the influence of modern socialism the masses are so inclined to affinity and free-love notions, that many will say, "It is not good for a man that he should marry," if he thereby is to be thus bound for "better or worse" for life.

We must take the position, however. No other basis for virtue can be found. Let us purge the church and land from this moral pestilence. We must begin at the sanctuary of the Lord, and work out from there to the courts of law and society at large.

Husbands and wives to the rescue! —Free Methodist.

Abernethy.

In Abernethy, we come to one of those rough, eccentric physicians of whose kindness innumerable good stories are told. Like Dr. Johnson, he had a warm heart under a rough exterior. Though he could be absolutely brutal to fine ladies and affected misses, he is said to have been an amiable man, beloved of his family and friends. But to tiresome patients and malades imaginaries, he was at times the personation of rudeness; "Sir, that's enough; go home and read my book." To a lady who complained of low spirits, he would say: "Don't come to me; go and buy a skipping rope." Sometimes, however, he met his match. Curran one day came to consult him, and was rather diffuse in describing his symptoms.

"Sir," said Abernethy, "you had better tell me your whole life." Upon which Curran sat down, and seriously began: "I was born in the year——, in the county of——, Ireland;" and Abernethy burst into a laugh and entered properly into his case. A lady, determined to be brief, and to humor the tyrant, one day entered his consulting room, and thrusting out an injured hand, merely said: "My thumb, Sir." "You, madame," he exclaimed in admiration, "are the only sensible woman I ever had for a patient."

A gentleman, equally determined, being roughly interrupted, locked the door, put the key in his pocket, and insisted on being heard. Abernethy smiled, and complimented the patient on his resolution. To a gentleman who gave him twenty pounds to re-attend his wife, he said: "Are you the fool who gave me twenty pounds the other day? Go home and tell your wife to dine earlier and eat less; and do you keep your money in your pocket, for no doctor's advice is worth twenty pounds." To a lady, he said severely: "Go home and tell your husband he will not have a wife this day six months."

Abernethy was no respecter of persons. Poor or rich, his patients had to submissively take their turns, or they might go elsewhere. An angry nobleman once broke into his room, and stated his rank and titles in full. To this Abernethy replied: "And I, sir, am John Abernethy, Surgeon-lecturer of St. Bartholomew's Hospital, etc.; and if you wish to consult me, I am now ready to hear what you have to say, in return, sir." The Duke of Wellington, angry at having to wait his turn, abruptly entered his room. Abernethy asked him how he had entered. "By the door, sir." "Then," said the irascible doctor, "I recommend you to make your exit the same way." He is also said to have refused to attend George IV. till his lecture at the hospital was over. The point on which Abernethy most insisted was the stomach, and through that important organ he declared all disease could be cured. The celebrated biscuits which he used to eat and recommended were not so called from him, but from the baker who first invented them. That there was kindness in Abernethy, none can deny, who remember the story of how he returned all his fees to a widow who had consulted him, and added fifty pounds, to enable her to give her sick child a daily ride? He had a horror of operations, and rejoiced when the evil could be averted without such rough and terrible remedies.—Chamber's Journal.

Children's Corner.

Children's Hymn.

From the sunny morning
To the starry night,
Every look and motion
Meets our Father's sight.

From our earliest breathing
To our latest year,
Every sound we utter,
Meets our Father's ear,

Through our earthly journey,
Wheresoe'er we go,
Every thought and feeling
Doth our Father know.

Let us then be careful
That our looks shall be,
Brave and kind and cheerful,
For our Lord to see.

Let us guard each accent
With a holy fear,
Fit our every saying
For our Lord to hear.

Let no thought within us,
Hidden or confessed,
Ever bring a sorrow,
To our dear Lord's breast.

Help us, O our Father!
Hear our earnest plea—
Teach thy little children,
How to live for thee!

Child-Life in India.

"Tell me something of the child-life in India?" asked a lady of a returned missionary.

"There is so little to tell," was the sad reply. "Children there do not play and laugh as the children here do. They do not seem to have games nor playthings. One can scarcely conceive of a little girl here who does not play with dolls; but there, poor native children do not have even a rag baby, nor substitute of any kind for a doll. Some girls who once received from the missionaries, as a holiday present, European dolls, were in ecstacies. Even women are pleased with such a present more than with any other thing that can be given them.

"When a boy is born, the father makes a great rejoicing and gives presents to his friends, in proportion to his station in life. The birth of a girl, according to their religion, is a curse upon the family, and is never alluded to. If one asks a father how many children he has, if there are three girls and two boys, he will tell you he has two children. Only the boys are counted. Girls are considered a curse, because by the law of their religion the father is obliged to find a husband for every daughter under penalties of severe punishment after death, from which females, having no souls, are exempt. For this reason children are betrothed when mere infants. The betrothal and marriage are each attended with numerous troublesome and expensive ceremonies, all of which must be conducted by a priest who receives a fee for every step he takes in the proceeding. The girl does not usually see her future husband until the marriage, and, of course, is not consulted in the matter. While she is a mere infant herself she takes care of a younger child, and is relieved from this only to do some greater drudgery. Swarms of naked little ones roll about in the open air, without games or glees, sometimes stupidly drawing figures in the sand and sometimes joining in a monotonous dance. There are no play-houses, not even broken bits of old dishes to suggest playing 'mother,' or 'visit,' or 'keep house;' games that fill so much space in the lives of children in a Christian land.

"The education of the girls is wholly domestic, unless we accept the 'nautch,' or dancing-girls, who are taught to ready sufficiently to learn the poetry which they are to sing. When this is learned—and the dancing—they become slaves to the rich, where they may well envy their sisters who are destined to domestic slavery and by whom they are held in scorn and reproach.

"At the latest the betrothed girl is married by the time she is fourteen, having been a slave to her brothers and father since her babyhood. No wonder children in India, particularly girls, do not play.

"The boys are sent to school as long as the means of the father will allow,—and such a school! If an American boy were traveling in that country he would be likely to hear the school before he would see it, and, seeing it, would scarcely imagine what it was.

"On a 'pile'—an elevation open on all sides, but covered overhead—sits the teacher, cross-legged. His boys are seated around him in the same posture. If they have not yet learned their letters, there is a basket of sand near, where the master draws a letter and the boys copy it until they have attained sufficient skill to entitle them to a slate. If they can read, they may be conning a lesson in their queer olla-leaf books, which consist of prepared leaves loosely strung on two strings. They learn to 'read, write and cipher,' —a little of each only compared with what an American boy learns before he is twelve years of age. In arithmetic they do not 'carry one for every ten,' as we do, but write down the whole amount, and proceed in a very clumsy, laborious way, unless they have learned the Arabic method from European teachers.

"It is when the school is engaged in a reading exercise, which is the greater part of the time, that it may be heard before it is seen. The teacher, in a high, sing-song tone, reads a portion from his book, and all the boys in the same key, repeat it after him. The book is usually one of native poetry, which is their chief study and the text of their religion. Most of the time in school is spent in memorizing this poetry, and the amount committed is astonishing. Children of different castes never attend the same school.

"The low caste boy leaves school to help in whatever work his father does. Sometimes he is in the shop, sometimes in the rice-field, and sometimes in the top of a palm-tree, where he cuts off the topmost buds and suspends a vessel to catch the sap from which is made their favorite drink.

"There is no choice of trades. The shoemaker's sons will be a shoemaker, the baker's son will be a baker. Only in the land where parents believe in Him who took little children in his arms and blessed them, is there any true child-life."—N. Y. Observer.

Plain Directions.

A little girl, daughter of the late Rev. J. G. Cochran, missionary to Persia, when in America for the first time, was living in Buffalo, N. Y. She was four years old. More for fun than for fear of her getting lost, her older sisters taught her to tell in English where she lived. She could speak very little English, but could talk fast enough in Syriac. She was in the habit of going with some of the family and sometimes alone, when she had a penny, to the grocer's shop around the corner. One day when the folks were away, she started to go to the grocer's; but turning the wrong corner she wandered on for some time, and finding she could not get home, sat down on a door-step and began to cry. Soon a police officer came along, and when he asked her where she lived, she repeated very promptly and distinctly what her sisters had taught her; "My name is Emma Gway Cocwan. My Faver is the Wevwend Joseph Gallap Cocwan, from Mount Seir, Owoomijah, Persia, Asia, Eastern Hemisphere; and I live at number sixty-seven Chippewa Stweet, Buffalo, Ewie county, New York, United States of Amellica. North Amellica, Western Hemisphere," The officer laughed to hear such a lingo from such a little one, and taking her home, said to her parents, that if every lost child knew as well where it lived as she did, it would make much less trouble for all the officers.—Congregationalist.

Religious Intelligence.

—The Norwegian Lutherans of the Northwest contemplate the founding of a theological seminary in this city. As evidence of the increasing numbers and power of Scandinavian population in the West, may be mentioned the fact that the Regents of the University of Wisconsin have established a Professorship of Scandinavian Languages and Literature and have appointed Professor R. B. Anderson to the chair. The Norwegian Danish Augustana Synod and Elling Eilsen Synod, both Lutheran, held a joint meeting in Newburgh, Minnesota, in June, with a view to union. It is thought that Chicago will become the great centre of the Lutheran church for the Northwestern States.

It was also mentioned that $71,750 had been raised for home missions, $300,000 for foreign misions, and about $80,000 for colleges.

Secretism, Unorganized and Organized.

[Concluded.]

3. My third reason is founded on the example of Christ and the experience of the church. Jesus Christ came into the world to make men good and happy, to oppose all forms of sin, to accomplish for mankind every good object professed by any or all secret organizations. To carry on his work after his death he established the church, a society which, like himself, does not do things in a corner, but speaks openly to the world. Now if permanent secret societies are necessary to accomplish good objects, why did he not only fail to provide for them, or for any thing that would naturally develope into them, but also speak words directly opposed to the principle on which they are based; words which have led most of his disciples to believe that they are at least inexpedient. The glorious light which he brought into the world was to shine upon all. The blessings of his kingdom are designed for all. There is no excluding, as there is in some secret orders of boasted benevolence, of from one-half to nine-tenths of the human race. The slave as well as the free, women as well as men, young men in nonage and old men in dotage, the cripple and the poor, may all enjoy the benefits of his Gospel.

And then, too, the church of Christ, which has had an experience now of near nineteen hundred years, has found secret societies unnecessary in carrying out the will of its Divine Founder. It would be the death knell of Christianity to turn it into a secret organization, or to rely on secret societies for its propagation. It has been tried once. Three hundred and thirty-five years ago Jesuitism was started. Its object was good, to propagate the Christian religion; its members were very devoted and self-denying—but, it adopted the principle of secretism, and of necessity it became corrupt, given to intrigues, suspected by governments. There is hardly a nation on the face of the earth that has not found it necessary in self-defense to pass laws against it, to suppress it and to exile its members. At one time the whole order throughout Christendom was suppressed.

It has control of the Roman church to-day, and has recently culminated in the Vatican decrees of infallibility. The very word Jesuitism has come to be a synonym of all that is deceptive and intriguing in human nature.

4. My next argument is an a priori one. If no secret society had ever been heard of in this community and a number of persons should propose to shut themselves up in a room several hours of one night every week and bind themselves with strong oaths never to reveal but always to conceal what was done there, the proposition would seem a monstrosity and would be taken as an insult by the better class of the community. Indeed the existence of such a society in any community is an insult to all the good people outside of the society, for it is the same as saying: "There are certain good objects which we cannot secure if you know what we are doing." If these societies are seeking bad objects then there is no more to be said. Of course they ought not to exist. But for the sake of the argument I assume, what of course I do not believe of all of them, that they have good and worthy objects in view. Now imagine that secret societies were an unheard of thing in this community and we were met as neighbors and friends to consider the matter for the first time. If we were all bad people, disposed to take undue advantage of each other, then of course a secret society would not be organized for any good purpose. If we were all good people, disposed to do the fair and right thing with everybody, then of course a secret society would be utterly useless and unnecessary, as of course it will be in the millenium and in heaven. But our community is neither all good nor all bad. Like every other community it is mixed; some are good and some are bad. A society composed mainly or entirely of bad men will not, of course, promote or intend to promote any good object. And of course it will be useless for good men and bad men to unite in about equal numbers, so far as the promotion of any good object is concerned.

The only remaining case then is for the good to unite against the bad and use secrecy as a protection. It is here and only here, if at all, that secret societies can justify their existence, and their existence in this case can be justified only when it can be shown that by means of them certain good and desirable objects can be secured which could not be secured without them, and then only as temporary expedients, not designed to last through all time and all conditions of society. Such, as I have intimated, may be the case in very despotic governments, in times of persecution and among slaves. But is it so elsewhere and at other times? What good and desirable object can be gained in such a community as this by means of a secret society which could not be gained just as well or better in some other way? If there is none, then secret societies ought not to exist here. My fifth argument, then, is that

5. In such a community as this and in a free government no good can be secured by a secret society which cannot be as well or better secured in some other way. We have our freedom, going and coming as we please; we have our civil rights; the law protects our property; our lives are not in great danger except in some parts of the country from secret orders; we are at liberty to meet when and where we please, to worship God as we please, with none to molest or make us afraid; we have colleges, schools, books, papers, lyceums and other facilities in abundance on every hand for acquiring knowledge and literary culture. Secret societies are not needed to secure any of these objects. These objects may sometimes be helped, but they are more frequently hindered by secret orders. They can be better secured and maintained without them. Are they needed for social culture? Not in the least. Most of us find abundant facilities for that in our meetings, our aid societies, social gatherings, parties, neighborly calls, etc. They may and often do, as those who know have testified, furnish facilities for a false sociality, a sociality that tends to boisterous revelry and dissipation. Dr. Crosby says he knows that this has often been true in college secret societies. A very high Mason, editor of Masonic paper, and a temperance man, told me that he had a hard and long struggle in banishing liquor from his lodge room. A Masonic paper recently told of a lodge in which a keg of beer was kept open for constant use. Are they needed to promote good morals? "By their fruits we shall know them." No intelligent person can affirm that their members as a rule, are more moral than others, or that these societies accomplished anywhere near as much in promoting good morals of the church of Christ. Surely not much can be expected in this direction of a society whose reason for requiring its members to be temperate is that they may not get drunk and reveal its secrets, and whose members are under no obligation, so far as their obligation to the society is concerned, to respect the chastity of any woman who is not a near relation of some member of the order.

The least objectionable of the secret societies are the temperance orders. Their object is good and they have done good. They oppose the use of ale, weak wines, beer, etc., because of the small per cent. of alcohol which they contain. So, while recognizing the good that they do, we oppose these orders because of the two, five or ten per cent. of secretism which they contain. The temperance cause is by no means dependent upon them, and it is the belief and testimony of some of the ablest and most reliable temperance men in the country that in the long run they are no help to the cause, but a hindrance to it. What they do can be done by open societies. One of the strongest temperance communities in the land, a community that can keep out saloons by the force of moral sentiment, never had a secret temperance society, does not want or need one. Can we not then do our whole duty to God and man without the aid of secret societies? If not, tell us what we can do better with them than without them.

6. Bad ends CAN be better secured by secret societies than without them. This is shown by what I have already said and by the passages quoted from the Bible. Since every law-breaker and evil-doer seeks the cover of secrecy therefore organized secrecy will be a still further help to them. I don't say that every secret society is used by bad men, but that organized secretism furnishes facilities for bad men to carry out their purposes. It helps them in doing wrong and screens them from punishment. "Get into a scrape," said a member of a prominent secret society in this place, "and if you belong to the lodge it will be a help to you." Bad men understand this and are generally members of some such order. A Christian man who belongs to a secret society in this place, said to me; "I am surprised at the characters they are taking into the lodge." In many places bad men rule the lodge. Christian members confess and lament this, and in consequence often stay away entirely. If a man is seeking an office for which he is not fit; if he has an important suit at law; if he wishes to take an unfair advantage of another, or an advantage that does not come according to the natural order of things; if he wishes to evade the law; if he wishes to secure undue favors in business and in the common affairs of life, a secret society is just the thing for him, and it is for some such reasons as these that multitudes join secret societies.

7. Secret societies foster a sly, underhanded way of doing things. This is not always the result, for some rise above the tendency, but it is necessarily the tendency. There is too much of this tendency already in human nature. It needs to be repressed rather than encouraged. Secret societies encourage it.

8. They produce a clannish spirit. This is one of the evils of denominationalism. Even in the church, where men are taught that all true Christians are brethren, where they are told to love and do good to all mankind, there is too often a clannish spirit. How much more then will this tendency manifest itself in a secret society, whose members are under obligations to help one another only, and to help one another by cutting across the natural relations of life! The tendency to clannishness is strong enough already in human nature without being encouraged any more, as it certainly is by secret societies.

9. They arouse suspicion. Those outside naturally suspect that there is something wrong; naturally, I say. It is human nature. Notice the effect which it has upon one of three children, playmates, when the other two go by themselves and have long talks which they keep a secret from the other. Even if the secret society and its members be perfectly innocent, yet their secretism subjects them to suspicion, according to a law of human nature that cannot be ignored. It may be said that it is none of the outsiders business, that he has no right to be suspicious. I reply that he cannot help it. God has so constituted human nature that it cannot help suspecting wrong under certain circumstances. If I should be seen going to a saloon, or to the bar of a hotel early every morning, and stay a few minutes, I should be suspected of going there for something to drink, though I might be going for an entirely different purpose and for a good purpose. I do not say that you who know my temperance principles, would say that I went there for drink, but others would. So I do not say that you, whose Christian character I know, join and continue a member of a secret society with a bad object in view, but others who do not know your Christian character and who do not perhaps believe in Christianity, will think so and say so. The Bible commands us to avoid not only evil but the appearance of evil. Secretism has the appearance of evil, not to you perhaps, but to those outside. Suppose you and I belong to a secret order the members of which are commonly supposed to stand by each other when they get into trouble, that fact being held out as an inducement to join the order. A man has a law-suit with me; you are on the jury, and the case goes against him. Now the secret order may have had nothing whatever to do with the decison, but he will certainly think that it did. I have no doubt that secret societies do very frequently and seriousiy interfere with the course of justice among men, but that is not my point now. My argument is that whether they do or not men cannot help suspecting them of it. They naturally and inevitably arouse suspicion, and that is an evil.

10. Secret societies, some of them more than others of course, interfere, as just intimated, with justice in our courts and in time of war. Their members are favored in one way and another, when by the natural and just course of things they would not be. To many persons this is an argument in their favor, and it is the great reason why many persons join them. But of course it is an argument against them to one who desires to see justice done. If I had time I might give many instances proving the statement in this argument. The best members of some of the secret societies admit, they have admitted to me, that there are many bad members in the orders. Now it is not in human nature not to use all the advantage which membership in such a society gives a man when he gets into a scrape, be he right or wrong. So we can show by a conclusive a priori argument that some, at least, of these orders must interfere with justice.

11. The titles and the ceremonies of most secret societies are contrary to the simplicity of our republican form of government and of the pure Gospel of Christ. In idolatrous religions, in the Roman church and in monarchical countries a great deal is made of titles and ceremonies. The ignorant masses are amused and held in subjection by shows and pompous displays. High priest, patriarch, chiefs, grand dukes, nobles, lords, princes, kings, emperors, are familiar terms to them. But our republican simplicity abjures all these things both in name and in reality. The very constitution of our government forbids all these titles. We call those placed over us by the simplest possible titles, e. g., president, one who presides; minister, one who serves. Now it is a remarkable fact that these secret orders use titles appropriate only in monarchical and aristocratic governments. By familiarizing our people with these titles and with the show and pomp and parade that go with them, these secret orders are slowly, almost unconsciously, but surely undermining the simplicity, the very foundation of our republican form of government and preparing the way for that which they all symbolize—a monarchy. And how repulsive to the simplicity of the Gospel of Christ, how contrary to the spirit of him who said, "Learn of me, for I am meek and lowly in heart," and who commands us to call no man master, is it for Christians, ministers even, to address each other and be addressed by such titles as Master, Grand Master, Grand Worthy Chief, High Priest, Grand High Priest, Captain of the Host, Excellent Grand Royal Arch Captain, Right Reverend Grand Chaplain, Right Excellent Grand King, Most Powerful Chief Prince, Thrice Illustrious Grand Master, Most Puissant Grand Commander, etc., etc., ad nauseam!

12. Another important objection to most of the secret orders is that they separate the sexes, and interfere with the family relation. Boys and girls are educated together, young men and young women ought to be, and the tendency is that way now. There can be no true social culture when men alone or women alone meet together. But most secret orders exclude women. If they were admitted some secret societies would have to make a radical change in their method of initiation, for it is a shame even to speak of some of the things done in secret by them. No man has any right to spend fifty-two nights every year, or even one night in fifty-two years, at a place and in a company where what is done must be forever kept a secret from her between whom and himself there should be no permanent secret. And no woman ought to be, no woman who has the right view of the marriage state is satisfied with such a state of things. For this reason if for no other, I never would join a society to which I could not take my wife, my mother, my sister, or the doings at which I must keep a secret from them.

13. They are a waste of time and money. Most of the time is consumed in going over forms and ceremonies of no consequence. They take time which ought to be spent at home or in getting to the lodge almost every week. This is a sad fact but it is true. Every Christian minister that I have talked with on the subject declares that this is the tendency and often the lamentable result of joining the lodge, to keep Christians from the prayer meeting, where according to their covenant vows they ought to be. There may be some exceptions, but the almost universal rule is that a man's zeal for the cause of Christ goes down just in the proportion in which his zeal for his order goes up. It is a waste of money. It is money thrown away. Only a small part of it, even in societies of boasted benevolence, ever comes back in the shape of relief. The Odd-fellows boast of their great benevolence, but what they pay out for all sorts of relief amounts to only about one-third of what they receive from their members. Figures in my possession, given by themselves, prove this. The very best that can be said of such in some more profitable place. Church members who never find time to attend prayer or church meetings find no difficulty societies is that they are very poor mutual insurance companies. The insurance company whose running expenses were sixty-six per cent. of its receipts would have to go begging for policy holders. The Christian has no right to use the Lord's money in this way.

14. Most secret societies require those who join them to do that which is a violation of God's word. They require them to take extra-judicial oaths, which is contrary to the command, "Swear not at all," and also to the command, "Thou shalt not forswear thyself." The Bible says, "If a soul swear, pronouncing with his lips to do evil or to do good, whatsoever it be that a man shall pronounce with an oath, and it be hid from him, when he knoweth of it then he shall be guilty of one of these. And it shall be when he shall be guilty in one of these things, that he shall confess that he hath sinned in that thing." Lev. v. 4, 5. According to God's word, then, a man has no right to swear beforehand that he will keep secret things the character of which he does not yet know. Yet multitudes of church members swear when they join the lodge, not only that they will never reveal, but that they will ever conceal things concerning which they as yet know nothing. How can they reconcile this with God's word?

15. My last argument is that some of these secret societies, especially Freemasonry, reject Christ. "They have taken my Lord away and I know not where they have laid him." They do not require faith in the Lord Jesus Christ and yet they send their members when they die to the Grand Lodge above. If they are right in this the Bible is false, for it tells us that there is no name under heaven but the name of Christ whereby men must be saved. It also tells us that God has "committed all judgment unto the Son." Why? "That all men should honor the Son even as they honor the Father. He that knoweth not the Son. knoweth not the Father which hath sent him." John v. 22, 23, Ministers, no doubt, often pray in the lodge in the name of Christ, when there is no one to offer special objection, but it is unmasonic and Masons have repeatedly declared it to be so. Not long since I examined fifteen or twenty prayers in a standard Masonic book and none of them had any reference to Christ, unless it was one in which one of his titles was used. I also found important quotations from the New Testament from which the name of Christ was deliberately omitted. Will church members who belong to the lodge explain how they reconcile this with the command, "Whatsoever ye do in word or deed do all in the name of the Lord Jesus, giving thanks to God and the Father by him." Either the lodge or the church is all wrong in the matter. Which is it? Those who belong to both ought to leave one or the other if they would be consistent. Many more good arguments might be presented, and much more might be said under those that have been presented, but want of time forbids. The arguments used in favor of secret societies are mainly three. I will answer them as briefly as I can.

1. Families have secrets, therefore societies may. But no family has permanent secrets unless there is something wrong, and no family that I know of is a secret society with its members under oath not to tell what is done in it. If there is such a family it ought to be closely watched by the police. The argument is utterly fallacious. Proper caution as to what we say to others is one thing; organized secretism is a vastly different thing.

2. Good men belong to secret societies, therefore they cannot be wrong. I admit the premise but I deny the conclusion. The argument proves too much. It proves that polygamy and slavery and a free use of liquors, and persecution and many other evils are right, for undoubtedly good men, Christian men, have upheld and practiced these things in their ignorance, before they had the light that we have. The argument not only proves too much but it has a double edge. If you can prove that secret societies are good because a few good men belong to them, I can prove that they are bad because many good men have openly renounced or quietly dropped them, believing them to be bad, while the majority of Christian men do not believe in the principles on which they are based. Excepting the milder orders of Good Templars and grangers, the number of Christian men who belong to secret societies is very small compared with the whole number, though of course it is vastly larger than it ought to be. With very few exceptions the active secret society man is not the active Christian, and vice versa. If you look into the matter you will often find that the good Christian men quoted as belonging to certain secret societies hardly ever go to lodge or have not been for years. I have found it so in several instances. They are often ashamed, especially if they are ministers, to have it known that they are members. Several large denominations of Christians make membership in a secret order a bar to church membership. Many church bodies have passed resolutions against them. The American Missionary Association, to whose funds this church contributes, advised the colored people of the South to keep out of these orders. The national movement against secretism is assuming large proportions, especially in the West. It sustains a weekly paper and has a number of State lecturers constantly in the field. Although it does not persuade many to leave the lodge it is keeping large numbers from joining. The reform is getting out of the stage of ridicule; the stage of persecution may come, but after that will certainly be the last stage, that of triumph, for it is a true reform. If you can cite the names of great men who have belonged to the lodge, I can cite the names of greater who have strongly condemned it. Washington was once a Mason but he let it alone the latter part of his life, and in his farewell message he warned the country against secret orders. Adams, Webster, Seward, Whittier, Philips, Sumner, Everett, Gerrit Smith, these men were all strong in their condemnation of secret societies. I do not know of any of the old anti-slavery leaders who did not also oppose secretism.

3. Secret societies do much good. I admit that they do some good. Good is always mixed with evil. That is Satan's policy. Most evils are made up, like children's medicines, with some sugar to make the thing go down well. There were decided incidental benefits connected with American slavery. There are great advantages in a despotic government. Every institution has some good and some bad in it. If the good predominates we will keep the institution but try to eliminate the bad from it. If the bad predominates then the institution must go down, unless it is radically changed. The good done by secret societies is not because of their secretism but in spite of it.

I have tried in this sermon to use nothing but argument. I shall count myself happy if I am met in reply by nothing but argument. It is all I ask. I have tried to make no statement which I could not prove if I had the time. If I have said anything unjust or untrue I will gladly accept and make correction. If I have said anything that is true in a wrong spirit, I am sorry, for I have tried to guard against it. If as your pastor or as your friend, as a minister or as a man, I have any influence with any one here to-night, I would use all that influence in urging you not to join any of the secret orders of the day. And I say this because I believe, as firmly and as conscientiously as I believe any part of God's word or any truth of the Christian religion that organized secretism is one of the great dangers to our republican form of government, which I love as I love my native land; and to the pure Gospel of Christ, to the kingdom of our blessed Lord, which I love above all other things.

PRESERVING GREEN FODDER.—A European plan for the preservation of green fodder, such as turnip-tops or other succulent vegetables. A pit from two to four feet deep is dug in some well-drained part of the field, and the tops of the roots are thrown into it. They must be gathered when entirely free from external moisture, and then be pressed down as tightly as possible. When the pit is full, a little straw is laid over the fodder, and the earth is heaped over the whole. It is said that fodder thus put away will keep in good condition for six to twelve months. The writer of the paragraph in question bears witness that he once saw a pit of the kind opened after having been closed all winter. In this instance the leaves were those of the sugar-beet, and they were, to all appearance, as fresh as when first gathered. The stock to which the fodder was given ate it eagerly. It is well to sprinkle salt upon the fodder while packing it, as this tends to preserve it and renders it more palatable when it is dealt out to the cows. It would seem well worth the trouble to adopt this simple method, if it has all the virtues claimed for it, for thus, with comparatively little trouble, a large amount of fodder can be preserved which usually goes to waste. The only question is as to the possibility of preserving fodder in this manner in our colder climate. It is evident that the exclusion of air is the principal condition of success. Frost will not often penetrate through four feet of dry well-packed earth, and most of us know that burying is an excellent preservative for many vegetable products. One thing, however, must be remembered, and that is that it is not every soil which will answer the purpose. Nearly every good soil will do; but the system must not be condemned if the very first attempt does not perfectly succeed.

AN IDEA FOR TEAMSTERS.—A great deal of labor and hard tugging may be saved if every wagon or truck is provided with 100 feet of stout rope and a single pulley. A snatch block is best arranged, with a strong hook, and the usual construction for slipping the tight of the rope under the strap to the sheave instead of waiting to reeve the line through one end. If a wagon gets stuck in heavy mud or in the snow, the driver has only to fasten his block to the tongue, reeve the rope through it, and attach one end to a tree or post, and let his team pull on the other. The work is, of course, just halved, or rather they bring twice as much power to bear in dragging the wagon clear. There are other applications of this simple device which readily suggest themselves. With a couple of skids for an inclined plane, heavy logs could be easily drawn on a sleigh by the unhitched team. Another case where it is likely to be useful is when loaded sleighs attempt to cross a wooden bridge. Although the horses draw the load very easily over the snow, they are often unable to start it over the general denuded wooden flooring of the bridge, and hence would be materially aided by the tackle hitched on as we have described.—Scientific American.

Grinding tools calls for the exercise of great judgment in the determination of the angle, and skill in handling so as to secure a true edge. Workmen make a mistake in grinding down to the edge. This should never be done unless it is nicked or otherwise rendered irregular, as the grindstone leaves a rough edge which must be cut away by the oilstone. By grinding well down to the edge, without reaching it, the iron is given the required shape, and a very little rubbing on the oilstone will produce a good, keen edge.

Home and Health Hints.

KEEPING MILK SOUND DURING THUNDER STORMS.—Experiments in Sweden have shown that the well-known effect of thunder storms in souring milk may, in a great degree, be avoided or counteracted by artificial heat in the dairy. The plan is to start a fire in the room where the milk is kept, whenever a thunder storm is seen approaching. This is done even in hot weather, the purpose being to drive out the excess of moisture. The explanation given is that during the approach of such storms the atmosphere becomes loaded with moisture, and the damp, moist, heavy air resting on the milk produces acidity and spoils it. Dry air, then, is important in the dairy, and whenever there are atmospheric changes which bring excessive moisture in the air of the dairy a fire should at once be started to counteract the bad influence it would have on the milk.

If this explanation be correct, and if artficial heat has the effect of preventing milk from being effected by thunder storms, the knowledge is important to butter dairymen. In the best dairies the heating is effected by means of steam pipes, which give a more uniform temperature to all parts of the room than could be had by the heat from a stove.

APPLE JELLY.—Apples make an excellent jelly. The process is as follows:—They are pared, quartered and the core completely removed and put into a pot without water, closely covered, and put into an oven or over a fire. When pretty well stewed the juice is to be squeezed out through a cloth, to which a little white of an egg is added and then the sugar. Skim it previous to boiling, then reduce it to a proper consistency and an excellent jelly will be the product.—Germantown Telegraph.

TO STOP BLEEDING.—It is said that bleeding from a wound on man or beast may be stopped by a mixture of wheat flower and common salt, in equal parts, bound on with a cloth. If the bleeding be profuse, use a large quantity—say from one to three pints. It may be left on for hours, or even days, if necessary.

PROTECTION AGAINST MOTHS.—Pfleider, a German inspector of passenger cars, states that a single stem of hemp, with the leaves and blossoms, mixed with the stuffing of a car seat will protect it from moths for years, and that hemp for the purpose should be gathered just when in blossom, dried rapidly in the shade, and kept in covered wooden vessels in a dry place.

The Scientific American cautions people against the too frequent use of camphor as a medicine. It says the nature of camphor is that of a nervous stimulant, similar to opium or alcohol, and when taken in large doses, causes iritation of the nervous system, and produces convulsions, often fatal in their effects.

GRAPE JELLY.—Take the ripest grapes, and spread them on clean straw; in a few days pick them from the stalks, and warm them in a stew-pan; then press them, and pass the juice through a seive; add a quarter of a pound of loaf sugar to a pound to a pound of juice, and boil half an hour; set to cool, and in twenty-four hours it will be a fine jelly, excellent for invalids.

If the subscription price of the CYNOSURE was $2.50 or $3.00 a year, the price of many religious papers containing no more reading matter, we might afford to pay the postage ourselves, but at $2.00 a year we cannot do this with our present Subscription list.

Therefore let all send the postage, 20 cents a year, 10 cents for half a year with their renewals.

The commission on one new subscription for a year will pay the postage on your own and the new subscriber's paper. We would rather have the postage paid by commissions than in any other way.

When postage is not paid we shall have to shorten the time of subscription sufficiently to pay it.

How to Send Money.

Post office orders, checks or drafts on Chicago or towns east of Chicago, and currency by express may be sent at our risk. If it is not possible to send by either of the four ways named, money in a registered letter may be sent at our risk, but it is not as safe.

The date at which subscriptions expire is with each subscriber's name on the address label. Send renewals before this date occurs. Notice if this date is changed to correspond; if not or if the paper fails to come, write without delay.

We discontinue during the first part of each month all subscriptions which expire during the preceding one except such as are ordered continued with a promise to forward the money soon. We do not like to lose a single subscriber and will not remove names simply because the cash is not received promptly, if we understand that the paper is wanted. Address all letters with subscriptions or orders for Books, Tracts and donations to the Tract Fund to EZRA A. COOK & Co., 13 Wabash Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

Topics of the Time.

Tweed, the great Tammany Ring thief, who stole from six to eight millions from the city of New York has made a brief expiation of his crime in prison, but that seems to be all. Again before the courts he seems to have recovered, become Tweed again, and every technicality of the law bears in his favor, until honest men grow sick at heart at the probable release of this great villain, free from the complications into which it was once hoped his enormous thefts had brought him beyond escape. The probable disposition of this case and the numberless like cases that have preceded it are warning enough to us of the evil condition of our statutes by which such crime is sheltered, and much more of the want of integrity in our courts. It is possible that the New York courts by a long period of corruption are yet suffering from it; but it is hardly so exceptional. The prostitution of the oath and the perversion of justice by the secret clans has eaten deep like a cancer and the evil is neither local nor easily reached by the common methods of popular reform.

Pres. Andrew White of Cornell University proved his fitness for the head of a college of the "modern" style by running from the dinner table to the bell tower and deranging the machinery in his furious efforts to celebrate the victory of his students in the Saratoga boat-race. This sort of "street" enthusiasm would have been excusable perhaps if the occasion had been a plowing match or even a generous rivalry of strength at a poor widow's woodpile; but since the gamblers of Saratoga are the only gainers by the college regatta and the young contestants themselves risked a dangerous over-exertion, it seems no occasion for rejoicing, much less on the part of one filling the responsible position of president of a college. These boat-races are forming a national habit of dangerous character, and it is not too soon to say they have gone far enough, and th a the energy of young men in college must be turned to better purposes. The late protest of a Western college president against the billiard tables of of Eastern institutions is awakening serious thought in college circles. The Interior thus plainly marks the danger: "If our sons are taught to play billiards at college, they are sent home to us with a fondness that can be satisfied only by resort to those low dens where billiards and a bar always go together. No doubt a billiard saloon could be conducted at a college which would not, per se, be objectionable if it were the beginning and end of the student's experience in that game, but this no one expects. On the contrary, it leads in the wrong direction, and young men are not often slow to follow. We do not believe in straight-laced prudery at college, or anywhere else, but the line between benificent amusements and dangerous ones, is not difficult to define."

The centennial of the great Irish "Liberator," Daniel O'Connell, was celebrated on Friday last. In Dublin, the scene of his greatest popularity, the occasion had been seized upon by the Romanists to glorify ultra-montanism, and the celebration opened with some solemn ceremony by Cardinal Cullen and was continued three days. The memory of the greatest of popular leaders has also been widely regarded in this country. Though a strict papist to the end of life, the character of O'Connell and the principles of popular freedom on which his great work of Irish emancipation was based, reads like a riddle when interpreted by votes and actions of his admiring countrymen in America. O'Connell believed in personal liberty unrestricted to person, color or nationalty. The Irish voters in America have uniformly arrayed themselves at the polls and in the mob against this great principle. O'Connell, returning money sent him by Southern slaveholders with the reply that traders in human slavery in one part of the world should have no share in procuring human liberty in another, performed one of the noblest acts in the history of reform. His countrymen here form the phalanx of that party on which Southern slavery arose to power, and to which the embittered Southern whites yet look in hope. If the historian is puzzled here, the politician does not fail to see the hand of power worked by the wires of Jesuitism. Irishmen must be emancipated from the rule of secretism and priesthood before they can in spirit and understanding do honor to the name of their great countryman.

Sacred Offices Prostituted.

BY NATHAN CALLENDER.

Our minister is a Mason and he is a good man. Old Dr. P. is one, and he, surely, is a very holy man. Then there are Elders C. P. and H., all high Masons and all very smart and good men. Our deacons are both Masons, etc., etc.

Well, sin is sin and error is error, but for men who have been formally and voluntarily set apart to a holy and sacred calling to prostitute that office to any wicked end or institution is so much the worse. The frequency with which these sacred offices are quoted in the service of that infidel religion called Masonry, admonishes all thinking men of the great evil of the professing embassadors of Christ so prostituting that sacred calling to the wicked one.

Were that infidel system to-day shorn of the influence stolen from the clergy and the church, through their unfaithfulness, much, very much of its power over the better classes would be gone. It would then be like Samson shorn of his locks and would soon find its level with other pools of infidelity and heathenism.

The plea that good men and ministers are Masons is in the eyes of the unthinking multitudes an argument most specious and deceptive, therefore those who become the occasion of it have the greater sin. Harsh as it may seem to the ear of false charity, we verily believe that the minister who goes into Masonry, adheres to and advocates it, is a sinner of no ordinary stamp in the sight of God. Think of it, dear readers, an embassador of Christ, by profession, consecrated to God and the Gospel, by practice, at least, preaching "another gospel, which is not another," but a false religion and an anti-Christ! Paul says, "let him be accursed" though he were an angel.

This earth-born argument founded on the "good men" in the lodges, is to the reflecting soul most ruinous to the cause for which it is adduced. Every good cause has an obvious, intrinsic value. Who would think of justifying philanthropy by the character of John Howard and other great philanthropists? Benevolence may immortalize men who become eminent in its practice, but no man can make benevolence shine one whit brighter. It needs not men nor angels to impart to it glory. We have had our champions of freedom, temperance, etc., but it was the cause that made the men, not the men the cause. When so-called great and good men are quoted in support of an institution, it is a tacit acknowledgment that the institution is void of merit. It is to put the cart before the horse and there is in it a moral absurdity. Let us see where it would lead us. Thousands of good men held, sold and bought their fellow immortals and aided and abetted a gigantic scheme of man-stealing, but this makes man-stealing not a whit the better, only leaves on the otherwise fair reputation of those men a hateful plague-spot. Peter told a falsehood, cursed and swore, and denied his Lord; but though a good man, he did not raise any of these sins one iota in the scale of character; but these things left a scar on his inmost soul ever after. He would not forgive himself even though forgiven of Christ. Despite all argument, however, hundreds, if not thousands, are beguiled by this plea of good men and ministers in the lodge. Influenced by thiss plea scores of precious souls are morally hoodwinked and led by "Satan's cable-tow down to eternal death."

Embassador of Christ, whom have you influenced to unite with a false and Christless religion? Are you sure that lost souls, ruined by your influence through the lodge will not rise up in the judgement and condemn you? O how dreadful the thought! I would not have gone there, but our minister joined the lodge, then I thought there could not be anything wrong in it. I it not more than possible, yea, is it not highly probable, that many souls will fall victims to that false and infidel system through the influence of ministerial Masons? There is not a minister in the lodge or out of the lodge, possessed of sufficient intelligence to preach, who does not know that Masonry is a system of infidelity. A man man may be a nominal Mason and a real Christian, or, a nominal Christian and a real Mason, but can no more be a real Mason and a real Christian at the same time, than he can be a real infidel and a real Christian both at once.

By common consent many are called "good men" though adhering Masons and professing ministers of the Gospel. How good, and in what sense? In the Gospel sense? We cannot see it. A real Mason is a real infidel, profess what else he may. Is there such a man as a good infidel, a Christian infidel? But suppose many ministers in the lodge not in real sympathy with it, yet consent to remaining in the lodge through fear, sympathy with men, or policy, and thus give Masonry all the weight of their personal and official influence, in what sense are such men good, and how good? Suppose again that these good (?) men see in Masonry nothing to offend their conscience after taking all degrees to the Royal Arch, what must be the condition of the moral sense of such men? There is in the first degree of Masonry enough to shock and thrill any good man with the keenest disgust and an abiding repugnance and it is difficult to see how any truly good man can consent to have this degree intensified and then multiplied by seven, ten or thirty-two. In God's sight how good are these men?

But, once more, let us suppose that many stay in the lodge and so give it their influence though they detest it and see its real character and evil tendency. What a fearful responsibility! Is not this to sin against light? But if the light that is in them be darkness, how great is that darkness?

Are Scholars Fit to be Presidents?

We have had no scholar in the Presidential chair since the days of John Quincy Adams. Since the days of that President, scholarship has been considered too aristocratic for a qualification for office; and hence shrewd, tricky men have been preferred as agents or servants of the people, to those who would be likely from their learning to adhere to principles. It was destructive of all character, and all sound statemanship, to require a President to support slavery, and at the same time to represent the country in the face of the world as the exponent of republican institutions. These double, irreconcilable conditions, which no man of any real worth of character would ever attempt to fill, have lowered public sentiment among us until our republican institutions from having at one time been regarded as fixed and permanent, are now often treated as a mere experiment.

Let us admit that President Lincoln was all that the admirers of "poor boys" could claim, shrewd, apt, intelligent, eloquent; yet who is there that will not acknowledge that he would have been a great deal better President, and that the war would have been much better ended, with half the time and expense, if he had been a scholar, and a man of high principle, instead of being one whose early education was neglected, and who was in the habit of doing things by indirection and by politics?

If Lincoln educated, had been better than Lincoln uneducated (and who can deny it) then why is it not better to have scholars in office than mere tricksters? They who are supposed to make our laws ought to know what law is. The function of the legislator is to find out what the law governing any human interest is, and give expression to that law in words. In order to do this properly, it is first necessary to find out what the law is. This law is made by God; its expression only is to come from the legislator. It is not enough that the legislator should be a mere lawyer; he should know, as far as possible, all the laws of the universe; for all these laws effect more or less the interests of all human beings. To suppose that the average politician of the present day knows anything of the laws of nature, or of the universe, and is fitted to legislate wisely for the human beings whose interests his acts are to effect, is preposterously absurd. What, for instance, do such men as Tweed and Morrissey know about law in its general application to an enlightened, Christian community? And yet these men more nearly represent our Congressmen of the present day than would two scholars.

Shall our Anti-masonic society inaugurate a new principle in politics, and require of our principle candidates for office that they shall be scholars, and know something about that humanity for which they are to legislate?

F. H. C.

Masonry in Knox College.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Your chief editor was formerly, if he is not still, as fearless as a prophet in exposing the strategy of the Masons to get the poison of their immoral oaths and falsehoods into our churches and schools. I was therefore somewhat surprised at the omission in the article written in regard to the inauguration of Newton Bateman, Esq., as President at Galesburgh. Whatever may be the the qualifications of Mr. B., there is one disqualification that can be removed only by a truthful statement on the part of the new President. And if he is a true Christian, and has the interests of his pupils at heart, he will make it. He must make it or show to all discerning men that he regards the impious oaths which were administered to him when blindfolded, with a rope around his neck, more than he regards the Scriptures which require him to have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness.

It is said that Mr. Bateman has taken seven degrees in Masonry and has urged others to do so in order the better to gain selfish ends. If this be so he knows with the present writer that Masonry is a swindling institution founded in low and gross lies and blasphemous oaths; oaths which if Masons consider them obligatory are murderous, and if they do not consider them obligatory they are blasphemous and illegal. Mr. Bateman knows with the present writer that Masonry is pagan in its worship, rejecting Christ from the lodge, which no Christian dare to do unless he is willing to be an apostate and deny his Lord before Masons, while he hypocritically acknowledges him before those who are not.

Now if Mr. Batemen does not come out as other Masons have done, and like a Christian man repudiate this institution, his known connection with it will lead the young men of the College into a snare, that will waste their money, hinder a Christian profession, lead them to be sinister and secret men before their fellows, and bind them to criminal secrets by blasphemous oaths and barbarous penalties.

No parent who is a Mason wishes his son to become one. No man, Mason or freeman, ought to send his son to a College where the president or a prominent professor is a Mason; because just in proportion as they have respect for their teacher they will be drawn towards the oath-bound, dark doings of Masonry; and many will become involved in its horrid oaths from which they can with difficulty escape.

INDEX.

Affirms Itself Loyal.

I see, in the "United Brethren" Tribune, an item under the heading, "True to the Church," which reads as follows:

"The object of the Tribune will continue to be loyalty to the church whose name it so devotedly bears. There will be an earnest advocacy of a return to first principles, and an effort made to become free from the ignorant and wicked legislation of some of our more recent general conferences. Hence it will advocate the necessity of removing, in some way, the present wicked law on secrecy," etc.

This I understand to be intended as a standing declaration of the principles of the Tribune, and to it I desire to direct public attention.

1. It is doubtless clear that there exists in the mind of the editor or of others the necessity for making the first averment in the above, that of "loyalty to the church whose name it so devotedly bears." Now if there were no suspicions in the mind of the editor or any of its friends that the inception of it was in direct opposition to the church and its regularly authorized periodicals, and therefore without true sympathy with the maxims and usages of our Zion, there could exist no necessity for such an averment; for why should a religious paper of this or any other church find it necessary to proclaim to the public, under such a caption as "True to the church," the mysterious and astounding fact that its object will continue to be loyalty to the church?

2. The averment that it will make an earnest effort to return to first principles is a vague and delusive proposition to do something. But who is able to determine what is meant? The parading of such glowing phraseology is deceptive in its tendency. What does the phrase mean? Is it intended to go back to the days of Christ and the apostolic churches and thereby lose the invaluable experience of these centuries? Or does it mean that its motto is to go back to the good old days of Otterbein and his co-laborers, and make these forty-one years of the existence of this church during which there were no authoritative rules of co-operation except the simple manuscript code agreed upon by Father Otterbein and his good-hearted, plain, German congregation at Baltimore for their special benefit, and the superintendency of Otterbein, Boehm and others? But if it is intended to go back to early legislation and revive and enforce that, why did not the Tribune say that it indorses the discipline of the church up to the period referred to.

What are the facts as to the early legislation of our church? From the very beginning of its career it bore steady testimony against human slavery; and its legislation on the subject has been changeless and good. And on the temperance cause this church was the first of the American churches (except the Presbyterian denomination, which, in the year 1811, adopted, in some form, its first temperance act,) to pass a temperance law, which was done in the year 1821 by our General Conference. Secretism, also, has been steadily rebuked by the kind admonitions of the fathers of the church and by legislation in opposition to it. So anti-secrecy sentiment is the normal sentiment of the body. In all other reforms we have done a noble part. Then why say return to first principles? My memory covers the history of our Zion from the time it is said to have had only nine thousand communicants up to the present; and I know of what I affirm. It is the most liberal and republican form of ecclesiastical government recorded in the world's history. Dear reader, I wish to bear testimony in favor of the peace and uniformity of the career of this church. It has been the freest from schism of any of the denominations extant. Praise the Lord for his tender oversight of this vine! May he by his watchful care direct our prudence and charity in the long future, that it may be brilliant chiefly in the salvation of very many souls.

3. I wish here particularly to consider the want of harmony between the declarations of loyalty and devotion to the church and the following aspersions contained in the item quoted: "Hence it will advocate the necessity of removing in the same way the present wicked law on secrecy." Now, as these thrusts are directly aimed at the General Conference, the only legally constituted legislative authority of the dear church to which this wonderfully loyal sheet is so singularly and devotedly attached, I wish to say to the many earnest Christians of this church, and the many other readers of our properly authorized periodicals, that there exists, in my judgment, a palpable incongruity between these sophisticated pretensions of undying loyalty and devotedness to the church and the rest of the paragraph. Is it not inconsistent for me, or any man or set of men, to make high-sounding professions of true loyalty and fidelity to the church, and then, in the same paragraph, utter such unpardonable epithets as "ignorant and wicked legislation?" Shall we separate these epithets in their application from the large majority of the members of some of the more recent general conferences? The malignity of the charge is plain. The legislation is declared to be ignorant and wicked. Now by what law of interpretation can we explain away these qualities from the large majority of members who enacted these laws? The effect is said to be ignorant and wicked, and therefore the cause must also be ignorant and wicked. If the water is bitter, the fountain must also be bitter. Those monstrous slanders, outraging all Christian modesty and common propriety, stand as the endorsed declaration of principles in the exordium of this unauthorized little sheet, through which its promoters attempt to press upon the credulity of its patrons these schismatical sentiments.

Let us look carefully at the facts. What has been and what is the character of these general conferences as to intelligence, high-toned morality, unflinching integrity, and broad philanthropy? I do not hesitate to assert that there is not the remotest justification for the above bitter utterances which could have only emanated out of a want of information, or from some other cause still lower in the moral scale. I have had the opportunity of looking in upon the assemblages of this church more or less for nearly half a century, and have attended all the sessions of the General Conference since 1849, except the one held at Lebanon, Pennsylvania, (not as a member but as an officer of the missionary board). I have also had large opportunities of witnessing the convocations of men, both religious and political, including the highest councils of the nation, legislatures of several of the States, national conventions including with these also conventions on the several reforms of the times, and conferences, synods, and Presbyterys of different denominations, and I do not hesitate to say that the sessions of these General Conferences have been conducted on as true business principles and broad philanthropy, courtesy, and liberality as such deliberations generally are. At the last General Conference, held at Dayton, the business and harmony were sometimes interrupted by motions and amendments made by the minority on the secrecy question, which were in their effect calculated to thwart legislation by the large majority, which was about three fourths of the body. The strategy of a portion of this minority was conducted with vigorous pertinacity; but it is just to say that a considerable number of the minority did fairly and impartially express their views with ability and prudence, and with deference to their peers. And it is my deliberate judgment that if the other portion of these brethren had acted on the same line of conduct the session would have been a very reputable and popular one. If the majority had yielded to the dictation of those rule-or-ruin members, it certainly would have been, in the extreme, humiliating and disgraceful to the honor of the church and its constitutional provisions.

We are fully impressed with the importance of the secrecy question, and specially as it relates to our church operations. We are also convinced of the candor of many who are in favor of changing this prohibitory rule to an advisory one. We feel gratified to believe that there are comparatively few who are in sympathy with secret societies. But it is nevertheless a settled fact that there are but two sides to this harassing question. The one is to keep secret orders out and the other is to take them in. Now, dear brethren, what will we do? Will we say, now and forever, that it is an innocent little thing, and by taking it quietly into our church home (the most sacred place on earth outside the family) we can by so doing destroy its evil influence and mould it into God's image? Or will we lift up the voice of warning against the despotism of the lodge, whose ostensible purpose is to rule in the nation, the politics, the courts, the community, and the church. Brethren, it is a heathenism of the first water. It has no God, no Christ, and no Holy Ghost, but instead of this Bible Deity it has an unknown deity, the glorious architect of the universe. If any man who knows the intrinsic value of secretism (for it is an ism) will, by clearly stated proofs, show it, then we will respect him.—John Kemp in the Telescope.

Convention Correspondence—Letter from Rev. N. R. Luce.

LOCKPORT, N. Y., June 4, 1875.

To the National Association of Christians opposed to Secret Societies, Assembled at Liberty Hall, Pittsburgh, Pa;

BELOVED BRETHREN, FRIENDS AND LOYAL CITIZENS:—Being unable to meet you in our annual council and anniversary by reason of ministerial labor in which our time is occupied, we would not fail in giving you the encouragment a few words may inspire. As we sit at this hour but a short distance from the track and tavern where the ill-fated Morgan in 1826 was hurried through to the place of his execution, a holy indignation rises within, to know that in this land there still exists an "institution" to which citizens, professed Christians, and even acting ordained ministers belong, and they without blush or shame stand sworn by horrid and Christless oaths and death penalties to murder and commit acts that are treasonable, and shield the vicious and the guilty.

Brethren, our heart is beating in living, active, sympathy with you in this gigantic reform. And under the God of the armies of Israel and hosts of heaven, with you we volunteer to fight until the last secret lodge is no more; until the last temple reared to this anti-Christ of secrecy shall have not one stone large or small left upon another, and the last hood-winked, cable-towed son of Hiram shall bow at the shrine of offered mercy and plead of God and an offended land forgiveness for his soul-destroying crime of blasphemy.

This conflict will be, perhaps, a long one; but weary not, our victory is sure. Truth is our "Monitor" and battering-ram, before whose looming power and oft-repeated strokes, these Christless walls will come tumbling down, and like Jericho's walls return to foot-tramped dust.

It is true we have engaged more than an ordinary foe and one that has insinuated himself into nearly every society, but we have the infinite God of the armies of heaven to help us in driving him out; and under this mighty Commander we will "fight it out on this line," till the last lodge is dead and buried, and on its degraded tombstone is written, NO RESURRECTION.

The high honor of the lodge in all time has been to placard and herald the stolen virtues of the religious and civil polity of the government in and among which it has, and does exist, being just as gracious in the "Lion House" of Brigham Young, at a Mormon altar, or in a Chinaman's joss-house, swearing by a dead dunghill-fowl's head, as in the church of Christ. Just as loyal to Jeff. Davis, a soulless Wirz and rebellion, as it would to a legal government. There is no crime to be named in all the annals of law but this midnight monster, the lodge, is guilty of.

This enemy of God and man must be deposed. Cost what it will; last long as the conflict may, God has helped us in the past, he WILL help us in the future. There will be discouragements, possibly some defeats, but what of all of that? It should only energize and nerve us anew. Not a single reform noted on historic page but has thus been characterized. This enemy is invidious and we need to meet such a foe as an army of invincibles. A John Brown with only eighteen men, invincibles, struck the fatal blow that severed and shattered the horrid manacles that bound four millions in chains. Shall we not under the guidance of the same Almighty hand, sever the soul shackles of our fallen, oath-bound brothers? Yes, by the help of God we will. Let every stand and pulpit, press and pen, heart and hand, be undergirded from on high, and in Christian love and earnestness, push this battle through. The Lord guide and help you. In Christian sympathy, yours,

N. R. LUCE,
Presiding Elder Buffalo District, Erie Conference, church of the United Brethren in Christ.

Whom Shall we Obey?

BY D. C. TALBOT.

Shall we have a Gospel now-a-days with a Christ in it, or shall we not? The "crowd" call for preaching without practice, folly rather than faith, and rioting rather than righteousness. Shall we accommodate them with what they want? prayers without tears, religion without worship, salvation without sorrow, "sweet without bitter"—yes, in a word, heaven with all its joys, its rest and reward by the way of the "broad road" of pride, worldliness and popular licentiousness?

Yes, the crowd is afloat, arm locked in arm—preacher, people, worldlings, devils—floating together down (say it all), yes, down, down to hell to people the "popular" regions of the damned. The "preacher" says, Peace, peace; it won't do to speak against this or that. Peace to card-playing and dancing and drinking and all the abominable evils of our fair land. The people say, Peace, we have peace now. Our minister (God pity him while "clothed" (cloaked) with such an appellation) is quite willing to "resist not evil," provided we pay him and pat him on the back and call him good. The world says, We'll join. It will be to our advantage to do so. Now there is that peace which we have so long looked for. Devils say, 'Tis well. Though your peace is evident, it will only be "variegated" with oceans of burnings, transcending by far the most copious scenes of wicked worldliness, mingled with ravages in low, "dark places." Come on! come on!

Shall we pass on in the flood to meet and dare to meet such fatal destinies among the damned? O my God, my loving Saviour! weep for their sad fate. Provoke to penitence and prayers to the service of the great God, "whom to know aright is life eternal." Thank God, there are some who neither covet popular favor nor fear worldly scorn.

The Laws of Masonry Paramount.

"The boastful argument that Masonry is sometimes known to make friends of foes, rising above even natural enmities, and by force of its mystic tie, bringing into friendship with each other soldiers of contending armies, is, after all an argument against Masonry. The benevolence which interferes with what is due to country is unprincipled and spurious. The natural claims of human brotherhood are disparaged by setting above them the conventional claims of an oath-bound portion of it. The good we do to each should be as members of the whole human family."

Gerrit Smith.

As illustrative of the force and weight of this argument against Masonry, thus concisely and clearly given by the late most eminent philanthropist of the present age, I adduce the substance of a narrative of the action of the distinguished warrior chief, Tecumseh, which I clipped from a newspaper supporting Masonry and inserted it in my old scrap-book some fifty years since. This was narrated by an officer, whose life was spared by the chief in consideration of his being a Mason. It was some time during our war against Great Britain of 1812, that this officer, in a skirmish with a party of British and Indians was severely wounded and unable to rise. Two Indians rushed towards him to secure his scalp as their prey; one of them appeared to be a chief warrior, and was clad in a British uniform. The hatchet was uplifted to give the fatal blow. The thought passed his mind that some of the chiefs were Masons and members of traveling lodges in the British army. He gave a Masonic sign. It stayed the arm of the savage warrior; the hatchet fell harmless to the ground. The Indian sprang forward; caught him in his arms, and the endearing title, brother, fell from his lips—it was TECUMSEH. This act of the chief, abstracted from the actuating consideration, was a good one; but, evidently, the tomahawk was not dropped by promptings of humanity at the sight of the helplessness and distress of the officer as a fellow man, but because they were bound to serve each other by the mystical, and to them the paramount obligations of Masonry, and above all constitutions—all laws human and divine. Rulers and their people stand or fall together; and no advantages will save them. This the history of Saul and of the people proved. This we ought to learn. Communities have a moral character, as truly as individuals. There are races that have a reputation for uprightness or for cunning. There are cities, the merchants of which have a good, and others, of which they have a bad, reputation. Nations acquire a character from the tone of their laws, the morals of their rulers, the conduct of their people, and as nations, as such, cannot be dealt with in the next life, where "every one shall give account of himself unto God" (Rom. xiv. 12), the only sphere within which God's government can be vindicated regarding them is the present. No wonder we should pray "for all that are in authority" (1 Tim. ii. 1, 2).—Dr. Hall.

Temperance.

Ravages of Alcohol in Honolulu.

A recent number of the Hawaiian Gazette, referring to the causes of the decrease of the population of the Hawaiian Islands, says:

"The real causes which have resulted in the decrease of the native population in these islands are undoubtedly the syphilitic and other diseases which have spread over the whole Pacific since it has been visited by Europeans; and also the introduction and use of intoxicating spirits. In the savage state the Hawaiians, like the New Zealanders, were a noble and healthy people, probably increasing in numbers constantly. Epidemic diseases and intoxicating beverages were unknown to them then. The epidemics which followed the discovery of the islands swept over them like a tidal wave, destroying ten and twenty thousand annually. But fatal as these have proved, they are nothing as compared with rum and intoxicating drinks of domestic manufacture, the habitual use of which no native constitution can stand many years."

It is an appalling fact that intoxicating liquors have so often gone as a devastating accompaniment with the missionaries of commerce, or so-called "civilization," and even of religion, to carry demoralization and wholesale death among the natives, as in the Hawaiian Islands.—Witness.

JUST ON THE DRAMSELLER.—The Supreme Court of Illinois, in a recent decision uses this strong language relative to the responsibility of persons selling liquor to drunkards after due notice given by the wife:

"When the dramseller is notified, there can be no excuse or palliation, when the sale is made which tends to produce drunkenness, which produces the damages. When a sale is thus made, it indicates a reckless disregard of law and the rights of others that merits punishment. The fate of the drunkard's wife and family is hard enough without its being knowingly, if not intentionally, aggravated by continuing to tantalize and degrade him and increase the shame, misery, and suffering of his family. No right-thinking person can sympathize with the dramseller, because he is reasonably punished by exemplary damages, when he knowingly sells to the drunkard in opposition to the expressed wishes of the wife."

ADVICE TO YOUNG WOMEN.—A few words of counsel from the Woman's Journal to the young women of to-day, may set some of them to thinking:

"Young women in treating dissipated young men as equals, do a wrong that they can scarcely realize. Such men should be made to feel that until they redeem themselves, until they walk with correctness and honor in the path of right, good people will stand aloof from them. Girls who respect themselves will not be seen with such young men, and will decline to receive them on the familiar footing of friendship. It is a mistaken kindness to poultice when caustic is needed, and I am inclined to think that a little sharp decision on the part of the young girls of to-day, would go far to correct the general looseness of morality among young men."

Mrs. Ingalls, a missionary lady, in a recent letter giving an account of her visit to Upper Burmah, says that they have one or two severe laws on drunkenness. The first crime of drunkenness is punished by the offender being paraded through the streets by a procession of state ministers under golden umbrellas, who strike a golden gong, and read the crime at the corners of all the streets, and lash him with thongs. He is then taken to the high court, where he has more severe blows, and then sent to his home. If he is found guilty a second time, he is taken out the same way, and then banished from the country.

An Address to the Citizens of Indiana.

BY THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE OF THE STATE ASSOCIATION.

FELLOW CITIZENS:—A little more than three years have elapsed since the first organization was formed in our State, having for its main object, opposition to the secret orders. It was formed under circumstances of the most inauspicious character, (from a human standpoint) at Ligonier, Noble county. Soon after, the "National Association" in systematizing its work, appointed a State agent and lecturer to our State, Rev. John T. Kiggins, under whose labors associations have been organized in different parts of the State. It was by his efforts, warmly seconded by but a comparatively small number of the friends of our cause in the State, that a call was published for a State meeting to convene at Westfield, Hamilton county. Pursuant to that call a few of the friends from different parts of the State assembled, and on the 29th day of October, 1873, nearly two years ago, with the assistance of President Blanchard, organized the

"INDIANA ANTI-SECRECY ASSOCIATION."

Rev. A. Butler of Doublin was elected its first President (to which position he was reelected last October); Rev. S. B. Ervin of Hartsville, Bartholomew county, was elected to serve as Corresponding Secretary, Peter Rich of Westfield (a Friend Quaker) Treasurer, and Wm. Small of Xenia, Recording Secretary. Mr. Kiggins was appointed General Agent and lecturer of the State Society; in which capacity he has served since. The first anniversary of this society was held at Dublin in October, 1874; at which time Marion, Grant county was selected as the place for holding the next annual meeting. The work of arranging for the meeting was left in the hands of the Executive Committee and the State Agent. Accordingly, at a meeting of the committee held at Marion in May, it was resolved that the sum of

be raised within the bounds of Grant county, to assist in defraying the expenses of the meeting; a sub-committee was appointed for this work, and THIRTY-FIVE DOLLARS were raised on the spot, or a little more than one third of the whole amount. It was further determined that some of the most eminent speakers in the country should be invited to attend. Special arrangements are already made to secure the attendance of Prof. C. A. Blanchard of Wheaton, Ill., Prof. Milton Wright of Dayton, Ohio, editor of The Religious Telescope, and Daniel Hill of New Vienna, Ohio, editor of the Christian Worker (organ of the Friend Quakers.) Besides, all the eminent ministers, lawyers and doctors in this State are to have a hearty invitation to attend and speak for us. We shall expect Professor Barnabas C. Hobbs, formerly State Superintendent of Public Instruction, ex-Bishop Schuck of Hartsville, and many others of the good and great men of the State. And to cap the climax, Geo. W. Clark of Rochester, New York, the great of Anti-slavery days, whose sweet voice has always rung out on the side of "unpopular truth," and whose presence did more than any other human means to infuse enthusiasm into the Pittsburgh convention, is being corresponded with by Mr. Kiggins, with a view to secure his presence.

Thus you will see that extensive, and expensive arrangements are being made for what we intend to make, by the blessing of Christ, one of the best anti-secrecy conventions ever held anywhere. One good brother of the committee says, "We will have such a shaking among the dry bones, as has not been witnessed since the days of Morgan's murder." Now the only element we fear the lack of, is the attendance of our friends from different parts of the State. And it is appeal to you to that this address is written. Let every friend of our reform who reads this address attend the convention if possible in person. But if you cannot come, see to calling a meeting of your neighbors, or brethren in the church, as the case may be, and electing a delegate to attend the convention for you. Free entertainment will be provided for all who come; and efforts will be made to secure excursion tickets on as many railroads as possible.

Let every local, township, or county association be represented by as many delegates as can be induced to attend. Will every Secretary and President see to the calling of a meeting at once, for this purpose?

Watch the Cynosure for further notice.

Reform News.

On the Road.

FROM THE CORRESPONDING SECRETARY.

At Painesville we had a meeting in the old M. E. church which is now rented for Hall purposes. The notice was read in the Congregational, Methodist and Christian churches. In the Baptist it was omitted, probably by a mistake. An old citizen of Painesville said to me that nine-tenths of the Masons in that place drank liquor and that, he might say, got drunk. He also stated and I heard from others that every saloon-keeper of prominence in the city was a "son of Masonic light" and brother of the mystic tie. At Delta, Ohio, the same thing is said to be true. It was impossible to do much for the Cynosure or Publishing House in this place, and after forming very pleasant acquaintances with friends to our cause, I took the train to Pennsylvania. Spending a day very pleasantly in the home of Robert Shaw of Saegartown, a large-hearted friend of our cause, I came to Millbrook where the campaign arranged by Bro. Hawley was to begin. On Saturday, Sabbath and Monday we had excellent meetings, largely attended and it is hoped that good was done. Eleven subscribers to the Cynosure were obtained and more could have been secured but for the rain. The friends of our cause here are numerous as might be expected from the fact that this is an old stamping ground for abolitionists. The men who fought that iniquity until its sun set in a sea of blood are girding on the armor for the new conflicts of the same sort that are before.

It is wonderful to see how the taint of secrecy affects men. In Eastern Pennsylvania is a so-called temperance paper cyclept "Tunkhannock Republican." This paper refused to print a lecture on temperance some four years ago because it was delivered by an Anti-mason. It has now repudiated the prohibition ticket and run up the Hartranft flag; not because Brown is hostile to secretism and Hartranft on the other side—of course not—but why? One thing is sure, a Republican Senate united with a Democratic House to repeal the local option law, and the State is on the road to free whiskey. In this time this temperance paper promotes the reform by voting for the Republican and against the Prohibition candidate.

A New Organization at Remington, Indiana.

HILLSBORO, Ind., July 29th, 1875.

According to previous arrangements I arrived at Remington, in the south part of Jasper county on the 14th inst. Brother Alex. Littlefield met me at the depot and conducted me to the office of brother Black of the Presbyterian church, with whom arrangements had been made for my entertainment. Here I gave six lectures and preached once to uniformly good audiences, notwithstanding unfavorable weather. The order was generally good and the "knights of the halter and hoodwink" preserved their "jewels," though sorely tempted. On Saturday no small stir was made by the crafts and I was informed that they were coming out to confront me in a solid body,

"A living wall, a human wood."

In the evening it rained, but a good audience was in attendance and the disciples of Hiram, and the admirers of "hobgoblins," (the Odd-fellows) were as good as their word. They sat in the pews immediately in front of the pulpit, and after reading them a lesson from the nineteenth of Acts, about the confusion of the crafts at Ephesus, and their unanswerable argument, (!) 'Great is Diana of the Ephesians," I came down from the pulpit and stood immediately in their front, and here I spoke to them for about two hours concerning the wickedness of Masonic oaths, showing them to be immoral and treasonable. All this time the best of attention was given; and though several times I stopped and said, "If the Mason is here who dares to deny the correctness of what I say, let him stand up," not one word was uttered. They were, it is believed by all, completely demoralized, and the brazen audacity manifest at first among them soon gave way to manifestations of shame and confusion. After the dismissal of the audience, their "curses were not loud but deep."

One "Pat" Lally is the Worshipful Master (!) of the lodge, and of course does its praying. He also drinks lager and gambles, so I was informed. On the celebration of the "Birth-day of Masonry," the 24th of June, one Mason was so drunk he could not have been described as being "plumb,' but was soon on a "dead level," while a Methodist preacher was "orating."

Here I was glad to meet with father Baker, an old conductor on the "underground rail-road," who related many of the thrilling adventures he was a party to, in running slaves to Chicago, where our good Mr. Carpenter was active in keeping a "station," and thence sending them by water to Canada, the Canaan of the slave. Also Brother Nelson, a Methodist, who used to be in the same business.

Then there was brother Morgan, a Baptist, brother Harmon, a Methodist, brother Spencer, a Presbyterian, with many others, whose names are written in heaven, whose names are also recorded on earth in united protest against lodge-despotism. God bless them, and multiply their number in Remington.

I spent most of my leisure hours in the family of brother Black, who with his wife and two boys were profitable company to me, in the encouragement they gave. Brother Black is one of the elders of the Presbyterian church and his family are members.

Before leaving a fine association was organized, and an arrangement made for a monthly concert of prayer for the overthrow of secretism.

Encouraged to go on, I am sincerely,

JOHN T. KIGGINS.

Past Master Ronayne at Waverly, Ia.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Surely the adage, "It never rains but it pours" seems appropriate when writing of the work in this place. Only a little more than a month has elapsed since the last lectures were delivered, and we have just closed another course of three lectures. Mr. Edmond Ronayne, Past Master Keystone Lodge, No. 639, Chicago, surprised us very pleasantly by dropping among us, and as we were not informed of the exact time he would be here, it was very unexpected to us. No advertisements were out and no arrangements made, consequently a hasty notice and hasty meeting was the result; but, as we had favorable weather, quite good audiences were present each evening. This is the fifth course of lectures in this city. The first evening, the initiating of a candidate in the Entered Apprentice degree. The second evening in the third, or Master Mason's degree. The third evening in the second, or Fellowcraft.

These lectures have had the most stunning effect. Masonry is so dead in Waverly that I would be astonished to hear of a single addition to the lodge. Boys upon the streets begin to make the grand hailing sign and drawl out the mystic "mah-hah-bone," much to the discomfiture of the craft. I wish I were able to give to the readers of the Cynosure a description of these meetings and expositions. I do not wish to disparage any of the lecturers who have been here before; they have done a noble work, yet these lectures have completely "capped the climax," and I wish I were able to do justice to the lecturer and the readers of the Cynosure. Such times were never seen in Waverly before. Think of it! Here is a man who has held the office of Worshipful Master of Keystone Lodge, Chicago, is Past Master, has sat in the Grand Lodge of Illinois, all less than three years ago. He leaves a most powerful order, which holds most of our civil offices, controls to a great extent, our courts, legislatures, and our government, our pulpit and press—leaves this institution with its blood-thirstiness, its terrible oaths, and its almost unlimited power, and steps right out and works its degrees publicly, almost within a stone's throw of his own lodge; with the jewels of his office in which he used to work in the lodge, which were presented to him for meritorious services; publishes his lectures, sends his invitation to his own lodge, and invites all lodges in the city to come and see.

Whenever he touched the political aspect of the reform, the audience showed they were ready to "vote as they prayed." This is what troubles the craft. When you touch them on politics, you touch a tender spot.

The people of Waverly will never forget the visit of Mr. Ronayne. And arrangements are already on foot to have him come again. Such is the feeling manifested here, that its power is beginning to be seen and felt; other localities are being awakened and desirous to hear. The papers are discussing it to a great extent and this whole country is shaking off the fetters which have so long held them captive. No place will regret sending for Ronayne. He leaves a great many friends in Waverly who wish him a soul-felt "God-speed" in his noble, self-sacrificing mission. Strengthen his hands, friends; let us do our duty.

In times past Masons would say, "Do you think you can stop Masonry? You will be dead and forgotten before you see the day that Masonry will be overthrown." But we say, "Do you think you can stop Anti-masonry?" Let a few more such men come out and boldly show up its character and e'er long the lodge will fall to pieces like an old whiskey barrel whose hoops have rusted. There will be no "help for the widow's son;" no resurrection for Hiram Abiff. And we would gladly say, "Peace to his ashes." More anon, PETER WOODRING.

From Belpre, O.

Rev. J. T. Kiggins lectured for us two evenings, the 21st and 22nd of June. We had a fair audience each evening, and a good proportion of the "fraternities" were present. The meetings were very quiet and orderly. Mr. Kiggins spoke with telling effect, but they kept their "jewel" until he was gone, and then a braver set of men could not be found. They did not get through squirming for two weeks afterward. They called him a liar, a perjurer, a scoundrel, and everything else—truly Masonic. Yours respectfully, S. C. H. SMITH.

The Enemy Vanquished at Remington, Ind.

REMINGTON, Jasper Co., Ind., July 22, 1875.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Brother Kiggins left us yesterday after a six days' lecture course. The "craft" were out in force almost every evening, and came en masse the third evening, which was stormy, and took up their position in the center front pews (of the Presbyterian church where the lecture was held), with their Masonic emblems vauntingly displayed, books, etc., evidently expecting to overawe and intimitade our brother, and possibly give him the "lie" if he was guilty of the slightest inaccuracy.

Brother K. seemed to highly appreciate the honor (?) they conferred upon him, bestowing upon them particular attention to their discomfiture, notwitstanding their parade and bravado. He gave them ample opportunity time and again, during his lectures to deny and prove his assertions false, but the challenge was not accepted. One Mason was much exercised in mind on the first evening with the lecturer's assertion that Masonry separated husband and wife, and was overheard to remark to his wife, in a whining, mock-serious tone, "I don't know as we will ever be able to come together again, you and I are so far apart.' Others were very much troubled on account of the churches, particularly the Presbyterian church, although they were never known to entertain any especial regard for its interests previously. Some were bold and threatening, talking of eggs and other Masonic arguments of like nature; and the last evening even fire-crackers and pistols were fired off just outside the windows, and tin whistles were blown in the church itself. The serenity of brother K. during these demonstrations was admirable, and the more threatening they became, the cooler and more courageous he seemed, soaring to such a climax of eloquence in defense of the truth in his closing remarks, as apparently to overawe the rowdies themselves. I was reminded of the Bible account of Stephen when assailed by the mob; and considering a direct assault upon Bro. K. not improbable, I could well portray to my imagination his unflinching attitude. It seemed as though the Holy Ghost did baptize him then and there with more than mortal power of utterance. I thought that those respectable Masons present must have felt proud of their connection with an institution whose only arguments were the demonstrations we had witnessed on the part of the craft, or worse. But I was glad Satan had shown his cloven foot before some friends of mine, who professed "not to know anything against the order," for I was confident men and women of sense would be convinced thereby of its utter shamelessness. Bro. K. has done much good, I think, here. Some who contemplated joining the lodge have declined against it. Respectfully yours, MRS. E. R. L. LITTLEFIELD.

P. S. The citizens organized a little society, and propose to hold a monthly concert of prayer for the success of the cause. Brother. K. made a touching appeal to this little band the last evening, to be faithful in defense of the truth, promising them Divine assistance on the honor of God's written word.

Since my last I have done but little in the way of lecturing. Haying and harvesting being on hand, it is not possible to lecture with any degree of success—but gave two lectures in Bro. Van Doren's barn in Nekimi, July 7th and 8th. The Free Baptists refusing to let their church be used, and a granger having the casting vote in the school board, the school house could not be had, though they had used it for about two years for their grange meetings free.

I then, without asking, went to Omro, to see what might be done there, and called upon Mr. Brown, the Presbyterian minister and found that he was a hater of secrecy, and that he was not afraid to let it be known, but his church was undergoing repairs, and so many of his official members were in the meshes of secrecy that it was doubtful whether it could be used for lectures. He took some tracts to circulate. I then called on Mr. Babcock, Baptist minister, of whom I had heard and that he was opposed to secrecy, but he would be unwilling to have his people disturbed with the subject in his church. I thought I would test his anti-secrecy, and see how far it would go, and tried to get him to take some tracts to circulate, but not he, he was too wise for that. He is very much like a Baptist minister by the name of Maybe, that I saw last winter in Waukesha, who admitted that men did not often become Christians after joinnig the lodges, but he would no preach against them, nor against the use of tobacco, but would against intemperance. I cannot see how such men can be ministers of Christ, who only trim their sails to the popular breeze.

Having learned of a farmers' association, or club at Rosendale I called on Mr. Jennings and learned that it is quite a popular institution with them. They have their constitution and by-laws, and have kept up their meetings nine or ten years, and it costs them only about one dollar where it costs the granger five, and the social feature is not wanting, for ladies may become members, and frequently favor them with essays. They started a grange there, but it is not popular, and indeed it is becoming unpopular in many places. The crops are good in this section of country. For the war,

A Minister in Some Situations.

WEST UNITY, O., July 27, 1875.
Editor Christian Cynosure:

We saw some time ago an article from the Masonic Jewel headed. "Timely Caution." Among other things the writer tells us of his visiting a neighboring lodge, and says, "Imagine our surprise on hearing a clergyman called on to offer prayer, in which he spoke of the lion of the tribe of Judah, and closed with, 'for the sake of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ,'" He says, "We could at the time hardly believe we were in a Masonic lodge." In regard to chaplains he writes, "They were introduced about the middle of the last century, by Jesuitic religionists. Their introduction was an innovation, and destructive, as no doubt designed, of the universal character of Freemasonry, and their intent has been most successful." He closes as follows: "There is a deep undercurrent of sentiment rising to the surface and audible in some places, in relation to the sectarian question, which will only be stilled by expunging from the ritual work all sectarian allusions. That and that only will restore harmony and hold the craft a united body; the cause of evil removed, the great cause of complaint no longer existing, peace and good-will will be restored."

So we find that the bare mention of the name of the Saviour in the lodge is a disturbing element that it brings in discord and division. Now how long will this have to be taught, till every lover of the lodge will hate the very name of Jesus? And like the inhabitants of Gadara pray for him "to depart out of their coasts."

"The great cause of complaint no longer existing." And what is this great cause of complaint? Evidently it is the religion of Jesus Christ. But says one, "we only want to remove it out of the lodge." Well, show me a man who wants the religion of Jesus removed out of the lodge, and I will set that man down as wanting it removed out of the world, though he may claim to be commissioned to preach it to every creature. Can a man be jealous of it in the lodge, and love it out of it? We think not. Now if the lodge is jealous of the church that works and acts openly, has not the church as great, or greater cause to be jealous of the lodge that works in secret, and that to with some of the bitterest enemies of the church?

We have often imagined the embarrassing situations lodge-bound ministers might be placed in occasionally. We have in our mind's eye a very popular minister and withal a high Mason of whom it can truthfully be said, that

To popular sins he's ever been blind.
And to popular sinners he's ever been kind.

A very consistent Mason no doubt, but, judging from the company he sometimes keeps, a very inconsistent Christian. Let us suppose him to be in the lodge and stricken down by some fatal disease, and he is informed by the physicians that his sands are about run. He looks around; here is a Jew that denies Christ; there are present several of the disciples of Tom Paine, perhaps a Mormon or two. He has met them on the level and must part with them on the square. It wont do to make any "sectarian allusions" in his prayer, if it is his last one, some brother might object, and so he cries out, "Supreme Architect of the Universe receive my spirit." Imagine his joy on meeting the Redeemer on the other side.

Or suppose we send him as a missionary to the heathen—alas! that we should send some that are no better. Well, he finds a lodge there and in a short time is elected Worshipful Master. We will suppose some chief from the interior to come down and join the lodge. After going through the ceremonies of Entered Apprentice, and Fellow Craft he is raised to Master Mason. During the ceremony the W. M. picks up Sickel's Freemason's Guide, and turning to page 189 reads as follows:

"We now find man complete in morality and intelligence, with the stay of religion added to insure him of the protection of Deity, and guard him from ever going astray. These three degrees form a perfect and harmonious whole nor can we conceive that anything can be suggested more which the soul of man requires." We will suppose this to be Saturday night. The next morning as our new-made Mason is taking a walk, and perhaps soliloquizing somewhat like the following: Complete in morality and intelligence—sure of the protection of Deity—guarded from ever going astray—and there is nothing more that my soul requires, and all for $25—pretty good investment. Just here his thoughts are arrested by music near by, and on listening he hears sung with a great deal of pathos:

"Jesus lover of my soul, let me to thy bosom fly."

He thinks it strange. Last night he received from the missionary all that his soul required, and heard nothing of "Jesus," and he is struck with the profanity of the second verse

"Other refuge have I none, hangs my only hope on thee."

but he goes to see who it is and gets there just in time to hear the Worshipful Master take his text from Acts iv. 12. Now who could blame the old cannibal when he goes home for telling his people that he had but little faith in missionaries? And how would he answer some poor lost Mason in the day of judgment, who had proclaimed to the world that "Masonry is a good enough religion for me" Why did you stand silently by in the lodge while I was being taught that all my soul required could be found there? Why did you by your presence, and your silence add your testimony that these things were so? Why not tell me then and there that it was all a lie, that there was salvation in no other name but the name of Jesus? If it had been your enemy's ox going astray you would doubtless have turned him back, in obedience to the law, but it was my poor soul that was being led astray, and you added your "so mote it be." Yours for the war, J. G. MATTOON.

P. S. We see by the Cynosure of last week, that the Rev. Mr. Morgan of Boston has offered a $200 prize for the best essay on, "Why men don't go to church, and what is the remedy." We are not writing for the prize now, though we may at some future time give our opinion through the Cynosure; but we suggest as a remedy: 1st. After having refused your churches to Anti-masonic lectures don't open them to heathenish Masonic funeral parades. This would show that you are consistent in one thing at least. 2nd. Quit sending infidel Masons to the Grand Lodge above.

The Mason City Fire.

WELLINGTON, ILLS., Aug. 3d, 1875.
Editor Christian Cynosure:

The firing of Mr. Lyons' house at Mason City, Iowa, looks a little suspicious for the craft, since they had been throwing eggs and mobbing and were mad at Mr. Lyons. In this case here was an active opponent of the lodge and making an effort to start a local organ opposed to it. But the lodge, by mobbing, is only accumulating capital, which in the end will only operate to their certain destruction.

Look at the slavery issue. Its friends destroyed a printing press at one time and hurled the type into the Mississippi; yet by this act anti-slavery was published farther and wider than if the issue of the paper had not have been interfered with. To stop agitation Lovejoy was murdered, and yet even the blood from the ground cried for vengeance, inspiring Owen Lovejoy with arguments. John Brown was hung to appease the wrath of the slave-holders, yet this seemed to illustrate the adage that "those whom the gods would destroy they first make mad."

We should in every way try to avoid giving personal offense, yet this discussion of the lodge should be pushed with vigor by the establishment of local papers in every section of the country.

The New York Tribune would never have attained the circulation it had and so great an influence, but for the establishment of local papers throughout the country having the same object in view.

We want the Cynosure well sustained with a daily issue as soon as it can be afforded, and we want a large number of local weeklies in every section to assist in carrying on the work. We hope the friends in Mason City, Iowa, will not be discouraged.

A Tory Organization.

Mr. Editor:—I take the liberty of writing a few lines to you hoping they will meet with your approbation. I wish to say something in reference to the introduction of Freemasonry into the United States. The Grand Lodge of New York received its first charter from the Duke of Athol, dated London, September 5th, A. L. (year of light), 5781. To have said A. D. (year of our Lord) 1781, would not have comported with an institution which seems above the humble, though heaven-born religion of our Redeemer. This blessed Masonic year of light 5781, was indeed a glorious era for the establishment of the first Grand Lodge in New York, for that city was then in possession of the British army. Every American patriot was driven out, except those brave and virtuous defenders of their country who were chained and fettered in the old sugar-house and the old Jersey prison-ship. The royal troops and the loyal tories held sovereign sway, so that the order, it appears, is of genuine, downright tory stamp. A tory Duke sent it from London as a gift to his brother tories of New York at a critical period of our Revolution, and they, through this means, carried on their intrigues and conspiracies. Is it not high time that this old tory-nest, which has done so much secret, as well as so much glaring mischief, was broken up by the honest republicans of these United States.

The subject now under consideration is one of vital importance, and I do hope and pray that God will help you to raise your warning voice to the young men of these United States to beware as they would the most deadly poison, of coming within the pale of its licentious mysteries and its blasphemous rites. Too long, by far too long, has it already pollated the soil of liberty. Too long already, has it darkly controlled the ballot of the unsuspecting freeman and paralyzed the right of election. Too long has it corrupted legislation and prevented justice. Too long has it made the jury-box the sink of partiality and favoritism, and the stand of the witness the source of perjury and the protection of fraud and villainy, and to rob the gallows and the gibbet of their honest dues. Morality, patriotism, liberty, religion, the holy laws it has violated, and the domestic, civil and political ties it has severed; the promising young men it has turned to destruction, and the heart-broken parents whose gray hairs it has brought with sorrow to the grave; the husbands it has alienated from their wives, and the wives it has robbed of the society and protection of their husbands; the widows and the orphans, and the blood of the martyrs it has slain, all cry aloud in one united voice to the God of eternal justice for its total extirpation from the face of the earth.

The Sabbath School.

Lesson for August 22, 1875—Jesus the Christ.

SCRIPTURE.—John vii. 40-46. Commit 40-46. Primary Verse, 46.

40 Many of the people, therefore, when they heard this saying, said, Of a truth this is the Prophet.

41 Others said, This is the Christ. But some said, Shall Christ come out of Galilee?

42 Hath not the Scripture said, That Christ cometh of the seed of David, and out of the town of Bethlehem, where David was?

43 So there was a division among the people because of him.

44 And some of them would have taken him; but no man laid hands on him.

45 Then came the officers to the chief priests and Pharisees; and they said unto them, Why have ye not brought him?

46 The officers answered, Never man spake like this man.

WAYSIDE FLOWERS.

1.—"Out of his belly shall flow rivers of living water." The Christian religion is not a mere selfish experience, gratifying only the one who partakes of it. It is a fountain that must run over and bless others. Acts ix. 36; Rom. xiv. 7; 2 Cor. ix. 8; Eph. ii. 10; Col. i. 10; 1 Tim. vi. 18; 2 Tim. iii. 17.

2.—Many men "seek" the Messiah; but they seek him in their own way, resolved so to find him or not at all. Is it any wonder that scientists say: "We can not find him"! They stand at the door of creation and imperiously say: "If there be a God let him come forth that we may measure him." The Infinite must be sought in a way more humble than that. He will reveal himself to the most humble of mortals if he only really desire to commune with him—but to such demands never. Job xi. 7; Ps. lxxvii. 19; Ps. lv. 9; Rom. xi. 33, 34; Ps. cxxxviii. 6; Jas. iv. 6.

3.—"A little while" Jesus was with them. After that they should seek but not find him. Ah, the importance to them of that "little while!" It was their period of grace—their day, their hour, their moment of salvation. It passed unimproved. How long is our "little while"? Matt. xxiv. 37-42; Mark xiii. 33-37; Luke xii. 35-40; xxi. 34, 35; Heb. x. 37.

4.—The way "to know of the doctrine" is to do the will of God—to surrender ourselves and our will to him—to be willing to be guided and taught by him. There is no adequate test of the truth of the doctrine of Christ but the test of experience. "Taste and see that the Lord is good." Hos. vi. 3; Mal. iv. 2; Matt. vi. 24; John vii. 17; viii. 31, 32; xiv. 15-17, 20, 21; 1 Cor. ii. 14; 2 Cor. iv. 3-6.

5.—"Never man spake like this man." And never book spake like the Word of God. It measures all states and conditions of life; it is acquainted with every grief; it touches every chord of sympathy; it contains the spiritual biography of every heart; it is suited to every class of society, and can be read with the same interest by the king and the beggar, the philosopher and the child; and "it has a comfort for every sorrow and a balm for every wound." Ps. xix. 7-10; cxix. 162; Rom. xv. iv; Eph. v. 26; 2 Tim. iii. 15-17; 1 Pet. i. 23.—Nat'l S. S. Teacher.

Masonic.

Freemasonry of To-Day.

[The following article is taken from The Square, a New York lodge organ, for June. Some remarks may be found on the editorial pages.—Ed.]

It would seem as though Masonry was to be again called upon to put on its armor, and step forward in the defense of its time-honored principles. The plea advanced by these new crusaders, is the anti-Christian character of the institution; which, they allege, is established beyond peradventure; and this is what they endeavor to impress upon the minds of Christian people.

It is not the Square's intention to argue with any of these gentlemen, in a vain attempt to dissuade them from their purpose; for in this age of enlightenment men are apt to think for themselves, and seldom thank those who presume to think for them. Masonic papers do entirely wrong when they invite argument from any of these sources. Freemasonry dates its birth from the shedding of light upon this world, and hence, having its rising in light, never need fear it; it is only misrepresentation that we have to guard against; and surely Christian people are not the kind to look for that from. Although our boast is the unsectarian character of the institution, still the follower of Jesus, if he is really a follower, can always see in it that which must challenge both his admiration and respect. The Freemasonry of to-day commemorates five great events in the history of the world, each typical of the Messiah. We refer to Jacob's vision; the offering of Isaac; the deliverance of Israel; the offering of David; and the building of Solomon's Temple.

Now in our lectures direct reference is made to these five great events; and no man, however fine his sense of discrimination, can find therein anything to conflict with the Gospel. It is folly to assert that Masonry is un-Christian, as we understand the word, when the first step taken by the candidate is his acknowledging the existence of a God.

As Christians, in making that assertion of our belief in a God, we believe in God, the Father; God the Son; and God the Holy Ghost.

When a professor of Christianity asserts his belief in a God, it would be simply ridiculous to make him define the God-head every time; presuming that we initiate only intelligent men. If the majority of mankind were devoid of common sense, it might be well to have them explain everything they might say.

The first lesson taught by Masonry, is perseverance in the study of the Holy Bible; this point needs no further substantiation than the mere fact of our opponents admitting, that we have the sacred volume in our midst; what possible use would intelligent men, who believe it to be an inspired volume, have for it, if not for study?

In our lodges the ceremonies are so conducted as to offend the moral sense of none; and true Christians, if they are what they profess, could never find cause for offense in any portion of the ritual. We open and close the lodge with prayer; and the same solemnity attends the initiation, passing, and raising of the candidates. No levity is allowed in any part of the ceremony; and would not be heard, for there is nothing attending the solemn services likely to excite it.

The great characteristic of Masonry which has so much excited suspicion as to its innocence, is the impenetrable secrecy. Taciturnity is a direct proof of wisdom, and has always been regarded by intelligent men as an art of inestimable virtue. In secrecy nature performs her greatest work; and everything fashioned by the hand of the Creator comes forth silently, and without noisy demonstration.

The greatest benefit conferred upon man by his Heavenly Father, we, as Christians, concede to be the inestimable gift of His only Son. Although ancient prophecy led the Jews to understand and look for the promised Messiah, as coming in great pomp to rule over them as a king; still the wisdom of the Father ordained that He should come quietly, unknown save to a few ignorant shepherds, and He remained unrecognized throughout His ministry save by a few followers.

Hence God himself made use of a secrecy when about to confer His greatest blessing.

Our boast is our universality; here is the enigma which so puzzles our foes to fathom; the great Locke said, "There is nothing more true than what Masons teach; that the better men are the more they love one another; virtue having in itself something so amiable as to charm the hearts of all who behold it."

Taking the evidence of the thousands of good, intelligent, Christian men, who hail from the different Masonic bodies throughout the world, we fail to find in the Masonry of to-day anything prejudicial to religion, or calculated to interfere with the civil government of the world. The policy of Masonry is never aggressive, except in the sense of a man's warring against the evil in his own nature.

A writer in a late number of The Voice of Masonry seems to think that the church is jealous of the institution. That can never be. Since without the church Masonry could not thrive in a Christian community; and without Masonry the church would find more atheism to contend against, than she has at present.

Masonry is a great missionary, teaching man to love his God first; after that, to love his fellow. A Turk is just as much your neighbor as one of your own religion; witness Christ's parable of the Good Samaritan.

PLATFORM AND NOMINATIONS FOR 1876.

FOR PRESIDENT

James B. Walker,
of Illinois.

FOR VICE-PRESIDENT

Donald Kirkpatrick,
of New York.

PLATFORM.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage, is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. The charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

5. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by article 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate.

6. That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

7. That to cultivate the intellec without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

8. That land and other monopolies should be discountenanced.

9. That the Government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency, and a return to specie payment as soon as practicable.

10. That maintenance of the public credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. And finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of Electoral Colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-president of the United States.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONENCE.

GALESBURG, THE SECRET OF ITS GROWTH.—THE GREAT EXPERIMENT—AND THE SURE TRIUMPH OF TRUTH OVER LEAGUED ERROR AND DARKNESS.

CAMBRIDGE, Henry Co., Ill., July 30, 1875.

To the readers of the Cynosure:

I have just revisited Galesburg, the scene of my labors in Knox College and the First Church of Christ there, for some fifteen years, and where

> Storied ages o'er the memory pass
> Like shadows pictured on a sea of glass.

The growth of Galesburg from a prairie hamlet in 1846, to a beautiful inland city in 1875, is a curious study. At first, like Oberlin, it was hated, shunned, and "everywhere spoken against," because it was set against slavery, the then reigning evil of this country. But when a handful of abolitionists had broken the dream and stirred up the mind of the nation to the impossible co-existence of slavery and free institutions; above all, when the word of truth had stirred up the sediment of slavery itself, so that it appeared in its own haughty and hateful nature, and the truth and spirit of God were seen to be with the abolitionists; then the tide of popular favor turned, and there was no place like Galesburg. It started from a hamlet to a city. White Cherry Grove, settled by Sabbath-breaking, prayerless Universalists, in a far more favored location, ten miles south; though it first had a post-office, continues still a hamlet of a few farm houses. Everybody flocked to Galesburg. Haters of its truth went there, cursing it. Whiskey drinkers went there to drink defiance to its temperance. And truth and falsehood ran shoulder to shoulder in the race of building up the place; one to establish righteousness, the other to throttle it.

On a greater, mightier scale, the same process is going on in the United States. The human race are now in motion to take possession of North America. The power that guides grasshoppers and locusts is sending swarms of men and women on our either coast, cursing their kings and priests, and yet bringing, in their lives and breasts, the superstition and unbelief which gives kings and priests their vocation and makes despotism a necessity. For out of Christ there is and can be nothing but government by force among men.

But the worst of all is that Christians, by prosperity, assimilate to the world. They ask a religion like those devised by men; and God "grants them the desire of their hearts and sends leanness into their souls."

This process, however, is not always to continue. The strong-holds of Satan will and must be pulled down. And the "wicked one" himself be destroyed by the universal spread of truth; or, in Scripture phrase, by "the brightness of Christ's coming."

The lodge now reigns and gloats over Galesburg. The new College President is hailed and greeted by the Masons. The press cringes, like Eastern slaves at the foot of their master; and the haters of the lodge-god and his idolatries utter their hatred, if at all, with bated breath. But Magna est veritas et prevalebit. There is more might in a single truth, though trodden in the mire, than in ten thousand lies though seated on thrones. And history, and mind, and reason, and unconquerable will, but, high over all, the eternal principles of right are weaving the net of human destiny under the guiding eyes of God. And the eternal spirit of God which falls on men and nations as mists on parched meadows, is lifting up a standard against every enemy of our race that "cometh in as a flood."

Let us rejoice in God that we have a "National Christian Association." Let us, by prayer and self-denying labor, make it a rallying point for the children of God of all nations and let our broad country be that "earth" which the prophet saw opening her mouth and swallowing up the dragon floods of error, darkness and despotism.

J. BLANCHARD.

IS IT A JOKE?

The editor of the Square, New York lodge organ, issuing from the Masonic Publishing Co., wallows around in the slough of modern Freemasonry in a strange way. His article which we republish seems like mocking the truth, yet is too serious for a joke. If he really intends to put on his war paint, we hope for him the quick conclusion which fell on the St. Louis Freemason, a far better representative of decency, if not of the craft. It is always wrong for lodge organs to invite discussion with Anti-masons, for in so doing they always set forth false premises and error for truth. The great "misrepresentations" to be shunned are their own, the statements of the Square here given being the best proof. No doubt the Square can find many followers of Jesus, according to its interpretation, who respect the lodge, but they are from seed which fell among thorns or on stony ground. If this is not so why is it so careful to speak of "belief in a God." The very expression implies that there are more than one, all on an equality in Masonic religion; and proves the Scripture true of unbelievers that they have "gods many and lords many." And this "first lesson" in Masonry, where is the man it has taught to reverence the Bible by its blasphemous caricatures of holy scenes and characters? Nobody's "moral sense" offended! Nobody ever entered the lodge without having it offended if he had any and was able to use it. Perhaps it is meant that we should understand that "moral sense" is left, with the candidate's religion, "at the door of the lodge" before he enters for initiation.

The next statement, that God made use of secrecy to introduce the Gospel, is a libel upon the Almighty and a falsehood contradicted by every page of Scripture and the whole history of the church. And Christian workers have invariably found the lodge not to be a helper, but a hindrance, a system second only to Rome in the practical infidels who follow it, and its ability to make them.

NOTES.

—An old and respected citizen of Chicago, and one of the leading minds of the North-west in abolition days, was present at the anniversary testimonial given to Mr. Walker at Wheaton on the 29th ult., and has kindly furnished us a very complete history of the American candidate as given on the occasion, which will be found on the twelfth page. In this connection it is proper to state we are assured that Mr. Kirkpatrick's letter of acceptance will appear soon.

—Bro. Hinman, Illinois State Agent, has been laboring assiduously in Kane and DeKalb and Boone counties during the past month, chiefly in the interest of the Publishing House. He has spoken in Marengo and Belvidere and has other appointments out, but an attack of sickness has compelled him to return home and he may not be able to fill them. Several payments are due from pledges made for Bro. Hinman's salary at the State meeting last November. Let them be sent promptly, now they are especially needed, to the treasurer at this office.

—Bro. Stoddard is attending the Ohio State meeting this week. Rev. Mr. Cogswell of Mansfield, and Past Master Ronayne of this city expect to be present and make addresses. Important and interesting news from this meeting and the convention at Mercer, Pa., may be looked for next week.

—Mr. Ronayne waked up Iowa enthusiasm at Waverly beyond all precedent. Arrangements are being made through all the north central portion of the State for his return after harvest, when the lodges may expect such an outpouring of light and popular indignation as to completely dry up their stagnant puddles.

—Word has reached us of the death of Francis Semple, Esq., of Dover, Iowa, author of "Narratives and arguments showing the conflict of secret societies with the constitution and laws of the Union and of the States." Mr. Semple had been a practicing attorney for many years and his observations of the dark and secret workings of the lodge in court are of great value. He had reached a good old age and his last hours were cheered by the Christian's hope.

—The Missouri State meeting next week promises to be of interest to the State and the cause. Bro. Needels will probably be disappointed in not having the assistance of the General Agent, Bro. Hinman or Bro. A. H. Springstein of Michigan, who are all prevented from going to Missouri. But help has arisen from another quarter. Elder Barlow, now in this city, is ready and able for the work; and it is hoped that the correspondence begun may decide that he shall turn aside thither.

—The Wesleyan congregation at Lisbon Center, N. Y., will not consent to spare their pastor for the cause of reform in Michigan, and Elder Rathbun has sent word that he does not feel called to the State lectureship. This we learn from a good letter from Bro. Springstein, written amid the activities of his pastoral work and the rejoicings of the camp-ground, which we cannot find place for this week. The appointment of a lecturer now falls back on the State Executive Committee. Let them attend promptly to the interests of the reform in their State. Four months have passed since the State organization was formed and every weeks' delay in putting an able man in the field is a positive loss, for he should be now getting acquainted with the field in readiness for pushing things during the fall and winter. Brethren, the King's business requires haste.

—The annual meeting of the Synodical Conference of North America, Lutheran church, was held this year at Cleveland, July 14th to 20th. Among the theses on Church Fellowship discussed, the Lutheran Standard reports the ninth, and the argument upon it, as follows. In the midst of surrounding indifference or worse on the part of churches and ministers so strong and clear a statement of this case is truly encouraging:

"This contradiction takes place, furthermore, when members of their congregations continue to be members of secret societies and the respective pastors neither in a thorough manner bear public testimony against these societies in their preaching, clearly setting forth their antagonism to the Scriptures and to the faith, nor give that instruction and attention to the individual members of the lodge which a proper care for their souls requires.'

Secret societies are among the most successful instrumentalities of Satan to lure souls away from the church and induce them to put their trust in their own natural powers. With the samo unanimity with which all the there theses were adopted, this was accepted as the conviction of Conference. The question whether these Anti-christian associations are to be regarded as religious societies was debated for some time, and on this question there was some differen e of opinion, some maintaining that they should be so considered, others entertaining the conviction that they are societies with religious purposes and tendencies, but not strictly religiousassociations. Butwhatever term may be applied to them in this regard, there was no dissenting voice in regard to the thesis itself, according to which Conference declares its condemnation of all such secret orders, and refuses to have ecclesiastical fellowship with those who decline to oppose them.

SKETCH OF HIS LIFE FROM THE CHRISTIAN REPUBLIC.

After graduating at college he entered at once on the study of Divinity, under the care of his father, and was licensed to preach the Gospel on the first day of Dec., 1860. He exercised his gifts as occasion offered, but continued his studies under his father's directions until interrupted by the events of the war; during the early stages of which he remained quietly at home pursuing his studies, steadily refusing to aid a cause which he did not approve. But the difficulties of his situation grew apace,until he became convinced that he could escape the southern service only by flight or by suffering the uncertain consequences of a flat refusal. A council was held between himself and a number of friends and it was determined to risk the chances of escape. The prospect of success was not flattering. The distance to Tuscumbia, where the Northern troops were in power, was one hundred miles, and the roads were guarded by Southern forces. But the forests were dense and large, the mountains were steep, and the nights were dark, and it was supposed that a little handful of men could, by traveling at night and concealing themselves in the daytime, dodging the cavalry, and by shooting the blood-hounds, make good their escape. On the night of the 11th of July, 1862, at ten o'clock, he, accompanied by a little band set out on the perilous march. This memorable night, was the beginning of a more eventful portion of his history.

It was bitter in its partings, bitter in anxiety for the future. Happy only in that joy which springs from a consciousness of having consulted and obeyed not man but God.

The journey was toilsome and perilous, but it was safely made, and on the first day of August he reached Decatur, Ill., a stranger, tired, hungry and penniless. For three years he was a wanderer, sometimes laboring with his hands, sometimes going south for a while, under the employ of the American Missionary Association, and sometimes teaching and preaching in Illnois

At Byron, Ogle county, Ill., he became acquainted with Miss Mary Furguson, with whom he formed an attach ment, and at her home, on the 24th day of Oct., 1865, they were united in marriage by Rev. J. P. Stoddard, then pastor of the Congregational church at that place.

Soon afterward he returned with his wife to Mississippi, and built and settled on a small farm in the neighborhood in which he was raised. In this quiet home he spent the remainder of his life. On his return from Ill., he was associated with his father as assistant pastor.

After two years he was left in sole charge of the church by the death of its senior pastor, in which position he continued until the voice of the Master was heard saying, Come up higher. The eight years of his pastorate were spent under circumstances of peculiar trial.

While the devotion of his church to him and his principles was complete, he was compelled to stem a fearful tide of opposition from without. The cause of his opposition was twofold.

First, he was devoted to the elevation of the colored race. He gathered them in Sabbath-schools, he encouraged them to come to his Sabbath services. He managed to furnish them with educational privileges, and always favored such means as would extend to them all the rights and privileges of a free government.

The second cause of the outspoken opposition he met was his strong opposition to secret orders. He preached and he prayed, and talked just what he felt. Often it cost him friends whom he had valued, and sometimes his friends trembled for his life, but e believed and therefore he spoke.

In the heat of the conflict, in hopes of doing something to purify the churches and to mould a better public sentiment, he was led to start the Christian Republic. At that time it was the only religious paper in the State; and to the present, the only paper which sees fit to grapple with lodge power.

He had no means at command. He had no backing in public sentiment upon which he could rely for subscribers; but like the stripling of Israel with his sling in hand, he went in the name of the Lord of hosts. On the 14th day of November 1870, he issued the ini ial number of his paper, which is now in the fifth year of its existence. Through how great self-denial he achieved this success, only the records of eternity will show; but every lover of freedom, and every admirer of Christian manhood will say with me, All honor to the man who stood alone and claimed and won the right to think what he pleased and to say what he thought, against the giant power of the lodge.

News of the Week.

The City.

Pending the decision of the Supreme Court on the charter election, the city government have allowed no delay in ousting the Police commissioners. They were locked out of their offices and the Police Marshall, Mr. Dunlap, entered on his duties. Drunken police have been summarily discharged and it is promised that the gamblers shall be forced to stop their business.——By a decision of the county court last week it appears that the city government has attempted to collect its taxes in an illegal manner and must lose about a million dollars in taxes yet unpaid.

General.

The reports of crops in nearly every quarter are highly favorable. In Minnesota and Kansas the harvests of wheat will be unusually large.——The late storms damaged crops and other property to the amount of several million dollars in Indiana, chiefly from flooded rivers. The Wabash has been especially troublesome and the Mississippi, near Memphis, was reported 40 miles wide. The levees are weakening, and it is thought that 80,000 bales of cotton will be destroyed. Last week a tornado visited Knox, Henry and Mercer counties, Ill., doing great damage to buildings and killing several persons. ——While floods prevail in some quarters, the forests of Michigan are dried up and on fire, and there has been a long, dry season in Minnesota.——It is thought that J. B. Ford & Co., late publishers of the Christian Union, will pay about 30 cts. on the dollar.——The trial of the instigators of the Mountain Meadow massacre has been concluded and the case given to the jury who are not expected to agree, eight being Mormons. The Mormon leaders are careful to keep out of the hands of the civil officers and plans for the escape of the parties on trial have been discovered.——An explosion in the government arsenal at Philadelphia last Saturday killed one boy and wounded nineteen others.——It is reported that the government suits against defrauding distillers in the West are to be abandoned. Secretary Bristow desires to push them honestly but the political rings and the President have ordered otherwise.——The whole amount of money in the United States Treasury has been counted on the retirement of Mr. Spinner. Beside the theft of $47,000, discovered a few weeks ago, the deficit is very small and proves the integrity of the old treasurer. The parties who took the large package were arrested last week.

Foreign.

The English Shipping bill passed the House of Commons last week. Honor to Plimsoll!——The celebration of O'Connell's centennial in Dublin, last Friday was attended by a procession of nearly 40,000 people. The Fenians created considerable disturbance, and a banquet in the evening broke up in wild disorder.——The most extensive "lockout" ever known in the cotton mills of England is prevailing. The closing of the mills at Dundee alone threw 12,000 persons out of employment, and this number is expected to be increased to about 30,000.——A dispatch from Bombay says that terrible floods have been experienced in Northwestern India. Large tracts of land are submerged, and houses, crops and other property destroyed. Large loss of life is reported,

The Mysteries of Prayer.

I ask'd for grace to lift me high
Above the world's depressing cares;
God sent me sorrows, with a sigh
I said, "He has not heard my prayers."

I asked for light, that I might see
My path along life's thorny road;
But clouds and darkness shadow'd me
When I expected light from God.

I ask'd for peace, that I might rest
To think my sacred duties o'er;
When lo! such horrors fill'd my breast
As I had never felt before.

"And oh," I cried, "can this be prayer,
Whose plaints the steadfast mountains move?
Can this be heaven's prevailing care—
And, O my God, is this thy love?"

But soon I found that sorrow, worn
As duty's garment, strength supplies,
And out of darkness, meekly born,
Unto the righteous light doth rise.

And soon I found that fears, which stirr'd
My startled soul God's will to do,
On me more real peace conferr'd
Than in life's calm I ever knew.

Then, Lord, in Thy mysterious ways
Lead my dependent spirit on,
And, whensoe'er it kneels and prays,
Teach it to say, "Thy will be done."

Let its one thought, one hope, one prayer,
Thine image seek—Thy glory see;
Let every other wish and care
Be left confidingly to Thee.

Vicious Teaching.

Last Friday evening, we happened to pass the lecture room of one of our large and popular churches, (not Mr. Beecher's,) and we stood at the door for a few moments to hear some remarks being made by a gentleman unknown to us. When we reached the door, the first word that caught our ears were, "Don't attack error! Don't waste your time attacking error! Preach Christ! Don't attack popery! The Roman Catholics believe in Christ! You allow the Unitarians to worship without attacking them, why not allow the Roman Catholics? It is only a waste of time to attack error! Don't attack Unitarianism! Don't attack Mohammedanism! Don't attack Buddhism! Who can think of attacking darkness? If you want to remove darkness, light a candle and carry it into the room. So if you want to remove error; hold up Christ."

This extraordinary speech was delivered by some one who was worshiping with a congregation, whose pastor was sent out years ago to attack Mohammedanism! It appeared to us a most extraordinary speech at a prayer-meeting. If people were to follow such teaching, they would never offer a prayer for the downfall of popery and idolatry, lest they might be considered by their brethren as guilty of wasting time. To say the least of it, the gentleman's illustration was not very apt; for it appears to us that the only way you can assail darkness is by lighting a candle, or lighting the gas. That is an onslaught upon darkness by the proper weapon. If the speaker had been taking a friend into his parlor when there was no light, he would have attacked the darkness at once. He would have said, wait till I get a light; all is darkness here, and you may fall over some piece of furniture, and either injure yourself or something in the room.

That would have been a verbal attack upon the darkness, to be followed immediately by striking a match. Would it have been a waste of time to say to his friend, just wait a moment until I get a light? No. It would have been dutiful and courteous.

So we argue, it is no waste of time to tell the Roman Catholic, Mohammedan and Buddhist of the danger of their darkness, nor to tell others of the evils that are coming upon their fellowmen, because the announcement of these dangers may arouse some to put forth efforts to dispel the darkness now shadowing many lands. It is true, there is a right and a wrong method of assailing error, just as there is a right and wrong method of going into conflict with an enemy. But we would like to know what general would lead his soldiers to battle without telling them what they were fighting against, as well as what they were fighting for. Did Henry of Navarre lead his soldiers to battle without telling them what they were about to fight against? No, no! In the very heat of the famous battle of Arques, and at a moment of great peril to his small but heroic army, he told his men of their danger. Then, for a few moments, far above the noise of battle, there rose the soul-stirring notes of that imperishable war-song of the Huguenots,—the 68th Psalm:

"Let God arise, and scattered let all his enemies be;
And let all those that do him hate before his presence flee.
As smoke is driven, so drive thou them; as fire melts wax away,
Before God's face let wicked men so perish and decay."

This inspired song filled the hearts of Henry's men with opposition to the cruelty of those who wished to trample upon the rights of conscience. His followers rushed impetuously into the hottest of the fight, and victory was theirs. It was by no milk or water speech, such as "don't attack error," that Henry attained his honor, and achieved such victories.

It was not by a policy of silence that Paul planted the church in various places. It was by open and direct assault. Look at his speech delivered on Mar's Hill, recorded in Acts xvii. He says: "Ye men of Athens, I perceive that in all things ye are too superstitious. For as I passed by, and beheld your devotions, I found an altar with this inscription, TO THE UNKNOWN GOD. Whom therefore ye ignorantly worship, him declare I unto you." In his exordium, he assailed their superstition and their ignorance, and then proceeded to hold up Christ the Light. He first showed them their danger, and then pointed out the better way. So ought every one to do who loves the Lord.—Brooklyn Correspondent Chris. Instructor.

There is nothing that interests you that is too little to confide to your God in the solitude of closet-prayer. You may enter into your chamber, and shut your door, and, secure of a kindly hearing, you may tell your Father which is in secret of little things that worry and vex you and retard you in your spiritual life, which are yet so little that you would be ashamed to confess to your nearest friend how great a space they fill up in your heart. Fix it in your mind, that there is no duty however little, which we can do without God's grace, and no temptation, however small, which we can resist without God's grace.—A. H. Boyd.

Sunday in the Family.

Harry and Mary have slept as long as they dared on Sunday morning, generally until after the ring of the late breakfast bell, chiefly because the hated Sunday-school lesson must be crammed before church time. Have you learned your verses? Can you say your hymn? are questions sure to be asked at the table—questions to which must come a hesitating answer. The hour and a half which follows is divided between trying to get dressed and a desperate attempt to escape censure for a non-committed lesson. The going and returning from church is easily borne, because it gives abundant opportunity to satisfy the roving thoughts. But the long sermon—which is not long to most children because of its length, but because it does not interest them—and the chiding by the Sunday-school teacher for an imperfect lesson, and the reproof at home for bringing no report of good recitation, and the dullness of the hour when the parents are entertaining themselves with a semi-religious newspaper, looking up to rebuke departure from Sabbath-day sobriety—these things make Sunday a dull and tiresome day.

Suppose, now, that mother and father devoted a part of the week-time to the study of the Sunday lesson with the children. They ought to study the Bible together regularly on their own account, and if they do so, will find it all the easier to make the lesson passage interesting to Harry and Mary. But on no account should the learning of the lesson be deferred to Sunday morning. That makes hurry and confusion inevitable; it generally insures a poor-learned lesson, and creates an unpleasant association for the opening part of what should be a joyful, restful day. The regulations of the family should also be such as to avoid too much "preparation for church" between breakfast and service time. When the key-note of Sabbath occupation is struck low in the morning, it will be hard to raise the music of the heart to a higher pitch during the day. If dressing fills the time until 10 o'clock, the child will not go to church prepared to consider higher themes, however simply presented. Jackets and trousers, bonnets, ribbons and gloves, new shoes and old—these have absorbed the time and thought so much that the natural transition will easily be to the jackets, bonnets and ribbons in the neighboring pews. Let there be some time before morning worship for all to be together to engage in a common exercise that will turn the thoughts in a better direction. It is a good habit for the parents to recount the goodness of God through the week in relation to specific events. A visit from a friend, a recovery from sickness, an escape from injury or loss, lessons well learned at school, new acquaintances made, a bad habit partly overcome—these and a hundred other matters such as occur in daily experience, no matter how trifling, can be made the text for conversation that will interest the children and be profitable as well. It is not difficult in this way to introduce the habit of applying Scripture passages to the common experiences of life, and on looking for comfort and guidance in little things to the Word of God. The surest way of fostering those family confidences, which are the delight of home, is to connect them with simple religious conversation. By that we do not mean theology or formal exhortation, such as are appropriate to prayer-meetings, but loving suggestions of faults and mistakes, and of promises and Scriptural illustrations of them. If the hour before service be spent in this way, and the Sunday lesson has been already well learned, the first half of Sunday is likely to be happily spent; and that is more than half the battle. —Ex.

China in America.

I went recently with one of our missionaries through the heart of the Chinese quarter. One gets but a superficial idea of heathenism by walking along the streets and looking into the shops. To comprehend fully the character and life of the Celestials it is necessary to go into the narrow courts and alleys, to climb by rickety stairways up to the attics and lofts, to thread dark and narrow passages. It is not safe for a stranger to do this alone. But my guide knew the Chinamen thoroughly, and they knew him. He had spent many years in China, and says that our Chinese quarter is as oriental as any part of Canton. The heathen are just as filthy and vile here as they are at home. No pen can portray life as we saw it in those dark and narrow places. The crowding, the squalor, the sallow, opium-bleached faces, the emaciated forms, the lusterless eyes, the sad, almost despairing looks, form a picture that will haunt me for years. I felt that I was in a Lazar House, in the midst of lepers, that the air was heavy with the miasma of sin, and I was glad to get out into the sunshine again. How terrible is the condition of these poor Chinamen. They have not much comfort even in this world, and no hope beyond the grave. Oh, how they need the Gospel! Some of them are embracing it. Last Sabbath evening eight Chinamen were received into the church connected with our Presbyterian Mission in this city. Some of the converts have to endure a great deal of persecution from their fellow-countrymen. The wealthier Chinamen are opposed to Christianity. They want to keep the coolies ignorant so that they can control them. Hence they try to make idolatry as attractive as possible. One of the great commercial companies, the Hop Wo, has recently fitted up a splendid temple on Clay street, importing for it brass work in relief, bronzes and richly embroidered silk canopies and curtains at an expense of $30,000. This temple is much more richly fitted up than the one I described in a previous letter. It has only one idol in it—the god of war. But it has splendid representations in brass of the mythology of China.

These brass carvings are not only elaborate, but display a great deal of artistic skill. The figures of birds, beasts, men and gods are numerous, and are grouped in processions and in combats. The best Chinese scholars seem to know but little of the origin or meaning of these brazen tablets. But the ignorant regard them with superstitious veneration.

The Chinese gods all have long beards, and yet nearly all the Chinamen we meet are as beardless as our American Indians. I inquired about this of a missionary, and he told me that no Chinaman is permitted to wear a moustache until he is forty years old, or to wear a beard until he is sixty. The gods being all of course more than sixty years old are bearded. It is a sign of their age and claim to be venerated. The Chinese have great respect for age. A man must obey his parents as long as they live, and he must worship them after they are dead. He marries a wife not to be a help-meet to himself, but to wait on his aged father and mother. Daughters-in-law are the veriest drudges in China. There are men here who have wives in China. When asked, "Why don't you bring your wife over here?" they reply, "She mustee stay and take care of my father and mother."—San Francisco Correspondence of Herald and Presbyter.

The Bible in Russia.

Nearly all the civil and religious reforms in Russia may be traced to the publication and distribution of the Bible in the Russian vernacular. A correspondent of the Eglise Libre states that in 1820 an edition in the language of the people was prepared by the Russian Bible Society; but the translation was found to be defective, and the edition was therefore suppressed. Thirty years passed away without further action, until the accession of Alexander II., surnamed the "Liberator," brought an awakening of desire and effort. The Word of God was at once placed within the comprehension and reach of the people by a large number of editions, authorized and sent out by the presses of the synod which governs the Russian church. Bible societies were immediately formed for the purpose of scattering the Gospel in all parts of the Empire. Two illustrations will suffice to show how deeply engaged the followers of Christ are in the work of spreading the know ledge of Jesus throughout that land.

A priest who had the charge of religious instruction in a military school of St. Petersburg, started a Bible Society among his pupils, and succeeded in getting them heartily interested in the work. When the young officers came to be dispersed by their service through all the extent of countries under Russian rule, from the confines of China to those of Germany, still remaining members of the society by a special edict of the emperor, wherever they went they distributed the Bible, collected contributions for its diffusion, enrolled new members, went to the doors of the churches with the Gospel, attended the numerous fairs and fetes of the country, entered inns and cafes, everywhere bearing the Word of Life, to all who were able to buy, or as a gift to the poor. Their reports full of encouragement and joy, reveal the fact that the people are eager for the Word of God.

The ladies of Moscow have formed a society for the distribution of the Scriptures in the valley of the Volga. During the summer season they take their stations on the large steamers which ply up and down this river, which, as is well known, is the longest of Europe, and waters the most fertile and populous parts of Russia. Here they spread the Word among the crowds of passengers which are continually renewed. Others station themselves in the villages on its banks, until their supplies are exhausted.

In like manner the few lines of railway are improved by Christian ladies, who give themselves to the work of attending in the waiting rooms of the stations, offering the Gospel of salvation to those who come and go. By these and many similar means a network of societies extends over the Empire to its most remote bounds, whose aim is to secure a speedy and wide circulation of the Bible.—Ex.

Montezuma's Table.

Herbert Bancroft writes in his "Montezuma": The king took his meals alone in one of the largest halls of the palace. If the weather was cold a fire was kindled with a kind of charcoal made of the bark of trees which emitted no smoke, but threw out a delicious perfume; and that his majesty might suffer no inconvenience from the heat, a screen ornamented with gold, and carved with figures of the idols, was placed between his person and the fire. He was sitting upon a low leather cushion, upon which were thrown various soft skins, and his table was of similar description, except that it was larger and rather higher, and was furnished with white cotton cloths of the finest ware of Chulula, and many of the goblets were of gold and silver, or fashioned of beautiful shells. He is said to have possessed a complete service of solid gold, but as it was considered beneath a king's dignity to use anything at the table twice, Montezuma, with all his extravagance, was obliged to keep his costly dinner-set in the temple. The bill of fare comprised everything edible of fish, flesh and fowl, that could be procured in the empire or imported from beyond it. Relays of couriers were employed in bringing delicacies from afar, as the royal table was every day supplied with fresh fish brought without the modern aids of ice and air-tight packing from a seacoast more than 100 miles distant, by a road passing through a tropical climate, we may form some idea of the speed with which these couriers travveled. There were cunning cooks among the Aztecs, and at these extravagant meals there was almost as much variety in the cooking as in the matter cooked. Sahagun gives a most formidable list of roast, stewed, and boiled dishes of meats, fish and poultry, seasoned with many kinds of herbs, of which, however, the most frequently mentioned is chile. He further describes many kinds of bread, all bearing a more or less close resemblance to the modern Mexican tortilla, and all most tremendously named. Imagine, for instance, when one wished a piece of bread, having to ask one's neighbor to be good enough to pass the totauquitlaxcallilaquelpacholli. Then there were tamales of all kinds, and many other curious messes, such as frog-spawn, and stewed ants cooked with chile; but more loathsome to us than such as these, and strangest of all compounds that went to make up their royal carte, was one highly savored and probably savory smelling dish, so exquisitely prepared that its principal ingredient was completely disguised, and yet that ingredient was nothing else than human flesh.

Children's Corner.

A Parable.

I held in my hand a little dry tree, an infant hemlock. Had it lived a century it might have towered up above all the forest, and held up its head in majesty. But it grew on a sort of a bog, and a muskrat, digging his hole under it, bit off its roots, and it was dead. It was full of limbs and knots and gnarls, and I felt curious to know how it happened that it was so.

"Poor fellow! If you had all these limbs and knots to support, I don't wonder you died."

"And with my roots which were my mouths with which to feed, all cut off, too!"

"Yes, but where do all these ugly limbs come from?" said I.

"Just where all ugly things come from," said he. "I am pretty much like you men! Find out where my limbs come from, and you will find where all human sins come from."

"I'll take you at your word, sir."

So I took out my knife and peeled off all the bark. But the limbs and the knots were left.

"You must go deeper than that, sir."

So I began to split and take off layer of wood after layer. But all the knots were there.

"Deeper still," said the dry stick.

Then I split it all down to the heart, taking it all off and separating it. The heart was laid bare; it looked like a small rod, about six feet long, and perhaps an inch through the end. Ah! and I was now surprised to see that every limb and knot and gnarl started in the heart! Every one was there, and every one grew out of the heart. The germ of the starting-point of each one was the center of the heart.—Selected.

A Load of Bricks.

"See what I will do in the morning!" So thought a little boy to himself, as he lay in his snug little bed, about ready to fall asleep. He had heard his father, the minister and the neighbors talk a great deal about a new church; a long time he had heard that one ought to be built, long enough it seemed to him to build one, but still nothing was done. In fact he had heard it said lately that maybe they would not have a new church after all. Perhaps he did not like the old meeting-house, and fancied he should like to go to church if they had a new one; at all events he gave his mind to the subject and resolved to do something. The next morning he rose very early, intent on carrying his plan into execution. Whether he consulted with any one or not we do not know, but we doubt not he had learned the verse, "Let not your left hand know what your right hand doeth," and thought it best to go by himself, believing that he was doing right. Very happy he felt as he trudged along to the minister's house, although when he reached the door it was so early that the good doctor had not come down stairs. Soon, however, he appeared, and his youthful parishioner delivered to him a load of bricks which he "had brought to built the new church with." In a wheelbarrow three times the size of the little boy lay two bricks, the beginning of the new church, and as he returned to his home, cheered by the kind words of his pastor, we are sure that he felt that doing was better than talking. As the doctor went into the street, he said to every one he met: "The church will be built; the first load of bricks is on the ground;" and before our little hero was much older, he had the pleasure of seeing the church finished which he had begun.

How Languages Grow.

A lady who lives away in Washington Territory, upon the Skokomish Indian Reservation, sends this interesting description of how languages grow:

"Our language, Webster says, has many thousand words in it, and it is hundreds of years old, so that it is only as we get older and study the elements of the English language that we understand about its formation; but here is a language with only two or three hundred words, and about forty years old—so small and young that we can almost see it grow.

The language does not belong to any single tribe of Indians, although it is understood by most of the tribes in Oregon and Washington. It was invented by the traders and trappers who first came to this country, as there were so many tribes who talked different languages that they found it almost impossible to learn them all. It is made up partly of French words, as some of the traders were French, partly of English words, with some words from different Indian languages and some natural sounds.

They call the sound made by the rattle of a wagon a tchick-tchick; and a watch is naturally called a tik-tik.

Hoh-hoh, pronounced as we do when we cough, means to cough; and a great noise is poh. But when anything smells unpleasantly it is pin-pin, as many not Indians often say. A duck is a kweh-kweh, as a duck says it. Just so, we are told, some of our English words came into use, as buzz, whiz, and hiss.

There is no grammar to this language. The only book we have is a small dictionary. There are nouns, but there are no plurals to learn, as man, men; duck, ducks; goose, geese; but we say, one man, three man, five duck, or many goose.

There are some verbs, but not many, and none to decline. It is not, 'I see, you see, he sees; I saw, they shall see;' but 'I see, he see; I see a long time ago, they see to-morrow.' Then, as there are but few words, we get along without some which you use every day. There is no verb to be, so hard to learn, no am, are, was, shall be. Instead of saying, 'Where is John?' or 'I will be there to-morrow,' we say, 'Where John?' and 'I there to-morrow.'

Of course there are no hard rules of syntax to learn where the noun must agree with its verb, or the adjective with its noun, no hard words to understand as adjuncts, and the like. But when a person begins to learn to talk the language it seems as if a few rules and plurals of nouns and verbs to decline would be a great help, for it seems as if it were all mixed up and must be picked out in some way, but one hardly knows how. Indeed, those who know it best often find it difficult to understand each other, and the Indians will not use it among themselves when they can help it; only when they wish to converse with Indians of other tribes or with the whites".—Advance.

—A correspondent of the New York Witness says that the conception of the Pan-Presbyterian Confederation originated with Mr. Geo. H. —Rev. E. M. Cravath Field Secretary of the American Missionary Association, has resigned that office and accepted the Presidency of Fisk University. The Fellowship says of him: "With the planning and executing ability of a military general, he united the devotion and sacrificing spirit of the missionary. Our schools and churches, the South over, in their location and equipments reflect largely his wisdom and speak his praise. The Association loses a valuable counselor and an efficient worker." Mr. Cravath is son of the late Oren Cravath of Minnesota.

—At the Commencement of Oberlin College the missionary address on August 1st was given by Rev. Cyrus Hamlin, D. D., Pres. Roberts College, Constantinople, Turkey. —Bishop Coxe, of the Diocese of Western New York, in a sermon at Rochester, spoke disapprovingly of the aims of persons who desire the express recognition of God in the National Constitution. He also argued in favor of retaining the Bible in the public schools on the ground of its influence as a conservator of morals and its identity with the traditions and institutions of the Anglo-Saxon race.

—It would appear that there are fifty-nine dioceses in the Russian Empire, besides one in North America. They are administered by three Metropolitans, nineteen Arch bishops, and thirty-five bishops. The number of coadjutors amounts to twenty-seven. There are 397 monasteries, containing 4678 monks and 4212 lay brethren; also 130 convents, inhabited by 3961 regular nuns, 10,519 temporary inmates. There were in 1873, within the limits of the Empire, 37,636 churches and 13,282 chapels; 404 new churches and 331 new chapels were constructed during the year. The clergy were composed of 1075 archpriests, 35,919 priests, 12, 372 deacons, 54,708 unordained clerks and readers. The collections made during the year by the clergy for charitable and religious purposes produced the sum of 10,728,546 roubles, or nearly $7,000,000.

—The Royal family of England have their religion pretty well divided up among the various churches, according to the following account: "Queen Victoria is the legal head of the Episcopal church of England and the Presbyterian church of Scotland. When she is in England her Presbyterianism is technically called 'dissent,' and when she re-crosses the Tweed into Scotland her Episcopalianism becomes 'dissent' there. She has a morbid hatred of ritualism. The Prince of Wales is inclined to ritualistic ceremonies, whilst his elder sister, the Princess of Germany, is a Lutheran; his brother-in-law, Lord Lorne, a Presbyterian; another brother in-law, the Prince Imperial of Prussia is a Protestant Lutheran; a sister-in-law, the Duchess of Edinburgh, is a Greek Catholic; her husband is a Low Church Episcopalian; the other brothers and sisters are Episcopalians and Presbyterians by turn—their particular creed depends upon their residence for the time being. The Princess of Wales is naturally bewildered at the manifold religions of her royal relations, and clings to the faith she was taught in Denmark."

—Rev. W. J. Shuey, the United Brethern publishing agent at Dayton, Ohio, has made his final report of funds and goods received by him and disbursed among the sufferers by grasshopper famine by the church conferences. The whole amount of cash is 8,800, in goods $750.

—Rev. Andrew McCartney, who has lately returned from Great Britain, says that he was much "disgusted with the almost universal habit of smoking and drinking which" is met "almost everywhere, in public and private." Speaking of the position of his church (United Presbyterian) on certain moral questions, he says: "Her testimony against secret societies and rum traffic, as on the slavery question, will yet be acknowledged to be right." So it will; and the Lord hasten the day.—Telescope.

Hon. James B. Walker.

THE SEVENTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF THE VETERAN AUTHOR, TEACHER, AND EDITOR.

For a few years past this well-known author of valuable religious works, and a pioneer minister and editor, has been filling, as the closing labor of a long and useful life, the pastorate of the Congregational church at Wheaton College. Thursday, July 29, was the anniversary of his birth, he being on that day 70 years of age. Realizing for some time past that he was approaching the period of life when his work must close, he, some weeks ago, resigned his position as pastor of the church. Unlike the archbishop in "Gil Blas," he did not employ a secretary to give him the warning, or to himself await the evidence of failing faculties, and unheed both; but has gracefully retired from public life while yet his mind is fresh and vigorous. The ladies and friends in the church and congregation bethought this 70th birthday the fitting occasion to give some expression of their appreciation of the value of that long and useful life. They therefore invited the public to assemble in the College hall, on Thursday evening for that purpose. Friends and associates of the venerable doctor from a distance were invited and were present. It had been arranged so that it was in part a surprise to Mr. Walker. A large number of citizens of the town and students of Wheaton College with the invited guests assembled at the hall early on Thursday evening. At the opening of the exercises Dr. Walker was called out, and presented, as a testimonial of the regard of his numerous friends, with a costly secretary of black walnut, inlaid with ornamental woods, which had been purchased by their mutual contributions, as the gift of his friends. It was tendered through Professor Webster, who made an elegant presentation speech. Mr. Walker was much affected and taken by surprise, and with thanks reserved his response for the more formal proceedings at the close. The numerous audience then partook of refreshments that had been bounteously provided, and enjoyed a sociable in the hall for half an hour, when, as was previously announced, at 8 o'clock, they repaired to the College chapel to listen to an address from Dr. Walker. It was understood, as he had been especially requested so to do, that he would review the history of his public labors. The chapel was well filled with attentive listeners, the most of whom were his neighbors and congregation, who had been the recipients of his last labors, and by those who had been familiar with his long career of public work as an author, an editor, a preacher, and as a public teacher in connection with the institutions of learning in the West. He came before the audience with frame enfeebled by age, but with a mind of youthful vigor, and as a venerable father would talk to his children by the fireside he told them in simple and eloquent language, the story of his life. He said he realized the condition of the period of his life, that the powers of his body and mind would naturally fail at this time, but he was not conscious of a weakening of his mind, but in his body he felt tired.

It was an occasion in which personality was a necessity, and egotism added zest and richness to the narrative. For two hours he stood before his friends and laid open to them his interior life, his feelings, his experience, his mistakes and his hopes, and the estimate he himself was able to put upon his own public labors. Autobiography is the most profitable of all studies, as it teaches self-knowledge. From the remarks made and the facts derived from personal acquaintance, we are able to give the following brief biographical sketch.

James B. Walker was born at Philadelphia, July 20, 1805. His parents were in connection with the denomination of Friends, from whom he has derived much of his religious sentiment, though in a later period of his life he came under the influence of the rigid Scotch Presbyterians. His father died while he was an infant. His mother married a second time, and when a small child the family removed to Pittsburgh. He described naively the primitive life of his childhood on the farm, where, as was the custom of the times, their rude labor supplied all their temporal wants, to the spinning and manufacturing of clothing from flax and wool. He lived at different times with his uncle and grandfather. He worked in a nail factory in Pittsburgh at the age of twelve; afterward clerked for his uncle in a small town on the border of civilization, near the western boundary of Virginia, where he saw much of that low and barbarous life that is found on the confines of slavery and ignorance. His schoolmaster was a pugilistic bully. Returning to Pittsburgh, and the time coming when he should select a trade or profession, he chose the one so prolific in the development of genius (as did Franklin, Greeley and Garrison), the profession of a printer, serving his time in the office of the Pittsburgh Gazette, the first newspaper printed west of the mountains. Having served out his time of four years, and still being under age, he went to his native city, Philadelphia, and thus at the outset, gained something of the experience of the mountain-tramping printer. Thence he proceeded, Greeley-like, to New York, and obtained employment in the office of the celebrated Jew publisher, Mordecai M. Noah. Noah's newspaper being transferred, he was again cast afloat, penniless and friendless. He left New York a pilgrim in search of fortune, and crossed to Hoboken, and on a cold, stormy day took the great road, bordered with the Lombardy poplars, that led on through New Jersey toward Albany. He was in search of anything by which he might earn his living. A gentleman overtook him on the road, of whom he made inquiry for employment, and through whom at the next village he was brought in contact with one of the school committee men, and he was employed as a schoolmaster. He had had but little experience in schools or school-books, as his education had been mainly at the counter and the printer's case, and therefore not fitted to pass an examination as a teacher, but examinations not being the order of the times, he got the school; and, studying up the lessons in advance, he made a successful schoolmaster; and Dr. Walker declared that this was the most profitable to him of all the processes of his school education.

Having procured the means to prosecute his pilgrimage, he returned to Pittsburgh, and thence, after working as a printer for a time, he proceeded to Ravenna, and became the editor and publisher of the Western Courier, the first newspaper published in Portage county, Ohio. He was here a politician, and wrote the first address in favor of Jackson for the Presidency published in Ohio. He remained a Jackson politician until Jackson himself abandoned the Jackson platform. Here he got his first lesson in politics, that disgusted him in the maturity of his life, with the whole party machinery. He commenced the study of the law while editing and printing this paper. Feeling, as Horace Greeley did, the need of a classical education, and being ambitious to fill the highest position in the profession, he sold his paper and at the age of 23 went to Hudson College. Here he paid his way by labor. He had been a skeptic, though having reverence for the Divine Being, and often appealing to Him to shield and instruct him. In college he was converted, and he related a most remarkable experience. He then abandoned the profession of the law for a higher one, and here studied for the ministry. He first preached at Akron, where he built and filled a church with a large congregation completing the form of the work. In the interim he held an appointment of a professorship in a college at Lawrenceburg, and on the only Sunday he stayed in the town he heard Henry Ward Beecher preach his first sermon.

He accepted this appointment of professorship, hoping that it might enlarge his sphere of usefulness, but he was at least conscious that he was governed somewhat by ambitious feelings. His visit to Lawrenceburg, where, leaving his church at Akron, he went to fill the chair in the institution, was attended with disappointments and disasters. The college was an insignificant affair, through which exploded the bubble of his ambition. His experience on the journey, with the storms and floods and other calamities, led him to feel like a fugitive Jonah, and to fear that the Lord had determined to kill him. He vowed to the Lord that if he would permit him to get back to his forsaken church at Akron, he would attend to the discharge of known duty, and not be going in the vain pursuit of the ambition of the world. He was received gladly by his people, and was prospered still further on his church ministry.

It was at this time that his mind was first occupied with the great work which has given him a wide reputation as an author, both in this country and in England, "The Philosophy of the Plan of Salvation." By advice of Professor Stowe, who had seen some of the advance chapters, he was induced to go to Lane Seminary, where he could have access to public libraries and consult authors as to the originality of the main thought that has given character to that book. He sought a position near Cincinnati, where he might preach, and at the same time study and write up his book. He settled at New Richmond, Ind., where a most remarkable revival took place, in which nearly the whole town were converted. He was aided in his preaching by Dr. R. W. Patterson, of Chicago, at that time a student at Lane Seminary. During this period the book was finished, and, Dr. Stowe writing the introduction to it, it was printed. It has passed through numerous editions, both in this country and in England, and has become an indispensable standard theological publication.

The "Philosophy of the Plan of Salvation," gave Mr. Walker, as the book became gradually known, the reputation of a great author; is was to the writer what Uncle Tom's Cabin was to Mrs. Stowe. It ranks with the text books, such as Butler's Analogy, Paley's Evidence, Nelson's Inquiry, etc. The German critics who are familiar with its name pronounce it one of the greatest of American books. Hugh Miller says he would not hesitate to place it by the side of Butler's Analogy, "as a specimen of close and unanswerable reasoning." As has been often the case, with a remarkable production, the originality of the book has been disputed by those who were jealous of its popularity. Mr. Walker did not speak of this circumstance in his address; so it is very proper to allude to it in this connection. There are those who believe that Shakspere did not write his own plays. But there is no evidence that any other person could have written them. No person who is familiar with Dr. Walker's preaching could doubt but that he alone could have written the Philosophy of the Plan of Salvation. He constantly preaches the same logic; and a like train of close reasoning and analysis runs through all his labored literary productions. It is conclusive that Mr. Walker made the book or the book made Walker.

This Philosophy was followed nine years later by another important work, the "Doctrine of the Holy Spirit,' which was published after Mr. Walker took up his residence in Chicago. He is the author of five books, one a volume of poetry. The two former have been published in England in repeated editions; and have been translated into other languages. Mr. Walker has made two voyages to England, to superintend the bringing out of his books in that country. He was there at the breaking out of the war of the rebellion, and did the country good service, in endeavoring to dissipate the moral mist that was settling down in mother England with her natural fogs, in regard to the union and slavery question involved in the war.

Through the solicitation of Dr. Lyman Beecher, Pres. Blanchard, and others, Dr. Walker again went into editorial life, and published the first religious newspaper of his denomination in the West at Cincinnati, the Watchman of the Valley. He retired from this paper to take charge of an important church at Mansfield, which in time became one of the largest churches of the State. While in this position, about the year 1846, he was invited by the Revs. Patterson and Bascom, Deas. Philo Carpenter, B. W. Raymond, Joseph Johnston, and other prominent men of the church, to come to Chicago and publish a religious newspaper in the interest of the Presbyterian and Congregational denominations from which invitation, came the Herald of the Prairie. This paper in time he sold to Messrs. Bross & Wight, which, in transition stages became the Congregational Herald and the Advance. While in Chicago he was also the pastor of the Third Presbyterian Church, now one of the largest and most flourishing churches of the denomination in the West. Rev. Abbot E. Kittredge is the present pastor.

In his various newspapers, (and he was ever a pioneer in the editorial as well as in the ministerial profession) which were denominational in support of the Presbyterian and Congregational systems, he gave countenance to all measures of a moral and Christian reform. He was ever earnest in the cause of popular education, energetically supported the temperance movement and moderately but constantly sustained the anti-slavery cause, and opposed the existence of oath-bound secret societies.

Dr. Walker invested in early times in Chicago property which has become valuable, and given him an income and means with which to carry out some large schemes of usefulness. From Chicago he returned to Mansfield, where he carried on still higher the prosperity of the church which he had founded, and while there aided the Rev. Edward Smith to start a Wesleyan newspaper and Book Concern.

Mr. Walker next undertook an important enterprise, using his own means liberally and in connection with others in purchasing many thousand acres of wild land in Northern Michigan, where they organized a county, and commenced the town of Benzonia, and there founded a college for the education of the people on the most liberal and advanced principles of reform. Mr. Walker has consecrated 1,500 acres and other property to the endowment of this college, now in its infant state.

While residing in this wooden region of Michigan, the emergencies of the country again brought him into political life. He had while a young man, assumed the responsibilities of citizenship, in supporting Andrew Jackson for the Presidency. He early saw the apostacy in which the political partisans had entered—saw its progress in moral degradation and in its alliance with slavery, till it legitimately ripened in rebellion. From the long sleep in which the good men of the country had indulged, while the enemy was sowing the seeds of ruin, he awoke with hundreds of thousands of others, to become an active politician to save the country, and was of course a Lincoln Republican. As such he was elected to the Senate of Michigan. While there he was the author of the present general school law of that State.

Realizing that the period of rest was fast hastening upon him, he left Benzonia about four years ago, and its arduous responsibilities, and took the position of pastor of the church at Wheaton College, where he would be surrounded by sympathizing friends and his last days made sweet in a work in which there was mutual co-operation. From this and all other active work he has now retired, giving to his confidential friends, as he did on his seventieth birthday, the story of his eventful and useful life, of which the foregoing is but a brief and feeble sketch.

—The statement sometimes made in these columns, that the society of Good Templars had not its most important mission in furthering the temperance reform, is corroborated by the Watchword, an organ, which hopes "the day will never come when the order as such will be unqualifiedly committed to any political party; for from that day will date the downfall of the order." Now in several of the States encouraging efforts have been made politically against the rum traffic, in which temperance men of all classes, secret and anti-secret, have joined, forgetting all issues but one—temperance. This item, however, shows that the order has some object beside the great reform on which it has been borne into a kind of popularity, namely, self-preservation. But what is the Good Templar order good for when temperance principles prevail, but a feeder to lodges of more abominable nature?

A bill has been introduced into the Nebraska Legislature, making it a misdemeanor punishable by fine and imprisonment, to sell any spirituous liquors adulterated by strichnine, strontia, sugar of lead, or any other poisonous agent.

Sunlight.

The sun is, as we all know, the great fountain of life to all the world. Byron's dream of darkness gives but a faint picture of the possible reality if the sun were indeed extinguished. Within a week, under the ardent rays of the day god, in what tints of glowing green the earth has arrayed herself—forest and meadow, garden and pasture are clothed with infinite beauty. The most potent element in this transformation is the actinic or chemical ray. 'Tis principally this which opens the buds, develops, matures, and ripens the luscious fruits. The light and heat which we receive from the sun are important, but without the chemical ray they would be powerless to give us the ample harvest.

Sunlight is an abundant source of health, almost equally preservative and curative in its effects. No apartment thrown open to the free visitation of this wonderful agent, but will be made more wholesome and cheery thereby. Patients kept in sunless rooms have fewer chances for recovery than those who bask in the life-giving ray. The shady side of any street is the sickly side. And yet, much as these facts have been enlarged and dwelt upon, how many people there are in city and country who persist in keeping their shutters closed, their shades drawn down, and excluding by all possible aid of Venetian blinds of linen, of lace, and of damask, the searching gaze of this great purifier. Most house-keepers are afraid of flies and therefore keep their rooms dark; others, unaware of the sanitary powers of sunlight, are fully alive to its bleaching properties, and to keep their carpets and reps and brocatelles unfaded, permit their faces to be blanched, their blood to be sluggish and thin and cold, and their nervous systems to go without the powerful magnetism of sunshine. At certainly a not greater expenditure than invalids often reconcile themselves to in order to regain health may flies be kept out and bleaching prevented, and yet the sunlight be permitted to enter the house. Fly nets are not very expensive. If frames are fitted to the windows, any housekeeper may tack netting on them and so be rid of all the insect-brood that infest the summer months. Wire nets once made are permanent and need no renewal. Furniture covers may be made of American cretonne which costs but 12 cents a yard. Carpets may be replaced with matting or covered with linen crumb-cloths. All this will not cost as much as a trip to Saratoga or even the attendance of a physician in a long illness. If it did, the results would trebly make good all expenditures. Health and vigor cannot be valued in dollars and cents.

A recent lecturer on health topics earnestly recommends basking out of doors in the direct rays of the sun, whether on the sea-shore or far inland. With one's eyes shaded by an umbrella and a blanket between the person and the ground she would have our pallid city women test the potency of the sun cure, sure that they would be able to take up the burden of life on their return to paved streets with health and strength wonderfully augmented.

House plants are, in the main, tropic plants. They cannot endure the cold, but they rejoice in the fierce midsummer heats, and though, when transplanted to the open bed, they may lose something of their delicacy of tint, we rejoice in their vigor and added growth far more than we regret what they have lost. Let us transplant our human house plants into the open air-give them the free, bright, merry sunshine, let them grow brown and freck, led if need be, but in their bounding blood, in their healthful glow, in the quickened activity of brain and muscle, ample will be amends for conventional losses. If we cannot place them immediately under the sky, by open doors and windows we can bring the sky with its splendors and its health the house and let it work out fully its mission of good.—N. Y. Tribune.

Farm and Garden.

"Hoe out the Row."—In my first experience at hoeing corn and potatoes, I was much inclined, like most boys, to give the last hill in the row "a lick and a promise," instead of finishing it up in a workman-like manner, with one or two clean cuts of the hoe into the sod or weeds beyond. Well do I remember the look my father gave me at this attempt at slighting my work, as well as his words which were, "Boy, always hoe out your row." I have never forgotten the lesson learned so long ago, and it frequently comes to mind as I see the grass and weeds crowding the first hills around the edges of the corn or potato field in summer. These are pretty sure signs that somebody has failed to hoe out his row. The neglected fence corners, half-plowed headlands, deep, barren, dead furrows to be seen upon thousands of farms, in whatever direction we may travel, show plainly enough that the owners or occupants were never taught and compelled to "hoe out their row."

But the negligent habit acquired when young, of never hoeing out the row, crops out nowhere more conspicuously with the man, than in the treatment of the ground about his home. First of all, if he receive proper instructions in his younger days, there will be a grass plot about the house, and through this, or alongside, walks and a carriage way, in neither of which will grass or weeds be permitted to grow. I know that some farmers will say that this is all nonsense, and so is blacking your boots and putting on a stiff collar when you go to church on Sunday. No one ever puts on such a thing as Sunday clothes in hot weather for comfort, but it is all for the looks; and that is just what folks clean up their walks and trim the edges of the grass for. A little polish on a pair of boots makes a wonderful difference in the appearance of the man who wears them, just as a little hoeing and trimming of the carriage way and walks about the house reflects beneficially upon all surrounding objects. In addition to the looks, a well-defined walk or carriage road has a wonderful effect upon the morals and habits of both mankind and animal kind that frequent them.—Rural New Yorker.

Flies on Horses.—A French chemist states, in an European journal, that a little concentrated oil of laurel applied to the parts where flies usually settle on horses, will prevent their being tormented. The oil is said to be slightly stimulating, and tends to keep the hair in good condition. A solution of two ounces of assafoetida in a pint of vinegar is also said to be effectual, since the strong odor effectually prevents flies settling on horses that have been washed with it. We should not care, however, to have our horses smelling of the foetid gum.

A strong decoction of the leaves of the black walnut is recommended as a remedy against flies on horses. It has no bad odor, and is innocent, but, so far as our experience goes, there is no cheaper or more comfortable protection for horses, than thin sheets of sleazy tow or linen. They are cheap, and every farmer who has them not, should immediately procure them.

Levington's Key to Masonry.

This is Rev. Mr. Levington's last, and in the judgment of its author, best work on Masonry. The contents of the first chapter are as follows:

The contents of the Eleventh chapter are thus startling:

Postage on the Cynosure.

THE POSTAGE ON THE CYNOSURE MUST BE PAID AT CHICAGO. It is twenty cents a year.

The cost of postage now depends entirely on the size and weight, and therefore some smaller papers charge but fifteen cents; and others about the size of the Cynosure charge twenty-five cents a year for postage.

If the subscription price of the CYNOSURE was $2.50 or $3.00 a year, the price of many religious papers containing no more reading matter, we might afford to pay the postage ourselves, but at $2.00 a year we cannot do this with our present Subscription list.

Therefore let all send the postage, 20 cents a year, 10 cents for half a year with their renewals.

The commission on one new subscription for a year will pay the postage on your own and the new subscriber's paper. We would rather have the postage paid by commissions than in any other way.

When postage is not paid we shall have to shorten the time of subscription sufficiently to pay it.

TERMS FOR THE CYNOSURE.

Topics of the Time.

At the close of the war, when the chief of the slavery rebellion had been caught scudding away in petticoats, it was barbarously proposed by some who thought immediate hanging too lenient a process, to exhibit the captured Mephistopheles caged through the country. It has remained for the enterprising directors of the Winnebago County Agricultural Society, Illinois, to carry out this plan in a modified form. Realizing the money to be made in a sensation, they invited Jeff. Davis to speak at the approaching fair and received a favorable reply which was with much ado and some haste heralded through the country. But they had not reckoned on a fire in the rear. Old soldiers remembered their blood poured out on Southern fields; fathers and mothers thought on the son starved at Libby and Andersonville, and all cried out at the insult. Manufacturers and farmers resolved to quit the fair if Jeff. Davis was to be a competing attraction. And so the sensation is lost. But is the protest of the farmers reasonable? Doubtless, for if any fact can be proved it is that Jeff Davis was partner and principal in great crimes against the government and against its people, North and South. That a loose and dangerous policy has deluded the government to release him, is not only not an act of magnanimity, it is to turn aside the punishment due to treason and murder upon other and probably innocent persons.

Mr. William Welsh, the first chairman of the first board of Indian peace commissioners has written a letter to Prof. Marsh, upholding his attacks on the Interior Department, and another to the President, reviewing the management of the Indian bureau by Secretary Delano and Assistant-secretary Cowan in no sparing terms. The plain honesty of these letters cannot fail to make an impression. The facts which came under the notice of the first board, and their resignation forced by the treacherous management of the Interior department are well attested by such members of it as J. V. Farwell of Chicago, Wm. E. Dodge of New York, Geo. H. Stuart of Philadelphia and Felix R. Brunot of Pittsburgh. These letters are in reply to "libelous attacks" from Gen. Cowan aimed to weaken Prof. Marsh's testimony and impugning the character of officers of the first board. On the other hand the present board, headed by Gen. Clinton B. Fisk has addressed the Christian public in behalf of the present Indian policy, affirming its humanity and success, and denying the knowledge of any "rings," other than those "seen in connection with the letting of all large contracts in other public or private service." These letters and appeals will do public service in the exposure and punishment of the frauds generally understood to exist in the Indian affairs; but they must not be allowed to destroy the Peace Commission, which has hardly had a fair trial. and has already proved greatly in advance of the old system in benefiting the Indians and aiding the Government.

The recent elections in Bavaria have been regarded as an indication that the policy of Bismarck was overdone and already weakening from the fact that the Catholic deputies returned to the German national assembly were in a slight majority. A comparison of figures furnished by a Roman Catholic journal shows that the case is otherwise. For instance, in the eight provinces of the kingdom there are about three and a half million Catholics, one and one-third million Protestants, and fifty-six thousand Jews. There were seventy-nine Catholic deputies elected to seventy-seven Liberals. Some of the districts have a remarkable record, which can be explained only by supposing the word of the pope severely shaken out of the political creed of this strong Romanist country.

The tenacity of the Tweed ring in New York, and the Shepherd ring of Washington, can be partly explained from the advertising bills paid by these cities to some of their so-called leading journals. Tweed well understood and carefully managed this bribery of the press, whose enormous and unreasonable bills have been fought off by Comptroller Green. In Washington there appears the Chronicle with a bill of $72,000, the Republican with one of nearly $174,000, and the Star with another of over $45,000; all contracted in two years and five months. Like the swindling lodges, these thieves aim an early and sure blow at a power the people have learned to appreciate and rogues to dread when used in the cause of justice and honor.

God's Need of Human Sympathy.

BY J. L. BARLOW.

"What, could ye not watch with me one hour?"

Thrice five hundred years
Their lengthened course had run since first the law
Was made preceptor to God's chosen ones;
And through its ritual of blood had taught
Them how the sins of men might find remission.
Through all changes, the Passover had been kept,
And by thoughtful ones, all its great lessons
Pondered, as the returning seasons came,
When the choice firstlings were to slaughter led,
'Minding the people of deliverance past,
And greater one to come.
Has come the Christ—
That Lamb of whom all other lambs were but
The type, and whose shed blood no virtue had,
But as it shadowed forth that better blood,
Now coursing in the veins of Him, the Just
And Holy One, the woman's promised seed—
The Son of God, and Son of man who now
This feebler dispensation puts away,
And brings a stronger in.
He now has kept
With his disciples, the last Passover;
The typic lamb is lost in antetype,
And reign of Law gives place to that of Grace.
A quiet chamber in Jerusalem
Holds now the Lord of seasons and of men
Where with scanty retinue, he once more
Keeps the ancient Law, and keeping, ends it.
The while Judas, by the prince of hell possessed,
Hath left the paschal board—his honor left—
Left manhood, virtue, and his hope of heaven—
Left them all, to consummate his treason;
While the Master with the eleven, stays
The promised era to inaugurate;
And from the fragments of that final feast
T' evoke a new memorial, which should speak
To countless millions, of the love divine,
Through all that dispensation now begun.
Henceforth the bread and wine such meaning have,
To those who know and love their dying Lord,
As ne'er those elements had known before,
And sorrow filled to aching all those hearts,
As Jesus broke the bread and poured the wine,
And unto each its mystic meaning gave,
A meaning felt, but not then understood
By those saddened men, whose hearts were breaking,
As "Do this in remembrance of me!" broke
On their ears with a sad, funereal tone
Which boded death and parting from the Christ
They lov'd so well.
The old feast and the new
Were finished. The one till new occasion;
But the other its mission had fulfilled,
And now gives place to a more perfect plan,
With more perfect sacrifice.
The Master,
His last words of comfort gives, and offers
Up that wondrous prayer unto the Father
For his disciples and the unborn Church,
Then picks his way and theirs through the darkness
To inmost recess of Gethsemane.—
Where all the hosts of hell His soul assail,
And torturing, wring from Him this sad exclaim:
"My soul is sorrowful, exceedingly;
Even unto death!" The disciples heard,
And speechless were. His sorrow and their own,
Oppress'd and conquered them, so that these words—
"Tarry ye here and watch with me," came to
The chosen three, who heard but did not take Their meaning in. On them a leaden sleep
Came down and all their energies enlock'd
In dreamless slumber—their Master leaving
Unaided, to endure that dread conflict
With His foes infernal.
The Lamb of God
Is now and here made sin, who knew no sin—
A spectacle is made; and such an one
As heaven nor earth nor hell had seen before
Since hand of God had worlds or beings made.
Now see Him stagger 'neath the load He bears—
The heavy burden of Man's guilt and sin;
Hear the anguished cry He sends aloft on Wings of prayer importunate! See the blood
Like an exuding sweat from every pore,
Out driven by internal anguish,—the ground
Discoloring, whereon his body lay!
Alone He wrestles with the Prince of hell,
With no felt sympathy from earth or heaven,
'Till fainting, weak, He to the trio comes
To find them all unheeding and asleep.
His hand on Peter falls, and him awakes,
To hear his Master's sadly plaintive cry—
"What, could ye not watch with me one hour?"
Then twice again He to the battle turns—
Submits His own unto His Father's will,
And though with loathing, takes the bitter cup,
Then backward comes for sympathy to them,
But comes in vain.
How gentle His rebuke!
For well He knows their weakness and how strong
The powers which dominate that fearful time;
And so He pities them whose sympathy
He had so vainly sought but just before
High heaven had witnessed all His agony,
And loving angel, with such aid had sent,
As onward bears Him to that dreadful hour,
When heaven's justice, and the hate of hell,
Shall make His life an offering for sin
Upon the Cross.
Christian! hast thou ever
Thought of God as low bending unto m
For love and sympathy? That He who
Us being could in aught dependent
Or that we could a burthen lift fro
To manifest Himself, there was

That worlds should be, and souls to habit them.
As father unto children, holds He place,
And loving, finds a joy in love returned—
And interchange of tender ministries;
And grieving sore when with ingratitude
Or cold indifference His gifts are met.
Between creature and the great Creator,
A sweet inter-dependence has been made
To flow for His own joy and ours.
What strange
Yet still most blessed truth—that He should stoop
To hang His joys—in measure great or small—
On sympathy or service, such as we Can give! Yet when we better know Him,
All this strangeness disappears and our love
Goes out to Him as flowrets turn to sun
Whose rays warm them to life and then to bloom;
Nor should we wonder that He looks to us,
The greater to the less, or that He needs
Such ministry as ours.
For proof of this:
In thought go down to dark Gethsemane,
And all its mournful lessons ponder well;
Then turn to Him who all our burdens bore,
And joyful give the wage He deigns to ask—
That wage—how wonderful—is love for love.

How Frederick the Great of Prussia Became a Freemason.

BY REV. LAROY S. HAND.

In Carlyle's History we have an account of this transaction. (See Vol. 2, pages 494 and 498, Harper's edition.) It occurred in August, 1735, while Frederick, then Crown Prince, was on a journey with his father Frederick II., the reigning King. "Among the dinner guests at Loo, one of those three days, was a Prince of Lippe-Bueckeburg, Prince of small territory but of great speculation, whose territory lies on the Weser, leading to Dutch connections, and whose speculations stretch over all the universe in a high fantastic style; he was a dinner-guest, and one of the topics that came up was Freemasonry; a phantasmal kind of object, which had kindled itself, or rekindled in these years, in England first of all, and was now hovering about a good deal in Germany and other countries, pretending to be a new light of heaven, and not a bog-meteor of phosphureted hydrogen, conspicuous in the murk of things. Bog-meteor, foolish, putrescent, will-o'-wisp, his majesty promptly defined it to be. Tomfoolery and kinderspiel, what else! Whereupon ingenious Bueckeberg, who was himself a Mason, a man of forty by this time, and had high things in him of the Quixotic type, ventured on defense, and was so respectful, eloquent, dexterous, ingenious, he quite captivated, if not his majesty, at least the Crown Prince, who was more enthusiastic for high things. Crown Prince, after table, took his Durchlaucht of Bueckeburg aside, talked further on the subject, expressed his admiration, his conviction, his wish to be admitted into such a hero fraternity. Nothing could be welcomer to Durchlaucht. And so, in all privacy, it was made up between them, that Durchlaucht, summoning as many mystic brothers out of Hamburgh as were needful, should be in waiting with them on the Crown Prince's road homeward—say at Brunswick, night before the fair, where we are to be—and there make the Crown Prince a Mason.

At Brunswick "the brethren" from Hamburg await the Prince's arrival at "Korn's Hotel."

"No great thing of a hotel," says Bielfeld, "but can be put up with; worst feature is, we discover a Hanover acquaintance lodging close by, nothing but a wooden partition between us: How if he should overhear!" And then, accordingly, on the appointed night, 14th and 15th August, 1738, the light luggage trunks have yielded their stage properties; Jachin and Boaz are set up, and all things are ready; Tyler (Kielmannsegge's valet) watching against the profane. "As to our Hanover neighbor on the other side the partition," says Bielfeld, "we waited on him this day after dinner, successively paying our respects, successively pledged him in so many bumpers; he is lying dead drunk hours ago; could not hear a cannon battery, he. And soon after midnight the Crown Prince glides in, a Captain Wartensleben accompanying, who is also a candidate, and the mysterious rites are accomplished on both of them, on the Crown Prince first, without accident, and in the usual way."

The whole account is not without suggestiveness as to the genius of the institution then. The whole transaction was carefully hidden from the King's knowledge. We are also permitted to read what use the Prince made of the great mysteries at this time committed to his sacred keeping.

"The Crown Prince presented his Masonry at Reinsberg or elsewhere occasionally for a year or two, but was never ardent in it, and very soon after his accession left off altogether. "Child's play and ignis fatuus mainly!" A Royal Lodge was established at Berlin, of which the new king consented to be patron; but he never once entered the place, and only his portrait (a welcomely good one, still to be found there) presided over the mysteries in that establishment. "Harmless fire, but too fatuous; mere flame; circles cut in the air, for infants, we know how!"

Polk City, Iowa, July 27, 1875.

"Hush Money."

Unlawful deeds, wicked plans, and iniquitous habits are often concealed for a time by the aid of "hush money." A man highly esteemed perhaps by the nation may prove false to his trust and hire concealment. A minister highly regarded for sublime religious thought and powerful pulpit eloquence, may fall from the heart-eminence which he seemingly occupies, but succeeds in concealing his deep-dyed crime by the silent but almost irresistible power of hush money.

While hush money is often given in a direct manner for the purpose of smothering the threatening eruption of pent-up wickedness or driving away the smoke of iniquitous fires, it is more frequently given in a manner disarming the suspicion even of those who carefully watch.

In this indirect manner are some ministers sometimes deceived and become the recipients of hush money. The principles involved in the practices of men should be eliminated by the minister and carefully compared with the relative principles of the Gospel. The proper results reached they should be fearlessly and perseveringly proclaimed. But how different in many pulpits! Parson Z. when ranging the fields of thought for the coming Sabbath sermon will not run a single line of the sermon in a certain field of sin for he knows that a frequent hearer, and also a wealthy member of his charge, revels there and by rebuking the one he loses all hope of gaining him as a member to his charge, and reproving the other he is cut short of salary; he receives Satan's bids and keeps silence. The minister, who in the pulpit keeps silence upon the cherished yet gross sins of the people, wins flattery which humors his love for fame, encourages his ruinous neglect, and his consequent conduct stupefies and corrupts the moral sensibilities of his hearers. Of such practice the present prevailing iceberg religion is a result. Iniquity unrebuked has free course and foments throughout Zion. Corrupt pulpit and pew each reciprocally intensifies the guilt of the other. Lusting ears and bribed tongues are both guilty, but if any difference can be made the severest penalty will fall upon those desirous of satisfying "itching ears." The danger coming, the watch-man upon the wall should sound the alarm, however much he might be applauded for neglect by enemies without or the drunken ones within. "He isn't wild—has common sense—charitable—don't ride hobbies;" and numerous other hollow eulogistic expressions are mouthed concerning the milk-and-water preacher by the enemies of truth, the source itself sufficient to lead every conscientious minister to suspect himself guilty of betrayal.

Desire for members and wealth on the part of the laity, salary, friends and popularity on the part of the ministry, silence or at least soften pulpit opposition. Failing to silence the pulpit, friends to an evil will set afloat and freely circulate falsehoods against the minister, or some afar-off minister who opposes the pet evil, and thus by association defame the cause, create a sentiment of contempt among the hearers, and render opposition nugatory. The evils of secretism are frequently thus sustained and concealed, and the hush money used to purchase a covering witness against the deceptive character of the scaly monster.

But upon whom does the enemy make the strongest attack? to whom is the greatest reward offered? Not to the old minister, for whatever his position, he cannot be so easily moved; but the young minister, plunged into a whirlpool of conflicting thought, is not wholly settled in convictions and from him they seek their craved help. Shall they not be disappointed? It becomes all ministers to constantly watch, fervently pray and lift up the voice like a trumpet, warning the people of their sins, not only in their future penalty but present character. The enemy desires the services of Christ's ministers. "Know ye not to whom ye yield yourselves servants to obey his servants ye are to whom ye obey?" Judas yielded himself to Satan.

The grossest evils of any age in that age should be most severely and perseveringly rebuked, nor for any consideration should intense and incessant opposition be slackened. A Mason remarked to me not long since, "I like Rev. W—— of your society very much indeed, for though he is opposed to Masonry, yet he says nothing in public nor in private against it." Astounding opposition! by it Paul's opposition to paganism and Judaism is left in the misty distance! Such opposition makes the devil laugh, and wins the blackest crown of his hellish glory. If secretism is wrong, it is right to oppose it, nor should it be opposed lightly for "it is good to be zealously affected always in a good thing."

Hush money at heaven's tribunal will be of no avail. Wickedness will there meet its penalty and bribed, sin-charmed, principle-neglecting ministers will there be exposed and doomed. Beware of hush money!

W. H. C.

Frontier, Mich.

Letter of Samuel D. Greene to the Pittsburgh Convention.

To the President of the Seventh Annual Convention of the National Christian Association:

I regret that I cannot be with you from various causes; but in faith and in heart I believe that the beginning and the subsequent organization, and the wonderful spread of this work against so powerful an enemy to the church of Christ, and the laws and liberty of our free institutions, is of God, the maker and governor of the world.

In 1825, Freemason orator of New London, Conn., Brainard, said of Freemasonry: "Think of it, laugh at it, wonder at it, hate it, or despise it, as occasionally presenting in little meetings a number of grave and otherwise sensible men with aprons on, still it is all I have told you and will continue to be, and the world in arms cannot stop it; a powerful institution." The like language was used in relation to slavery. But where is that system today? Through the power of the Almighty it has fallen. Our nation is yet under his fostering care. He inspired his people to possess it and we have no reasons to doubt that He will not protect it. Notwithstanding the enemy of all righteousness has not ceased to go about as a "roaring lion, seeking whom he may devour." But the promise is, "All enemies shall be put under His feet;" and Christ, whom they reject, shall reign King of nations, as He is King of saints. Here is our encouragement. Though yet small in proportion to our nation, yet it is not "by might nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord."

Between forty and fifty years ago, Freemasonry murdered a fellow-citizen for no crime, but for doing what the laws of our nation by its constitution allowed him to do. It put its laws against the laws of freedom. Thus the strife became political, finding that nearly all the offices were in the hands and controlled by this secret power, and in five years there were established in the United States two hundred and fifty Anti-masonic presses, and the Anti-masonic strength in that short time was over 300,000 votes. A number of States were almost redeemed from its power, Rhode Island, Vermont, Massachusetts, New York and Pennsylvania. Laws were passed against extra-judicial oaths, and many towns turned Freemasons out of the jury-box as unfit to administer justice; and Freemasonry, notwithstanding the boasted power ascribed to it by its orator, returned its charters, gave up its lodges, leaving thousands of honest Masons to suppose it dead; who would, if the excitement had continued, have renounced it. To leave their character in its influence and to live and die without exposing it, while the opposers of church and the laws of the land, in the dark, were busily engaged to renew its power, was a great mistake. Freemasonry under this power, feigned dead. The people considered it folly to fight a dead beast, and turned their attention to another great evil in our land. The Hon. Charles Sumner wrote me in 1854 from Washington: "Freemasonry seemed to be dead at home. But I find two powers here in Washington in harmony and both antagonistical to our free institutions, and both tending to centralization and anarchy. Freemasonry and slavery must both be destroyed, if our country is to be the home of the free, as our ancestors designed it. The battle is now against slavery." The great political party was formed and an anti-slavery President was chosen and his cabinet appointed, the war was declared, the battles fought, and slavery was abolished. Freemasons killed the President and tried to kill the Secretary, so as to eventually bring the government under the power of Freemasonry, and in the hands of an unworthy President who in obedience to Masonic oaths, could pardon those who were guilty of murder and treason.

Now again Freemasonry is brought before the public through the church of Christ, and must be met religiously; and as the ballot-box is to express the opinion of the religious members of community, as well as the political and irreligious, it must be used thus, compelling the press now under the thraldom and power of Masonry to speak when a third party shall, like slavery, hold the balancing power.

The whole of Freemasonry is published. Its initiatory forms, its lectures, its lies about its antiquity, that Solomon built the temple by its assistance, that the Entered Apprentice lodge usually met on the ground floor of King Solomon's temple, that the Fellow Craft's lodge usually met in the middle chamber, and the Master Mason's lodge met in the Sanctum Sanctorum, or holy of holies of King Solomon's temple—all is printed and proved by hundreds and thousands of witnesses. I hold that no man or woman of common intelligence can read it, especially a Christian man, and justify it. A minister, educated and professing to be an under shepherd of Christ, who has studied the Bible and is bound to examine every subject energetically to see that it corresponds with the word of God, who justifies it, should not have the sympathy of the people, or be allowed to preach; but should be considered as preaching for a profession and for filthy lucre's sake, and should be treated as a hypocrite and thought of as God spoke of the false prophets in the 13th chapter of Ezekiel.

I therefore believe the National Christian Association is of God and in faith I bid you God-speed. From 1826 to 1830, Freemasons paraded often before the public, and especially on St. John's day, showing their gewgaws and paraphernalia to make the children stare, but finally had to succumb and feign dead. Now it is building and dedicating halls, gathering its thousands to run after it for its loaves and fishes; attends national celebrations and even wears the aprons of dead Masons, and like a snake having its head crushed, squirms and flounces like a live creature before death. I believe that God is angry with our nation for its infidelity and the corruptions of his church, which he says the gates of hell shall not prevail against, and is visiting our nation where the beast's greatest power is, as he did Egypt with fires, and floods, and plague of grass-hoppers, and Sodom and Gomorrah with fire. Truly yours,

SAMUEL D. GREENE.

Masonry an Anti-Christian Religion.

BY S. A. GILLEY.

Though Masonry in its every feature, is "only evil and that continually," its most damning aspect is seen in its positive religious character. It is the fact that Masonry is absolutely an anti-Christian religion, that makes it incumbent upon each follower of Christ to oppose it unceasingly. The term, religion, is from Latin religio, either from religere, to gather or collect again; or religare, to rebind or bind anew. A religious system then, is one that claims for its object the work of gathering again and rebinding man to God. If its claims are false and unwarranted, if it does not actually reunite man to his Maker, then it is a false religion, and all who love the true religion of the Bible, are committed to enmity against it. We make the emphatic assertion, Masonry is a religious system.

First; It claims to reunite man to God. In Salem Town's work (A System of Speculative Masonry), we read: "The same system of faith and the same practical duties taught by revelation, are contained in and required by the Masonic institution," p. 194. The revealed system of faith claims to rebind man to God; here Masonry claims union with it. From a "Dictionary of Symbolical Masonry, by Geo. Oliver, D. D," article, Mason, we extract the following: "Guided by the movable jewels of Masonry, he (the Mason), may descend the water of life with joy, in hope of being accepted by the Most High as a successful candidate for admission into the Grand Lodge above" (heaven). Also see Webb's Monitor, p. 121–2. We might multiply such extracts indefinitely, but these will answer.

Second; In seeking to work out its claims, it erects altars, has its prayers and rituals, its ceremonies and ordinances; in fact, its religious rites and worship.

Third; It flaunts its claims at the grave of deceased members of the fraternity, claiming them for heaven even there. Sickels (p. 120) says death is "sent from our Supreme Grand Master, to translate us from this imperfect to that all perfect glorious and celestial lodge above."

Masonry is a false and anti-Christian system of religion.

First; It does not bring man back to God in life. "By their fruits ye shall know them." Union with God will, does ever lead to oneness of life; if we are joined to Christ, our life will be Christ-like. Masonry does not produce a Christ-like life; hence we declare it does not establish a union between man and his Maker.

Secondly; It does not afford a passport through death into the presence of God. While some Masons doubtless die resting confidently upon the relation they hold to Masonry, these are the exceptions; for Masons, as a rule, die no more easily than others who have no hope in Christ. To say that Masonry is a help in a dying hour, because some Masons die well, is only equalled by saying that intemperance gives security in death, because some drunkards are not afraid to die.

Duty of the church in relation to Masonry.

Christians have no more right to fellowship Masons in their Masonic character, than to unite with pagans in their idolatry. Each church should say to Masons seeking communion, "As a pagan must renounce his idolatrous religion, so you must forsake your Masonic religion before you enter here." "Ye cannot drink the cup of the Lord and the cup of devils."

More Plimsolls Wanted.

Mr Plimsoll stirred by his unparliamentary speech the British Parliament, the British nation, the whole world, to a great wrong which has been for years consigning English seamen to watery graves without mercy. We need more Plimsolls throughout the world. We need them in politics; we need them in educational departments; we need them in the church of God.

We have had some Plimsolls in the moral conflicts of America. Such in a measure were Birney, Bailey, Garrison, Giddings, Phillips, and Sumner. Their souls cried out against great wrongs. Morgan and Bernard and Finney and Blanchard in some degree resemble Mr. Plimsoll in their abhorrence of the great evil of dark conspiracies. Otterbein and Boehm and Asbury and Whitefield were Plimsolls in their crying out against the darkness and destruction that rested on the spirituality of the churches of their age. Moody has been playing the part of a Plimsoll in crying out against formality and ungodliness in Edinburgh and London. Indeed, what zealous reformer has ever exceeded Christ in his expression of abhorrence of inquity? When he violated "parliamentary" law so far as to drive out from the temple those who profaned the holy place, it was said the zeal of God's house had eaten him up.

We need some Rev. Mr. Plimsolls in the pulpits of formal and proud churches, to cry out till sinners and backslidden Christians and false professors shall see the yawning gulf beneath them. We need such to cry out against evils and sins which wealth and pride and conventionality are disposed to cover up. Better madness than coldness, sin and death. We would that thousands of pulpits which are now ever so nice and sweet and peaceful could be filled with ecclesiastical Plimsolls.

The public schools of our cities badly need some Plimsolls on the boards of education. By overtaxing the minds of children, and confining them to the school-room too many months in the year, the public schools in our cities are bringing up a class of sharp pedants, weak physically and dwarfed in all that constitutes mental originality, breadth and strength, while these schools are, by their systems being only adapted to such a course of education, thus shutting out the masses from the best opportunities for mental improvement. Oh, for some Plimsoll to cry out against the dwarfing and murdering of the privileged (?) few and the practical exclusion of those who are to be left with sound bodies and minds but with intellect uncultivated! Oh for some Plimsoll to drive the Liliputian red-tape educators from their positions "with a whip of scorpions!"

We need Plimsolls to drive presidents from race-tracks, secretaries from dishonest schemes, legislators from peculation, fraud, and grabs, and politicians from their lying, wire-working, and bribing.—Telescope.

The great strength of Freemasonry is not its benevolence which it vaunts so much, but it is its pharasacial self-righteousness on the one hand, and on the other, its insidious baits to self-interest ingeniously presented to the hopes of young men, who are so often compelled to take their course in life without friends or fortune. The Masonic tempter meets him, allures him by shadows, and the poor fellow, like a fish, is hooked, no longer to be a free man, but a slave, oath-bound to a system which he dare not repudiate but at the risk of incurring penalties which he dare not reveal, unless indeed, he, like the few noble exceptions, burst the bonds at all hazards. Like slavery, Freemasonry holds its masses in bonds to a system as diametrically hostile to republican principles as any despotism can be. Like Romanism, it binds conscience by appeals to Deity, promises rewards above, and fulminates its secret and awful penalties below. Young man, beware! Preserve free that reason and conscience which God has given you, and rejoice that he has placed you in a land whose laws while maintained by freemen and Christians will protect you in their exercise in spite of all the machinery which may be set in motion by the lodge, the pope or the devil.

Corrupting Influences of the Modern Driving-Park.

Taking the numerous columns of reports of "races" recently published in that pre-eminently moral sheet, the Times, as the basis of our opinion, we judge that horse-racing is becoming a very general and increasingly popular amusement throughout the country. If it be so, it is a fact to be regretted by every moralist, and should be sternly opposed by every Christian.

The apologist for horse-racing asks, with an air of injured innocence, what possible harm there can be in putting the relative speed of horses to the test on the race-ground. We answer, None whatever, provided that were all the modern driving park implied, and that the trial were made in a spirit of humanity towards those noble beasts. But neither of these conditions are met on any race-course, either here or in Europe; on the contrary, races are invariably allied with gambling, and they uniformly involve a treatment of the horse which is uselessly cruel.

The race-horse is valued, not for qualities which increase its usefulness, but solely for an exceptional speed which is nowhere desirable except on the race-course. None but jockeys and fast men wish to travel, either for business or pleasure at the rate which wins the prize in a race. In fact, that rate cannot long be maintained by any beast, however highly trained or endowed. It is more than nature intended, and is valueless for all ordinary purposes. But being unnatural, it is seldom, if ever, attained by any animal, except through a training process which is cruel in itself, and under which many noble young animals succumb and break down. And when attained, its exercise not unfrequently brings with it a strain so terrible that it can never be repeated; but if indured without permanent injury, the animal recovers from it only by means of careful restorative treatment. What, then, is racing as a general practice, but an unmercifulness to animals, against which every human man should most steadfastly set his face.

But, as already intimated, racing is universally allied with gambling. Our moral Times publishes lists of "pools" and "bets" on favorite horses, with all its notices. In fact, betting is the life of the race-course. The race itself has little interest to the spectator. A gathering of a few mounted horses, a confused line of beasts in rapid movement for a few minutes, and the race is ended. This is not the attraction, but the fact that the loss and gain of thousands of dollars depend on which of the overstrained animals first stretches its nose beyond the winning post. Strike gambling from the attendant circumstances of the race, and the "course" would speedily become a deserted spot.

The race-course has long been popular in England. Epsom and Derby are familiar names wherever the English language is spoken. All classes, from princes to paupers, annually throng those celebrated grounds. With what result? Without exaggeration, it may be affirmed that more English gentlemen have been ruined by betting at those places than by any other form of gambling practiced in that country. There it is, too, that the low-bred jockey, the dandyish blackleg, and the heir to lofty titles and great estates are first brought in a juxtaposition which generally ends in crippling or utterly ruining the only one of the three who has anything to lose. And there also occur scenes of rivalry and drunkenness at which good men shudder, and there, beguiled by the abandon of the occasion, unsuspecting virtue is enticed into forbidden paths by the lure of unprincipled tempters. Epsom and Derby days are, in fact, the feast days of Bacchus and Gambrinus—the festal hours of Vice.

We are glad to learn, however, that the prestige of these famous race-courses is diminishing, for the reason that the gamblers have been caught making up the races beforehand, by arranging with the jockey riders which shall be the winning horses. Yet, just as the stench of this corrupt amusement begins to repel men in England, we seem to be cultivating it in America. "Riding parks" are springing up on every hand, and "fast men" are getting around them like greedy vultures scenting the carrion of unjust gain and immoral pleasure.

Our object is thus calling attention to this question is to put our readers on their guard, lest they be beguiled by plausible pretences into thoughtless participation an amusement which is evil and only evil in all its bearings. To young men it is especially fascinating. They love its bustle, its excitement, its gaiety. They do not know its dangers until they find themselves on the road to ruin. To parents this multiplication of race-courses is cause of alarm. It is adding to the temptations of their sons. To moralists and Christians it is a call for efforts to create a right public opinion against a practice which is sure to contribute to the increasing corruption of public morals.—*N. Y. Red Men.

"The improved Order of Red Men," as they call themselves, have just been laying, in San Francisco, the cornerstone of a new building, to be the headquarters of their organization on this coast. The orator of the day, in explaining the origin and objects of the order, said:

"Those who founded our order had, perhaps, no greater admiration for some of the practices of their uncivilized namesakes than have we. But the features of savage life which they designed to adopt and perpetuate by means of this society are worthy of preservation and emulation. The close sentiment of brotherhood, the tribal devotion to each other, the scorn of danger when seeking a brother's rescue, the punishment of all selfishness in succoring a brother in misfortune, the absence of all weariness of spirit in attending a brother in sickness, the close clanship of sympathy and mutual upholding—these are elements which we have borrowed from our savage brethren, and we have agreed to make the loan a perpetual one. In a word we inculcate order, sobriety, industry and charity; and these are virtues in the life of either savage or philosopher. The wigwam whose corner-stone is laid this day we dedicate to the use of an order whose chiefest object is brotherhood and charity; an order which hopes to accomplish its benign purposes through the love that comes from knowledge of each other, and the strength that is born of association and cohesion."

The idea of going to the Indians for examples of "order, sobriety, industry and charity!" Calling these the virtues of savage life! What is the meaning of such nonsense? What is the underlying motive? What the real, though unconfessed spirit? It is anti-Christian. It is an effort to disparage the civilization which owns its existence to the Gospel. It claims that for the virtues we need in this noon of the nineteenth century, we must go, not to the New Testament, but to the painted warriors who hunted and fought over this broad land before the white man came. These red men and not the Divine man are to be our model. Satan seems to busy himself just now especially in getting up substitutes for the Christian church, in devising organizations which will satisfy, in some degree, man's social and religious instincts. But he does not appear to have shown his usual shrewdness in suggesting this order of Red Men. The return to barbarism, which its very name indicates, can be popular only with those in whom the animal nature largely predominates. Yet, no doubt, there are men who would like just that kind of "order, sobriety, industry and charity" which the Indians enjoyed. And for them this organization may be just the thing.

Now what is the duty of the church in regard to these semi-social, semi-benevolent organizations which claim to give men all the religion they need, and a better religion than that of Jesus Christ? If we denounce them and excommunicate our members for joining them we get up a bitter, and perhaps, unprofitable contest. The better way is to make the church so attractive that men will want nothing else, be satisfied with nothing else. There is no greater practical problem than how to cultivate Christian sociability—how to make our churches brotherhoods in fact as well as name.—Editorial Correspondence Herald and Presbyter.

The Ohio State Meeting—Great Enthusiasm—Past Master Ronayne—The Churches Called to Duty—From the General Agent.

DAYTON, O., Aug. 13, 1875.

DEAR BRO. K.:—Fearing I shall not find time to write a full report of the Xenia meeting in time for the next Cynosure, I send you a simple sketch. The meeting was well attended and of marked interest. The speeches without exception were good and all the proceedings harmonious and conducted in the spirit of Christian love. About eighty delegates were present, and the city and surrounding country was well represented, some coming, I was told, ten and twelve miles to witness the Master's degree initiation by E. Ronayne on the last evening. The initiation of a candidate in the third degree was the event of the occasion in public estimation, for which the people had been prepared by preceding addresses, and an initiation in the first degree on the previous evening. Past Master Ronayne is certainly a man of remarkable powers, and capable of working the degrees of Masonry in a manner unsurpassed by very few if by any one in the lodge. He was heartily endorsed by the convention and a vote of thanks unanimously tendered for his services at the close of his last lecture, to which a few timely words of approval were added by the Pres. H. H. George, D. D.

The following passed by a unanimous and rising vote in full meeting will indicate the prevailing sentiment: "WHEREAS, The church of Jesus Christ is 'The light of the world,' and so under obligation to bear witness for the truth in opposition to all forms of error, and among other agents the great and growing evil of secretism; therefore Resolved, That the church in carrying out the great object of her organization, and in faithfulness to her Head and King, is bound to free herself from all connection with secret associations by excluding their members from her communions or fellowship."

Rev. Wm. Dillon, already favorably known to your readers, was elected to the State agency and has the matter under favorable advisement. Should he enter upon active work he will in the future, as in the past, be well received.

I came with some of the brethren and Past Master Ronayne to this city last evening. Arrangements have been made to exhibit the first degree this evening and the third to-morrow in "Beckel Opera House."

Monday and Tuesday evenings Past Master Ronayne is to work the 1st and 3d degrees at Greenfield, Highland Co., where I am to speak on Saturday evening, spend the Sabbath, speak on Monday and Tuesday afternoons, and assist in affecting an organization.

J. P. STODDARD.

The New York State Agent at Wheaton.

Ever ready to improve opportunities while waiting in this city for his New York friends to secure their harvests, Elder Barlow was invited to Wheaton to preach in the Baptist church Sabbath before last, and the house was offered him for a lecture on the next evening, when he spoke on the religion of the lodge with fluency and clearness. An appointment was made for Wednesday evening when he again addressed a good audience analyzing the obligations of Freemasonry. His argument drawn from the oaths and the principles they are supposed to affirm as defined in authorized works on Masonry. One or two points were made which should have special mention. The words of the oath "never reveal, ever conceal" bind the one taking it to lie on occasion. If the term was simply "never reveal" the Mason could easily evade plain questions without falsehood; but "ever conceal" binds him to hide by whatever means he may, any revelation of the secrets of the lodge, and remove from the mind of the doubter any belief in that revelation. The oath also binds the initiate to be a prospective murderer. The Masonic claim of the binding force of the obligation, as being a life-lease on the Mason's conscience, intelligence and associations, furnished matter also for a forcible argument.

His New York campaigns have furnished Elder Barlow with frequent witnesses, and their testimony is often of a remarkable character when brought up in proof of his position.

The Baptist brethren of Wheaton invited Bro. Barlow to remain during the week to assist their pastor in a series of religious meetings which have been appointed to meet a considerable revival interest now existing in the church.

The State of the Work in Michigan. From the Corresponding Secretary of the State Association.

Editors Christian Cynosure:

Very many are writing me in reference to the Michigan State agency and other matters connected with the reform. I have answered all as promptly as possible. I am not at home more than one day in the week, so that I am not always as punctual as I would otherwise be. Perhaps I can in this communication furnish our friends and the workers in the State all the information they desire, so far as the Corresponding Secretary is concerned.

Brother Rathbun has written me that he could not come to Michigan, as his people refuse to release him from his engagement to preach to them. The State Convention instructed the Executive Committee to appoint some other person to the State lectureship in case brother Rathbun should fail to accept the appointment. I have written Cornelius Quick of Weston, Mich., requesting him to call a meeting of the committee.

The next question is, Who will they appoint? There may be several eligible candidates. But the only name I can now mention is that of Elder R. Faurot of DuPlain, Mich. I think that he would accept of the position. The appointment of a competent man should be made immediately. The committee will doubtless attend to their work. I know of only one inducement to take the field, even in Michigan, where the harvest is ready for the reapers, that is an unconquerable desire and purpose to glorify God in the overthrow of Satan's kingdom. The man who fights the devil on that line must have on the whole armor of God. The work is all important, the resistance thoroughly organized and deadly, and if the work is well done in the name of God, the victory will be glorious. If any man who loves ease, honor, money or life thinks of applying for this appointment, I pray that the Lord may change his heart or mind. But, if any man belonging to the "Gideon Band" feels called of God to take the work in Michigan, may he remember, "He that goeth forth and weepeth, bearing precious seed (seed basket), shall doubtless come again with rejoicing, bringing his sheaves." My dear brethren, let us pray earnestly to God for Jesus' sake, to raise up the right man for this difficult, though necessary and promising work. If men mean what they write me, the cause has an army of invincibles in Michigan.

Some of us were expected to lecture a good deal till the State lecturer should take command of the work. I speak only for myself. I expected to attend the Missouri State Convention and many other gatherings in and out of Michigan. But I failed to go because I could not get money to pay my way. I have received less than $150 so far this year. Though the work of God in the Free Methodist church is going on wonderfully in some parts of this charge, and some of the Anti-masons out of our church stand by us heroically, most of the people are in bondage to the world, the flesh and the devil. Many speak evilly of the secret orders out of policy; others are silent through fear. That is, they love money or life more than they love truth and God. Consequently many say they would see my family starve before they would give us a cent.

My family are with me most of the time and often come home weary and find nothing in the house to eat. We commit ourselves to God, rest sweetly and get up in the morning to find an empty pantry. Do we then feel like backing off or toning down? Blessed be God, we do not. This may be God's way of keeping us in motion. Very well, if I cannot get money with which to go from home as I would like, we intend, through grace, to keep the Gospel banner afloat wherever we are. I believe God is moving wonderfully in this land. I expect to live long enough to witness the fall of Babylon. I hope for the complete success of the Cynosure, the election of Walker and Kirkpatrick, for the extirpation of secret societies; for the downfall of iniquity and the prevalence and triumph of the kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ.

A New Association in Ohio, Wyandot County.

Sycamore, Wyandot Co, Ohio, August 2d, 1875.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

Dear Sir:—At the call of Rev. J. S. Cutler of the M. E. church and the writer, a few of the citizens of Wyandot Co. convened in a two day's meeting at the Mt. Zion U. B. church, from Thursday evening, July 29, to Friday evening, July 30, 1875. Rev. D. S. Caldwell, State agent, delivered a telling lecture on the Religion of Masonry on Thursday evening. Friday afternoon was spent in prayer and volunteer speeches, and Friday evening Rev. J. S. Cutler, M. E. church, preached from "Every plant that my Heavenly Father has not planted shall be rooted up."

BUSINESS.

Rev. J. S. Cutler was elected President; Rev. E. B. Maurer, Secretary pro tem; Rev. D. S. Caldwell, Rev. Geo. Bender and Dr. A. Benham were appointed a committee on constitution; Revs. J. S. Cutler and E. B. Maurer a committee on resolutions. S. H. Randebaugh was appointed a delegate to the State convention and instructed to make arrangements for speaker for our first annual meeting. The committees reported and their reports were amended and adopted. Rev. J. S. Cutler was elected President; Thomas Cole, Vice-president; S. H. Randebaugh, Secretary; J. B. Crall, Treasurer, and Abraham Neeble and Abraham Vangundy, Executive Committee in connection with the rest of the officers. The time and place of holding the first annual meeting was left with the Executive Committee.

CONSTITUTION.

Art. 1st.—This association shall be called the Anti-secret Association of Wyandot County, State of Ohio, and shall be auxiliary to the State and National Christian Associations.

Art. 2d.—The object of this association shall be to enlighten the public mind respecting the evils set forth in this preamble and constitution, and to seek by all lawful means to remove them from both church and state. * *

RESOLUTIONS.

No society or organization intentionally or actually unfriendly to the rights and interests of the Christian community has a just claim to support and existence, and no true Christian or good citizen ought to regard or tolerate such institutions. As Freemasonry stands at the head of secret societies the charges against it lie more or less at the door of all others. That Freemasonry is anti-Christian there is no room to doubt. Christ says, "He that is not for me is against me." Masonry entirely ignores the name of Christ in her ritual and prayer, and Chase in his digest of Masonry says that to require a belief in the Bible or any of the doctrines of Christianity, is a serious innovation on the very body of Masonry.

And whereas, it licenses crime, and protects criminals; and whereas, it puts its subjects under obligations to derange the business, traduce the character and take the life of any person who may from a conscious sense of duty to God and man prove untrue to his Masonic obligation, therefore it must be anti-Christian.

Resolved, therefore, that it is the duty of the Christian ministry to use their voice and influence against it and all kindred institutions, both from the pulpit and in private associations.

Res. 2nd, That as the religious press is to defend and protect Christianity it should not fail to declare against it, and all kindred institutions.

Res. 3d, That all Christian men and every good citizen should not only refrain from connection with such institutions, but use their influence against them.

Res. 4th, That we recognize all the minor secret orders as allies of Masonry and stepping stones to it.

Res. 5th, That we recognize The Christian Cynosure, Reformer and Free Press and The Religious Telescope, and all other papers that declare against secret societies as well worth the patronage of all Christian people and good citizens.

The First Organization in California. —A Good Work Well Begun.

Woodland, Yolo Co., Cal., Aug. 2, 1875.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

Probably the readers of the Cynosure have long looked in vain for some report from this State concerning an organization to aid in the great and good, though unpopular work and movement against all secret combinations. I am glad to announce to your readers that the first steps in that direction have been taken.

On May 10th, some friends of the movement, from various counties of the State, assembled at Fairview, Colusa Co., and appointed a committee to take the necessary steps in order to effect a more permanent organization, auxiliary to the National Christian Association. Persuant to the call of the chairman, John Black of Lake Co., the committee met at the house of A. Musselman, in Sacramento City, July 30th, and after some consultation elected Phil. Beck of Woodland, Yolo Co., secretary and treasurer; also resolved to employ two men to act as traveling agents to solicit subscriptions, to sell and circulate the periodicals, books and tracts of the Association, and to lecture wherever they deem it practicable, in order to advance the cause more speedily and to effect more permanent results.

Rev. A. Musselman and Rev. N. W. Harrow offered their services and were accepted. Subscriptions amounting to $137.50 were brought in to aid the glorious work. A State convention will be called as soon as the committee think that the people are sufficiently aroused. After instructing the agents to report to the secretary once a month, the committee adjourned subject to the call of the chairman.

Respectfully yours,
Phil Beck, Sec'y.

—The convention at Mercer, Pa., last week was a very successful meeting. Only meager reports have yet been received.

Correspondence.

From Centre County, Mich.

BERRIEN, Mich., Aug. 9th, 1875.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

If you will send to my address about one hundred of Honeywell's Tracts, I will endeavor to distribute them at a quarterly meeting soon to convene here. Perhaps by the distribution of some of those tracts, some one's attention may be arrested so that he will stop and consider ere he is entrapt in the enemy's pitfalls.

We have a beautiful country here, and the numerous churches and school houses that are interspersed all round show signs of thrift and enterprise. But the enemy of everything that is harmonious and good has chosen this rich field to plant the seeds of discord. For every church and school house, he is endeavoring, it seems, to organize a secret den, where his votaries meet to do him homage, and then go forth at their grand master's bidding to carry out their selfish and uncharitable purposes. It has often been said that organized secretism teaches men to lie. We know this to be a fact from personal observation, and how can it well be otherwise if they abide by their obligations they take upon themselves when they are initiated into the various orders. It is reasonable to suppose that many adherents to those secret clans are unreliable, when we call to mind the character who originated the first secret scheme in Eden, and who is to-day holding out false inducements to beguile the unwary.

I think much good might be accomplished if some able man were sent here to deliver a course of lectures, but men cannot well travel about the country and lecture without compensation, and owing to the low ebb of anti-secretism in this community, I doubt whether a lecturer could be decently recompensed for his labors. There is quite a number of professed Christians here, who also profess to be opposed to all secretism, but they are very timid and fearful, and seem to disapprove of publicly denouncing this monster evil. They might with the same propriety disapprove of publicly exposing a band of swindlers or counterfeiters. We need a general rousing up from the sleep of indifference, and a few lectures delivered in our midst would perhaps bring many to a sense of the danger both church and state are exposed to in consequence of these secret combinations.

J. B. CRALL.

A Good Word to Methodists.

GENEVA LAKE, Wis., Aug. 8, '75.

I united with the M. E. church when but a youth; have been a member now over thirty years, and never regretted the choice I made, but have been, and am yet strongly attached to it and to its doctrines. "Holiness to the Lord" being written on its banners, has made it a power for good everywhere. But now every observing person can easily see that that power is being taken away. Many others, with myself have been observing for years, that just so far as Freemasonry and other secret orders as its allies, have crept into the church, its power for good has been diminished; and while ministers and members of a Christian church continue to join, or even patronize these secret conclaves, which are evidently snares of the devil, this condition of the church will increase, and it will soon only have a name to live while it is dead.

And now, while many are sounding the alarm, and scores are breaking loose from the galling fetters with which they are bound, many of whom are devoted ministers of the Gospel of undisputed piety and integrity and not wanting in ability, is it not the duty of every person who loves the cause of Christianity, to step boldly into the ranks of reformers? Now there is no nuetral ground. You are either helping this reform, or helping the adversary to undermine the church of Christ. There is no alternative. The crisis must come, and the sooner it comes the better for the church.

I appeal to the members and friends of the M. E. church who are opposed to this innovation of Freemasonry. In the first place make an effort to get a pastor who is not ruled by an oath-bound secret order, and has enough of the spirit of Christ to reprove all sin. Then when the new preacher comes on, let him know that he cannot have your support if he belongs to, or gives his influence in favor of Freemasonry. If you have got a man for the times, that is, a faithful minister of the "Gospel of Christ," then, secondly, support him by your friendly counsel, yes, more, by your earnest prayers, by your money. See that he is not embarrassed in his temporal affairs. Suppose it does cost you some sacrifice, it is for the cause of Christ.

Do any object to taking this bold and positive stand against the works of darkness? Don't you consider that you must in this matter rule or be ruled? It is a well-known fact, that three members of the church and the minister, belonging to the Freemasons can and will, when they see fit, rule the church. And will you pay them for doing so? The Good Word says, If we bid them God-speed, we are partakers of their evil deeds.

I pray God that all who name the name of Christ will at once unite in this great reform. H. W. CLARK.

Grangers by the Million.

Behold them in their hundreds of lodges in a single district! Mighty fine fellows! See how plump they are. Must be of the sanguine temperament. Their holy ritual spread upon a once green surface shows great devotion to their work. Surely the farmer has a grand prospect of being "relieved." Ah! see that gentleman with a striped coat on. Who, is he, or she? The mother of bugs? Oh! I see. She produces the egg from which come these millions of sanguinary plump little gentry who "go from labor" to refreshment." These mites you see, are the legitimate offspring of the striped-robed "ancient and honorable" fraternity. Now boys, for a lively time! With pans and sticks away to the lodges. Here we are in Uncle Jim's potato patch! Now, take each two rows, and start along with your "eyes skinned," and when you see a granger lodge, now at labor to "relieve the farmer" of the toilsome task of potato digging, bend the tops over the pan and ply the stick midway on the stalk, and these nits of the "ancient and honorable" mother of bugs, will fall into the pan like grubs from a rotten log. What then? Well, when you get enough of these together for a "commandery," deposit them in your temporary special tophet, kindled somewhere at a convenient distance, and so translate them to the "grand lodge" below the potato patch.

What of the mothers of bugs? Ah! put them with their nits, if you can catch them. These robed ones belong to the "lodge of perfection" and may be off to the metropolis (D. C.), where the grange was conceived.

Yours truly,

ENTOMOLOGICAL.

OUR MAIL.

J. L. Briggs, Leesville, Mo., writes:

"I am in for the war against Masonry and all kindred organizations. I am surrounded with lodges of all kinds, but their day is past and they will fall. The waters are troubled here and many will be healed of the plague."

J. C. Bartholomew, Ely Station, Iowa, writes:

"Bro. Berger, A. T. Curtis and myself spent last Sabbath filling two appointments. One at a school-house in the country, the other in the Baptist church at Norway Station, Benton Co., Iowa. Congregations good at both places, and good order prevailed. Also I gave the attendants each a tract."

G. W. Park, Golden City, Col.. writes:

"I received some sample copies of the Cynosure which I distributed about Black Hawk, about 20 miles from here, where I have been spending a couple of weeks. There I met with Father Hartsell, local preacher in the U. B. church. He is doing all he can here. I found the Cynosure and Telescope, besides Anti-masonic books with which I am acquainted, upon his table. It seems that some grangers had got into the U. B. church, but most of them have left the granges, it not being a paying thing."

H. Spafford, Fon du Lac, Wis., writes:

"In the main I like the Cynosure very much. It aims to be truly patriotic, but I, like some others, have feared that it was somewhat inclined to use civil power to promote church interests. I love my country and I love the church of Christ, but he don't ask the "powers that be" to interfere with the affairs of his kingdom. Constantine tried that and the result shows with what effect. I have thought of ordering two copies of the Cynosure with a view of promoting its circulation, but if I do I would like the privilege of making known some of my lack of discernment and want of experience with the hope of being enlightened. We have a subtile enemy as well as a powerful and wolfish one, and need to be circumspect, "wise as serpents and harmless as doves," in such a war as this with such a snake-in-the-grass enemy. Yours for the war against every Satanic humbug, and for the truth as it is in Jesus, the "true light."

Mrs. E. R. Cowell, Plainfield, Ill., writes:

"I feel a growing interest in your paper, and more since it has taken up different departments in literature; as even short, concise sketches on varied topics can occupy a few leisure moments and yet give much knowledge in that time, and women usually have to get their information in that way, I hope it will improve every year as it continues scripturally to oppose the great evil of the day."

M. Witmer, Carthage, Mo., writes:

"I like your paper very much. I have always been an Anti-mason and am glad the time is coming when the subject is to be brought before the people at large. I read the Cynosure and then lend it to my neighbors."

Philip Bacon, Weatogue, Ct., writes:

"The further my observations extend and I see the need of reform I am fully convinced that the National Christian Association with the Cynosure are Christ's appointed agents to carry on his mission in the world, and it gives me great pleasure to assist in every way I can. I have been very busy this summer farming, but I hope when the busy season is over that I may get subscribers for your paper. It makes me sad when I know how much good people might get from reading it and still there are many who profess Christianity who feel no interest in the success or defeat of our work, or know the truth of the matter. Can it be for the same reason which hindered many from coming to the light eighteen hundred years ago? God grant that his people may be able to see the true light and to come from that horrid darkness in which the children of the world live."

Lesson for August 29, 1875—Freedom by the ruth.

SCRIPTURE.—John viii. 28-36; Commit 18-36; Primary Verse, 34.

28 Then said Jesus unto them, When ye have lifted up the Son of man, then shall ye know that I am he, and that I do nothing of myself; but as my Father hath taught me, I speak these things.

29 And he that sent me is with me; the Father hath not left me alone; for I do always those things that please him.

30 As he spake these words many believed on him.

31 Then said Jesus to those Jews which believed on him, If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed:

32 And ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free.

33 They answered him, We be Abraham's seed, and were never in bondage to any man: how sayest thou, Ye shall be made free?

34 Jesus answered them, Verily, verily, I say unto you, Whosoever committeth sin is the servant of sin.

35 And the servant abideth not in the house forever: but the Son abideth ever.

35 If the Son therefore shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed.

WAYSIDE FLOWERS.

1.—We are redeemed from our bondage to sin, not "with corruptible things, as silver and gold, but with the precious blood of Christ, as of a lamb without blemish and without spot." "Ye are bought with a price; be not ye the servants of men." "Ye are bought with a price; therefore glorify God in your body, and in your spirit, which are God's." Acts xx. 28; 1 Cor. vi. 20; vii. 23; Tit. ii. 14; Heb. ix. 12; 1 Pet. i. 18, 19; Rev. v. 9.

2.—"Every knee shall bow," and "every tongue confess that Jesus Christ is Lord to the glory of God the Father." His day of triumph is surely coming. It is a solemn question whether we are to be partakers of that triumph or subjects of it. Ps ii. 6-9; cx. 1; Dan. vii. 13, 14; Rom. xiv. 9-11; 1 Cor. xv. 24-27; Phil. ii. 10, 11; Heb. x. 12, 13; Rev. v. 13; xi. 15-17.

3.—Let no one say, I can not live a Christian life because so much is required of me. Much indeed is required—more than can be performed by mere flesh and blood. But the Scriptures glow with promises of the help of the Spirit. Any one who enters upon the Christian service with his whole heart receives at the outset a guaranty of his being able to overcome all things. Dan iii. 17, 18; John xvii. 15; Rom. viii. 28-30; 1 Cor. i. 8. 9; x. 13; Phil. i. 6; 2 Tim. iv. 18; 2 Thess. iii. 3; 2 Pet. ii. 9; Rev. iii. 10.

4.—Christ could say that the Father had not left him alone, "for I always do those things that please him." We also shall never lack his presence if we do those things that are well pleasing in his sight. Mark xvi. 20; Matt. xxviii. 19 20; Acts xiv. 3; xviii. 9, 10; Rom. xv. 18, 19; Phil. iv. 13; 2 Tim. iv. 17; Heb. xiii. 5, 6.

5.—One of the best of proofs that the Christian religion is true is that it delivers from the bondage of sin. Witnesses without number could be summoned who would declare that whereas they once were bound, now they are free—who have overcome and are overcoming the evil within them; not through any power of their own, but through the help of the Holy Ghost. Rom. viii 37 39; 1 Cor. xv. 54, 57; Eph. v. 23, 25-27; 2 Tim. iv. 7; 1 John iv. 4; v. 4, 5; Rev. vii 9, 10, 14-17; xii. 11.—Nat'l Sunday School Teacher.

Do You Want Better Teachers?

It is true as a rule, that teachers do best when most is expected and asked of them. If their superintendent holds up a high standard of excellence before them, they are glad to try to attain to it. It is often said in objection to plans for the improvement of teaching, that it is hard enough to get teachers with the present requirements of their sphere, and if more is asked of them fewer will be willing to undertake the work; but this is an entire mistake. Practically it is found that the higher the standard in any Sunday-school, the easier it is to get teachers for that school. The more you ask of your teachers in the line of their proper work the more you will get from them in that line, and the more ready others will be to act as teachers in your school. The slipshod superintendents find most difficulty in getting and holding teachers. In schools where teachers can come or stay away as they please, and can be faithful or not while there as it meets their impulse or suits their convenience, teachers usually prefer to be irregular and to prove themselves inefficient If your teachers are not yet what you want them to be, ask more of them from this time forward. Their spirit is probably as good as yours.—S. S. World.

A superintendent complains that "the mothers of his scholars are more exercised over what their children shall wear to Sunday-school than over their preparation of the lesson." It may be he exaggerates, for the picture is certainly very dark. We are reminded of the quaint but forcible words of Roger Ascham. He says: "It is a pity that more care is had, yea, and that among very wise men, to find out rather a cunning man for their horse than to find a cunning man for their children. . . God that is in heaven laugheth their choice to scorn, for he suffereth them to have a tame and well ordered horse, but wild and unfortunate children; therefore in the end they find more pleasure in their horse than comfort in their children."

Forty Years Ago.

John Quincy Adams and Edward Livingston.

[In the Craftsman, a Masonic journal published by E. J. Roberts, at Rochester, N. Y., May 5th, 1830, is published the following from the account of the installation of the officers of the "General Grand Chapter" of Royal Arch Masons for the United States at Washington city, April 3d, 1830. Mr. Adams' reply will follow next week.—Ed.]

The Honorable Edward Livingston, of Louisiana, having been duly installed as General Grand High Priest, and conducted to the chair, he rose, and addressed the assembly as follows:

Companions and Brethren:

To have been deemed by a delegation from all the States of the Union worthy of filling the highest station in the highest order of regular Masonry, and of succeeding in it a man whose life was an honor to his country, and whose death was bewailed as a public calamity, cannot but excite the most grateful emotions.

But there is a period in life when all honors lose much of the value at which they were before appreciated. When popular favor, the gilded bubble which danced before us, and which we pursued with so much childish eagerness, vanishes into air; and, when feeling the approach of that event which must put an end to all our hopes and fears, our projects of fortune, and plan of ambition, the mind looks back, with satisfaction, only on the remembrance of good deeds, and can find no solid hope of future temporal happiness, but in promoting that of others, and receiving as our reward the esteem of the worthy and the wise.

Arrived at this period of life, and having for many years retired from any participation in the labors of the craft, it was with great surprise that I received the notice of this unsolicited distinction which had been conferred upon me. Grateful for the honor, I should yet have declined it, but for the consideration, that a refusal might be ascribed to an unmanly fear of encountering the clamor raised against our institution, or to a consciousness that the vile and absurd accusations against it were well founded. Either of these suspicions would have injured, not my character only, but that of the whole fraternity. I therefore determined to undertake the duties of the place into which I have just been installed; but it was not without much reluctance, suggested by the consciousness that my long retirement had rendered me less fit to fill the station than many others, quite as well qualified in every other respect. But this was removed, when I learned the name of the most worshipful companion who was elected to the second, although more worthy of the first place in our institution. His high Masonic attainments, the knowledge I have long had of his worth, enabled me to rely on his aid in such duties as my skill would enable me to perform; and on his kindness to replace me in all others.

Companions and brethren! For the first time in the history of our country, persecution has raised itself against our honorable fraternity. It does not, indeed as in other countries, incarcerate our bodies, strain them on the wheel, or consume them in the flames of the inquisition; but its attacks are, to an honorable mind, as unjustifiable. It assails our reputation with the blackest calumnies; strives by the most absurd inventions, to deprive us of the confidence of our fellow citizens; belies the principles of our order, and represents us as bound to each other by obligations subversive of civil order and hostile to religion.

What shall we say to these imputations? Shall we recriminate? Shall we challenge a comparison between the characters, services, and virtues of those who have been, and now are, the ornaments of the craft and society, with the characters, services, and virtues of the proudest of our accusers? Shall we point to wretches relieved from misery by our charity, the deadly enemy reconciled by our interposition, the disconsolate stranger comforted by Masonic kindness in a foreign land, the tears of the widows and of the orphans dried by Masonic affection; and broken spirit healed by Masonic consolation? Shall we condescend to justify ourselves against imputations, too atrocious to be preferred but by malevolence, too absurd to be credited but by the grossest ignorance? or ask whether any American can doubt about the purity of principle in a society over which Washington, and Warren, and Clinton, have presided, to which Franklin and Montgomery, and so many of our Revolutionary statesmen and heroes belonged, whose lives were passed in the service of their country, who honored it while living, by their virtues, and who died in its defense, and of which Jackson and Lafayette, and a thousand others whom the people have delighted to honor, are actually members?

Shall we use these and the numerous other conclusive arguments, to repel the accusations that are made? Not, my brethren, by my advice. Calumnies so absurd as are uttered against us are best met by dignified silence. An intelligent and enlightened community will not be deceived by them. And we should be just, and reflect how much cause for high excitement has been given, by the outrageous abduction of a citizen, dragged from his family and friends, in the midst of a populous State; followed up, most probably, by the perpetration of the most atrocious murder.

It was natural, from all the circumstances of this most extraordinary and savage act, to believe that it was committed by Masons.

It was in human nature, unenlightened and prejudiced human nature, to impute the cause of the offense to some secret tenet of the fraternity, and to involve them in the criminality of their guilty members.

It was natural that ambitious men should keep up the excitement, and direct it against political adversaries for their own elevation.

And it was quite natural that men should be found simple enough not to see through their views, or credulous enough to believe their absurd tales, or sufficiently unprincipled to propagate them, knowing them to be false.

All these considerations should make us indulgent to the feelings of others, and serve in repressing our own. Indignation is natural when we hear the society to which we belong accused of prompting by its doctrine a detestable crime; and we are, on every occasion, tempted to ask with warmth, How is it, that, even supposing a foul murder to have been committed by Masons, and that they were incited to it by Masonic enthusiasm and a mad perversion of its principles? how is it that you can, on this account, entertain the absurd idea that such are the true tenets of a society, among whose members were men who have for ages been distinguished for every virtue, for patriotism, disinterestedness and charity—and which now contains some of those most celebrated for religion, morality, and worth, pious ministers of the Gospel, upright magistrates, men of all professions exemplary in their lives and conduct? Might you not as well ascribe to our holy religion the crimes of those who, in all times, have by their mad bigotry and enthusiastic zeal, committed murders, and spread devastation in the name of a God of mercy and peace? Let us, my brethren, render Him our most grateful thanks, that, in the annals of our order, this is the first instance of a crime that could be, by any probability, ascribed to imaginations heated by a perverted sense of duty—let us bend in humble acknowledgment of His divine goodness, which has inspired the brotherhood with such a sense of their duties as Masons and men, that they may challenge a comparison with an equal number from any rank and profession, for obedience to the laws; the performance of all public duties, and the practice of private virtues. Let us pray for the continuance of His aid, that we may be strong in faith, rich in hope, and abundant in charity. Let the circumstances of the times be an additional motive for us to watch over our conduct, to improve our lives, give no cause for suspicion; and disdaining any other defense, let our answer to our calumniators be—our lives.

Companions and brethren! When I shall have become better acquainted with the affairs of the General Grand Chapter, and with the situation of the several State Grand Chapters under this jurisdiction, I shall make such communications, as I think the good of the fraternity may require. Adding now, only this exhortation, not to be tempted by the example of our enemies, to the slightest interference in political parties; using your privileges as individual citizens, without contaminating your lodges and Chapters with matters that may interfere with the great duties, or disturb their harmony, or convert them into theaters for the exercise of political intrigue,—I need not urge obedience to the laws—it is the first lesson of the fraternity.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, AUG. 19, 1875.

PLATFORM AND NOMINATIONS FOR 1876.

FOR PRESIDENT.

James B. Walker,
of Illinois.

FOR VICE-PRESIDENT

Donald Kirkpatrick,
of New York.

PLATFORM.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage, is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. The charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

5. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by article 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate.

6. That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

7. That to cultivate the intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

8. That land and other monopolies should be discountenanced.

9. That the Government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency, and a return to specie payment as soon as practicable.

10. That maintenance of the public credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. And finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of Electoral Colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-president of the United States.

LETTER OF ACCEPTANCE
From Donald Kirkpatrick, Esq.

SYRACUSE, Aug. 10, 1875.

Mr. C. A. Blanchard:

MY DEAR SIR:—Your letter informing me of my nomination at the Pittsburgh Convention, was duly received. I scarcely expected that the Convention at this early day would nominate candidates for the next Presidential election, and still less that myself would be one of those candidates.

The Platform of the convention embraces several distinct reforms which are being agitated at the present day. My own idea of accomplishing anything in the way of reform is to present one issue at a time; and while expressions of opinion are well enough, as to the others it appears to me that the issue should be distinctly made upon the question of anti-secrecy, the principle upon which we were first organized and in which we are thoroughly united.

With these views, I accept the nomination. In the meantime should a larger body, representing a more numerous constituency, assemble for the purpose of nominating candidates favorable to this issue; an event which I consider not entirely impossible, I would cheerfully withdraw, for some better known, more honored, and worthier name. I remain very truly, your obedient servant,

D. KIRKPATRICK.

TOKENS.

"The citizens organized a little society, and propose holding a concert of prayer for the success of the cause."—MRS. E. R. L. LITTLEFIELD.

"We want the Cynosure well sustained with a daily issue as soon as it can be afforded; and we want a large number of local weeklies in every section to assist in carrying on the work."—J. S. HICKMAN.

These two paragraphs describe the two hinges on which our cause and the destiny of the nation is to turn. The central location of Chicago, its advantages as the great moral gateway of travel and civilization; above all, the Providence of God which has made it the seat of the National Christian Association, all seem to point it out as a proper center and headquarters for this movement which must regenerate our church and nation, if we are to survive the wreck of past nations. We are impatient with longing and looking for the two events pointed to in the two paragraphs above, prayer throughout the country, and a press co-operating throughout the country against darkness and despotism. If we can reach the Carpenter building and secure an income to be relied on, a very small sum, say five dollars guaranteed for each school-house meeting, would enable our State lecturers to organize an army of local lecturers who would appeal for funds and subscribers; and if the weekly list of the Cynosure can be carried up to a strong living grade, a daily journal will be sure to come. May the Lord hasten the day.

"THE ASSOCIATE PRESBYTERIAN."

A pamphlet, bearing the above title comes to us fraught with bitterness and fury which we do not understand. The pamphlet purports to be the organ of The Associate Presbyterian Synod of North America, edited by Sam'l G. McNeel and H. L. Brownlee. But the furious assault on the Cynosure is written by Mr. Wm. S. Rentoul of Philadelphia, who suggests that "the man at Pittsburgh who runs the the United Presbyterian church" may have given us "a sharp rap on the knuckles" for publishing some of Mr. Rentoul's letters showing the complicity of some Philadelphian churches with Freemasonry, etc., etc., with other grievous and utterly false insinuations. We write to assure Mr. Rentoul that he is utterly mistaken in his imaginations; that up to the time of the Pittsburgh convention we had never seen, known, or heard from Dr. Kerr. or Dr. Collins of Pittsburgh. And that neither they nor any one else ever objected to our publishing his letters indicting U. P. churches. And we wish to suggest to the editors McNeel and Brownlee and their synod, to discontinue sending us their paper, and we will stop ours, if this number contains their real opinion of us; since, in that case, it is clear we can do each other no good. "Make no friendship with an angry man and with a furious man thou shalt not go," is a sensible and just proverb. After hearing Dr. Kerr at Pittsburgh we are confirmed in our judgment that Mr. Rentout does him (if he is the man he means) and the United Presbyterian church great injustice. Still where Freemasons are tolerated in their communion they should be instant subjects of labor, and in many of their churches we have personal knowledge that discipline is calmly but decidedly enforced against the secret orders.

THE FEEMSTERS.

How far that little candle throws its beams,
So shines a good deed in a naughty world.
SHAKESPEARE.

The father of this rare family walked two hundred miles from (I think) the mountain district of South Carolina to a little college called "Tusculum," Tennesee, where he obtained his education. His son, Rev. Paul Feemster, is now a professer in the same institution. The father settled on poorish soil in Lowndes county, Mississippi. He succeeded in erecting a building which "contrived a double debt to pay," as an academy and church. Here this holy man lived and prayed and taught his neighbors. As the General Assembly (he was a Presbyterian) became corrupted by slavery and secret societies, he withdrew with his church which became independent, and preached against both. As the slavery war began to lower, he was told he would be hung up in his pulpit if he preached against slavery. He continued to preach as before and prophesy its destruction. And when the first clang of arms was heard he burst out into a rhapsody of indifferent rhythm, but his poem would have done credit to any old Hebrew prophet. He went to Columbus, his county-seat, to preach against secret societies, and was told on his way that he never would come out of that town with his head on his shoulders. He went there, preached, and came away alive. His sons, Calvin, Paul, Robert, and I believe another, had grown up around him. They fled with others from Jeff. Davis' first conscription, hunted by bloodhounds, to our forces at Tuscumbia. They could almost have knelt and worshipped our flag. The good old patriarch, whom I longed fervently to see, started for Chicago to witness the graduation of his son, Paul, at the Theological Seminary here, and died at Mattoon on his road, at the house of a relative. With no brilliancy of genius, but by simple, fearless integrity and faith, he lived beloved, and died lamented and revered.

His son and associate, Rev. S. Calvin Feemster, and his son, Hon. Robert Feemster, late member of the Mississippi Legislature, as also a son-in-law, Rev. Joseph Galloway, were more or less at Wheaton; and with their brother, Prof. Paul Feemster, received on their shoulders the falling mantle of the patriarch and hallowed his memory and name. Their youngest sister, Sarah, now Mrs. G. A. Jones of Indiana, was a graduate of Wheaton College, and threw the mild radiance of her genius over the family group.

When I contrast the life and labors of one such good man with the cringing army of moral weaklings now filling the pulpits of this country, I am unutterably sad. I was speaking with one such and urging him to put his conviction into his teaching. "You can do it," he replied, "and meet and conquer the return shock. But I am no Luther; and when the black-fish had seen a whale smash a vessel by butting his head against it, he undertook to do the like, and broke, not the vessel, but his head."

Such reasoning omits God and ignores faith. Here was a man who has left no stupendous monuments of his genius, but who has seen half a continent filled with his principles, and his children rise up and called him blessed. Without adventitious helps; without wealth; in a slave State; under a government mal-administered by Freemasons; without a party; without a sect, he stood up in the name of God and taught the principles of the Bible. He "against hope believed in hope," and in the moral earthquake which overturned slavery, his own house stood unshaken; and with thousands falling at his side and ten thousands at his right hand, he lived and died in peace and honor; and his principles rule the continent, and his children and his children's children share the respectability of the society which his life-long labor helped to re-construct. "Let me also die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his."

A PRIEST RENOUNCED.—A Romish priest, named Gerdemann, in Philadelphia, married a Protestant girl, renounced the priesthood, and has addressed a great crowd in Philadelphia, protected by the mayor and constabulary of the city. Those who come out from that dark system give the same general account of the character of the Romish priesthood as "earthly, sensual and devilish." This attack of Gerdemann excels most others in minuteness of detail, personality and fearlessness of utterance. He declares that, with exceptions, Romish priests in this country are habitual drinkers; that many keep mistresses; that their ruling passion is all grasping avarice; and that, as a body, they hate everything distinctly American, and look, and teach their people to look, for a time when our institutions will go down in blood, and their church and priesthood sit conquerors over the ruin. The wrath of the Papists against Gerdemann is what we should expect, bitter and violent.

NOTES.

—In our "Forty Years Ago" department will be found an article which many will read with considerable satisfaction, who have been worried with Masonic stories widely printed of Morgan's enforced emigration to New Zealand, or Syria, or the plains of western Texas; for he has been assigned by the lodge to each of these places. But here is one of the highest authorities of the order, hardly four years after the murder, acknowledging the fact though with apparent reluctance. This address of Mr. Livingston called out several memorable letters from ex-President John Quincy Adams, which appear in the volume of his letters now published and for sale at this office. The first of the series will appear next week.

—In this connection Hon. Thurlow Weed has written a remarkable letter to the New York Herald, vindicating his reputation from the well known expreasion, "A good enough Morgan until after election," which has for forty-eight years been a sweet morsel under the Masonic tongue, but is now clearly proved to be a plain slander upon Mr. Weed. The letter reviews the history of the Morgan murder and the coronor's trials which followed, but avoids any opinions addressed to the lodge, It will apverse next week.

—Prof. and Mrs. H. A. Fischer, whose wedding formed an attractive feature at the last Commencement at Wheaton, started on Tuesday of last week for New York, where they will take the Anchor line Steamer, Bolivia, on the 21st for Glasgow. The best wishes and earnest prayers of their many friends in Wheaton and Chicago accompany them. Prof. Fischer has been interested in our reform from its beginning when a student in college. He opened the way by lectures at Bloomington for the organization of the Illinois State Association there in 1872, and has kindly consented to to allow our readers to see such parts of Europe as he may visit with his eyes; and his letters will form an interesting feature in our paper.

—A well written letter on Bro. Kiggins' work in Hillsboro, Ind., holds over till next week. The workers in that State will soon be ready for their State meeting.

—While many will read with honest satisfaction the rebuke of the order of Red Men, by Rev. C. E. Babb, published in another column from the Herald and Presbyter, not all will agree with his measures of reform as wholly meeting the necessities of the case. Satan asks no more of the church for his orders than that they be not publicly attacked and their abominations shown to all. His ships sail best in such a quiet stream. And he loves to have the church made attractive to these his servants, for he knows that means the loss of power with God. But by all means let the church be made attractive to these men, awakened from their death-sleep of sin; attractive to them, new men in Christ. Only thus can they be drawn away from the lodge, from Anti-Christ; and if the church is thus attractive it must be holy, having no fellowship with these orders, but reproving their evil nature and worka.

—The Waverly, Iowa, Independent has an editor who is not, like many, afraid of honesty and fairness when he has to do with the lodge. His report of Mr. Ronayne's lectures in that place while not approving of some personal references (Mr. Ronayne had named his candidates after two Masonic preachers of the place,) and the threat to answer the insults of the lodge by physical arguments, has the following in its issue for August 5th:—

"Mr. Ronayne is an intelligent, witty Irishman; a man who is fearless and independent in thought and speech. To say that he is conversant with this subject and that he is honest in the expression of his views in giving him simple justice. That he colors somewhat highly a great many of his scenes, in order to make them appear more convincing or more ridiculous, is equally just. But this is pardonable, for he does not, we think, depart from the truth in so doing. Although we may desire to see only sober truth, we cannot offer any stern objection to his method. He is stating his own opinion in his own way, and not to suit any particular man or set of men.

His arguments were not convincing to us, for we were not long ago convinced that the fundamental principles of secret societies were not sound. We believe that he told the truth, and performed the ceremonies correctly as he helped to execute them in Keystone Lodge, No. 639, Chicago, Illinois. This was evident from the easy manner in which he adapted himself to all positions.

Our opinion is simply this: Mr. Ronayne is an honest, intelligent man, who is laboring earnestly in a cause that he is firmly convinced is right and just, and he has had opportunities to test his belief. He has, as all other men, certain faults; but they are not glaring; they injure himself more than others. He is not cultivated or eloquent, but only a "plain, blunt man." That he will set the outside world to thinking upon this great subject there can be no doubt.

Educational.

—The intended absence of Profs. Blanchard and Fischer during the coming year has necessitated some changes in the faculty at Wheaton. Mr. E. D. Bailey, who graduated at last commencement, an experienced teacher, will be Principal of the Preparatory Department. Mr. T. C. Moffat, a graduate of '73, who has since taught successfully in the College, and also spent a year in studying at the East, is engaged. The responsible position of Lady Principal is to be filled by Miss S. J. Christie from Carlton College, Minnesota.

—Berea College Commencement occurred the last day of June. The college department graduated three young men, two whites and one black. This school is prospering and well illustrates the possibility of the different colors blending harmoniously in study. The white boys have no objection whatever to their colored schoolmates. They meet freely in the class room, debating society and social life, and nobody is hurt.

—An addition to Monmouth College building has been commenced and it is expected will be completed within the next year. The money has been subscribed by the citizens of Monmouth and vicinity. The arrangements for instruction next year will be the same as last, except that Miss . C. Logue, daughter of Rev. J. W. Logue, of Northfield, Ohio, and long connected with Oxford Female Seminary, will enter upon the duties of Lady Principal.

—Philomath College, an institution in charge of the United Brethren church at Philomath, Oregon, enters the new year with fresh vigor and signs of prosperity. The increasing number of students has induced the trustees to add to the faculty Mr. L. C. Crow as professor of natural sciences. Rev. R. E. Williams is President of the College.

—Hartsville University, Indiana, is represented before the public with a students' paper, The Literary Ensign, a very well conducted college journal, which holds steadily to the principles of the U. B. church. The frequent notices of the anti-lodge reform are a cheering token that students are noting the signs of the times.

—At the recent commencement at Oberlin thirty-five young men and one lady graduated. J. B. T. Marsh, former managing editor of the Advance, now traveling in Europe was elected treasurer.

—A college class-mate of the Plymouth pastor has written a pamphlet entitled "A Looking-glass for H. W. Beecher" describing in the light of God's word the work of the destroyer of souls in and out of the press and pulpit in connection with the Beecher case. The work may be had by writing to D. F. Newton, 303 W. 20th St., New York.

—The Old Northwest Territory, its missions, forts, and trading-posts is an interesting pamphlet filled with rare history of the lake region, maps and illustrations; Brown, Moore and Quale, publishers, Kalamazoo, Mich.

—Vicks Floral Guide, quarterly, with its valuable hints for the garden and indoor floral ornamentation is out for the fourth quarter; James Vick, Rochester, N. Y.

Charles G. Finney Dead.

Ex-Pres. Finney died suddenly at his home in Oberlin early Monday morning of heart disease, aged 83 years. The Christian world will mourn the loss of this holy man and father in the church.

"Speak, for Thy Servant Heareth."

"Speak, for thy servant heareth"—
Thus give us grace, O Lord,
To listen and to answer
Whene'er Thy voice is heard;
Whether we wait expectant
Its sound to guide us home;
Or all unsought, unwelcome,
Its sudden warning come,

Above the whirl of traffic,
Above the stir of life,
Amidst the songs of pleasure,
And o'er the din of strife,
May never cease within us
Thy whispers soft and clear,
Nor ready hearts replying,
"Speak, Lord, Thy servants hear."

And in the latest conflict,
When strength and faith are low,
And all our schemes of comfort
Are baffled by the foe;
Amid life's feeble throbbings,
Yet nearer and more near,
May Thy sweet tones of solace,
Speak, and Thy servants hear.

Henry Martyn's Bible.

An Englishman, in the course of his travels, visited the town of Shiraz, in Persia. He had with him letters of introduction to a Mohammedan general, who kindly lodged him during his stay. One day, at dinner, several young Mohammedans, who were guests at the table, introduced in conversation the subject of Christianity. They laughed at, and ridiculed the Lord Jesus and the Gospel, the worth of which they knew not.

The Englishman, however, noticed that one young man at the table did not join in the mockery and ridicule, but appeared grave and serious. When the company broke up, the Englishman requested his host to procure him an invitation to the host of Mohammed Raham, for that was the young man's name. He felt interested in him and wished to know him.

When he visited him he was received very graciously, and found him reclining on a sofa reading an English book. During the conversation it became very evident that Mohammed Raham had a great respect for religion. But what religion?

"Are you a Mohammedan?" asked his visitor.

"No," was the reply.

"Are you a Sooffee?"

"No," again was the reply.

"What then? Are you a Christian?"

After pausing for a few seconds, he replied:

"Yes, I am a Christian."

"But," asked the Englishman, "how did you become a Christian?"

"I will tell you," answered Mohammed Raham. "Some years ago an English padre came here to learn the Persian language. I, with other young men, went to treat with contempt the teacher of the despised sect who believe in Jesus. I went to laugh at him. He was so meek, so kind and forbearing, that I could not help loving him. I became a patient listener while he spake of the Lord Jesus, and the things that concern His kingdom. I was convinced that Christianity was the true religion. I am a Christian. I love to pray to Jesus and look to Him for forgiveness of all my sins. It is fear of persecution that prevents me from openly professing my faith in Jesus."

As he grew in grace and in love to Jesus, we may hope he overcame this fear. He thought, I trust, of those around him for whom Jesus died, and how delightful it is, though much suffering be the consequence, to tell them of His willingness to save.

After Mohammed Raham had thus declared himself a Christian, and told how he became one, he arose from his seat and went into his library. Within a few minutes he returned to his visitor and placed a book in his hand. It was the New Testament written in the Persian language. On the blank leaf, opposite the title-page, was written the name of Henry Martyn. Below was written, by the same hand, the text, "There is joy in the presence of the angels of God over one sinner that repenteth."

Did Henry Martyn know that Mohammed Raham had become a Christian? Did he ever know he was more than an inquirer? If not, this is one instance among many, of the "good seed" springing up and bearing fruit "after many days."—Bible Record.

Have we any Self-Denial.

It would seem that we ought to have, if we are Christians. For our Saviour says, "If any man will be my disciple, let him deny himself." "Deny thyself and take thy cross," is the Redeemer's great command. But how? What is self-denial? How may we know it? Are we bound to deny ourselves everything pleasing to us: good clothes, good food, good society, good houses, and live in dens and caves of the earth? Or, stand painfully on pillars, or be hermits, and live solitary lives all our days?

Such a view of this duty would be nonsense. It would be unreasonable and fanatical. Our Saviour never meant anything like that. But he did mean something; and that something we are under obligation to ascertain and regard. And we certainly cannot be wrong in the conclusion that our Saviour meant that we should deny ourselves in matters and things that we see to be: 1. Displeasing to God; 2. Hurtful to ourselves; 3. Injurious to others. In such things we are to deny ourselves, even though it be a cross to do so.

Take, for example, the item of dress. Should we indulge in such a style of dress, either gaudy or expensive, as would largely minister to our own personal vanity, or materially weaken our pecuniary means of doing good, or unhappily affect others, then should we break our Lord's rule, in its whole length and breadth. We displease God; we harm ourselves, and we deprive others of good. With a plainer mode of dress, we might the better keep our own needed humility, and the more minister to the wants of others. And yet, perhaps, it might be appropriately asked, if there really is much self-denying dressing among Christians? Is there any with you and me, reader?

And the same inquiry might be made in reference to houses and equipage, and other items of luxurious living. If Christians exhaust the vast bulk of their means in such expenditures as these, so that they cannot liberally help God, when he comes along, or Christ and his causes, when they come along, it may be well asked, where is their self-denial? If self engulfs ninety-nine one-hundredths of my property, and God and piety get only the one one-hundredth, where is my self-denial?

If a man, for example, wants a new suit of clothes this year, or a new carriage, or a new house, or a new piece of land, and eagerly desires it, and perhaps in some degree really needs it, and yet, in view of the calls of Christian benevolence at home or abroad, or in view of the necessities of a poor friend, a neighbor, or a brother, who is in danger of being turned a beggar upon the streets, he restrains his wishes concerning the new apparel, or equipage, or house, or land, and gives to the poor brother, or to the cause of Christ what self was calling for, then, I think, would come to view an act of real self-denial. Therein would be manifest some little trace, at least, of that spirit of self-sacrificing benevolence which brought our Saviour down, and which moved him, though rich, for our sakes to become poor, that we through his poverty might be made rich. And, no doubt, this is largely what the millenium is waiting for; a general prevalence among Christians of this only genuine spirit of self-denial, in beneficence, a readiness, up to a point where we feel it.

This employment of property for the glory of God and the conversion of the world, is well understood theoretically; the practice of it, is what God and the world now most need, and, also, what professing Christians avow to be their duty. And perhaps the most of them think that they do thus use their property for God's cause. But the point of the degree to which they so use it, is where the general error comes in. Giving to God the hundreth part, where we should give the fiftieth, the twentieth, or the tenth, is our too common practice. Should we take pencil and paper, and carefully set down all that God gives us in the course of the year, and then sum up all that we give back to God, through his earthly causes, we should probably be much surprised to find how small is the proportion of our gifts to our receipts and how much more stinted givers we are than the despised Jews, who gave the one-tenth of their incomes to the cause of Jehovah. In the day of judgment, may not many a Jew rise up and condemn us, in this thing, to our no small shame and confusion?—Am. Messenger.

Anecdote of Livingstone.

Before he went abroad as a missionary, Livingstone was placed for a time under the tuition of the Rev. R. Cecil, of Ongar in Essex. In the neighboring village of Stanford Rivers, the minister of the Independent church, being suddenly taken ill, and unable to conduct his evening service, applied to Mr. Cecil, who at once sent over Livingstone. The young Scotchman soon surprised the congregation beyond measure, for, having taken his text he became bewildered, and could not utter a word. Then, without attempting an apology, or making any remark whatever, he hastily descended from the pulpit, snatched up his hat, and made his way to Ongar, leaving the Stanford Rivers people to think or say what they pleased. The old parson for whom Livingstone came to officiate is still alive, and in telling the story makes it point a moral. The man who ran away from a congregation of Essex rustics was the man who was afterwards not afraid of men or of lions Modesty and partial failure often precede greatness; and missionary committees ought to be on their guard against saying too hastily, "That man is too bashful ever to make his way in the world."—North British Daily Mail.

On Hospitality.

A perfect host is as rare a being as a great poet; and for much the same reason, namely, that to be a perfect host requires as rare a combination of qualities as those which are needed to produce a great poet. He should be like that lord-in-waiting of whom Charles II. said, that he was "never in the way and never out of the way." He should never degenerate into a showman, for there is nothing of which most people are so soon weary as of being shown things, especially if they are called upon to admire them. He, the perfect host, should always recollect that he is in his own home, and that his guests are not in theirs; consequently those local arrangements which are familiar to him should be rendered familiar to them. His aim should be to make his house a home for his guests, with all the advantage of novelty. If he entertains many guests he should know enough about them to be sure that he has invited those who will live amicably together, and will enjoy each other's society. He should show no favoritism, if possible; and if he is a man who must indulge in favoritism, it should be to those of his guests who are more obscure than the others. He should be judiciously despotic as regards all proposals for pleasure, for there will be many that are diverse, and much time will be wasted if he does not take upon himself the labor and the responsibility of decision. He should have much regard to the comings and goings of his guests, so as to provide every convenience for their adit and their exit. Now I am going to insist on what I think to be a very great point. He should aim at causing that his guests should hereafter become friends, if they are not so at present, so that they might, in future days, trace back the beginning of their friendship to their having met together at his house. He, the perfect host, must have the art to lead conversation without absorbing it himself, so that he may develope the best bualities of his guests. His expense in entertainment should not be devoted to what is luxurious, but to what is comfortable and ennobling. The first of all things is that he should be an affectionate, indeed a loving host, so every one of his guests should feel that he is really welcome. He should press them to stay, but should be careful that this pressing does not interfere with their convenience, so that they stay merely to oblige him, and not to please themselves. In considering who should be his guests, he should always have a thought as to those to whom he would render most service by having them as his guests; his poorer brethren, his more sickly brethren. Those whom he feels would gain most advantage by being his guests, should have the first place in his invitations; and for this considerateness, he will be amply rewarded by the benefits he will have conferred.—Sir Arthur Helps.

The Marvels of Mechanics.

During the last siege of Paris, the inhabitants from time to time effected communication with their friends beyond the German investing lines by means of carrier pigeons. In fact, a regular pigeon post was organized, having one of its receiving stations in London. Here written messages for Paris were received, and, by photography, reduced to microscopic size, each letter being reduced so small as to be invisible to the eye except as a speck. Some two thousand of these specks were then printed on bits of tissue paper about an inch and a half square, which was rolled and carefully attached to one of the tail feathers of the pigeon. On the arrival of the bird in Paris, the postal officials placed the paper under the microscope, which enlarged the several specks into readable communications, which were duly copied in writing and delivered to the person to whom they were addressed. The total postage received for the transmission of one of those tiny bits of paper frequently amounted to two thousand dollars.

Small as this photo-writing seems, it has been surpassed by mechanism. In a recent number of the Lens, Dr. J. J. Woodward, U. S. A., gives an enlarged photograph of microscopic writing done by machinery on glass, by means of a diamond executed by Mr. William Webb of London. The writing consists of the Lord's Prayer, which is written upon glass, within a space equal to one two hundred and ninety-fourth part of an inch in length by one four hundred and fortieth part of an inch in width, or a space perhaps equal to the dot in this letter i. The photograph given by Dr. Woodward shows this dot of writing enlarged so as to occupy a space of about two inches long by one and a half inches broad. All the words are brought legibly out on the photograph, the total number of letters being 227; and such is the exceeding fineness of the original writing that 29,431,458 letters written in the same way would only cover one square inch of glass surface. The combined Bible and New Testament contain in all 3,566,480 letters; hence it would be possible for Mr. Webb to write the entire contents of eight Bibles within the space of one square inch. Two specimen plates containing the microscopic writing above alluded to have been supplied by Mr. Webb for the United States Museum at Washington. Their cost was fifty dollars each.

The Webb machine, however, does not equal in the fineness of its writing or perfection, the prior instrument of Mr. N. Peters, a wealthy banker of London, who, as long ago as 1855, was able to write nearly three times finer than Mr. Webb. So perfect was the Peters, machine that it was competent to engrave the entire contents of the Bible and New Testament twenty-two times over within the space of a single square inch. —Scientific American.

Doctors and the Weed.

"Doctor," we said to a splendid specimen of the profession, "tell us something about the baneful effects of tobacco."

"Its effects, sir," he replied, "its effects are evil and only evil, and that continually, and it is a perfect mystery that gentlemen of my profession care so little, do and know so little, about a poison that is doing mischief at so terrible a rate."

"Sir," the doctor continued, "I was on a council of physicians the other day on the border of this town; the patient was a young man, prostrated by paralysis; he was deprived of the use of his lower limbs from the abdomen to the toe; we overhauled him; we withdrew and talked about antecedents and probable causes, and came to no satisfactory conclusions. Dissatisfied and impatient, I inquired of his attending physician whether the poor fellow used tobacco.

"Oh, no," he replied, "I guess not," and with an air of nonchalance, added, "what if he does, that can have nothing to do with his case."

"I did not ask you," I replied, "about the effects of tobacco, but simply if the patient used it?"

Gruffly he said, "Go and see." Stepping to his bed-side, I said,

"My young friend, do you use tobacco?"

With a squealing voice, more catlike than human, he answered,

"I use a little."

"How do you use it?"

"I smoke a little."

"Did you smoke this morning?"

"Yes, a little."

"Did you smoke at noon?"

"Yes, a little."

Before I quit his side I ascertained that he had actually consumed sixteen cigars a day, and the poor fellow's soul was so obfuscated by smoke that he considered that prodigious amount but "little!"

"This," continued the doctor, "may seem strange, but the strangest of all is the fact that his attending physician, regular and well-bred—did not know in the first place, that his patient used tobacco—and secondly, he did, he did not know that a rank and deadly poison could have anything to do with his case!"

We are indebted to the medical profession for the most effective testimony against this popular poison; hence we have no wish to arraign it and denounce it in wholesale style. But account for it as we may, on the score of selfishness or ignorance, the main body of the profession are mournfully derelict in duty touching the ruinous effects of this great and fashionable narcotic.—Congregationalist.

Children's Corner.

What is a Berry.

Do my boys and girls know what a berry is?

Hark! I think I hear a gentle burst of laughter coming from far and near.

"Ha! ha!" it seems to say, "do you think we don't know what berries are; we who are so fond of strawberries and raspberries and blackberries? Ha! ha! ha!"

Well, laugh away, my dears; I love to hear the merry sound. But just let me tell you something that I learned by listening to the birds. Raspberries and strawberries are well enough, but the orange is a berry, too. Did you know that? Why, the lemon may be a berry, for aught I know.

Now if this is news to you, I advise you to look into the subject a bit. Find out just what a berry is. Blackberries, strawberries, and raspberries speak for themselves, but how can you know that the grape is a berry unless you inquire? Get out your dictionaries, botanies, and encyclopedias, and when you find what you want on this subject, be sure to take it out-of-doors with you when the berries are ripening, so that you may observe knowingly.—Selected.

The Noble-hearted Sons.

There lived once in Stockholm, an old man of nearly a hundred winters. He was a tailor by profession, and had twelve sons, who had all served under Charles XII. Once they got a few days' leave of absence from their regiments, to go and see their old father, whom they found on their arrival, without bread and nearly starving. "Father has no bread," said one of them, "yet he has given to Sweden twelve warriors! Our dear father must be helped; but how?" "Can't we find somebody who would be willing to lend us a little money?" asked the youngest, who had a great deal of faith in God and goodhearted people. "Try to borrow money when we have nothing to give in security! What good will that do?" asked another. "Have we nothing at all?" asked the youngest. "My brothers, I will show you that we have. Our father is a tailor, and has carried on his trade a great many years, and is now about to die of starvation. This is a sufficient proof of his honesty. We, his sons have served for many years in the ranks of the Swedish army and no one can yet show a stain upon our honor. Let us give this our honor, as security; I think we might borrow a little money on such a pledge."

This idea won their general approval. The twelve brothers wrote and signed the following letter: "We, twelve Swedes, sons of a tailor, who is nearly one hundred years of age, deprived of the necessary means of support, pray the Directors of the National Bank for the sum of two hundred dollars, to be used for the support of our old and helpless father. We pledge our honor as security, and promise to pay the above named sum to the bank within one year." This letter was handed to the Directors. The sum asked for was given to them, and the letter torn to pieces, furthermore, the Directors promised to take care of their father as long as he lived. Scarcely had this happened before it was made known in the entire city, and rich and poor paid visits to the old white-headed man, and none went empty-handed. The tailor was thus placed in good circumstances, and after his death left a small capital for each of his sons, a reward for their filial love.—Toledo Commercial.

The Rich Man and his Great House.

A rich West India merchant died, and left one little boy. His name was William Beckford. The little boy was very rich, and grew richer every year until he was twenty-one. He was then one of the richest men of the world.

What did he do with his money? He spent it nearly all on himself. When he traveled, he traveled like a king. He sent on beforehand, and had the rooms he was to use fitted up in the grandest style.

The fine house which his father built in England did not suit him, and he resolved to pull it down and build one that should be the wonder of all England. Four or five hundred men were kept at work on it night and day until it was done. The night workmen used large torches, which lighted up the scene in a most brilliant manner. Beckford took great delight in going out and looking at the progress of the work. He would go out at night to some high part of the grounds, and spend hours in watching the strange sight of house-building by torchlight.

When the place was done it was called Fonthill Abby. Then he built a wall around it, twenty miles in extent, and no visitor was allowed to enter it without a pass. Leave was not given to princes. Gold and silver cups and dishes dazzled the eye; jewels and precious stones were there in the greatest profusion; the most costly furniture adorned it. People would disguise themselves as servants and peddlers, in the hope of getting a glimpse of the wonders within.

And here Beckford lived alone, taking the enjoyment all by himself and to himself.

He had almost everything that money could buy. But money cannot buy happiness, and this was wanting at Fonthill Abbey.

Then there came what business men call a "crash," and the princely fortune of William Beckford melted away like snow under the spring sun. He was in debt; and the gate that would not open to the king had to open to the sheriff, who came and seized his stores of costly things. Fonthill Abby was sold, but it was thought to be too large and expensive for any one to live in; the great tower fell down, and the rest of the building was taken down.

Beckford saved just enough to keep himself from want, and he spent an unhappy old age at a hotel, with nobody to pity or care for him.

"Charge them that are rich in this world that they be not high-minded, nor trust in uncertain riches, but in the living God, who giveth us richly all things to enjoy." (1 Tim. vi. 17.)—Bible-class Magazine.

*Circular Letter.

To the Churches composing the Broome and Tioga Baptist Association:

Brethren most dear, for Jesus' sake beloved;
Another year its rapid flight hath winged,
And we once more in convocation precious
To the saints have met, and counsel sweet have Each with other taken. Here from this banquet
Rich we fain would something gather up, which While we try in homely verse to shape into
Our annual greeting and send forth to you,
May serve your hearts to cheer and courage give
To buckle on anew the Gospel armor,
And holy conflict wage against the foes
Of Truth. The theme we choose is that of those Societies so numerous of late;
All Secret called, and all of this world's origin,
Yet so much intermixed with more or less
Of good as many of our brethren dear
To lure, and much the peace of Zion
To disturb.

The Church is God's Inheritance below, His moral vineyard—
His chosen organ—His appointed agency
Through which to bless the world. His members are
The representatives of Christ on Earth:
And while his Spirit they possess, and walk
As He ordains, their influence is felt,
The world is moved, the myrmidons of darkness
Quail before the force of Truth, not spoke in Words alone; but by the saints exemplified
In meek and useful lives and burnings on
The hearts of those who their good work behold—
The Church is then invincible. Satan
With all his skill attempts in vain her
Overthrow. He therefore strives her members
To seduce, and turn their feet by small degrees
Aside from duty's path. The slightest step once
Taken, throws the advantage in his hands,
And gives him power to lead them farther on,
And farther still, until, or e'er they are Aware, the sky becomes o'ercast, darkness
Pervades the mind, the eye of Faith is dimm'd,
Conscience is put to sleep, and weeds o'ergorw
The path to sacred bower of Prayer. And now
With such malicious joy as devils only
Feel exalts the Arch Deceiver. His plans
Deep laid, are well nigh half accomplished. Then Next before the minds of Christians, led thus Far astray, he brings his thousand schemes of Fine spun charity, and institutions
New, and yet arranged with such exquisite
Skill, they almost seem a part of Gospel
Plan to those who thus are captive led, by Satan at his will. For none e'er left the Closet's sweet retreat, with heart all glowing
In devotion's fervor, kindled by communion
Holy at the Mercy Seat, and going forth
With Jesus in his arms; with all his consecration
Vows in full view before him; with conscience
Tender for his brother's feelings, and the Church's Weal, and rushed with one wild, frantic leap into
The arms of any secret conclave. No;
Brother much beloved! it was not thus you
Learned the want of any other institution
To do good than such as Christ ordained.

But
Open now thine eyes, and see what schemes the Devil hath devised to snare thy feet and Zion's peace to wound. The Church he feigns to Love, and seems to toil to build her up, but Harder strives to garnish her with all the Gay attire of worldly popularity;
And yet he something better wants to fix
The standard of our duty to our fellow Man. The holy brotherhood in which the Lord of glory bound his humble followers,
Must be improved by new invented orders,
Arranged on such a liberal plan that Friends and foes of Jesus Christ, the saint and Sinner on one common ground can meet; by Secret tokens each to other known, and
All the uninitiated fast barred without—
The lovely name of Charity must there
Be prostituted to lure the simple
And beguile the wise:—for though it rolls its Boasted stream in volume ne'er so great, yet
Is its bounty all confined to those who Give the secret signal; while members of
The church of Christ, who fear to take upon Them other vows than those which God imposed,
May die of pinching want, unheeded by those Secret sects, composed in part of brethren
Bound in the same Christian covenant with them.

Benevolence! O precious word, but much
Abused! How sweet thy sound to him who loves
The Saviour as he ought, and truly as Himself his neighbor loves. His Charity,
Not like those secret sects, but as his Master's Large expands. Where'er he finds a child of Want, he finds a neighbor, and waits not for
The pass-word or the grip, but hastens quick
To pour the healing oil and makes provision
For his wants. Where he finds a fallen
Brother, debased by sin and sunk so low
In degradation's filth, that priest and Levite
Pass him by; he takes him by the hand and Kindly urges him to turn and live. In Doing thus, he seeks no higher motive
Than love to God, and love to man, and love
To souls immortal. He needs no other Obligations to prompt to duty than those Which Christ enjoins.

Oh brother! whoso'er thou
Art, that hast in hours of darkness been beguiled,
And led to join in brotherhood compact,
With those who hate the precious Saviour, and Yet profess by Charity's sweet impulse
To be moved; let us address thee in our Master's name; and as he did of Peter
Thrice demand "Me dost thou love?" so let us
Press the query home to thee, "Dost thou indeed
The precious Saviour love?" Thou hast professed Thy love by holy covenant vows. We take Thee at thy word, and hold thee to those vows.
What then are those vows thy soul in anguish
Made when mountain loads of guilt upon thy Conscience pressed; when all thy sins in black array
Cried out for vengeance on thy guilty soul;
When Justice with her flaming sword from thy Approach the tree of Life did guard, and brandish
O'er thy head her fearful blade. In that sad
Hour, when Hope was fled, and in the anguish
Of despair thou gavest up all for lost. Ah think,
When gleaming from the Cross thou didst descry
A ray of hope, with what ecstatic joy
That hope thou didst embrace, and to thy breaking Heart the crucified Redeemer press.
And when he whispered, "I am thine, thy sins
Are all forgiven, and hence my servant thou Shalt be;" how quickly did thy heart respond,
"Lord, I am thine forever!" And in that solemn,
Joyful hour, didst thou not give thyself, both
Soul and body all to him, and take him
For thy portion; thy all in life, in death,
For Time and for Eternity, and say,
"It is enough?"
Were not the vows of consecration which Thou then didst make sincere? And were they not To last till life was spent, and Death should take Thee up to God? Didst thou not vow to take
The Saviour for thy King, and yield obedience
Unreserved to all of his commands, and Ne'er admit a rival to usurp the Throne of thy affections? Didst thou not vow
His sacred word to make man of thy counsel,
And a lamp thy feet in duty's path to Guide? Didst thou not find it amply adequate
To each emergency that could arise?
A full directory in which each duty
E'er enjoined to be observed toward God, and
In his Church and to the world, was clearly Traced with skill divine? Where now, dear brother,
Are thy vows? Where thy affections? And who Are thy associates? What spirit hath induced
Thee to enter into secret compact
With both friends and foes of Jesus Christ, and Take upon thee vows the Bible does not Recognize? What is the nature of those Vows? and what the obligations they impose?
Are they the same God's word requires? If so,
Why need'st thou all this popular machinery
To prompt thee to their just discharge? Where are Thy former vows? and where the Saviour's claims!
If these do not constrain thee thy life to Square by Golden Rule, and love thy neighbor
As thyself; then is thy goodness all induced
By motives which the Master never can Approve. But are those obligations something More than Christ enjoins? And dost thou aim at Higher deeds of Charity than he commands?
Then let us ask of thee in God's own phrase,
"Who hath required this at thy hands?" Will he Approve, or can he bless an act of duty
He has ne'er imposed? Oh brother! get thee
Back from out the meshes of the fowler's
Snare. Call back the joys of thy first love—
Renew the vows of thine espousals. Give
To the Church, and to her Lord, and to His High commands the undivided energies
Of all thy powers.

The ways of Zion mourn—
The Church is grieved—her peace is marred, and her Career of usefulness impeded, by
This unholy secret union of her Sons with those who neither love nor serve the Saviour of lost men.

Dost thou not above
Thy chiefest joy Jerusalem prefer?
Would'st thou not rather far that thy right hand
Her cunning should forget, than that the city
Of our God should be by thee forgotten?
Would'st thou not rather prostrate lie, and let
The chariot wheels of Zion crush thee in
The dust, as in her onward march they o'er Thee roll; than that thou should'st a stumbling block Become to intercept her progress?

Then
Rouse thee, Christian brother; and evidence
Thy love to Zion and to Zion's King,
By seeking first her weal. Let every evil,
And its appearance even, most steadily
Be shunned. Though meat be lawful for thy food,
Yet in the spirit of the sainted Paul,
Do thou its use forego; long as the world
Doth stand, if it shall make thy brother to Offend. Strive hard in the bond of peace the Spirit's unity to keep.

Then shall the Church arise with energy renewed, and
In united phalanx onward move to Certain victory; while all the schemes which Satan hath devised to cloud her glory,
To impede her progress, and paralyze
Her energies, shall disappear like chaff
Before the rising tempest.

The Mountain Meadow Massacre.

The story of the atrocious Mountain Meadow massacre was graphically told in the court room at Beaver, Utah, by Philip Clingen Smith, one of the participants, who has turned state's evidence. In substance his narative is about as follows: He, with other Mormons, felt bad about the coming of this party of emigrants, who entered the territory in September, 1857. The people were forbidden to trade with them, and a meeting was speedily held to discuss the best mode of compassing their destruction. Smith opposed killing them, some of the others relented, and it was finally decided to let them go through in safety. However, John D. Lee, the man now on trial, was met on the road, and he overruled the decision. Orders were thereupon given to intercept the emigrants, who numbered over one hundred, comprising old men and women, middle-aged, youths and children. The Mormons, reinforced with Indians, soon after overtook the hapless travelers, who had already had some bloody fighting with the Indians. The orders were that they should be decoyed from their entrenchments, and only the children spared, who could tell no tales. The emigrants were found strongly fortified, and to Lee was intrusted the task of getting them out. The Mormon force consisted of fifty white soldiers and a strong body of Indians. When they came in sight of the emigrants, Lee showed a white flag and induced the emigrants to come out and talk. Afterward, as the result of the conference, the men, women and children were marched out in a body, and at a prearranged signal the massacre commenced, the bloody work continued until the entire party were killed. The men were not all killed at the first volley, and in a large number of cases the knife was used to dispatch the victims. Soldiers were stationed on horses to shoot on the wing those who ran. Smith fired once in obedience to orders, but he does not know that he killed anybody. The wounded men begged piteously for their lives, but their throats were cut right and left without further parley. Smith saw one woman running toward the men crying, "My husband, my husband!" when a bullet in the back of the head speedily stilled her cries. As Smith went after the children, he saw the wounded at the first fire lying scattered in every direction with their throats cut. After the bloody work was over, the surviving children were collected, and the property of the emigrants was placed in the church tithing house by order of Haight. The facts were reported to Brigham Young, who directed that the property be turned over to John D. Lee, and that nothing further should be said about it by anybody. Finally the goods were sold at auction by Lee's orders, and some of the cattle went to Hooper, delegate to Congress. This testimony was given in court amid the greatest excitement. It is understood to be substantially the same as Lee's suppressed confession. In the face of this evidence the jury disagreed, as was expected, a large majority of the panel being Mormons. But the case is too monstrous and appalling to allow these murderers to escape and it is hoped the civil authorities of the Territory will push the case until justice is done.

News of the Week.

The City.

The Industrial Exposition will reopen in its monster building on September 8th and continue a month. The biennial convention of the Am Pomological Society will be held in connection, and a great display is preparing of paintings, manufactures, architecture and natural history. The railroads give reduced fare.——The new police marshal having issued an order for the closing of all the gambling dens, the police force laugh at it, taking their cue from under officers and the city government, who were elected by these gamblers.

General.

The redemption of fractional currency will soon begin from sub-treasuries, and will continue until the $30,000,000 now in circulation in this form are all called in.——Large swarms of grasshoppers were flying over the central part of Nebraska last week. In many places the farmers fought them with every possible means at their disposal, sulphur being burnt with great success. The ravages of the pest are not so general, but in many places where they lit whole fields of corn have been devoured.

Foreign.

On the night of the 6th of July one of the most horrible railroad accidents that has ever happened in Chili occurred on the Santiago & Valparaiso Railway. As the train from Valparaiso was passing over the bridge at Limache, that structure gave way, and, with the exception of the engine and tender, the whole train, containing fifty persons, was precipitated into the river below. The lamps were broken in the fall, and the oil running out, ignited and set fire to the larger part of the wreck. Fully one-half of the passengers were either crushed to death or perished by fire or water. The investigation went to show that the accident was caused by the weakness of the bridge, which was condemned by an engineer as unsafe several months ago, without any measure being taken to remove it.——A letter from San Miquel says of the recent massacre by Catholic fanatics: In their fiendish occupation of applying the torch to the houses and whatever else their whim suggested, amid all the continuous cry of "Death to foreigners!" "Death to hertics!" was constantly heard. The town remained for three days at the mercy of the assailants, and during that time all classes of crimes were committed, and even those who took refuge in the church were threatened with assassination by the infuriated mob. The losses of property will not fall short of $1,000,000. President Gonzales, of Salvador, had about fifty of those engaged in the recent fanatical riots shot in squads at the towns between San Miguel and the Capital, causing the priests who occasioned the outbreak to witness the executions. Many of these victims confessed that they were assured by the priests that they might rob the rich, provided they gave a part to the church.——Mr. Gladstone has published another pamphlet in which he discusses anew the questions relative to the Papacy, which formed the subject of his former pamphlet on "Vaticanism." The present publication takes the same strong grounds against the Papacy, and predicts trouble in the future, both in Britain and on the Continent from that source. The pamphlet declares that the "Papacy will seize the first opportunity, through bloodshed, to maintain its rule, and will, if necessary, even plunge the world into war."——The French government has prohibited the sale in France of Mr. Gladstone's writing against Papacy.——A request by the French Government to the Pope, to authorize prayers for the preservation of the Republic, has been refused.

Religious Intelligence.

—Farewell was spoken to twenty-two missionaries at the Missionary Rooms of the American Board in Boston week before last.

—Rev. Wm. Taylor, so well known for his evangelical labors in California, Australia, and India, is now preaching in New York city. Mr. Taylor's success in conducting "revival" meetings on missionary ground has been wonderful. He once spent seven months in a missionary tour in South Africa, after which the missionaries there reported 1,200 converts among the English colonists, and 5,000 among the Caffres.

—The English Primitive Methodists at their late annual conference in Leicester reported the following statistics: Members, 169,392; preachers, 15,935; leaders, 10,112; chapels, etc., 6,449; Sunday schools, 3,647; teachers, 50,932; scholars, 316,859. There are also 32 day schools, 64 teachers, and 8,122 scholars. During the year 25 new chapels and 15 new schools had been entered.

—The National Union Convention for the Promotion of Holiness, is announced to commence at South Farmingham, Mass., on Wednesday, August 18, and continue until Friday, Aug, 27. The Committee of Arrangements is headed by W. E. Broadman, D. D., as President, and R. Pearsall Smith, as Vice-President.

—A comparative of the Presbyterian church summary shows an increase since 1870 of over four hundred and fifty churches, fifty thousand communicants, and seventy thousand Sunday-school scholars. The total contributions of the churches were $8,440,000 in 1870, and for the fiscal year of 1875 over a million more, $9,626,500.

—In the great religious awakening in Atlanta, G., the Baptist churches have all been blessed. A hundred have been baptized into the Second church, fifty into the First, sixty into the Fifth.

—The English Wesleyans have on the Fiji Islands, 683 chapels. 283 other preaching-places, 68 missionaries, 893 catechists, 25,620 communicants, and 124,304 attendants on public worship. Their missions date from the year 1835.

—If the Church Journal speaks for the Episcopal church that body is in a sadly relapsed state. A Romish priest turned Protestant and joined the Episcopal church. He was not re-ordained as he claimed he had already been ordained by a Catholic bishop; if he had been Presbyterian or Baptist he would have been re-ordained. The Journal says, "There is no escaping the conclusion that the Episcopal church . . . . believes in apostolic succession and that the church of Rome has preserved it." In other words the pope is the successor of Peter in fact, and a little reforming would make him a good Episcopalian.

—The last census of Canada shows twenty-one thousand Congregationalists, two hundred and thirty-seven thousand Baptists, five hundred and fifty thousand Presbyterians, and fifteen hundred thousand Roman Catholics in the Dominion.

Temperance.

How Dr. Guthrie Became a Teetotaler.

"I had become convinced that my power to do good among the lapsed classes lay in standing out before them as one who, in following Christ and for their sakes, was ready to take up his cross daily, and deny himself. If I was to prevail on them to give up the whiskey, I myself must first give up the wine. I had known so many instances of the sons of ministers, and of Edinburgh ministers, going to the bad; I had seen so many of my old Divinity Hall acquaintances placed at the bar of the General Assembly, and deposed for drunkenness, and other crimes which it leads to, that, with an eye to the good of my family and of my parishioners, I resolved to stand out before the public as a total abstainer, and to bring up my children in the habits of that brotherhood and sisterhood.

I well remember yet the day and place when I screwed up my courage to the sticking point. From how great a load of anxiety and care in respect of the future of my children it relieved my mind! But I confess I felt it hard to have my principles put to so severe a strain before they had time to acquire fiber and firmness, as they had to stand at Mr. Maitland's dinner table. Lord Jeffery, Lord Cockburn, with their wives and others of the elite of Edinburgh literary and legal society, were there—people who might have heard of teetotalers, but certainly had never seen one before, and some of whom probably never dreamed of denying themselves any indulgence whatever for the sake of others, far less for the wretched and degraded creatures who haunted the Cowgate and Grassmarket. But by my principles I was resolved to stick, cost what it might; so I passed the wine to my neighbor, without its paying tax or toll to me, often enough to attract our host's attention, who, to satisfy himself that I was not sick, called for an explanation. This I gave modestly but without any shamefacedness.

The company could hardly conceal their astonishment; and when Jeffery, who sat opposite to me, found that in this matter I was living not for myself but for others—denying myself the use of luxuries in which all around were indulging, and to which I had been accustomed, and which had done me, and were likely to do me, no harm, that I might by my example reclaim the vicious and raise the fallen, and restore peace and plenty to wretched homes—that generous-hearted, noble-minded man could not conceal his sympathy and admiration. He did not speak, but his look was not to be mistaken, and though kind and courteous before my apology, he was ten times more so after it.

This was to me a great encouragement to persevere in the line on which I had entered, and which I continued to follow for twenty years. Independent of the good it did to my family and others, it was a great personal advantage to myself. It made my health better, my head clearer, my spirits lighter, and my purse heavier. I feel sure that all parents, though they themselves might not be able to shake off their old habits (a very easy thing, after all, to one who has not become the slave of drunkenness), if they but knew the load taken from my mind when I first resolved to bring up my family in total abstinence, would rear their children in the total disuse of all such dangerous stimulants."

About a journey in Ireland in 1840, in the midst of a drenching rain, he writes:—"By the time we reached a small inn we were soaking with water outside, and as these were the days, not of tea and toast, but of toddy drinking, we thought the best way was to soak with whiskey inside. Accordingly we rushed into the inn, ordered warm water and got our tumblers of toddy. Out of kindness to the car-driver, we called him in; he was not very well clothed—indeed, he rather belonged in that respect to the order of my ragged school in Edinburgh. He was soaking with wet, and we offered him a good rummer of toddy. We thought that what was 'sauce for the goose was sauce for the gander,'—but the car-driver was not such a gander as we, like geese, took him for. He would not taste it. "Why?' we asked, 'what objection have you?' Said he, "Plase your riv'rence, I am a teetotaler, and I won't taste a drop of it.' Well, that stuck in my throat, and it went to my heart, and (in another sense than drink, though!) to my head. He was a humble, uncultivated, uneducated Roman Catholic carman; and I said, if that man can deny himself this indulgence, why should not I, a Christian minister? I remembered that; and I have ever remembered it to the honor of Ireland. I have often told the story, and thought of the example set by that poor Irishman for our people to follow. I carried home the remembrance of it with me to Edinburgh. That circumstance, along with the scenes in which I was called to labor daily for years, made me a teetotaler."—Autobiography of Dr. Guthrie.

FREE TRACTS.

A Tract Fund for the Free Distributirn of Tracts HAS BEEN SECURED AND SHOULD NEVER BE EXHAUSTED. A friend has pledged this fund a dollar for every otherdollar received, so EVERY NEW SUBSCRIPTION TO THE TRACT FUND COUNTS DOUBLE, and thus $10.00 pays for 20,000 pages of tracts.

The distribntion of these tracts has already saved hnndreds of young men from the lodge, bnt there is a great lack of fnnds to snpply the constantly increasing demand for Free Tracts.

During the year ending July 1st, 1875 a little less than 150.000 pages of Cynosnre Tracts were gratnitously sent out, mostly in very small lots. The present demand is fully 100.000 pages per month, but funds are lacking to meet it.

Many of onr most earnest workers in this canse of God are poor men, who wonld be glad to circnlate thonsands of pages of Antimasonic literatnre if they could have them free.

Home and Health Hints.

Restoration of a Man Almost Drowned.—John Worth of Philadelphia, was almost drowned while bathing at Atlantic City a few days ago. He had gone out for a sail with some friends, and contrary to the captain's remonstrances, went in to swim. He sunk, exhausted, after some time, and was supposed to be drowned when taken out of the water. An hour's efforts of his friends failed to resuscitate him, when Dr. Joseph H. Mitcheson of Edmondton, England, happened to drive up with a party of the railroad directors and others, and at once applied the Sylvester process for artificial respiration, and presently pouring a strong stimulant through his set teeth. It was wonderful to see how speedily these simple restoratives, judiciously administered, revived the man. He was then dressed warmly, and at latest accounts he was doing well. For the information of the general reader, we will state that the Sylvester process consists in first laying the man face downwards for the purpose of emptying the lungs of water; then turning him quickly upon his back, raising his hands above his head and down upon his breast, at the rate of about fifteen times a minute.

Skeletonizing Leaves.—There are several ways of doing this. That by masceration is long, tedious and disagreeable, and quite out of date. The following are the methods now in use: Lay the green leaves and seed vessels on small sheets of tin, and cover tightly with thin lace or muslin, place in a vessel of cold water, put over the fire and boil slowly for several hours. Uncover one by one, wash out the cellular tissue with a camel's hair brush, then bleach, wire, and mount in the usual way. Or put into a basin equal quantities of soft soap and rain water, put in the leaves and let it stand on the stove till the mixture boils. Remove the leaves to a pan of clean soft water. wash them quickly and carefully from the soap, float out on a piece of glass, and remove the tissue with a brush, rinse in clear water. Or take three ounces of carbonate of soda, one and a half of quicklime previously slacked, and one quart of water. Boil ten minutes and draw off the clear solution. Return this to the fire, wash the leaves, and boil briskly one hour or till the tissue is easily removed. To bleach the leaves, mix a drachm of chlorate of lime with a pint of water and a little acetic acid or strong vinegar. Steep the leaves in this about ten minutes, simmer, rinse well, and place in books to press. Or procure Labarrague's solution of chloride of soda, and use a cupful to a quart of water. Put the leaves in, and in two or three days they will be perfectly white.

Brine that Preserves Butter a Year.—Among the many devices for keeping butter in a manner that preserves the rich, rosy flavor of new, with all its sweetness, is the following from the Dutchess Farmer, which is said to be entirely successful:

"To three gallons of brine strong enough to bear an egg, add a quarter of a pound of nice white sugar and one teaspoonful of saltpeter. Boil the brine and when it is cool strain carefully. Make your butter into rolls, and wrap each separately in a clean white muslin cloth, tying up with a string. Pack a large jar full, weight the butter down, and pour the brine until all is submerged. This will keep really good butter perfectly sweet and fresh for a whole year. Be careful to not put upon ice butter that you wish to keep for any length of time. In summer, when the heat will not admit of butter being made into rolls, pack closely in small jars, and, using the same brine, allow it to cover the butter to the depth of at least four inches.

Making Pickles.—Wash the cucumbers, put a layer in the barrel, and sprinkle on a teacupful of salt, then cucumbers and salt alternately, pour on boiling water enough to cover them, let them stand twenty-four hours, then pour off the brine, scald and turn it on the cucumbers two successive days; then take them from the brine, wipe them dry and scald good cider vinegar and pour on them hot. For a barrel of pickles put in a bag one-half pound of ground cloves and allspice each, a piece of alum the size of an English walnut, and horse radish not sliced. Scald the vinegar and pour on hot several times to make the pickle hard and green. They will keep until cucumbers come again, if they are stirred often.

Farm and Garden.

Late Chickens are the Best Layers.—A correspondent of the Country Gentleman writes: "After repeated experiments during the past twenty-five years in hatching chickens, I am fully convinced that fowls hatched in the month of July make far better layers than those hatched at any other season of the year. Early-hatched chickens commence laying in September and continue until cold January weather, when they discontinue until spring. On the other hand, when hatched in July or August, they begin laying in February and continue until October. I find July chickens will average fifty to seventy-five more eggs yearly than those hatched in March. My method, therefore, is to hatch a hundred chickens in August for my own use. As soon as the cocks can be selected from the pullets they are converted into pot-pie, giving the pullets all the room. The pullets are then well fed, and are soon large enough to care for themselves. The light Brahmas have always been my most profitable and favorite fowl; but with great reluctance I am obliged, after three years' trial, to place the partridge Cochins at the head of the list. As layers they excel any Asiatic breed I have ever known, and as market fowls they have no equal. They are very hardy, mature early, and make short-legged, yellow-fleshed, heavy breasted fowls. My pullets hatched last August are laying now, as they have since February. They are superior sitters and most careful mothers. I am also breeding the white Cochins for the first time this season, and thus far am much pleased with them."

—A farmer informs the Kentucky Home Journal that he always turns his sheep on his standing corn after it is in full ear. They destroy many weeds that would otherwise reseed the ground, clean up the fence rows, and get much good food that at this season of the year comes well to hand. He adds that you can continue to let them in the field, and so long as they find anything else to feed upon they will not molest the corn.

The Way to Hitch Up a Team.—Always get the lines undone, and in shape to pick them up any time before hooking the tugs. Some people pick up the neck-yoke the first thing, and then hook the tugs before taking down the lines. Then if the team start they have no control over them whatever.

In unhitching, the tugs should be unhooked the first thing. Never throw the lines off, one each side of the them, as you would have no control of team. Let them lay in the wagon till you do them up, when everything will be safe. A little thought in regard to such things might save a sad accident sometimes.—W. Rural.

Levington's Key to Masonry.

This is Rev. Mr. Levington's last, and in the judgment of its author, best work on Masonry. The contents of the first chapter are as follows:

"Commencement and growth of Speculative or Symbolic Freemasonry—A table showing the thing at a glance—The use that the Atheists made of it—Identical with Illuminism—Its connection with the French Revolution, and with the Irish Rebellion—The action of the British Parliament with regard to it—Proofs of its diabolical purposes—Its Introduction, doings, progress and designs in the United States."

The contents of the Eleventh chapter are thus startling:

"Knights of the Golden Circle—Graphic account of them by a seceding Knight, and remarks thereon, showing the identity of the order with Masonry—Quotations from Sir Walter Scott."

This work is thrilling in statement, and powerful in argument. 425 pages,
Price $1.35.

Postage on the Cynosure.

THE POSTAGE ON THE CYNOSURE MUST BE PAID AT CHICAGO. It is twenty cents a year.

The cost of postage now depends entirely on the size and weight, and therefore some smaller papers charge but fifteen cents; and others about the size of the Cynosure charge twenty-five cents a year for postage.

If the subscription price of the CYNOSURE was $2.50 or $3.00 a year, the price of many religious papers containing no more reading matter, we might afford to pay the postage ourselves, but at $2.00 a year we cannot do this with our present Subscription list.

Therefore let all send the postage, 20 cents a year, 10 cents for half a year with their renewals.

The commission on one new subscription for a year will pay the postage on your own and the new subscriber's paper. We would rather have the postage paid by commissions than in any other way.

When postage is not paid we shall have to shorten the time of subscription sufficiently to pay it.

Topics of the Time.

The "specie payments" question is certainly taking a prominent place in the political questions discussed in the skirmishing State elections this fall. Hon. W. D. Kelley of Pennsylvania is chief apostle of inflation and harangues as well as he is able for a bad cause. Other prominent champions are quiet. The espousal of a fallacy for the sake of popularity among the laboring classes, is not the mark of a statesman. The best proof of the need of return to the fixed basis of coin is in the full coffers of the banks, where men put away millions for a low rate of interest rather than invest in business in a fluctuating state of the markets. The State of New York has already met the question fairly, and by a law recently passed, all taxes after January 1, 1879, are payable only in coin, and all contracts made payable in "dollars," the kind of dollars not specified, are to be paid in coin. This brings the case to an exact issue and other States should follow. The quotations of gold have taught everybody to false basis of money by adding the premium to the coin base of one dollar. The correct method is now suggested that the paper money depreciation be quoted instead of the gold premium. The current "promises to pay" will soon be shamed under this plan into getting the character and value which their face promises.

Another political complication of more dangerous nature exists in Ohio, where the Romanists have openly joined the Democrats for the exchange of help from that party when in power against the public schools. This union was about perfected last year when the two joined hands and passed the Geghan law, but the contract is now proclaimed, and should be fought to a downright issue. It is not much to predict the destruction of any such combination. Like the lodge, the Jesuits have little to hope from American hearts and principles when they publish their errands. Formed both to work in the dark, daylight confuses them, and publicity is their chief enemy.

As an adviser on this matter of voting with the Catholics, the associate editor of the Herald and Presbyter has this to say: "I would not vote for a Romanist for any office of trust or power, any more than I would for an unnaturalized foreigner. The Romanist's allegiance to the Papacy; his subserviency to the priesthood, that claims to control his conscience, are a snare to him, and, however honest he might be or try to be, it would not be safe to trust him. As long as Rome holds and publishes, as in the Syllabus, and civil and religious liberty are the great heresies of the age, her votaries are unfit to be the rulers or legislators of a free people." Every reasonable man who, loves the rugged and truthful ideas whence the American nation sprung will agree with this; and who can blame if one should extend the application of this exclusiveness to every branch of the papal system; and say, that when a man swears away his tongue, his conscience and his vote to an irresponsible power, foreign to the government of these United States, and hostile to its principles and practices, that man shall not receive my vote for any responsible office. The action of the Romanists in Ohio will help voters throughout the Union to a better understanding of such questions.

Southern Illinois has given us an outburst of savagery unlooked for except in lawless regions, and such Gov. Beveridge will not own in his jurisdiction. It seems a strange joke, in communities long settled and well-ordered, for a band of young fellows, "hired men" on farms and others, to form into a band of midnight marauders and assassins, riding about in white masks, white peaked hats, on white-blanketed horses to execute private piques on neighbors. But when one-half their number are shot, the joke becomes earnest work. The people of Franklin county heard of threats and midnight murders, but found no assassin until a bold man trapped the gang. Their stupidity is equalled by ten thousand communities abiding in confidence and quiet, while in their midst bands of armed men are meeting who have taken as savage and binding oaths upon them as did ever a Ku-Klux; who have really no better object than the young fellows in Illinois supposed themselves to seek; who are no more respected in community than they; and who are just as likely in all human probability to fall into as violent excesses. And yet, a voice raised in warning is rebukedf and men are quiet and satisfied while the soul-destroying 'orders" ply their nightly work.

Popery and Masonry.

BY REV. P. B. CHAMBERLAIN.

Bitter as the growing antipathy between these two bodies now is, they really sustain to each other the endearing relations of parent and child. Beyond all historic doubt Freemasonry is the illegitimate child of heathen grossness and papal craftiness and combines in itself the ugliest features and the worst disposition of both of its parents.

I boldly throw out the challenge to the most inveterate Masonic hater of popery, that if he will adduce from the whole history of that system what he considers the most glaring instances of papal frauds, corruptions, crimes, heresies, infidelity and sacrilege, I will fully match them by like deeds of darkness from the history of Masonry.

Does the acceptor of this challenge cite as instances of consummate fraud, the Papal claims of direct, unbroken, divinely efficacious descent from the Apostle Peter, the claim of the supernatural origin of her images or the miraculous power of her relics. I match them by the equally fraudulent claims of Masonry to a vast antiquity, to the sole possession of architectural secrets, and to hoarded scientific learning.

Is my attention called to the corrupting power of popery, to the fact that she has filled every land in which she has had political sway with vice and crime. I meet even this by the history of Masonry in our own land where it has now had a boasted political supremacy for a full generation and with results such as popery scarcely if ever surpassed in the same length of time—a perfect carnival of crimes of the most gigantic and shameless character; the utter subversion of both honor and honesty in men of the highest standing; huge commercial conspiracies, official defalcations, legislative bribery and judicial perjury that shock, yea, even shake the whole nation.

I charge this fearful state of affairs more largely to Masonry than to all other causes combined. I make this serious charge on the double ground, that by its treasonable interference with all the processes of our criminal court, Masonry has prevented all adequate punishment of all these crimes while it still retains as conspicuous members of its fraternity the criminals who commit them; thus affording at once both immunity from legal penalty and loss of social standing.

This opens wide the fountains of wickedness in man's depraved nature. In any age and in any land wicked men will do just as wickedly as they dare do. The only sufficient restraint for such depravity is the fear of some sure and adequate penalty of some kind from some source—from civil authorities, from public indignation, or from an angry God. Remove all of these as Masonry practically does and men will revel in all wickedness. I know of nothing in the history of popery tending so directly and so surely to undermine at the same time all social virtue and all civil justice as this does, unless, indeed, it be what so nearly resembles it in spirit and in form, the sale of "papal indulgences," by which for a price any man could procure a formal license to commit any crime and yet be exempt from either legal prosecution, ecclesiastical discipline or social disgrace.

Should my opponent cite as evidence of diabolical cruelty some of the atrocious murders of popery. After throwing out of the count such wholesale massacres as St. Bartholomew and such fiendish enormities as the Spanish Inquisition which nothing but complete despotism and dense ignorance render possible, and which therefore popery could not repeat in this age, I will match any ordinary case of papal crime by at least a full score of well authenticated Masonic murders like those of Miller, Murdock and Morgan, which for deliberate barbarous cruelty are equal to the deeds of the dark ages of popery.

If we turn from these fields of fraud, corruption and crime to those of heresy, infidelity and sacrilege, I am here even more confident of success.

Is popery charged with having corrupted the very life-blood of Christianity by many fundamental heresies? I confidently assert that she has never promulgated a more fundamentally, false and fatal heresy than Masonry repeatedly publishes to the world in those official resolutions of condolence in which she declares unequivocally that men of life-long impurity and open viciousness, who died impenitent and unbelieving, have gone directly to the "land of peace and rest," the "Grand Lodge on high;" in the face of God's most explicit declaration that no such person shall ever enter heaven.

Is it assumed with the great body of Protestants that the papal church is preeminently, if not specifically, the anti-Christ of Scripture, and consequently supremely wicked and hateful to God? Who can point out any clear instance in which it has ever approached in treasonable audacity the impious deism of Masonry, which in all its elaborate religious ritualism, from the initiation of its canddiates to the burial of its dead, studiously ignores the very existence of the Son of God, practically repudiates all the sacrificial merits and meditatorial intercession of the crucified and risen Lord?

Finally, do Masons cite as evidence of papal sacrilege the Pope's claim to be the vice-gerent of God, officially infallible, holding in his hands the keys of life and death? What is there even in all this, monstrous as it is, which is not fully matched by Masonry when intelligent Christian men sing in joint chorus with the most abandoned reprobates, "Hail Masonry divine." Or when Christian ministers who are satisfied to adore even the Infinite Jehovah as the worshipful God and the puissant Lord, salute, in idolatrous flattery, some graceless infidel as most worshipful or THRICE puissant master, thus literally "exalting him above all that is called God or that is worshiped?" Here is sacrilege that is simply superlative and therefore clearly insurpassable.

Here, then, since neither of us can reach a more dizzy height in our contest for the palm of infamy, I submit the case to the decision of all candid, thinking men, with this single practical question: If there be any force in this comparison of these two rival organizations, how can the Christian ministry and the religious press be justified in so studiously avoiding all reference to Masonry, while so earnestly and so persistently attacking popery?

Editors Christian Cynosure:

Your invitation to write for the Cynosure was accepted with pleasure by the writer, who wishes that what shall be written may interest the reader, but feels that description must always fall short of reality, and that what is interesting to the spectator or partaker may be very dull when put on paper. So much by way of apology. After we left Chicago, we stopped first at Allegheny, where we were welcomed by a tried friend of the Cynosure, and the cause it represents. One of the most interesting sights in Allegheny, is Bellevue Cemetery. A few years ago it was a private park, having a beautiful location on an eminence covered with forest trees and fitted up without regard to expense. The owner had evidently intended to live there in peace the rest of his days, surrounded by all the comforts and luxuries which wealth can buy. But his "riches took unto themselves wings." He went surety for his two sons-in-law, and his estate was sold to the city of the living to be a city for the dead.

In Philadelphia there is another monument of the vanity of earthly possessions. Stephen Girard, left his father's home in sunny France at fourteen to seek his fortune on the sea. By his great business tact, and, doubtless extreme penuriousness, he succeeded in gathering a fortune estimated at seven and a half million, and living a very unhappy life. His home was a very gloomy one, and his wife early in their married life became insane. His biographer and eulogist, the Secretary of Girard College, says in speaking of his family relations, "There is sufficient evidence among the papers of Mr. G. to show that, as is not unusual in such matters, his reputation while living and his memory after death, have both unjustly suffered from erroneous public impressions on this subject." What these evidences are he does not state. Again he says, "In consequence of this affliction (i. e. his wife's insanity) his domestic condition became so painful, that he finally determined to return to his old occupation of a mariner, and by absence, to seek the tranquility denied him in his home." Thus he lived on and toiled on, often seeking only to work enough during the day to get tired enough to sleep at night. He did not look beyond this world and it gave him no peace. At one time he built a fleet of merchantmen and named them after the infidel philosophers, Voltaire, Rosseau and others. One thing must be said, however, to his credit. In 1793, when the yellow fever laid waste the city and all who had the means, fled to the country, Girard remained in Philadelphia, and with one Peter Helm, took charge of one of the hospitals. Helm's name is almost forgotten, but Girard's still lives and his praises are sung by many. Why? When he was nearing the gates of death, he made a will to dispose of his immense possessions which he knew he could not carry with him. This will is probably one of the most remarkable papers of the kind on record. A few of its provisions will give some idea of the character of the man. He gave $90,000 to various benevolent and educational institutions then existing in and about Philadelphia; $20,000 to the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania, for the benefit of needy Masonic brethren; $6,000 to establish a school in a township near Philadelphia for poor white children; $800,000 to the city and State, for internal improvements; $140,000 to his numerous relatives, annuities representing a capital sum of $65,000 to friends and servants; 280,000 acres of land in Louisiana, with personal property thereon, including numerous slaves, to the city of New Orleans, for the use of its inhabitants; and the larger share of his estate to a school for poor white male orphan children, which has been built and is known as Girard College. Among the provisions made in his will representing this institution were the following: It was to consist of a main building with four smaller buildings; the main building was to be built entirely of stone and brick, with the exception of doors and windows, with their frames; poor white male, orphans between the ages of six and ten were to be admitted and maintained in the institution. No ecclesiastic, missionary, or minister of any sect whatsoever is permitted to have anything to do with the management of the institution, or even to be admitted to the grounds as visitor or otherwise; a stone wall ten feet high was to surround the whole grounds.

A small party, none of whom were ministers, went to the College, and after answering questions at the gate satisfactorily, entered the grounds. The main building is built of white marble, is 116 by 169 feet, and 59 feet 8 inches high. From the ground on all sides of the building, seven or eight steps lead up to the first floor, from which rise 34 marble pillars to hold up the projecting roof. Facing the main entrance is a marble, life-size statue of Mr. Girard, and behind this a sarcophagus containing his ashes. We ascended the marble stairs to the marble roof, from which we obtained a good view of the beautiful flower beds and lawn in front of the building, the city extending for miles in every direction, and Fairmount Park, with the Centennial buildings in the distance. The world may sing the praises of Stephen Girard as a benefactor of the human race; but to a thoughtful believer he appears as a bigoted infidel, (or what is worse if anything); a worshiper of the Masonic Baal; a slave holder who persecuted the poor black to the last act of his life; a lover of money who amassed wealth and hoarded it to the last, when he endeavored to rear himself a monument that would glorify his name after him. But God can make oven the wrath of man to praise him. Ministers are indeed excluded from the grounds, but the Bible is found in the chapel, and hymns, such as, "There is no name so sweet on earth," are sung at the religious exercises which are held daily. Whether this is in accordance with the intentions of the poor, rich founder of the institution is a question. He desired that the children should be instructed in morality, so let us agree with the present directors in their apparent opinion, that true moral teaching includes the Bible and Christianity.

H. A. F.

I know a brother minister whom a P. E. a few years ago urged to come on his district, stating it would afford him much consolation if he would accept the offer. To-day there is not a place on said P. E. district that he would offer where that preacher would be accepted, solely because he has been active against Masonry. I know a young, first-class minister, whose warm friends (Masonic) "turned a cold shoulder" on, because he merely seconded certain resolutions in conference. And I know enough to know that our church, for the sake of the peace of Jerusalem (?) refuses to have the terrible evil rebuked, or to allow any measures to be taken that will avert the calamity that must necessarily come if such state of things continue.

The enemy has entered and we need not flatter ourselves that petting and coaxing is going to remove him or remedy the evil. One staunch Freemason in a society will, if he is allowed to remain without rebuke and interference, introduce the virus beyond a cure. And I am now satisfied that true Masons, professing to be Christians, serving Baal and pretending to holiness, will if in their power, ruin, any man who crosses their path in effectually exposing the nature and genius of secret clans.—*W. "A Good Enough Morgan."

THURLOW WEED'S REMINISCENCES OF THE OLD-TIME TRAGEDY.

Letter to the New York Herald.

NEW YORK, Aug, 6, 1875.—To the Editor of the Herald: The recent inauguration of a massive Masonic Hall and Asylum in this city, and the imposing demonstration of Knights Templar from various parts of the Union, recalled an event in the history of that institution which occurred almost fifty years ago, and was the occasion, first of local, and subsequently of general, inquiries and excitement. This is known and remembered as the "Morgan Abduction." Having been connected with that question as a member of an investigating committee and as the editor of an Anti-masonic journal, I have been called on by the New York Herald for information concerning the body of a man found on the shore of Lake Ontario, alleged to be that of William Morgan, but claimed afterwards to be the body of Timothy Monroe. The allegations of mutilating that body, of palming it off on the public for political effect, and of boasting that it was a "good enough Morgan till after the election," were publicly made, widely circulated, and at a distance generally believed. I was painfully conscious of this in meeting strangers at home and abroad for more than forty years.

I did not personally know William Morgan, who was for more than two months writing his book in a house adjoining my residence, at Rochester. When applied to by Mr. Dyer, my next-door neighbor, where Morgan boarded, to print the book purporting to disclose the secrets of Masonry, I declined to do so, believing that a man who had taken an oath to keep a secret had no right to disclose it. Although not a Freemason, I had entertained favorable opinions of an institution to which Washington, Franklin, and Lafayette belonged. On my refusal to print his book Morgan removed to Batavia, where he made the acquaintance of David C. Miller, editor of the Advocate, also a Mason, who became his publisher. I pass briefly over a series of facts which were judicially established, embracing the arrest of Morgan, his conveyance to and confinement in the county jail at Canandaigua, from which he was released and conveyed by night in close carriages through Rochester, Clarkson, and along the Ridge Road to Fort Niagara, in the magazine of which he was confined. While thus confined a Knight Templar encampment was installed in Lewiston. When at supper, the zeal and enthusiasm of the Templars having been aroused by speeches and wine, Col. William King of Lockport, invited four men (Whitney, Howard, Chubbuck, and Garside) from their seats at the banqueting table into an adjoining apartment, where he informed them that he had an order from the Grand Master (De Witt Clinton), the execution of which required their assistance. This party was then driven to Niagara, reaching the fort a little before 12 o'clock.

THE MURDER OF MORGAN.

Upon entering the magazine, Col. King informed Morgan that his friends had completed their arrangements for his removal to and residence upon a farm in Canada. Morgan walked with them to the wharf, where a boat was held in readiness for them by Elisha Adams, an invalid soldier, into which the party passed and rowed away, Adams remaining to warn the boat off by signal if on its return any alarm had been given. It was nearly 2 o'clock in the morning when the boat came back, having, as Adams expressed it, lost one man, only five of the six being on board when the boat returned. When the boat reached a point where the Niagara River empties into Lake Ontario, a rope being wound around Morgan's body, to either end of which a sinker was attached, he was thrown overboard. It is due to the memory of Gov. Clinton to say that Col. King had no such order, and no authority to make use of his name. It is proper, also, to add that none of these men survive. John Whitney, of Rochester, whom I knew so well, related all the circumstances connected with the last act in the tragedy to me, at Albany, in 1831, in the presence of Simon P. Jewett, of Clarkson, and Samuel Barton, of Lewiston.

FINDING THE BODY.

In October, 1827, more than a year after the abduction of Morgan, a body drifted on shore near a small creek which entered into Lake Ontario. A Coroner's inquest was held, and a verdict rendered that it was the body of an unknown person. The Coroner wrote out a minute description of the body, and published it along with the finding of the jury in an Orleans county newspaper. That description attracted the attention of persons well acquainted with Morgan, excited a considerable interest. The widow and several intimate friends of Morgan seemed so confident that it was his body that the Committee appointed to investigate the abduction determined to hold another inquest, of which public notice was given. On the day appointed some sixty or seventy people assembled at the mouth of Oak Orchard Creek, where the body of the unknown man was interred. Before opening the grave Mrs. Morgan and Dr. Strong described certain marks upon Morgan's body, by means of which it could be identified. When the rude coffin was opened the body it contained disclosed the peculiarities described, and after deliberate examination the jurors declared it unanimously the body of William Morgan. From the verdict no one present dissented, and for a week or ten days the question seemed settled.

THE BODY CLAIMED AGAIN.

Later in October there came a report that the body declared to be that of William Morgan was claimed by his family to be that of Timothy Monroe, a Canadian, who was swept in a small boat over Niagara Falls eleven days previous to the time that the body was washed ashore at the mouth of Oak Orchard Creek. The remains in the meantime had been taken by Mrs. Morgan to Batavia. A third inquest was now to be held for the purpose of establishing the claim of Mrs. Monroe. A large concourse of citizens was in attendance. Mrs. Monroe appeared, and gave a description of her husband's person, and of the clothes in which he left home on the morning of the day he was drowned. Previous to her examination, Bates Cooke, Chairman of the Morgan Investigating Committee, examined the clothes taken from the body and carefully preserved by the Coroner with great minuteness. This enabled him to test the accuracy of Mrs. Monroe's knowledge and memory.

Neither Mrs. Monroe, nor any person sympathizing with her, or interested in the identification of the body as that of Monroe, had access to it, or had seen any of the wearing apparel of the deceased. And yet Mrs. Monroe not only gave a general description of each garment, but underwent a rigid cross-examination by Mr. Cooke, of more than an hour, in which she described with singular accuracy every rent and patch found in each garment. She indicated buttons she had sewed on the pantaloons to replace those lost which did not match the others. She also described one stocking that had been darned with yarn of a different color. In a word, her description of the clothing was so accurate in every particular as to leave no doubt that each article had been under her special care. But, wonderfully accurate as she had been on this point, she was most strangely wrong in her description of the body, Monroe being at least three inches taller than the corpse. She described her husband's hair and whiskers as coarse and black, adding that his hair had been cut quite short a few days before he was drowned, while that upon the head of the deceased was long, silky, and of a chestnut color. Monroe's son confirmed his mother's testimony relating both to the clothes and the body. No attempt was made to impeach either, nor was there any doubt that Monroe had been drowned, as alleged. It was difficult to reconcile these conflicting statements. Mrs. Monroe was as clearly right about the clothes as she was wrong about the body found in them.

THE THIRD INQUEST

resulted in finding that the body previously adjudged to be Morgan's was that of Timothy Monroe.

While, up to the time that Mrs. Monroe appeared there were no just grounds for discrediting the correctness of the second inquest, yet after the third inquest had been held at Batavia, there was a strong reaction in public opinion. Although the gentleman associated with me in the investigation were still strongly of the opinion that the body was that of William Morgan, my own previously clear and strong convictions were a good deal disturbed. Nor can I now, after nearly fifty years' anxious inquiry and reflection, say that I am satisfied that it was or was not the body of William Morgan.

The last inquest was held only a few days before the election. No other question entered into the canvass. The excitement was greater than I had previously or have since witnessed.

ORIGIN OF THE "GOOD ENOUGH" STORY.

A few evenings before the election I went into a billiard saloon to see my friend Gustavus Clark. A number of gentlemen were present, and among them Ebenezer Griffin, who, as counsel for several persons indicted for the abduction of Morgan, had conducted the inquest at Batavia. As I was leaving the room Mr. Griffin said, "Well, Weed, what are you going to do for a Morgan now?" I replied, as I was closing the door, "That is a good enough Morgan until you bring back the one you carried away." This remark was reproduced in the Rochester Daily Advertiser, with an apparently slight but most important variation. Instead of what I did in fact say, I was represented as saying, "That is a good enough Morgan until after the election." What I did say in regard to Mr. Griffin's question was a proper and harmless response, while what I was erroneously accused of saying was highly discreditable, and has subjected me, at home and abroad, for nearly fifty years to reproach and obloquy.

My action in reference to the body in question was influenced by a sincere and earnest desire for truth. I realized, in every step taken, the high responsibility of the investigation. I knew that a mistake upon a question of such exciting and absorbing interest would react powerfully. Thus impressed, I exerted myself personally to induce all who knew Morgan, whether Masons or Anti-masons, Democrats or Whigs, to be present at the second inquest.

In conclusion, I affirm, in the strongest language and in the broadest sense, that I acted in perfect good faith throughout the investigation touching the body found at Oak Orchard Creek, and that I have truthfully repeated a playful and innocent reply to a question out of which grew the unfounded charge of boasting that it was a "good enough Morgan till after the election," under the odium of which I have rested forty-eight years.

Odd-Fellows.

BY A. B. SHERK.

This institution was originated in Manchester, England, in 1813. So says Chamber's Encyclopedia. "The order is widely spread over the whole of England and Scotland," and throughout the United States and Canada it is growing very rapidly. We will briefly review the preface to the book containing their constitution, by-laws, rules of order, etc. Notice the following points:

1. "Odd-fellowship teaches in the most beautiful and forcible manner the all-important lesson of fraternity, that all men are of one family and are therefore brethren." This "all-important lesson" was taught by inspiration more than eighteen centuries ago: "God hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth." But, mark it! Odd-fellowship does it "in the most beautiful and forcible manner." An improvement on the Apostles no doubt.

2. "The principles of Odd-fellowship are those of humanity and religion. These are high claims, "humanity and religion." The principle of "humanity" teaches us to raise the fallen, to gather the out-casts, and neglected, and bestow our benefactions on the needy everywhere. Does Odd-fellowship do so? The principle of "religion" teaches us that man is a sinner; that God has revealed his will to him, has made atonement for sin, and will pardon the returning rebel. Does Odd-fellowship teach all this? If so, then it takes the place of Christianity. But we fancy there is some "mental reservation" implied in the above language. It may be natural religion that is meant. Then why not say so?

3. "It is the 'mystic tie' that binds us together in indissoluble brotherhood, prompting us to deeds of brotherly love and benevolence." The mystic tie is its secrecy and this is said to be a "recommendation." What potent influence there must be in the "mystic tie?" What wondrous power is found in signs, grips and pass-words. It unites men in "indissoluble brotherhood" and gives them an impulse to noble deeds of benevolence. It must require a mind wonderfully credulous to believe all this. We had always supposed that Christian love was the only element by which souls were united and prompted to deeds of true benevolence. Odd-fellowship, however, has discovered a new way; it can do so by the "mystic tie."

4. "But there are mysteries within the inner veil of our altars, that none except members of the fraternity are permitted to behold, solemn and sublime truths are there inculcated." These "have remained there for ages" —since 1813 at the longest—which means "ages" in the language of Odd-fellowship. But what truths are they? Truths in science, in mathematics, in philosophy or in morals? They are "solemn and sublime truths that have never reached the ear of any save those who have proved themselves worthy of the sacred trust." Here, it seems to us, there is either gross selfishness or base deception. If, as the book states, Odd-fellows hold "truths" that the rest of the world does not know, then we maintain they form one of the most selfish institutions in existence. Truth, all truth, is the common heritage of mankind. No man can give better proof of selfishness, no society can give stronger evidence of its utter selfishness than by withholding solemn and sublime truths. If they do not hold the "truths" they claim, they are guilty of deception. If the former is not true then the latter must be.

Let those who have not yet looked "within the inner veil," investigate the character, claims and tendencies of this "mystic" order before rushing into its conclave.

Port Elgin, Ont.

When Wifberforce died, Daniel O'Connell said: "He has gone to heaven bearing a million broken fetters in his hands." Happy he, whatever he may leave, or not leave, on earth, who goes thus freighted into the other world.

The N W. Christian Advocate, Aug. 11, has a cautious article on "Political Romanism" in which the writer says:—"There may be moral questions involved in politics: Slavery was such a question, and the liquor traffic is another. On these individual Christians, local churches, and ecclesiastical bodies may express opinions, and urge measures without just cause of complaint. The action is public, well understood, is peculiar to no sect, and aims at no sectarian advantage. The object is moral and can be promoted by all religious bodies alike," etc.

These sensible remarks apply with equal force to Freemasonry whose "brotherhood" includes all the evils specified by the Advocate, and many more, and, we will add voting is a moral as well as political power.

Let us consider the chief evil of war. What is it? What induces us to place war at the head of human calamities? What distinguishes war is, not that man is slain, but that he is slain, spoiled, crushed by the cruelty, the injustice, the treachery, the murderous hand of man. The evil is moral evil. War is the concentration of all human crimes. Here is its distinguishing accursed brand. Under its standard gather violence, malignity, rage, fraud, perfidity, rapacity, and lust.

If it only slew men it would do little. It turns man into a beast of prey. Here is the evil of war, that man, made to be the brother, becomes the deadly foe of his kind; that man, whose duty it is to mitigate suffering, makes the infliction of suffering his study and end; that man, whose office it is to avert and heal the wounds which comes from natnre's powers, makes researches into nature's laws, and arms himself with her most awful forces, that he may become the destroyer of his race.

These remarks show us the great evil of war. It is moral evil. The field of battle is a theater, got up at immense cost, for the exhibition of crime on a grand scale. There the hell within the human breast blazes out fiercely and without disguise. A more fearful hell in any region of the universe can not well be conceived. There the fiends hold their revels, and spread their fury.—Dr. Channing.

Workmanlike Plans for Iowa—From the State Secretary.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

The following is the plan adopted by the Iowa State Anti-secret Association, in convention at Clear Lake, June 30th, 1875, by which to raise means to defray the expenses of the State Lecturer or Lecturers: 1st. That the Corresponding Sec'y be furnished with a list of the names of all the Vice-presidents, with their addresses, giving them notice that they are requested to take such measures as they may deem best to procure means in their respective localities for defraying the expenses of State Lecturers, and report the same to the Treasurer of the State Association.

2nd. That the State Lecturers be requested to collect, by public collections or otherwise, at least the amount necessary to defray their traveling expenses, and that they be requested to raise funds on their fields of operation, by collections, subscriptions, or donations, to be placed to the credit of the Association, and report the same to Treasurer monthly.

The following are the names of Vice-presidents furnished me, with the counties in which they reside: Barnabus Gibbs of Winnebago, S. Dodge, of Mitchell, B. Peasley of Kossuth, W. J. McMasters of Clayton, Rev. J. Jones of Worth, Hon. E. B. Kephart of Linn, George Brokaw of Washington, S. E. McGilver of Floyd, E. S. Grinnell of Chickasaw, E. D. Bradley of Hancock, J. J. Fayden of Story, T Palmeter of Cerro Gordo, Rev. H. Fertner of Marshall, John Branden of Buchanan, S. Y. Orr of Louisa, Rev. T. J. Bauder of Muscatine, A. C. Staples of Cedar, S. Easterly of Jones, George Wiskey of Jasper, G. W. Wall of Green, Joseph Bookwalter of Carroll, G. P. Fisher of Poweshiek, Rev. S. F. Longshore of Lucas, Rev. George Miller of Madison, Rev. J. E. Ham of Council Bluffs, Rev, L. Debusk of Guthrie, Rev. Bufkins of Des Moines City, Rev. Wm. Jacobs of Dallas, M. Hulbert of Hardin, A. T. Curtis of Johnson.

It will be seen that the addresses of the Vice-presidents are not furnished me, as the Association ordered. I wish the parties named would send me their addresses at an early day, I desire also that persons interested in the anti-secrecy reform, in different parts of the State, write me, giving any information concerning the progress of the movement in their neighborhoods or counties, offering suggestions and proposing plans of operation, or making inquiries concerning the general work of the Association.

I hear that secretism is strong and active in the village of Rome, and that religion is at a very low ebb. Lodge nights take up half of the week-day evenings, and bring a stir to the village street. Prayer-meeting night comes and gives but a feeble sign, for here, as in many other places, the hearts of the multitude are fascinated with lodge-worship.

Driving westward some five miles to Ghent, I lectured in a pleasant grove, to a quiet, but not large assembly. On Friday, 16th, returned to LeRaysville, thirteen miles east and spent the balance of day in preparation for an out-door meeting. Here on Saturday afternoon, with a favoring sky, and in the pleasant door-yard of brother Noble Canfield, to a congregation of our friends from adjacent towns and some few from this village, I exhibited the follies and evils of secret orders and sought to awaken all Christian minds against their false worship and pernicious moral influence. Thus the devotees of modern lodge idolatry were foiled in their attempt to shut out discussion from their midst. Lodge power is strong here, but bigotry and intolerance and arrogance cannot bind every soul in their fetters, nor have their own way without rebuke or opposition from minds that are not enslaved. Let secretists bow down to their vile idols, but not hope to lord it over the free, Christian intelligence of the age.

LeRaysville is a beautiful village with two churches, a Congregational and a Methodist. The last two administrations in the M.* E. church have been Masonic, of three years each. This place is just now afflicted with a three-fold secretism, a Masonic lodge, an Odd-fellows do., and a grange, and the public mind is so little enlightened as to the vicious and false moral principles of secretism, and lodge power has such a control of public sentiment, that secretists and their subservient dupes have a controling influence; and to remain silent under their leadership, or to justify the follies and ceremonies and sham morality of these orders is the characteristic of too many. There are a few, however, who protest against a bondage to secret orders, as hostile to Christianity and manliness, and the general good, and while these few will not support a ministry that truckles to the false gods of the lodges, I am sorry to say, that it is an unpopular thing for any to be known as opposers of secrecy. Hence those who are leaders, political, or aspirants for place and power, so control public sentiment, that it is considered quite ungenteel to give this great moral issue any candid consideration, and very many would fear to lose caste with the popular secret rings by attending any meeting where they could get Christian light on this subject. But LeRaysville will overcome this difficulty. Its churches will not always be run in the interest of secret orders, nor at their dictation. They will not long shut out the increasing number of Christian ministers and members who mean to investigate and discuss this matter, and in the spirit of truth and patriotism pour light upon the dark workings of secret orders, till religion and freedom and justice are reinstated in society, and the conclaves of darkness are routed and slink howling back to their grand lodge and grand patron of the pit.

Yours, etc.,
J. W. RAYNOR.

HILLSBORO, IND. Aug. 19, 1875.
Editors Christian Cynosure:

Again has Egypt been visited by Moses, and Pharaoh has been commanded to let the bondman go. Again has the haughty old monarch declared that he knows not the God of Israel neither will he let His people go. John T. Kiggins, bearing forward the standard of reform for the State of Indiana, has unsheathed the sword of moral and spiritual truth in our midst He has met the enemy within his own defenses and stabbed him with his own dagger. Without flanking or strategy, but by bold, forward, manly assault, he occupied the field and rescued the Bible from all concord or complicity with Masonry. He resurrected the church from its grave of Masonic crucifiers, though the Masonic soldiery, bought with worse than Roman gold, went straightway into the city and by profane imprecations, denied the miracle. He proved beyond all doubt, using Masonic text books as witnesses, that the church so far as it connects itself with Masonry, is virtually dead, because Masonry, like its great father who put Him to death, leaves Jesus Christ as the foundation and mediation, out of its religion. He proved by the same authority that Masonry is a religion, and by its own logical sequences, anti-Christ. Out of its mouth it stood condemned and horrified in the presence of itself. No wonder its votaries become a flame of passion whenever its stolen robe of sanctity is lifted exposing its horrible hypocrisy.

It is hard to believe that such organized blasphemy could exist in an enlightened Christian age; or that Christians could bow at its altar. No wonder that after Mr. Kiggins' lecture some of the most prominent Masons of this community flatly called him a liar with the usual qualifying adjective prefixed, as they did. No wonder that in the church of Christ some miles east of this, when Mr. Kiggins delivered a series of lectures, a courtly knight of Masonic chivalry, a man of professed culture, and traveling as a lecturer on the Holy Land, and also claiming to be one of the twelve highest Masons in this country, should so far forget his polished self as to spring up in the midst of Mr. Kiggins' lecture and take the floor in regular barbarian style, which he did. No wonder that Mr. Kiggins is reported from this place through the Masonic press as a "one-armed vagabond." No wonder at all this and at everything else worse; tt is the old argument of desperation showing the spirit that crushes liberty, overrides law and makes slaves of men. Why, if Jesus himself instead of J. T. Kiggins, were lecturing on Masonry in Indiana or anywhere, he would meet the same fate. Masonic vengeance sanctioned by the prayers and help of many of his own ministers, would immolate him in fact as it has already in theory. Let facts be published to the world.

At the Masonic celebration of St. John's day, held here a few weeks ago, a minister of Christ and a Mason, in his public address made this startling declaration: "When the church has earned to fill its mission on earth we shall have no more use for Masonry;"

thus supplanting the church. Yet this man continues to minister in divine things, calling on us sinners to come and take refuge in this rotten, rickety, antiquated church of God. If I were the man the declaration of that minister proclaims him to be, I would for once be consistent and ask sinners to come rather to the more perfect church of Lord Hiram Abiff. I would abandon Christ and his cause rather than be a Judas to his death. I should prefer to sail down to ruin in full dress and under a bold flag along with my heart's desire.

Hear another fact; Masonry claims to be charitable. Let us see. A poor, dying Mason, a member of a lodge at this place, helpless and needy, has just been graciously helped by his brethren. They took money out of their lodge treasury and discounted a note which he held against a good party, and then blew their horn about it until, by investigation, the above facts leaked out, since which their horn gives forth an uncertain sound. It is painful for the writer to record such facts when the stain of their infamy rests on members of the church, and when even clerical robes are not spotless; yet duty sweetens the pain, and duty says, investigate, pry open, enter into this sanctum and unveil to the world the idol before which the church is falling, and to which her clergy are bowing in worship, renouncing Christ and cursing the God of heaven.

Reason and duty plead with every man to investigate, but Masonry, stoic as marble, says, no. Yet it presents its claims to us for adoption, and our only rule of action is to hold it and everything that shrinks from examination as suspicious, dangerous. We must take a refusal to investigate as a strong evidence of guilt. Never was a band of outlaws bound together by more impious oaths of secrecy and fealty than the oaths with all their attending symbolisms, that bind Masons together. There is nothing too high to witness the sanctity of these oaths; nothing too low in the devices of human barbarism, to inflict punishment upon the unhappy wretch who violates them. Violates them, did I say? Such oaths cannot be violated. They have no binding force on any man and never can have. They are outside of, and opposed to any known principle and law of moral obligation, and the man who takes them and not the man who throws their rotten shackles from his soul is the one who is guilty of moral perjury; and why? Because some of these oaths are preposterously absurd, illegal and false, and whoever takes and keeps them, calling God to witness it, swears to statements as untrue and dark as perdition. Perjury consists in calling God to witness that what we say is truth, and then uttering what is absolutely false. By that rule who falls? the man who conceals and never reveals, or the man who reveals and never conceals Masonry? Answer who dare. Whenever Masons begin to look at it in such a light its days are numbered, for its horrible oaths which perjure every soul that takes them, are the power of the mystic ti. Thank God, many are getting to light, coming out and defying Masonic wrath and telling it.

But Masonry, true to its nature, either denies their expositions or lifts its bloody hand against them. We cravens outside receive their revelations and believe them true, just as we believe any well authenticated fact in American history. Let the Masonic inquisition threaten anathamtize, kidnap, and, if need be, kill its opposers, but before they can destroy those exposes they will have to overturn the great structure of the laws of evidence which holds all history, human and divine, together; and after that the human mind will remain; it is indestructible, and cannot be enslaved. It will think and act and decide, and the world will still move. Reform and reformers though opposed and unpopular, as they always are will survive and thrive until every image of sin is ground into dust, and we are all redeemed.

In conclusion let me say for the comfort of Bro. Kiggins that though he is branded as a "vagabond" by the Knights of chivalry, yet he brought with him and left in this community a spirit of true Christian warfare that will help him in the fight in our midst, and go with him in many a hearty good cheer. REFORMER.

Another Morgan Canard—A New Association in Jasper County, Iowa —From the State Agent.

In the Des Moines Register of Sunday, Aug. 15, we have quite a lengthy article giving the reasons why Morgan was killed. It was not because he had revealed Masonry, but because of the political stand that he took, joining with the Anti-mason political party; and notwithstanding Masons put him out of the way, it was not because anything connected with Masonry compelled them to do so, but because of hostility between the politicians. Now this article is simply a feeler to prepare the way for other similar crimes, because of the fact that we are now carrying this reform to the polls. If I am correctly informed, there was no stir, politically, among the people upon this subject, until after Morgan was put out of the way, and then his exposures and others, opened the eyes of the people to the dangerous tendency of the institution, and they saw that the nature of the beast was such that they must have resource to the ballot as well as a throne of Divine grace for its removal from places of power; and whenever we succeed in this reform we will see that same old spirit of resentment, as seen in the slave-holders when they were, by the votes of intelligent freemen, driven from the control of public affairs.

Wherever I go I find this reform moving and the craft, like the demons, crying out, Away with this man; he as not fit to live upon the earth. We held two meetings last week at Lymville in Jasper county and effected a county association among the Friends, nd it starts out with good hope. Rev. J. Arnold, President, and Bro. T. K. Bufkin, Secretary, and one gentleman, who had been master of the grange, gave me the books of the lodge, as he had no more use for such foolery. I go to Hampton to-night. The craft is very popular there, and the last of the week I go to Algona, another stronghold of the beast, but where we also have many warm friends, among whom is a Rev. S. Ranks, a seceded Mason. I was greatly relieved, as were also the friends of our reform at Lynnville, when the craft, many of them making a loud profession of religion, positively denied what I said, I being a stranger, and these men their neighbors, whom they could ordinarily believe; hence these good Quakers were greatly perplexed, until one of their own number, who heard me, and who is in great honor among them, occupying a high position, was moved to settle the matter in their minds, by informing them that he had been a Mason and that every word I told was true. Thank God for such testimony at such times.

The Cause Maintained in Albion, Ind.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I cannot remain a silent looker on while a great and glorious cause is being maintained and fought for by a band of devoted men and women, with a moral courage that amounts to sublimity. Your cause and the cause of the world is maintained in this place in spite of the most contemptible opposition that ever an honorable set of men had to contend with. Men, women, and children discuss the abominations of the lodge wherever they meet. Arguments both serious and profound are hurled in the face of a self-constituted pack of spies, sentinels and informers on society. The Cynosure, the tracts, and the faith and courage of good men and women are causing the midnight birds upon a filthy nest to squawk in fear. Quiet discussions often take place with the more candid, and truth planted in good ground. The sentiments you advocate are often borne upon the wind and whispered in the ear. Occasionally these discussions break out like mad fury, provoked mainly by street brawling Masons, one of which I recently witnessed. An ex-judge attempted to insult an old and respectable citizen, and one whom he knew to be of the first order of character, by ridiculing his opinions and sneering at our reform, pronouncing every man a fool and a liar who opposes his pet institution, taking special pains to stigmatise the donors to our Publishing House, but at this juncture when the judge's wrath was oozing from every pore, others came to the rescue. A certain doctor, who is said to understand pretty well such defenders of Masonry, turned the judge's batteries upon himself and in rapid succession fired right and left, cramming facts, figures and documents down the old judges throat until he could do nothing but "rail on him;" having but two or three old snags in front, and too stingy to day a dentist he could not get up a "gnashing of teeth." If Masonry has no better defenders than such slouchy and willful-looking judges it is in a bad way surely.

Friends of Indiana, stand up for the cause, stand up for the Cynosure, one of the strongest elements in our strength. Begin now to prepare for the State meeting; prepare to get ready; prepare to go! Under the zeal and energy of our State Agent, and other friends we will have the biggest and best meeting ever held in the State.

FAIR PLAY.

The Last Days of Francis Semple.

CHARLESTON, Lee Co., Iowa, Aug. 3, 1875.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—In your issue of the 22nd of July, Mr. Haffner of Franklin Centre writes "Mr. Francis Semple of Dover lies sick, but seems to be gaining, and, if God will permit, will get his book written yet before he leaves the world." It has pleased the Lord since then to call him hence. He departed this life on the morning of the 27th of July between the hours of two and three o'clock, aged about 68.

I have been acquainted with Mr. Semple for nearly thirty years. When I first got acquainted with him he was an able and earnest temperance lecturer and the warm friend of the poor slave, ready to give him and his friends help in a professional or pecuniary way.

Hearing of his illness I went to see him; found him very bad and in the last stages of consumption, with but little hope of recovery. In his youth he was a member of the M. E. church, but for years before I got acquainted with him and during my acquaintance, he was not a professor of religion, nor a praying man.

The object of my visit was to talk with him about his soul's interest and preparation for another world. I found that the God of his youth had not forsaken him; his long and severe sickness had brought him to feel the need of a Saviour, and at my coming the work of preparation had not to begin. He had been reading his Bible, calling on the Lord, confessing his sins, and had a good hope of being saved through the merits of his Saviour. I found it strengthening and comforting to him and myself to read to him such Scriptures as the fifty-first Psalm, fifty-third Isaiah and the fourteenth of John's Gospel.

I watched with him three nights during the last week but one before his death. He said to me, "I think I should make it known that when I was a young man the Lord convinced me it was my duty to prepare myself for for the ministry and make it my life-work, but I would not do it, and this, I think, is the reason why everything has seemed to go crossways with me all through life."

He said, "I greatly desire to have the sacrament of the Lord's Supper administered to me in my room."

I said, "It can be. Bro. McCutchon will attend to it."

He asked, "Is he a Mason."

"I know he is not," I replied, "and is not in sympathy with any secret society."

"I would not be willing to take it at the hands of one that was," he said.

"You have written a work," I asked again, "on the subject of Masonry.

Do you now feel it was misspent time? are you sorry for it?"

"No, no. I am not. I have another work about two-thirds written that I think is better than it. I would like to finish it if my life is spared."

The arrangement for the sacrament was made, and on the last Sabbath but one before he left the earth, Bro. McCutchon administered the Lord's Supper to him and a few Christian friends in his room. For one I felt it good to be there. I shall not soon forget the emotions of the sick man, when Bro. McC. handed him the wine and said, "Drink this in remembrance that Christ's blood was shed for thee, and be thankful. Probably, my brother, you will not drink of this cup again until you drink it new in your Father's kingdom."

We left him that evening for home, some five miles distant, thinking we should speak with him no more. Since then we have seen him laid away in the grave. Peace to his memory.

JOHN CASSIDY.

OUR MAIL.

E. D. J. Meyer, Coplay, Pa., writes:

"I am glad the Convention at Pittsburgh nominated candidates. I shall vote for them. All Anti-masons ought to join in in Pennsylvania with the temperance candidates for governor and treasurer."

Geo. W. Taylor, Gibsonburgh, Ohio, writes:

"I have been a reader of the Cynosure three months, never having seen the paper until last winter; and am so well pleased with it that I know of no paper better worth the money than yours. As soon as I have them read I hand them to some of my neighbors. I would be glad if some one of your many readers would tell through your paper what use the Odd-fellows make of a coffin in their lodge room."

J. Timmons, Austin, Mo., writes:

"I have been long since convinced of the evil of secrecy and have tried to look into it as best I could, and the last six years in Missouri have learned me some things by experience, for in this country Masonry takes takes like fire on the prairie. I have long hoped for an organization to oppose the dem on of secrecy, and I say success to the nomination of J. B. Walker as candidate for our chief executor."

O. Emmerson, Sabula, O., writes:

"I am satisfied our country suffers in all its interests from the secret workings of those bound by solemn oaths to promote their private personal interests by the sacrifice of the public welfare."

A. J. Simmons, Clarence, Iowa, writes:

"Your paper to-day should be in the hands of three million of our young men. I am 57 years old, and have suffered more from Masonry than all other causes put together during my lifetime."

J. W. Margrave, Salem, Neb., writes:

"I am in the worst scourged place on account of grasshoppers in all this country. Nothing in the way of wheat, oats, rye, barley or potatoes having been raised this year; corn is the only hope. A good many here are opposed to secret societies, but few dare to speak openly against them. We need a good lecturer to stir up the craft and introduce your paper."

John Torrans, Manistee, Mich., writes:

"I am glad there is such an uprising in the country in regard to secret societies. I have been praying for this for over 15 years, ever since I became a man. We must do as our fathers did, praise God and take courage; for with God one is a majority. I have always despised Masonry and opposed it and spoken against it when occasion offered. May God prosper you for Christ's sake."

Wm. Miller, Beansville, O., writes:

"I have a friend who had some notion of leaving the U. B. church and joining the Masons. I gave him my papers and a few of your tracts to read, and then asked him to subscribe for the paper, and he agreed to take it three months on trial. He also agreed not to join the Masons until he should further investigate the matter. Pray God to deliver him from the devil's den."

John Quincy Adams and Edward Livingstone.

MR. ADAMS' REPLY.

WASHINGTON, April 10th, 1833.

SIR;—In the National Intelligencer of the 22nd of April, 1830, there appears an address, there said to have been delivered by you, to the General Royal Arch Chapter of the United States, upon your Installation to the high Masonic official dignity of their General Grand High Priest.

In the address, after a feeling and elegant acknowledgment of the grateful emotions which you experienced on on being apprized of the unexpected and unsolicited distinction which had been conferred upon you by your election to that office, and a pathetic allusion to that period of life when all worldly honors fade into the 'sear and yellow leaf,' you assign as your reason for accepting the dignity and charge of presiding over an association in whose labors you had "for many years retired from any participation," that your refusal might have been "ascribed to an unmanly fear of encountering the clamor raised against our institution [of Freemasonry,] or to a consciousness, that the vile and absurd accusations against it were well founded. Either of these suspicions (you added) would have injured not my character only, but that of the whole fraternity."

You further assigned an additional motive for overcoming the reluctance suggested by the consciousness that your long retirement had rendered you less fit to fill the station than many others, equally well qualified in other respects; and this motive was your confidence in the Masonic skill and excellent character of the worthy companion who was at the same solemnity, installed with you as your Deputy General Grand High Priest.

After these ceremonial preliminaries, you proceeded as follows: "Companions and brethren! For the first time in the history of our country, persecution has raised itself against our honorable fraternity. It does not, indeed, as in other countries, incarcerate our bodies, strain them on the wheel, or consume them in the flames of the Inquisition; but its attacks are, to an honorable mind, as unjustifiable. It assails our reputation with the blackest calumnies; by the most absurd inventions, to deprive us of the confidence of our fellow-citizens; belies the principles of our order, and represents us as bound to each other by obligations subversive of civil order and hostile to religion."

MR. LIVINGSTON:—In moulding this personified image of persecution, did it never occur to you that the foul midnight hag, who justly bears that name, is never to herself more deliciously occupied than in charging persecution upon others? In those Holy Scriptures, which it is your official duty to read and expound to your companions and brethren of the Royal Arch, it is related that when your predecessor in the high priesthood, Ananias, commanded that Paul should be smitten on the mouth, the apostle of the Gentiles turned upon him and said, "God shall smite thee, thou whited wall; for sittest thou to judge me after the law, and commandest me to be smitten contrary to the law?" I will not imitate this exclamation of Paul, for which he himself apologized, when informed that it was the high priest to whom he spoke, —but I will ask you, sir, to reconsider this charge of persecution, imputed by you, in the face of the world, not indeed to any individual by name, but to a numerous and respectable class of your fellow-citizens in nine or ten States of the Union, to all that class of citizens known in the community by the denomination of Anti-masons. I am one of them myself. As respects myself, I know, as regards the whole party, I firmly believe that, in the above passage of your address, you did them great injustice. In charging them with calumny, you calumniated them yourself. In accusing them of persecution, you are yourself the persecutor.

I will not say, that on your part this persecution and calumny were wilful. You had for many years retired from any participation in the labors of the craft. If this fact is not very pregnant of evidence, that in your estimation, the labors of the craft were, when you participated in them, of a high order of public usefulness or private beneficence, it exculpates you at least from all participation in labors of evil. You did not know what new labors had, most especially in your native State of New York, and extensively elsewhere, been engrafted upon the old stock. You did not know the additions which had been in many lodges and chapters, made to the whole graduation of your oaths. The tree had not borne all its fruits. The Morgan tragedy had been enacted, and more than three years of impunity had, in evasion or defiance of the laws of nature, of justice, and of the land, sheltered the guilt of its perpetrators; but you did not know, nor was there mortal out of the pale of your penalties who did know, the catalogue of Masonic crimes which had been committed in affiliated connection with that Masonic murder; you know them not to this day. Multitudes of them are, and will ever remain, secreted under the seal of the fifth libation, and under the obligation to conceal from every person under the canopy of heaven, the secrets of a worthy brother, murder and treason not excepted, or excepted at the option of the swearer. More than a year after your address was delivered, the Grand Lodge of Rhode Island published a defense of Masonry against those same charges, which they, like you, pronounced persecutions and calumnies. Yet, even then, they said that whether Morgan had been murdered or not, they could not tell, for they knew nothing about it. They knew nothing about it! They knew nothing about the facts proved in the judicial tribunals of New York, not only by clouds of witnesses, but by the confessions and pleas of guilty of several among the conspirators themselves. The Grand Lodge of Rhode Island, one and all, knew nothing about all this, and yet they published a defense of Masonry, and pronounced persecution and calumny, the denunciations of virtuous indignation against those very judicially authenticated facts, about which they declared that they knew nothing.

Sir, your address to your Royal Arch companions had more of candor or more of discretion. You advised them that calumnies so absurd as those uttered against you (the Masons) were best met by dignified silence! And yet you did not meet them by dignified silence; you pronounced them from your exalted seat of General Grand High Priest of the order, black and absurd calumnies, and you attributed them all to persecution.

But if I am bound to acknowledge the candor and discretion of your advice to your brethren to meet the charges against their institution with dignified silence, I cannot offer an equal tribute of commendation to your consistency, when after all your bitter complaints of calumny and persecution, you urge them to "be just, and reflect how much cause for excitement has been given, by the outrageous abduction of a citizen dragged from his family and friends, in the midst of a populous State, followed, most probably by the perpetration of a most atrocious murder."

You then remind them that "It was natural, from all the circumstances o this most extraordinary and savage act, to believe that it was committed by Masons."

Sir, was it not committed by Masons?

"It was in human nature, unenlightened and prejudiced human nature, to impute the cause of the offense to some secret tenet of the fraternity, and to involve them in the criminality of their guilty members."

Why the words unenlightened and prejudiced? Was not some secret tenet of the fraternity the cause of the offense? The tenet of the fraternity, secret at the time of the murder of Morgan, is secret now no longer. For the mere intention to reveal it, Morgan paid the penalty of this Entered Apprentice's oath—his book revealed it after his death. Its revelation was authenticated on the 4th of July, 1828, by the testimony, not of unenlightened and prejudiced human nature, but of the Le Roy Convention of seceding Masons,—men who themselves had taken these oaths, and declared themselves subject to the penalties which had been inflicted by Masonic hands upon Morgan.

"It was natural that ambitious men should keep up the excitement, and direct it against political adversaries for their own elevation."

Perhaps it was. You, Mr. Livingston, are versed in the ways of ambition and of ambitious men. You know the propensity to keep up excitements, and to direct them against political adversaries for their own elevation. You must know, you cannot but know, that Masonry has been used by ambitious men for the same purposes. You must know that in many of the New York lodges, the promise to promote a brother's political advancement, was one of the recent additions to the Masonic obligations. You may, and ought to know, that wherever the spirit of Anti-masonry has arisen, one of the first discoveries made by it has been, that wherever a lodge or chapter has existed at least three-fourths of all the elective offices in the place were held by worthy brethren and companions of the craft, chosen by men, multitudes of whom knew not themselves the influence under which their votes were cast. You know, too, that the charge of ambitious and selfish motives is one of the most vulgar and most hackneyed imputation of all ambitious rivals and competitors against one another. In condescending to use it yourself against the Anti-masons, you certainly gave no additional dignity to it; and as a defence of the institution against Anti-masonry, you might with advantage to yourself have remembered your advice to your brethren, and preferred to such a shield the armor of dignified silence.

"And it was quite natural that men should be found simple enough not to see through their views, credulous enough to believe their absurd tales, or sufficiently unprincipled to propagate them, knowing them to be false."

This again may be true. Of simple, of credulous, and of unprincipled men, there are always numbers in every community, and they are the natural instruments of politicians of more ambition than principle But, in this respect as in many others, Anti-masonry is and has been more sinned against than sinning. Simple and credulous men have, for example, been told by the General Grand High Priest of the General Royal Arch Chapter of the United States, that the charges against the Masonic institution, of having had some secret tenet, which was the cause of the murder of Morgan, were black and absurd calumnies, invented by persecution, and which none but fools and cullies could believe, and none but knaves would propagate. Simple and credulous men may believe these assertions of the General Grand High Priest, because they are made by him, and because his character gives them the weight of authority. To simple and credulous men, the highest of all evidence is the authority of great names, and accordingly your own most plausible answer to the Anti-masonic charges against your institution, is an appeal to the great and good men who have belonged and still belong to it.

But, sir, this is not sound reasoning to influence the minds of other than simple and credulous men. The question, permit me to say, upon the issue which I am about to take with you, is not who, but what; not who have bound themselves by the Masonic oaths, obligations and penalties, but what these oaths, obligations and penalties are. What is their nature? and what have been their fruits?

Now, sir, I do aver, that "the cause of the offense," that is, of the murder of William Morgan, and of a multitude of other crimes indissolubly connected with it, was a secret tenet of the fraternity, secret then, but not secret now. It consisted in the obligation and penalty of the Entered Apprentice's oath. It was the secret tenet of initiation to the Masonic institution.

This, sir, is the issue which I, an Anti-mason, tender to you, the General Grand High Priest of the General Royal Arch Chapter of the United States. I call upon you, sir, in that capacity, to sustain the charge of persecution and calumny, made by you in your address to your brethren and companions, upon your installation, against the whole body of Anti-masons in the United States, and to sustain the institution over which you preside, against the charges which you pronounce persecuting and calumnious.

But this, sir, is not my whole, or my ultimate purpose. I do conscientiously and sincerely believe, that the order of Freemasonry, if not the greatest, is one of the greatest moral and political evils under which this Union is now laboring. I further believe that the primary and efficient cause of all this evil, is that same rite of initiation; for as all the oaths, obligations and penalties of the subsequent degrees are but variations, expansions and aggravations of that primitive vice, let that once be abolished, and all the rest must fall with it; knock away the underpinning, and the whole scaffolding must come to the ground.

With this address, I have the honor of submitting to you a pamphlet containing four letters on the Entered Apprentic'es oath. You will perceive, sir, that they arraign that act of initiation upon five distinct charges,—as contrary to the laws of religion, to the laws of morality, to the laws of the land.

Those letters have been now more than six months published. Their existence has not been noticed by any of the newspapers of the country under Masonic influence; but they have been very extensively circulated in pamphlets, and numerous editions of them have been issued in several of the States of the Union. They have of course attracted much of that benevolence and charity, in the construction of motives, for which the Masonic order is so conspicuous, upon the head of their author; but no attempt has to my knowledge been made to answer them. They were first published in the Commercial Advertiser of New York, and addressed to its editor, Col. William L. Stone, known to you as a distinguished companion of your order, in the degree of Knight Templar.

I have expected that some show of defense against the charges in those letters would have been made. The charges are grave, they are specific, they are made under the responsibility of my name. And now, sir, as no individual brother or companion of the craft has been willing to undertake its defense, I call upon you, as the General Grand High Priest of the order in these United States, to undertake it. I call upon you the more freely, because, if the charges are true, there is a debt of justice and reparation due from you to all the Anti-masons of the United States. The charges are in part the same with those which you have pronounced absurd, calumnious, and persecuting. If, upon examination, you find them true, I expect from your candor, an acknowledgment of your error; from your magnanimity, a retraction of your charges against the Anti-masons.

I expect more. If, upon a fair examination of these charges against the Entered Apprentice's oath, obligation and penalty, you should find yourself unable to defend them before the tribunal of public opinion,—if you should by the natural rectitude and intelligence of your enlightened and unprejudiced mind, come to the conclusion that the first initiatory rite of Freemasonry is in its own nature vicious, immoral, and unlawful,—that no mental reservation can excuse it; that no explanation can change its nature; that no plea of nullity can purify the attainder of its bloody purport; then, sir, I expect that, as the General Grand High Priest of the order, you will immediately advise its abolition, or at least recommend that it should never more be administered. I ask not merely of the Grand High Priest of Masonry, but of the profound and eloquent and humane legislator of the criminal code for Louisiana; I ask of him the abolition for ever of that brutal penalty of death by torture and mutilation, for the disclosure of senseless secrets; or rather, now, of secrets proclaimed from every house-top of the land. I say to you, in the language of the Roman orator, in the sentiment of a heart congenial with your own, "Hanc domesticam crudelitatem tollite ex civitate; hanc pati nolite diutius in hac republica versari; quae non modo id habet in se mali, quod civem atrocissime sustulit, verum etiam hominibus lenissimis ademit misericordiam. Nam cum omnibus oris aliquid atrociter fieri videmus, aut audimus; etiam qui natura mitissimi sumus, assiduitate molestiarum sensum omnem humanitatis ex animis amittimus."

[Banish from our borders, suffer no longer to prey upon our vitals, this homebred cruelty among a people hitherto renowned for the merciful treatment of their foreign foes. Its greatest evil is not this most atrocious murder of a free citizen, but that it extinguishes the very sentiment of compassion in the mildest hearts. For when our eyes and ears are hourly tortured with the sight and recital of deeds of horror, they cease even in the tenderest natures to sympathize with human calamity, and the very sense of humanity is obliterated from our souls.]

I propose to address you on this subject again. There is in the pamphlet herewith enclosed, a fifth letter addressed to Benjamin Cowell, of Rhode Island, containing my opinion in favor, to a certain extent, of what is called political Anti-masonry. As this principle has had, and must continue to have, a powerful influence upon the policy and upon the history of this Union, it will not be unworthy of your consideration in your other capacity of Secretary of State of these United States. I shall endeavor to prove to your conviction that your exhortation to the brethren and companions of your order throughout the Union, but under your jurisdiction, not to be tempted by the slightest interference in political parties, has been and must be unavailing and nugatory; that so long as you adhere to the administration of the Entered Apprentice's oath, your lodges and chapters must and will be political caucuses, and that Masonry will be the signal for political proscription to one party, as Anti-masonry has been and will be to the other. I am, very respectfully, sir, your fellow citizen, JOHN QUINCY ADAMS.

Lesson for Sept. 5th, 1875.—The Light of the World.—John ix. 1-11.

1 And as Jesus passed by, he saw a man which was blind from his birth.
2 And his disciples asked him, saying, Master, who did sin, this man, or his parents, that he was born blind?
3 Jesus answered, Neither hath this man sinned, nor his parents: but that the works of God should be made manifest in him.
4 I must work the works of him that sent me, while it is day: the night cometh when no man can work.
5 As long as I am in the world, I am the light of the world.
6 When he had thus spoken, he spat on the ground, and made clay of the spittle, and he anointed the eyes of the blind man with the clay.
7 And said unto him, Go, wash in the pool of Siloam, (which is by interpretation, Sent) He went his way therefore, and washed, and came seeing.
8 The neighbors therefore, and they which before had seen him that he was blind, said, Is not this he that sat and begged?
9 Some said, This is he: others said, He is like him: but he said, I am he.
10 Therefore said they unto him, How were thine eyes opened?
11 He answered and said, A man that is called Jesus, made clay, and anointed mine eyes, and said unto me, Go to the pool Siloam and wash: and I went and washed, and I received sight

SCRIPTURE HINTS —The punishment of sin, Luke xiii. 1–9; God glorified in our calamities, John xi. 1–46; Rom. v. 1–6; 2 Cor. xii. 7–9. The story of Naaman, 2 Kings v. 1–14; of Bartimeus, Mark x. 46–52; Christ the fountain of life, Zech. xii. 1; He came to open blind eyes, Is. lii. 6, 7; to bring light to all, Jews and Gentiles, 2 Cor. iii. 12–14; iv. 1–7; Luke ii. 25–33; John xii. 34–36. He was the light of life, John i. 1–14; and especially the light and glory of the church, Is. lx. ; in which His chosen know each other, 1 John, i. 3–7. Those who bring in false light to be punished, Is. v. 20; 2 Tim. iii. 1–9.

"I must work the works of him that sent me,"—a most interesting statement from the mouth of Christ; intimating (1) that he had a precise work to do upon earth, with every particular of it arranged and laid out to him; (2) that all he did upon earth was just "the work of God," particularly "going about doing good," though not exclusively by miracles; (3) that each work had its precise time and place in his programme of instructions, so to speak; hence (4) that, as his period for work had definite termination, so by letting any one service pass by its allotted time, the whole would be disarranged, marred and driven beyond its destined period for completion; (5) that he acted ever under the impulse of these considerations as man.—Jamieson.

"To be cleansed from sin is great indeed," said the saintly Bramwell, "but to receive the inward glory in its full influence—this is salvation."

It is only as by faith we see our home beyond, that we are proper pilgrims here.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, AUG. 26, 1875.

PLATFORM AND NOMINATIONS FOR 1876.

FOR PRESIDENT.

James B. Walker,
of Illinois.

FOR VICE-PRESIDENT

Donald Kirkpatrick,
of New York.

PLATFORM.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage, is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. The charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and heir oaths prohibited by law.

5. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by article 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate.

6. That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

7. That to cultivate the intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

8. That land and other monopolies should be discountenanced.

9. That the Government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency, and a return to specie payment as soon as practicable.

10. That maintenance of the public credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. And finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of Electoral Colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-president of the United States.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

C. B. & Q. Crossing, Aug. 20, 1875.

PRESIDENT FINNEY.

Dear Cynosure:—"A prince and a great man is fallen in Israel." When Charles G. Finney died he left no peer and no successor. The men now thirty to forty years of age and under, can form no conception of Mr. Finney. Like Cromwell and Napoleon, he was sui generis, and like no living man but himself. And his death was as sublime as his life. He held that a minister of Christ was or should be a universa reformer; and he came nearer realizing his conception than any man of his age. He finished his course, laid down in his usual health and awoke in heaven. I see the papers say he died of "heart disease." Of course his heart stopped beating when he died, but a truer theory would be, "He walked with God and was not for God took him." "Let me die the death of the righteous and let my last end be like his." His tomb will be built and his sepulcher garnished, and pilgrimages made to the spot where he rests,

"Pompless, and from a scornful world withdrawn."

Let us emulate his virtues and pray for a double portion of his spirit.

JEFF. DAVIS.

I see the letter of this arch traitor, whose dark soul is red with ten thousand murders, in the public prints. He wanted to come to Rockford, it seems, to meet the "Patrons of Husbandry" and help agricultural interests. No one who has any penetration and knowledge of the case, needs anything but this letter to see that his father-in law, old General Taylor, was right when he called him an adventurer and scoundrel. He is perhaps the most perfect specimen of the character which the lodge produces which the world contains. Simple, cool, downright impudence upon a back ground of heartless falsehood and cruel sycophancy, he courts the bastard progeny of the lodge as the hunch-back Richard III. wooed the woman whose husband and kindred he had murdered; and but for some lingering manhood in the yeomanry of Winnebago county, Ill., his wooing would have sped as well.

A CONVENTION FOR HOLINESS.

Day before yesterday I went down to Rock Island to attend a meeting of the "Western Association for the promotion of Holiness." I have been more than repaid.

This is a body of Methodist Episcopal preachers who like the Hebrew prophets of old "sigh and cry" for the certain desolations which are coming on the land, unless the idolatry, world-worship, and overflowing depravity which deluges the age can be arrested. They began as a "Methodist" body, but dropped the sectarian designation and invited all denominations to join in a movement to "spread holiness over the lands;" as Wesley expressed the mission of the first Methodists.

I will hereafter endeavor to give some space in our Cyuosure to the discussion of this grave theme. They have an organ, Banner of Holiness, published at Bloomington, Ill., which has reached the 40th number of its third volume, price $1.70 in advance. This is but one of many papers springing up over this country devoted to the cause and question of personal holiness, and surely no more important theme can be pressed on the minds of men. The arguments in favor of a definite move of this sort, are:

1. The general and deplorable backsliding, and shallow, worldly pietiism, which passes for religion.

2. The prevalence of the lodge, especially in the Methodist church. As one expressed it, "The churches are rotting under the lodges."

This Rockland Convention was conducted by Rev. L. Haney, Rev. G. J. Bailey, Rev. J. J. Fleharty and Rev. L. Hawkins. I will endeavor to give an account of their teachings and doctrine before long.

The errors and defects of the movement so far as I have observed are such as inhere in men and things. No man ever took a step in advance of present religious sentiment without attracting the special attention of every enemy of Christ, Satan included as chief; and if we wait until we are led into reforms by men without faults, we will wait till men become angels and the kingdom of God is come. THE SABBATH ON RAIL-ROADS—TALK WITH A FREIGHT CONDUCTOR.—OUR PLATFORM.

Atkinson, Ill., Aug. 18, 1875.

Dear Cynosure:—In a freight train on the way from Princeton to Wyanet, I sat down by the conductor in a car rescued from a smash-up near Arlington, which must have cost the C. B. & Q. company twenty to fifty thousand dollars. I learned from the young man these facts, that his name was Sherwood, that his father lived near Downer's Grove, Ill., and that he was ordered to run his train almost every Sabbath. I had with him nearly the following dialogue:

"Suppose the rules of the road required the cars to run, rigidly, six days, and stop square, accidents excepted, so as to do the carrying trade in six even days instead of seven, what would be the effect?"

"First-rate for us fellows; but the stock-men want to get up so as to slip their cattle in on Monday; and that is beginning to make Sunday the great rail-roading day. Five or six years ago it was an awful thing for us to run on the Sabbath, but we are getting over that."

"But don't you think the boys will get savage and demoralized by working seven days in the week, and 365 days in the year and so become almost heathens?"

"And working nights too. That is the worst," he replied, or added.

"If," I continued, "a petition was sent round to every employee on the road, how many do you think would sign to tie up over Sabbath?"

"I think the great majority of us would?"

"Well, why don't you petition for it? Harris and Hitchcock would favor it."

"They are compelled to run because others would if they didn't, and we must obey orders."

"That thing must stop," I replied. "God's laws cannot be trampled on with impunity. The company will pay more and more for smash-ups, and strikes, as the men get more and more demoralized, and, as God said of old, 'The land will have her Sabbaths,' if it has to lie desolate as God desolated Palestine. If this Sabbath-breaking goes on increasing, as you say it has for the last six years, you boys, having no time to stop and think and pray to your God, will become more and more brutalized; smash-ups will multiply; brigandage will increase. Depraved creatures, who run on the roads and know all about them, will pitch a train into a ravine in hope of robbing the express, to get money to support their girls and their vices; and the force that drags the moveable wealth of this country across these prairies will be in league with the thief-shop and the brothel. Then will come swarms of policemen who will be thieves by law; and, by-and-by, the working armies on our railroads, with means and tokens of secret recognition, will control and curse the roads, intimidate and assassinate their officers; and, as the railroads are the veins and arteries of society, our country will become like a living human body, with its arteries and veins ossified, or turned into bone, and death and dissolution must soon follow."

"Well, what can be done?"

"We have," I replied, "a National Christian Association, one article of whose platform is, 'God requires, and man needs a Sabbath.' We must press this as a political and religious reform. It is no more 'church-and-state' to vote for the 4th commandment against Sabbath-breaking, than to vote for the eighth against stealing, or for the sixth against murder. We must combine all the roads to keep the Sabbath, or punish those who break it by law, as we punish theft and arson, and so give you boys a chance." Young Sherwood looked pleased, but as if he doubted how soon that would be. J. B.

THURLOW WEED ON MORGAN.

Thurlow Weed made a fortune out of Anti-masonic politics. He is now aged and timid, but can scarcely be pardoned for his late letter in the New York Herald in which he cringes like a craven to the lodge.

He writes like a culprit vindicating himself rather than asserting important truth. In this spirit he puts forward the fact that he refused to publish Morgan's book because he did not like to assail "an institution to which Washington, Franklin, and Lafayette belonged!" While an Anti-masonic editor, Mr. Weed was wont to deny the Masonic claim to Washington who refused to be recognized by Masons as he went through the country, and wrote the well-known Snyder letter, saying that he had not been in a lodge more than once or twice in thirty years; which letter is equivalent to a disavowal of Masonry. It is a shame to this aged man that he should thus wince and cringe to the lodge.

Then, while he mentions in detail the testimony of a woman to the clothes of Morgan, which the Masons had opportunity to minutely examine in two coroner's inquests before, he slides over with a bare mention the testimony of Mrs. Morgan and Dr. Strong, who both swore to facts which identified the body over the grave at Orchard Creek, before the grave was opened. Thus Mrs. Morgan swore that his front teeth were double, that Strong had pulled a tooth for her husband in extracting which he broke a corner off the tooth next to it. She swore also that hair grew in her husband's ears, and that there was a scar on his great toe. All which marks were described by her oath and confirmed by that of Dr. Strong, while the grave was yet unopened, and before they had seen the corpse. When taken up in the presence of the crowd, all these marks were found on the corpse answering exactly to the oaths of Mrs. Morgan and the doctor. Yet the are in despatched by Mr. Weed the general sentsnce. "Before opening the grave, Mrs. Morgan and Dr. Strong described certain marks upon Morgan's body by means of which it would be identified. When the rude coffin was opened the body it contained disclosed the peculiarities described:" and though Mr. Weed went on with the Anti-masons, and, as his reply to his friend Gustavus Clark, shows, he considered the lodge guilty of the abduction and murder, he now dismisses the matter with a general statement that he was led by Mrs. Monroe's swearing to the clothes, though she made the body of her husband three inches taller than Morgan, and his hair just cut, black, and coarse, while that of the corpse "was chestnut, long and silky;"—he was led by such swearing to doubt whether the body was Morgan er Monroe!

I was at Mr. Thurlow Weed's house two years ago this summer. As soon as he learned that my object was to request him to attend a meeting at Syracuse against Masonry, and that he would advise Mr. Seward to attend and address us, the poor old gentleman was taken suddenly with a distress in his head, so that he begged to be excused and hustled out of the room. I then entered into conversation with Mr. Seward himself, who was in the room, and came forward when I mentioned his name.

I had conversed with Mr. Seward but a minute or two before Mr. Weed hustled back into the room, an eager, though silent listener to our conversation.

No single circumstance ever impressed me more deeply with the horrible power of the lodge, than the absolute terror in which Thurlow Weed stood of it. Yet his letter clearly proves or rather proclaims the facts that Morgan was murdered for revealing Masonic secrets! How many, many murders have they committed since!

THE MAGPIES OF REFORM.

The Associate Presbyterian for August comes to us with critical condemnations of the first article in our platform, which declares ours to be "a Christian nation" (not country.) This article, which I myself wrote with nobody's suggestion till it was modified by J. L. Barlow (Baptist), the Presbyterian attributes to the Covenanters, whom he has on the hip, and finds in it certain theological errors, which the authors of that platform never dreamed of till we read them in this astute Associate Presbyterian.

All the first article of our platform means, is that the God of the Bible, and not the lodge god, Baal, or the idols of the nations is the being by whom we swear witnesses in American courts and constitutions. It means also that "morality" here means Bible morality, including indissoluble (except by adultery) marriage between one man and woman; and not the morality of China, Africa or Salt Lake.

The Presbyterian's attempt to make church and state out of this, is simply assinine, or mulish at least; as if we, any more than he, were in favor of enforcing worship by law. We respect Reformed Presbyterians, but we are not Covenanters. We vote.

There are, in the Rocky Mountains, black and white birds called magpies. They are pretty creatures; but when our mules were tired and galled in the harness, they had a wicked habit of lighting on the poor, honest creatures and picking their sores till they drove them frantic. There are magpies of reform, who find or make sores on their brother reformers. They swarmed about the abolition movement; stinging and bringing blood from every abolitionist who did not see their point-no-points as they did. I observed that these men exercised everything but sense and reason. They treated a hard, woman-whipping slave-holder better than they did men who hazarded their lives for the Anti-slavery reform, provided they ate molasses and wore cotton shirts. They perpetually made points of conscience which were not points of conscience; and hated those who dissented from their no-points with a rancor proportioned to their suffering and self-denial for the general cause.

I had hoped that race were extinct. But these criticisms on the first article of our platform coupled with a dozen mistakes as to its origin and meaning, alarm me lest their progeny survive.

I remember, when I had just got the eggs from my clothing and the soreness from my limbs, to which I was indebted to the pro-slavery mobs, one of these sharp creatures found a small hole in my anti-slavery creed, and inserted his proboscis. The sovereign pity with which he assailed my errors and "time-serving policy" was amusing and amazing. I turned on the poor creature who had assailed my orthodoxy in one of our conventions and said: "My dear brother, I respect your sincerity and rejoice in your fearlessness. But, in my humble opinion, there is more opposition to slavery in my little finger than there is in your whole carcass, body and brain."

In a little while afterward the man I spoke to was hunker-Democratic, pro-slavery candidate for the New York State Senate. May God deliver us from the flesh-flies and magpies of reform.

A RELIGIOUS TRAITOR.

The church of the "United Brethren in Christ" is an eye-sore to the lodge, and, indeed, to formalism in general. So long as this large organization kept out of cities and had no colleges, they influenced the politics and education of the country but little, though thousands of sincere souls were blessed by their labors in the rural districts. When their leaders attempted to bring that church to the front, it was like Christ's taking his church of peasants from Galilee to Jerusalem. Then the disciples began to dispute who should be greatest; and some one of their own members betrayed them to the political leaders of the day.

Hearing of The United Brethren Tribune, started a few years since, I went to a Brethren minister some thirty miles up the Schuylkill above Philadelphia, who was a member of two secret societies, and who is an agent for the Tribune. I asked him what the paper was started for, and found he either could not or would not tell. He had a pre-occupied look, and reminded me of the man among the disciples without a wedding garment. He had neither the language of Canaan or the spirit of its people.

My curiosity was aroused and I stopped off the cars at Harrisburgh, and questioned the proprietors of the building where the paper was printed with a like result to that of my interview with the agent preacher. I made up mind that the paper was supported by Freemasons in the interest of the lodge, and every motion it has made since confirms that opinion. It vaunts its "loyalty" to the church, and to "first principles," and yet denounces their rule against secret societies, which is among the very first principles of that church! In short, it has the forehead of the harlot, the leer of a hypocrite, and the stealth of an assassin. Judas was a gentleman to it.

NOTES.

—As promised, we print one of that remarkable series of letters which gained a severe notoriety for Hon. John Quincy Adams with the Masonic order. This reply to Mr. Livingston's address and the other letters which followed it were never answered, either by the gentleman to whom they were addressed or by the Masonic body in any capacity, in public. The convincing, logical and animated style invite the reader to take up the small volume of his letters on this subject. No young American should fail to read them.

—A Knight Templar commandery from Richmond, Virginia, visited Boston in June, with what purposes is not stated except to give an additional Masonic coloring the Bunker Hill Centennial. Their visit was magnified by themselves and other members of the lodge as a great good, tending to heal sectional difficulties, etc; which may be true so far as any crowd of loafers dressed like trick monkeys could do so. Such conciliations have little value, however, with men of representative character in moral or political or social life.

—When Mr. Ronayne was speaking at Crystal Lake, Ill., the last time, a Mr. George Beiler, lately connected with the lodge, served as Junior Warden in the exposition.

—Friend Chalfant of York, Pa., has sent a brief communication reaffirming the former statement of Rev. Mr. Raber's funeral procession at that place some time since, that a considerable number of men with white gloves and green sprigs, and a delegation from the American Mechanics of Duncannon were in the procession. The testimony of Rev. A. Rudisill, a reformed Mason, that Raber was a Mason, that another United Brethren minister, of the place is a Mason, while a third has been seen marching in an Odd-fellow procession, is given also in conformation.

—The Sandy Lake News, Pa., has strange article on Prof. Blanchard's, lectures in that place. The editor with some convictions of what his duty to his readers and the truth requires begins a paragraph with fair words, but lodge fury gets the better of his judgment, and he closes with round Masonic diatribes.

—The London correspondent of the New York Post reviews a new Catholic work on Masonry, lately translated from the German, with abundant Masonic prejudice. He prophesies that such works will give aid and comfort to the order by advertizing it to the curious, otherwise the idle and vicious generally, and thus the usual shrewdness of the papacy defeats itself. All of which is talk we are used to here and know as well as the Grand Lodge how foolish it is. He states, also, that the Prince of Wales has become very enthusiastic as a Mason since the poor fellow received some notice from it; and officials near his person think it for their advantage to join the order. Even his private chaplain, Canon Duckworth, thought it necessary, for proper spiritual ministration to that Prince to don the hoodwink, cable-tow, etc. If this unspiritual shepherd follows the Prince into all the bad scrapes reported of him, he will find need enough o prayer and repentance at last.

O'Connell's other Side.—On the O'Connell centennial and the praises everywhere bestowed on his character, the United Presbyterian has a word to say of some points which cannot be overlooked:

"In the glare of excitement that always accompanies such occasions, there will be seen nothing but a tribute to excellence, and the popular impression is likely to be that he whose birth-day is thus recognized must have been both great and good. The truth is, however, that O'Connell was rather possessed of a certain kind of talent that gave him power with the masses, very intense and industrious, and being withal a fine popular orator, he could not help, especially in a country like Ireland, being conspicuous. He devoted his life to agitation ostensibly in favor of the freedom of Ireland, but really for the purpose of quarreling with England and helping the cause of Catholicism by fighting the Protestants. Like many others who denounce oppression and plead the cause of the poor, he was himself hard-hearted and selfish, and was actually proven, in an investigation, to have made himself wealthy by appearing as the advocate of the poor and oppressed, while, as a middleman, he was extorting severely from his tenantry. Naturally coarse and without the refinement of culture, he is at this day an object of admiration through the blindness of popular favor and the clemency of time. In him we have also an illustration of a life that was a failure. With all his abilities he lived only the life of an agitator, striving with the energy of a zealot to further the interest of intolerance while pleading for liberty, and at last he was without a consolation to soothe miseries that gathered around his age and pushed him to his grave."

The Home Circle.

Flowers that Never Wither.

There are flowers that never wither,
  There are skies that never fade,
There are trees that cast forever
  Cooling bowers of leafy shade,
There are silver wavelets flowing
  With a lulling sound of rest,
Where the west wind, softly blowing,
  Fans the fair lands of the blest.

Thitherward our steps are tending,
  Oft through dim, oppressive fears,
More of grief than pleasure blending
  In the darkening woof of years.
Often would our footsteps weary
  Sink upon the winding way,
But that, when all looks most dreary,
  O'er us beams a cheering ray.

Thus the Father who hath made us
  Tenants of this world of care,
Knoweth how to kindly aid us
  With the burdens we must bear;
Knowing how to cause the spirit
  Hopefully to raise its eyes
Toward the home it doth inherit
  Far beyond the azure skies.

There is a voice that whispers lowly
  Down within this heart of mine,
Where emotions the most holy Ever make their sacred shrine,
And it tells a thrilling story
  Of the great Redeemer's love,
And the all-bewildering glory
  Of the better land above.

Oh, this life, with all its sorrows,
  Hasteth onward to a close!
In a few more brief to-morrows
  Will have ended all our woes.
Then o'er death the part immortal
  Shall sublimely rise and soar
O'er the star resplendent portal,
  There to dwell forever more.

Christian Cheerfulness.

BY HOWARD CROSBY.

A Christian should always be cheerful, but his cheerfulness is not to be based upon worldly circumstances or to partake of a worldly character, in which case it would be in no wise different from the cheerfulness of a worldly man, which is evanescent. A Christian cheerfulness should have as its root the knowledge of sin forgiven and holiness imparted in Jesus Christ. Here is a root that never dies, a source of joy that can never be troubled by the vicissitudes of the earthly life.

This being the condition and character of Christian cheerfulness, it is absurd for a Christian to defend his worldly gayety by the excuse "A Christian should be cheerful." The more a Christian uses his joyous privileges in Christ, the more he eschews worldly gayety as insipid and unsatisfying. There is no legal asceticism in this withdrawing from the world. It is the spontaneous action of a heart in love with higher things. The man withdraws from the nursery sports of childhood by no compulsion of penance, but because a nobler capacity and taste have been developed. So the Christian drops the trifling enjoyments of the world and finds a new pleasure-ground for his soul by no process of self-torture, but by the natural action of the new nature in Christ Jesus.

A clear view of this may tend to stop the compromising with the world that is going on quite zealously in the name of religion. The argument as generally used is this: "Christianity is bright and fair; then let us have a jolly time." It is a fearful confusion of things radically different. It is a secularizing of things holy. It is the sin of Achan, of Ananias and of Sapphira, of Simon Magus, whose gross souls failed to separate between the Divine and the carnal.

The merriment of Christianity is in the Father's house. (See Luke xv. 23, 24.) The heart is happy in beholding Him and knowing his love. How can Christians so degrade themselves as to compound this sublime joy with the excitement that is found in the tinsel and tattle of a ball-room?

All attempts to spread Christianity in this way destroy Christianity and spread worldliness.

A young Christian fond of what is called "society" is in a dangerous position. The only safety is in a full commitment to the Lord, a throwing off of self into his loving arms. There the Lord's glory will eclipse the world's glitter. But if this refuge be not seized, wo, wo, wo, is ahead. A blunted conscience, a carnalized religion, a cheated faith, a doubting hope, a sad example, a restless spirit, a fiery remorse—these are some of the poisonous fruits which the world's atmosphere produces on the Christian stalk. These are what a young Christian goes to cultivate, when entering into "society."

There is a society which is pure and elevating, and our social instincts are to be used and nurtured; but the word "society" is technically used for the world's arrangement by which young people are drawn into the absorbing round of display and dissipation, under the plea of good breeding, refined acquaintance, and all that.

Young Christian! keep away from the beginning of these terrible entanglements. You have something too precious to risk among the reckless. You have the key to a true Paradise. Do not enter into these miasmatic gardens. Be cheerful. Yes! but let it be with a Christian cheerfulness, the cheerfulness of abiding with Christ. Has this no charm for you? Then you are no Christian.—Am. Messenger.

Family Worship.

One of the chief employments of heaven is worship. Men on earth worship alone or collectively. One kind of worship partakes of the nature both of the lone and the collective. It is that of the family. To any one filled with the spirit of devotion, the propriety of family worship is most apparent. Any one taught of the divine Spirit will doubtless be impelled toward it. The experience of thousands on this subject might constitute quite a chapter, were it written. Many a husband, many a wife, many a son or daughter have had deep feelings on this subject. Many have felt scarce less deeply this duty than Paul did the duty to labor in the ministry, which he expresses by saying, "Woe is unto me if I preach not the Gospel."

That any one should long for the worship of the closet and the public assembly and feel no inclination to worship in the family, in the midst of those most beloved, is too preposterous to controvert. The instruction to bring up "children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord" too clearly involves reading the Scriptures to them, and worshiping with them, to need discussion. That the family worship of Job is better than the godless example of many who have no family altar is most evident. It is best that every parent should resolve, like Joshua, that "as for me and my house, we will serve the Lord." If the privilege of family instruction and worship were universally understood and exercised, there would be more who, like Timothy, would from their childhood know the Scriptures, which are able to make any one appreciating them "wise unto salvation."

It would save many parents from going down with gray hairs in sorrow to their graves if they should gather their children around them, morning and evening, in worship, instead of sending them without prayer into the occupations and temptations of the day, and to a prayerless bed at night. Parents should beware how they send their children into vice and irreligion, and finally into eternal woe, by the neglect of this blessed privilege and evident duty. The remembrance of duty neglected may have pangs for old age, for a dying hour, or for the day of judgment. Shall any one standing on the left hand say, "I never heard my parents pray?"—Telescope.

Missions and Peace Principles.

My Dear Brother: You ask for a sketch of my missionary experience in Patagonia, and the Hawaiian Islands. My sketch must be quite brief, and, perhaps, unsatisfactory.

In company with one companion, I visited some of the clans in Eastern and Southern Patagonia in 1833, under the patronage of the American Board of Foreign Missions. We landed in the straits of Magellan. We searched two days for inhabitants, and, on finding a wild clan of roaming savages, threw ourselves at once, unarmed, into their hands for sustenance and protection. They received us kindly, gave us horses to ride, and we traveled with them about three months, east, west and north, visiting their camps and hunting-grounds, and falling in with several other clans. In this way we saw nearly all the savages of the Eastern Patagonian Pampas. The tribes are wild, and in the wildest stage of savagism, living wholly by the chase, and roaming with their women and children most of the time, carrying their skin tents and their all with them.

Our mission among them was to explore and report, not remain permanently, unless after due consideration of facts, our Board should determine to establish a mission in the country.

At that time, no one but themselves knew the Patagonian language, and we had no interpreter; all our communications to the savages were through signs. Some of our friends advised us to go armed into Patagonia. We said "No, our weakness is our strength; our apparent unprotectedness our shield." And so it was. The savages saw we were defenseless and harmless, and our God made them our protectors. They were not jealous or afraid of us, and we left them unscathed, under the wing of our Immanuel.

The Dyocks killed Murser and Lyman with their own rifles. After we left Patagonia, seven armed missionaries were starved to death on Tierra del Fuego, because they feared to go with the natives, and the natives feared them. At a later date eight missionaries were slaughtered, at one time, by the same savages; and I am told that these missionaries were armed, not, of course, with hostile designs, but with the view of self-protection and to secure game.

The foregoing are a few of the many facts connected with our Patagonian expedition in 1833.

You are aware that a band of English missionaries have since made considerable impression upon the Patagonians by establishing a school, and other means.

With the history of Christianity in the Hawaiian Islands you are doubtless acquainted. The mission has been a peaceful one, not, however, without more or less "strife of tongues," and much bitter opposition on the part of lawless foreigners, residents, and visitors. There have been times when some of the older missionaries have "endured the contradiction of sinners," and when they have been in peril by English, French, and American visitors. But their feeling has been forbearance, and their counsels to the chief and people, peace. Our churches we regard as peace societies, temperance societies, missionary societies, Bible societies, etc. Within these organizations we endeavor to train the converts to every good work.

When the French, at three several times, threatened the independence of the nation, some rash counsellors advised fighting. But the king and the council sent proclamations over the group, calling on churches and mission aries to pray for deliverance, and help came from God alone. So when the English Lord George Paulet ttook the islands with a small frigate, there was no smell of powder, not a sword drawn, not a gun fired. The invader was the sole monarch of the realm, doing his whole pleasure for five months. The British flag floated triumphantly over our custom houses, our forts, and our ports of entry. The king and all the rulers of the land sat, as it were, in sackcloth and ashes; meanwhile the missionaries and all the pious throughout the land were praying night and day to God for help. And help came from Him who made heaven and earth, The British flag came down, the royal Hawaiian signal went up. Our nation shouted jubilee, and breathed again the fresh air of liberty, while the English lord retired with his stifled thunders, and he has never again been seen on our coast. God has been round about us as a "wall of fire." Our forts have all been demolished, their materials utilized, and our war vessels have been converted to commercial uses. The nation has now only one small battery, for saluting, on the top of an old crater behind Honolulu.

Such are some of the facts of our peace record. We trust that our people "will learn war no more." More than sixty churches, including a few English-speaking congregations, have been organized in this group; about 70,000 communicants have been gathered; all the children from five to sixteen years old are in schools; and we have high-schools, seminaries, boarding and select schools, etc. We have five island evangelical associations, one general association, and a Hawaiian Missionary Board, whose receipts for the past year were $34,000; and we have missions in the Marquesas, the Gilbert, and the Marshall Archipelagos, with more than a thousand converts. To the church, for more than thirty years under my care, have been gathered: by profession of faith, 12,020; by letter, 776; children baptized, 4,302.—Titus Coan in Herald of Peace.

Are They Idolaters?

I have been told again and again tho Chinamen are not idolaters. They are certainly exceedingly covetous, and the Bible says that covetousness is idolatry. But do they worship images? In their temple or joss house in San Francisco are carved images, set up in alcoves behind the altar, with an inscription in Chinese, which we are told exhorts the people to worship these images. One of these images represents Sso Pak Shing Kwun, the God of Wealth, who holds in his right hand a bar of bullion; another is Nam Hoi Pung Shing Tai, the God of Fire; another is Yun Ten Tin, the God of Water; another is Kovan Tai, the God of War; another is Wah Tah, the God of Medicine.

If a Chinaman can escape the ravages of fire and war; if he can have plenty of water for his crops, and be free from floods and from shipwreck; if he can have plenty of money and good health, he thinks that he will need nothing more. Hence he tries to propititiate these five gods. He bows before them and worships them. The priests give the worshiper two divining rods or sticks, about six inches long and shaped like a bean-pod. When he kneels before the god and prays he drops these two sticks on the floor and if the rounded sides up, the from omen is unfavorable; but if one or both of the flat surfaces are up the omen is favorable response he keeps on praying and throwing the sticks until he does. There is a bell in the temple, and when a worshiper comes in, the priest rings it to wake up his gods and give them notice to receive the offerings and attend to the prayers of their worshiper. In front of the gods is a table covered with sand. On this the priest writes with a stick questions for the gods and their answers. He claims that the answers are inspired.

Thus we see in this Chinese worship the same follies and superstitions that have characterized heathenism in all lands and ages. The Chinamen are as truly idolaters as the ancient Greeks, or the modern Hindoo. No doubt there are some among them who regard the images in the temple as mere symbols of deity. But the multitudes pray to them as if they were really gods.—Herald and Presbyter.

Is it difficult to get rid of left-handedness? We are told not. "One day, or one week, it would be one arm which would be employed for certain things—such as writing, cutting meat, putting a spoon or fork into the mouth, and so on; and on the next day or week, the other. In this way it would be easy to obtain a good deal, if not all. We know that even adults can come to use the left arm. A person who has lost the right arm can learn to write; with difficulty it is true; because in adult life it is much more difficult to produce these effects than in children. The left arm can be taught to be used in a great variety of ways by persons who wish to make use of it." On the theory that the left side of the brain is connected with the control of speech and gesture, Dr. Brown-Sequard mentions some curious results of his experiences:—"Even in adults who have lost the power of speech from disease of the left side of the brain, it is possible to train the patient to speak, and mostly by the use of the right side of the brain. So also as regards gestures and other ways of expressing ideas. I have trained some patients to make gestures with the left arm, who had lost the power of gesture with the right, and who were quite uncomfortable because the left arm, when they tried to move it at times, moved quite in a contrary way, and by no means in harmony with their intentions." When applied to the hands, he claims something more than the analogy of substituting one hand-power for the other, viz., the similar training of both. "As we know that we can make a child who is naturally left-handed come to be right-handed, so we can make a child who is naturally right-handed come to be left-handed as well." The same authority states, in regard to handwriting, that a similar tuition will bring about similar results; but we think he must be speaking rather of drawing than of writing; because no writing would be regarded as good except that with the slope of the letter in one particular direction—a thing we presume almost impossible to insure by mere training of the left hand; though on this point we must leave writing masters to decide. The advantage of being able to use the two hands with equal or nearly equal facility, is similarly insisted on by other authorities. Some persons are too right-handed; we question indeed whether one-handedness, whether right or left be chiefly employed, does not in all cases involve a loss of power. In such instances it is probable that careful training, especially if begun in early life, by tending to equalize the work of both members of each pair of organs, might add considerably to the general power of the body. If this be so, we perhaps outlive Archbishop Tench's explanation of the word "left," given in his Study of words. He submitted that the left hand, as distinguished from the right, is the hand which we leave unused; inasmuch as for twenty times we use the right hand, we do not once employ the left; and the name thus arises from the left hand being unemployed so much. It should be mentioned, however, that this view is in some quarters disputed; the word "left," being regarded as a corruption of laevus. We are bidden to imagine a race of men possessing limbs and organs such as we possess, but, through some defect in their method of training the bodily powers, using only or chiefly one member of each pair. To such a race it would be a new doctrine, and a very important one, that both members of every pair could be used with equal efficiency. "The theory, at first startling by its novelty, would, before long, be established in a practical manner; and the race would find their powers much more than doubled by this duplication of their limbs and organs." And even without imagining any special race, men and women as we now know them, might, become a more handy—that is, a more two-handed—people than we are at present; nay, mental one-sidedness itself might perchance be lessened by agencies within our reach.—All the Year Round.

Children's Corner.

Dicky Bird's Song.

"With all my might I make request,
Dear boy, harm not my little nest;
Oh, do not try to peep therein,
Where lie my little children;
They'll scream with terror and surprise,
If thou showest them thy large round eyes."

The boy much longed the birds to see,
Yet quietly far off stood he;
In peace the poor bird reached her nest,
And warmed her young with downy breast;
Then warbled forth her song of joy
To the kind-hearted little boy.

Building without a Plan

Walter, on his way to school, stopped in front of a lot which seemed to be graded for building, just as a load of lumber was being deposited upon the spot.

"What are you going to build here Mr. Gracey?" asked he of the builder, who was standing by.

"I am going to put up a building, Walter."

"What kind of a building is it to be, sir?"

"I don't exactly know yet."

"Are you going to build a barn?"

"Don't know yet, Walter, what it is to be."

"Well, that is queer, Mr. Gracey. How do you know you have brought the right lumber if you don't know what you are going to build?"

If Mr. Gracey was in earnest with Walter, he must have been a very foolish builder. And yet there are many young people who are getting ready to build just like Mr. Gracey. They grow up without any aim, forming habits without any model, and so have in after life but a mass of bad habits and a record of wasted opportunities. Have an aim, and work hard to reach it. Never build without a plan.

Scowling.

Don't scowl, it spoils faces. Before you know it, your forehead will resemble a small railroad map. There is a grand trunk line now from your cowlick to the bridge of your nose, intersected by parallel lines running east and west, with curves arching your eyebrows; and oh, how much older you look for it! Scowling is a habit that steals upon us unawares. We frown when the light is too strong and when it is too weak. We tie our brows into a knot when we are thinking, and knit them even more tightly when we cannot think. There is no denying there are plenty of things to scowl about. The baby in the cradle frowns when something fails to suit. "Constitution scowl," we say. The little toddler who likes sugar on his bread and butter tells his trouble in the same way when you leave the sugar off. "Cross," we say about the children, and "worried to death," about the grown folks, and as for ourselves, we can't help it. But we must. Its reflex influence makes others unhappy; for face answereth unto face in life as well as in water. It belies our religion. We should possess our souls in such peace that it will reflect itself in placid countenances. If your forehead is ridged with wrinkles before forty, what will it be at seventy? There is one consoling thought about these marks of time and trouble,—the death angel almost always erases them. Even the extremely aged, in death, often wear a smooth and peaceful brow, thus leaving our last memories of them calm and tranquil. But our business is with life. Scowling is a kind of silent scolding. It shows that our souls need sweetening. For pity's sake, let us take a sad iron, or a glad iron, or smoothing tool of some sort and straighten these creases out of our faces before they become indelibly engraved upon our visage.—Christian at Work.

How Grasshoppers Take Flight.

Grasshoppers, to say the least of them, are queer insects. They muster in force at regular hours. Between 10½ and 11 o'clock, A. M., they congregate in swarms, oftentimes covering from one-quarter to half an acre, or more. They now begin manoeuvering for a good start, and in order to attain an altitude fly against the wind in a zigzag manner. Large swarms soon reach a great height, where they mingle with other swarms, and thus in vast myriads pass away to the northeast. Yesterday those at the highest point went in a northwesterly direction, it being observed that they were carried along with the wind's force. No accurate conception could be made of their height. Shielding the eye with an umbrella from the sun, they appear one vast snow-fall, traveling at the rate of ten miles an hour. From the space of one hundred feet above ground to an altitude beyond correct demonstration, they appear in myriads, although it was clearly observed the larger part attained the upper current. Beginning their flight in swarms, they maintain the same order throughout. For minutes the sun's light is almost shielded, when for a time none are observed, again to be followed by millions of the tiny hosts.

At the low altitude, barely passing tops of tall trees, thousands of hoppers fly in a venturesome way, unable to attain proper beight. In a few days, however, they gain sufficient strength and then form a part of the departing multitude, and so the flight keeps up. The eye grows weary with upward watching, but the moving hosts form a panorama in the heavens on which the toiling husbandmen gaze with unspeakable joy. At noon the procession had reached its grandest proportions. The voracious pests pour forth in one exhaustless swarm, their tiny, bright wings glistening like silver in the sunlight. A hawk, sailing at its usual height, was far below the most venturesome. Toward two o'clock they decrease in numbers. Swarms grow perceptibly less, and soon a few stragglers alone are visible, slowly following the line of march. Another half an hour and all have passed for the day.—Ex.

Funeral of President Finney.

The funeral services of the father of Oberlin, who died on Monday the 16th, took place on the Wednesday following in large old First Church, of which he had been years ago pastor. The stores were closed and the undercurrent of grief was manifested in the quiet of the streets and the cessation of all business. The services were held in the church at 2 o'clock P. M., and the crowded house indicated the respect and love for this venerable father which filled the entire people. After the organ voluntary and the anthem, "Come unto me all ye that labor," Dr. Morgan read appropriate selections from the Scriptures, and was followed by prayer by Dr. Cowles. The Rev. Mr. Avery of Cleveland, read the hymn, "Give me the wings of Faith," after the singing of which President Fairchild made a few remarks touching upon some of the more important acts and events connected with Mr. Finney's life. He said: "No scene has occured here for which words seem so inadequate as the present occasion. Mr. Finney was born in Warren, Litchfield county, Conn., Aug. 29, 1792, and was at the time of his death nearly 83 years old. His education was of the common-school type, until late in life he attended school in New England, where he fitted himself for Yale College. At the instance of his instructor he gave up his plan of study and went to Adams, Jefferson county, N. Y., where he began the study of law. The first Bible he owned was one he bought for his law library after his conversion. He studied theology under Dr. Gale, afterwards the founder of Knox College, Ill. He carried on the work of an Evangelist through New York State for ten years, visiting in the meanwhile Philadelphia, New York, Providence, Boston and many other Eastern cities, where he was blessed with extensive revivals. At the urgent solicitations of friends he organized a church in the Chatham Street Theater, New York city, from which center seven Presbyterian churches sprang into being. The Broadway Tabernacle was afterwards erected, Mr. Finney planning the building himself. He wrote to the New York Evangelist, a paper established in the interest of the anti-slavery cause, and advocating the principles of the New School theology.

Mr. Finney came to Oberlin at the urgent request of Mr. Arthur Tappan, who had taken a deep interest in the young men who seceded from Lane Seminary, and he wished Mr. Finney to take charge of and educate them. Mr. Finney's work at Oberlin is familiar to all. He labored with zeal and vigor for the salvation of men, and has closed his labors, dying among the people whom he loved.

Mr. Finney made a visit to England and Scotland in 1848, visiting Aberdeen, Glasgow, Edinburg, and London, and ten years after revisited those places with very much similar results to those which crowned the efforts of Moody. These last years of his life have been the fullest of blessing to his friends here. It has been a blessing to see him walk these streets with the perpetual benediction of his cheerful face."

Prof. Cowles spoke a few words in memory of the deceased, and was followed by Dr. Morgan, whose touching tribute and eloquently simple prayer reached the hearts of all.

The remains were then viewed by the assembled friends, after which the funeral cortege moved from the church to Greenwood Cemetery, where the remains were laid in their last resting place. The pall-bearers were Profs. Ellis, Mead, Smith, Barrows, Dascomb, and Ryder.

A feeling of deep gloom pervades the community, and in the words of President Fairchild, "Although our father was ready to go, we were not ready to have him."

The American Cardinal McCloskey has reached France on his way to Rome to assist in the consistory and receive his title as cardinal-priest to the Roman Church. The latter ceremony is thus described: "In receiving from the pope the galerum rubrum, or red hat, the cardinal genuflects before the pope and kisses his toe. In conferring the hat the pope addresses the cardinal in Latin, as follows: 'To the praise of Almighty God and the honor of the holy see, receive the red hat, and insignia of the exalted dignity of the cardinalate, as a sign that even to death and the effusion of blood, for the exaltation of the holy faith, for the peace and tranquility of Christian people, for the increase and stability of the Holy Roman Catholic Church, you ought to hold yourself steadfast. In the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost.' The ceremony of 'closing the mouth' of the cardinal will follow. 'The pope,' says the New York Tribune, with the endorsement of the Tablet, a Catholic paper, 'therein prohibits the cardinal from presuming to speak in the consistories until he, by opening his mouth, shall have given him permission to speak.' In a third consistory the pope bids the newly elected cardinal to retire until he shall inquire from the elder cardinals whether it appears fitting to them that he open the mouth of the new cardinal. All the cardinals consenting, their newly-elected brother is recalled, and the pope bids him approach for the opening of the mouth. This consists in the holy father's simply giving the cardinal permission to speak in the consistories and elsewhere. The ring is then conferred on the cardinal and placed on his hand by the pope, who announces to him the church in Rome to which he is titularly assigned.'"

Lovers of Punch.—The following from the National Temperance Advocate, is pretty severe on the moral principles of Plymouth church, Brooklyn: "Not long since, after the close of the great scandal-trial in Brooklyn, a large party from Plymouth church, consisting chiefly of its Sunday-school and a few of the leading members of the church, chartered a steamboat and paid a visit to Mr. Beecher at Peekskill. According to the newspaper reports, they stopped on the way 'at farmer Kittridge's place, just below Mr. Beecher's farm, where a barrel of claret punch had been placed, and refreshed themselves. Three cheers were then given for the punch (!) and the party moved on.' Without, in this connection, making any comment on the great scandal itself, we venture the opinion that such an exhibition of drinking and cheering claret punch—a popular grog-shop beverage—on the part of the Plymouth party is a scandalous example, not only to the children and members of their own church, but to all others."

MISCELLANY.

—The Catholic Telegraph, organ of Archbishop Purcell, makes this bold declaration respecting the public schools: "It will be a glorious day in this country when, under the laws of justice and morality, our school system is shivered to pieces."

—The disarmament of Europe has begun. John II., sovereign prince of Lichtenstein, has set the noble example. In accordance with the advice of the five wise men who constitute the Parliament, he has dismissed his army, consisting of ninety carbiners and a trumpeter.

—The New York Tribune gathers some interesting information from an Italian newspaper relative to the annual revenues of the Cardinals. Each Prince of the Church has an income of $6,000. Cardinal Patrizi has in addition $8,000 as Cardinal Vicar of Rome and an equal sum from his benefices. Cardinal Amat draws $22,000 from his enormous benefices. Cardinal di Pietro receives $12,000 as Bishop of Albano and has an equal sum allowed him by Portugal. Cardinal Sacconi has about the same revenue. De Lucca receives $30,000, Bigarri $8,000, Bernardi $100,000, Franchi $12,000, and a large stipend from Spain, while Chigi belongs to a very rich family.

—In Chicago lately, 20,000 pounds of freshly slaughtered beef, just as it came from the knife of the butcher, were placed in a Refrigerator car, after which it was sealed up, to be opened only on its arrival in New York. The car was charged with four tons of ice, and started in a regular freight train, without any addition of ice or special attention, and came through safely in about four days and a half. On opening the car at the Hudson River Railroad Depot, the cargo was found in a perfect condition, as fresh and sweet as it was when placed in the car.

—John Welsh, President of the Centennial Board of Finance, in response to inquiries as to the cost of the exhibition and as to what will be derived at the close from all sources of revenue, has written a letter stating that the total cost of all the buildings, improvements of the grounds, and expenses incident to the organization and conduct of the United States Centennial Commission, Centennial Board of Finance, and to the exhibition until its close, will be $8,500,000. The statements are given under the reserve that, while they are in accordance with his best judgment, they are of necessity but approximations of results which are dependent upon circumstances subject to changes. The appropriation by Pennsylvania of $1,000,000, and of Philadelphia of $1,500,000, together with the proceed of gifts, profits on sales of medals, etc., which will yield $500,000—in all $3,000,000—will not be included in the stock basis; therefore the stock basis cannot exceed $5,500,000, and probably not $5,000,000. The number of admissions cannot reasonably be estimated at less than 10,000,000, which, at 50 cents each, will yield $5,000,000, to which must be added the amount to be received from concessions and the sale of materials after the exhibition closes, say $500,000, together making $5,500,000, or the whole stock capital.

Religious Intelligence.

—Messrs. Moody and Sankey, the revivalists, and Rev. Sabine Knight, the "English Evangelist to the Freedmen," arrived in New York on Saturday, August 14th, on the steamship Spain. Moody and Sankey are to take a two months' rest.

—Rev. D. Goodwillie who has ministered to the United Presbyterian congregation of Liberty, Ohio, for fifty years has retired from active ministry.

—A new Presbyterian chapel was dedicated in Tokio, Japan, on the 19th of June. The society was formed in 1873, and consists of sixty-eight members. It employs two native preachers, and sustains eighteen preaching places in the city. The building is fifty feet long by thirty wide, and will seat three hundred persons. The dedication sermon was preached in Japanese, by the Rev. Dr. Verbeck. An address was also delivered by Okano, a native Christian in charge of a church at Yokohama.

—There are in this country by the census of 1870, 72,000 religious societies, 63,000 church edifices, and church property to the value of $354,000,000, with sittings for more than twenty-one millions of persons. There are 43,000 thousand clergymen in the United States.

—Mr. Garter, who labors among London thieves, burglars and pickpockets, has gathered a church of eighteen hundred members from these outcasts of society. His wife instructs sixteen hundred mothers, meeting four hundred at a time, who, without her labors would receive no instruction at all.

—The British and Foreign Bible Society has given 1,000 volumes of Kistemaker's version of the New Testament to Bishop Reinkens for distribution among poor Old Catholic congregations.

—Simultaneously with the decay of Islamism there has been awakened in the Ottoman mind a disposition favorable to the Gospel. The report of the agents of the British and Foreign Bible Society furnish a multitude of interesting facts connected with the circulation of the Turkish Scriptures, which in many instances are purchased, and have produced powerful convictions on the Moslem mind.

—According to a table issued by the Presbyterian press at Shanghai, the number of old pauperdrotestant Missionaries in China is—Americans, 84; English and Canadian, 82; German, 16; total, 182. In Japan—American, 32; English, Scotch and Canadian, 12: total, 44. The whole number of Protestant societies represented in Japan is 11. The whole number of churches is 48. distributed thus—at Jeddo 18; Osaka, 7; Yokohama, 11; Nagasaki, 4; Hokodadi, 2; Kobe, 5; Shidzuoka, 1.

—The American Board finds itself running behind again financially, and appeals to every Congregational church to make its donation this year as large as last year, to avoid the Society's becoming embarassed. As matters look now, the debt which was reported at Rutland ($30,441,07) is likely to become much larger.

—The English Revision Companies have finished their work for this season. The Old Testament Company has adjourned to the latter part of September having gone so far in its work as Isaiah, fifty-second chapter, seventh verse. The New Testament Company will resume its labors in October, commencing then with the eighth chapter of First Corinthians. Several members of these companies have died during the year, whose places will be filled by other men before the work of revision commences again.

—Rev. Joseph Travis of the Iowa Conference Free Methodist church, after absence from home in apostolic work, returned to find a dear son buried and all the family sick, including Mrs. Travis. This brother will be remembered in the prayers of God's people.

—The Old Catholic Conference, called by Dr. Dollinger, was formally opened at Bonn, August 12th. There are about 30 English and American clergymen, and several Archimandrites and bishops of the Eastern church. Dr. Dollinger opened the proceedings with an address which lasted an hour. At the conclusion of his address, the conference entered upon the business for which it had met, which was the consideration of Dr. Dollinger's plan of confederation and intercommunion among the separated churches. This union is to be based on a mutual recognition of primitive truth, which may enable each church to admit members of other communions to its privileges in respect to divine worship and the Christian sacraments.

News of the Week.

City.

—A movement is on foot in this city to bring the case of Prof. Swing before the Synod and demand that he be deposed from the pastorate of the Fourth Presbyterian church. The allegations are said to be that he is heretical, and that the church must either dismiss him or be cut off from fellowship.——It is reported that a new Government commission is to examine the Custom House walls. It is probable that work will begin again soon.——The body of Journal reporter who started on a balloon excursion with Prof. Donaldson several weeks ago, was found last week several miles north of Whitehall, Mich., opposite Milwaukee, partly buried in sand and much decomposed. Papers and notes on the body identify it without doubt. Unsuccessful search has been continued for Donaldson.

General.

Southern Illinois is in a state of strange disorder. In Williamson county a feud between two wealthy and somewhat respectable families, has developed in some seven murders, and a system of terrorism which overawed the officers of the law and prevented citizens from arising to punish the guilty. In the adjoining county a recent raid of Ku-Klux in which half the number were shot by sheriff's posse, has shown a terribly lawless condition in society. Gov. Beverage is severely mentioned for his tardiness in sending aid and the best citizens have at length enlisted as home guards, receiving arms from the State and will clean out the cut-throats with aid of United States law.——Latest and most reliable figures from the North Carolina election show that the Republicans carried the State by a majority of over 15,000 on the popular vote, giving a Republican gain of about 30,000 over the vote of last year.

Foreign.

—In the English Channel, the Royal yatch Alberta, having on board Her Majesty the Queen, on her way to Scotland, came in violent collision with the schooner yatch Mistletoe on the 18th. The latter vessel was almost instantly sunk and three persons on board of her drowned. The Alberta was not materially damaged. The royal party was unharmed.——A Calcutta dispatch states that serious floods have occurred in the Province of Burmah. The Irrawaddy and other rivers, swollen by rains, have overflowed their banks and inundated a large tract of country, causing considerable injury to rice crops and other property.——In Barcelona, Spain, on Wednesday. An explosion occurred by which fifty persons were killed and many injured. A Spanish vessel which was shipping material of war was the scene of disaster. The vessel sunk, and besides those killed instantly by the explosion, a number were drowned.——A serious insurrection of some of the provinces of European Turkey, threatened to be of a serious matter last week. The chief trouble was in Herzegovina, while the Servians are in active sympathy. The revolt, trifling at first, has grown into actual war. The dispatches of last week state that terrible atrocities are being perpetrated both by the rebels and the Turkish troops. The Christians, whenever they encounter the Turks and gain the advantage, pursue and slaughter their enemies without mercy. The Turks retaliate with equal cruelty and massacre the Christians in turn. No quarter is offered or accepted. The priests are increasing the intensity and bitterness of the conflict by preaching a "religious war." Later advices state that foreign powers have asked the Turkish government to suspend operations while inquiry shall be made of the grievances of the insurgents with a view to peaceful settlement.

MOUNT UNION COLLEGE.—The following was adopted at the recent annual meeting of Trustees: "Resolved, That we increase college property to over a million dollars, by securing five hundred and fifty thousand dollars as the American Centennial Offerings." The late Chief Justice Chase, as Trustee, touched the key note: "Mount Union, being among the best Colleges in the land, should the most freely and widely extend its superior advantages equally to our country's worthy poor or self-dependent." College year just closed shows remarkable progress. The Faculty numbers sixteen experienced professors. This College, by having erected and furnished good buildings, keeps board with room at about $3 per week—self and club-board much less. Tuition but a trifle in any Department; no contingent or extra charges. Apparatus and specimens worth over a quarter million dollars to illustrate Science. Students enter any time in Term at proportional rates. College property, benefiting students, worth $451,276; income last year $26,540, also aids students. Many students, without falling behind their classes, earn their college expenses by teaching winters, attending the regular college year of fall, spring, and summer terms, beginning last Tuesdays of August and February, and middle of May. The special Winter term, beginning last Tuesday of November, accommodates students not teaching.

FREE TRACTS.

A Tract Fund for the Free Distributirn of Tracts

HAS BEEN SECURED AND SHOULD NEVER BE EXHAUSTED. A friend has pledged this fund a dollar for every otnerdollar received, so EVERY NEW SUBSCRIPTION TO THE TRACT FUND COUNTS DOUBLE, and thus $10.00 pays for 20,000 pages of tracts.

The distribution of these tracts has already saved hundreds of young men from the lodge, but there is a great lack of funds to supply the constantly increasing demand for Free Tracts.

During the year ending July 1st, 1875 a little less than 1?0.000 pages of Cynosure Tracts were gratuitously sent out, mostly in very small lots. The present demand is fully 100.000 pages per month, but funds are lacking to meet it.

Many of our most earnest workers in this cause of God are poor men, who would be glad to circulate thousands of pages of Antimasonic literature if they could have them free.

SHALL WE NOT HAVE AN INEXHAUSTIBLE TRACT FUND?

"THE ANTI-MASONS SCRAP BOOK."

Contains 24 Cynosure Tracts, bound together and is just the thing to select from. Price 20 cents. See advertisement page 15.

Enoch Honeywell Esq., pays for an unlimited number of his tract addressed "To THE YOUNG MEN OF AMERICA." It is an excelent tract, bearing the printed endorsement of Executive Committee of the National Christian Association1 He has furnished the public over 150.000 pages of these tracts during the past year.

Home and Health Hints.

Putting up Sweet Corn.

The time is now here when sweet corn is ready to be put up for Winter use, and a few points in regard to curing the article will not be out of place: Get the corn when the grains are in prime order for the table—when the corn is tenderest, and the juice sweetest. Boil the ears a few minutes (not above five, three is better than five). Then cut and lay away to dry. A fruit dryer is best; even moderately warm will do very well; or take any method that will soonest dry your corn, being always careful not to burn it; and do not lay in lumps or too thick together when drying, or it will soon mould. Around the stove, or where there is a fire, is a good place, always avoiding dampness, steam, etc.; put in sacks and hang away in a dry place, and your corn is fit for next Winter's use. In using, you are to restore it as near as possible to its original state. This is best done by first washing it to get out the dust and husk, and then thoroughly soaking in water, the water retained to boil it in.—Rural American.

To Make Corn Oysters.—Take three dozen ears of large young Indian corn; six eggs; lard and butter in equal proportions for frying. The corn must be young and soft. Grate it from the cob as fine as possible, and dredge it with wheat flour. Beat very light the six eggs, and mix them gradually with the corn. Then let the whole be incorporated by hard beating. Add a spoon of salt.

Have ready, in a frying pan, a sufficient quantity of lard and fresh and butter mixed together. Set it over the fire till it is boiling hot, and then put in portions of the corn mixture, so as to form oval cakes about three inches long, and nearly an inch thick. Fry them brown, and send them to table hot. In taste they will be found to have a singular resemblance to fried oysters, and universally liked if properly done. They make nice side dishes at dinner, and are very good at breakfast.

Green Corn for Winter Use.—Take the ears of corn, remove the husk, all but the last one; get a tight cask, put in a layer of corn and a layer of salt, another corn, and another salt, and so on until the cask is full; pour in a little cold water and cover tight. When you wish to cook it, take it out of the brine, remove the husk, cut it off from the cob, and soak till fresh. This is better than drying, and not as much trouble. Green corn will not keep in glass jars or tin cans. This is our experience; perhaps some one has been more successful.

Do not cook vegetables in iron pots, unless they are enameled. Never cook tomatoes in an iron pot. It makes them bitter.

Diarrhoea.—The chilly, changeable weather is the most dangerous imaginable. The cold raw atmosphere causes the collapsing of the stomach, and is one cause of this dangerous and weakening distemper. Too much indulgence in vegetables at such times is unwise. A very simple medicine, and one that can be readily prepared by everybody, is blackberry syrup. But a simple medicine, and one which we are confident, if properly used, would save the lives of large numbers of children that are now afflicted with this disease, is to take a handful of strawberry leaves and make of it a tea, and it will certainly cure. The leaves can be got at any garden, or of the hucksters in market. It may be perhaps necessary to slightly purge the stomach first. It is also good for adults.—New York Sun.

Farm and Garden.

Cattle Running in Roads.

There has been much controversy, first and last, between neighbors and communities, as to the rights of cattle in public roads. A. will argue that his stock have a right to run where it pleases, and that the damage done to his neighbor's crops count as nothing, unless his fences are pig-proof, horse-high, and bull-buttressed.

A case has lately been tried in Pennsylvania, where a man was in the habit of turning his cattle into the roads to pasture, and they broke into fields. After the owners had remonstrated to no purpose, an action was brought before a justice of the peace, who awarded the complainant damages. The case was appealed to arbitrators, who affirmed the decision of the justice. The counsel for the defendant quoted a law of the early part of the last century, which obliged the owners of the land to maintain a good fence, five feet high, and closed at the bottom. We believe there is an old law that specifies even the width of the spaces. The counsel for the complainant quoted a decision of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania in 1844, making the owners of cattle running at large responsible for the damage committed. He might also have quoted later and more important decisions of the Supreme Court, deciding, not only that owners cannot recover damages for cattle killed on railroads, but with the added implication that the owners ought to be held responsible for the damages sustained by a railroad company by reason of such cattle, in their property, and to the passengers, freight, etc., carried upon the road.

This to our view is entirely just; for the farmer or other individuals, owning property along a road, own also to the middle of the road, except its use for the purposes of a public highway. They therefore own the pasture on the surface, and what may be contained beneath the road. They own the fee simple of the land to the middle of the road and they and their heirs and assignees, continue to own the land forever; and if from any cause the road is discontinued, it reverts back to the field from which it was taken, in toto.

Other States have determined this question in pretty much the same way. In the State of New York, it has been decided that the Legislature possesses no power to make pasture fields of the public roads; that it is not only in violation of the claims of the owners, but a direct obstruction to the general travel.—The Western Rural.

Measuring Hay Stack.—The rule by which the contents of a cone is ascertained is as follows: Multiply the area of the base by one-third of the perpendicular height, gives the cubic contents. If the measures are in feet the result is in cubic feet. Generally 500 cubic feet of hay in a well packed stack will make a ton. A stack 39 feet in circumference and 14 feet slant height will be 13 feet in diameter and 12½ feet nearly in perpendicular height, and will contain about 2,200 pounds of hay. But this supposes that it is a perfect cone tapering regularly from bottom to top, which a stack rarely does. For irregular figures no rule can be given, but estimates found upon this rule may be made to suit the case.

Publishers' Department

This is the last number of the Cynosure which those whose subscriptions expire in August will receive, unless they notify us of their wish to continue the paper. Any of those who wish to continue taking the paper, who have not renewed, are requested to do so immediately.

Does your subscription expire in September? If so will you please ask your friends to join with you in subscribing for the paper, and forward your renewal promptly?

SEPTEMBER is the last month of the present quarter, and the quarterly Cynosure subscription list report will be given the first of October. Every one who sends in six or more subscriptions (whether renewals or new subscriptions) will have their names published in our honor regiment. Fill up the ranks and swell the subscription list. Let us be able to report at least one thousand more subscribers than we had the first of July. Some few friends have solicited subscriptions with good success this summer. September is a favorable month for this work. Let old and young all take hold. Work and pray. We feel sure you may accomplish much toward promoting this reform and enlarging the subscription list.

SUBSCRIPTIONS RECEIVED DURING WEEK ENDING AUG. 21. 1875, FROM J Auten, A Alexander, J A Allen, J Beattie, C A Blanchard, (4) J Bartlett. Mrs. R Boyles, G Brown, J Cassidy, E G Cooper, C L Dudley, M S Drury, J M Fry, A Grattan, I A Hart, J S Hickman, C A Hunt, J T Kiggins, A Kellum, W D Lowry, H Longfield, W Miller, J McAuley, J McConnell, T J Muzzy, D Mater, D McKee, R Mansfield, J H Paul, J W Raynor, T Relyea, S C Stevens, J P Stoddard, J Torrans, Geo Taylor, F M Waldron, J Viall.

Postage on the Cynosure.

THE POSTAGE ON THE CYNOSURE MUST BE PAID AT CHICAGO. It is twenty cents a year.

The cost of postage now depends entirely on the size and weight, and therefore some smaller papers charge but fifteen cents; and others about the size of the Cynosure charge twenty-five cents a year for postage.

If the subscription price of the CYNOSURE was $2.50 or $3.00 a year, the price of many religious papers containing no more reading matter, we might afford to pay the postage ourselves, but at $2.00 a year we cannot do this with our present Subscription list.

Therefore let all send the postage, 20 cents a year, 10 cents for half a year with their renewals.

The commission on one new subscription for a year will pay the postage on your own and the new subscriber's paper. We would rather have the postage paid by commissions than in any other way.

When postage is not paid we shall have to shorten the time of subscription sufficiently to pay it.

How to Send Money.

Post office orders, checks or drafts on Chicago or towns east of Chicago, and currency by express may be sent at our risk. If it is not possible to send by either of the four ways named, money in a registered letter may be sent at our risk, but it is not as safe.

The date at which subscriptions expire is with each subscriber's name on the address label. Send renewals before this date occurs. Notice if this date is changed to correspond; if not or if the paper fails to come, write without delay.

We discontinue during the first part of each month all subscriptions which expire during the preceding one except such as are ordered continued with a promise to forward the money soon. We do not like to lose a single subscriber and will not remove names simply because the cash is not received promptly, if we understand that the paper is wanted. ANTI-MASONIC POLITICAL ACTION!

As the N. C. Association is not, nor does it propose to become a political body; and yet as its members are citizens as well as Christians it has been thought best after consultation among such friends as can be reached from several States to call a meeting of those who are friendly to the action taken at Pittsburgh, in June last, for the purpose of appointing a National Central Committee. It is therefore hereby requested that such of our friends as can will meet for this purpose at the Cynosure Office, at 11 o'clock, A. M. on Monday, Sept. 6th.

By request of many friends,

J. L. BARLOW.

Chicago, Aug. 30, 1875.

Topics of the Time.

A correspondent of the Chicago Tribune, describing some of the social features of the season at Waukesha, a celebrated summer resort in Wisconsin, says an abbess from the convent of the Sacred Heart of Louisville, Kentucky, draws great attention from her peculiar dress and engaging manners, her plain attire contrasting with the gay dresses of the croquet ground and serving to call more notice and aid her business of advertising her institution and gaining admirers to her church. The great complaint of the Romanist propagandists is not for lack of numbers but wealth. Their success is among the poorer and ignorant classes, who yield more readily to appeals to their fear or sympathy, superstition or love of display, but do not bring large sums to the coffers of the church to support priests in luxury, or worse, and maintain a suitably imposing magnificence. An attractive agent at a resort of wealth and ill-health is like the accustomed shrewdness of the priests to turn into the channels of Romanism the hopes of some dying man and secure his wealth or the education and control of his children.

A good suggestion for the Centennial comes from the Christian Statesman, that a building be erected on the exhibition grounds for daily religious exercises, where Christians from all parts of the country and the world shall find the welcome voice and sympathy of their fellow pilgrims. Christians of the United States should not let so wise a plan fail for lack of any right effort to obtain it. Science, art, agriculture, manufactures, education, the government, all will contribute to show the character and scope of our nation, but shall its religious character, the labor of its earliest and wisest statesmen, be despised or forgotten. The foe of the church, the lodge, will be well displayed in its false, harlot attire; let the counteracting influence of true worship be seen and felt through the whole season of exhibition. But if the plan is undertaken in the ogling, jealous spirit of the Christian Union, which suggests that such a meeting might be a cover for advancing the reform of the Statesman, it will fail. It is the tendency of every meeting of true religious worship to promote that reform.

The lesson men of business are ever unlearning is again repeated in the Bank of California and its chief officer, only such double destruction is seldom experienced. Ralston was the Jim Fisk of the Pacific coast, whose bank stood him in need as did the Erie Railroad for the licentious partner of Jay Gould. Legitimate business was inadequate to the demands of ambition and passion, and at last the energetic spendthrift of of others' money turns over his losses of millions to their account and his career comes to a tragical and perhaps cowardly end. The man of business is safe from the disasters of trade only when he becomes a steward. He is always an unsafe man who "layeth up treasure for himself and is not rich toward God."

Whatever is done without ostentation and without the people being witnesses of it, is, in my opinion most praiseworthy; not that the public eye should be entirely avoided, for good actions desire to be placed in the light; but notwithstanding this, the greatest theater for virtue is conscience.—Cicero.

Samuel D. Greene on Thurlow Weed's Morgan Letter.

In an article by Thurlow Weed on the third examination of the body of William Morgan found at Oak Orchard Creek, Mr. Weed says, "Previous to her examination, Bates Cook, chairman of the Morgan investigation Committee," he should have said a Freemason, "examined the the clothes taken from the body and carefully preserved by the Coroner, with great minuteness;" and he should have said also that although Mrs. Monroe went to see the Coroner and asked to see the clothes, she was denied the sight of them by the officer saying Bates Cook had a very minute description of them. This enabled him to test the accuracy of Mrs. Monroe's knowledge and memory. Bates Cook led in the examination of Mrs. Monroe's testimony, and his method was very leading, and it was very evident to me and others that Mrs. Monroe had examined Cook's accurate description, for in one instance he (Cook) asked her "if there was anything particular about the buttons on the pants?" Mrs. Monroe quickly replied, "I forget. Yes," says she, "and hey were sewed on with brown thread different from the others." Two or three such leading questions were asked by Cook evidently to recruit her memory of the minute copy of the description of the clothes, and before the body was exposed she swore that he had short black hair and whiskers, had his hair cut just before he left home. She was asked if there was anything peculiar about his teeth, and she said, No. One of the jury asked her how long she had lived with Mr. Monroe, and she answered, "Twenty-seven years, but I don't recollect anything in particular about his teeth, or whether he had lost any or not."

These circumstances I remember distinctly. She did not describe the body found and identified by Mrs. Morgan, Dr. Strong and others, but swore to a different person altogether as to height and color of hair and beard. But by the help of Bates Cook's memorandum she could give a very minute description of the clothes.

That a description of the clothes could be so minutely given by any living mortal was the greatest case of spiritualism ever heard of! that old garments worn so as to have patches could have the exact color of the patches and of thread used in sewing them on, and the buttons, etc., told was very extraordinary. Though the head and hair and whiskers and hight were entirely different, yet I said, and took a memorandum of it at the time, that whether there was a particle of testimony of identification of the body or not, this jury will decide that it is the body of Monroe.

There were no questions asked her whether she had seen Bates Cook's memorandum. The son's testimony confirming his mother's was very singular, as he remembered all the patches, buttons, and color of thread, etc. It was an extraordinary case. Boys are not generally such minute describers of their father's, or even their own clothes, and to any impartial hearer of the testimony of Mrs. Monroe and her sons, it was evident that they had seen Bates Cook's minute description, or a copy of it.

Now the Rev. Mr. Smith, a Knight Templar, the minister to the Tuscarora Indians, told me that Morgan's clothes were taken off and some second-hand clothes were put upon him before he was taken to Canada, so that he might not be described by his clothes, as they were quite worn and could easily be described. It never seemed to me otherwise than a Masonic trick, this identification about the clothes, and in the last of 1865, I wrote to the Postmaster of New Castle, Canada, and got a letter from Mr. Hodge, the Postmaster, dated January 11th, 1866, acknowledging mine of the 30th of December, 1865. I inquired about Monroe's son Cron. that accompanied his mother to Batavia, but Mr. Hodge could not hear or know anything about Cron. But that the Monroe family had moved away from New Castle to Whitty, about thirty miles distant. My object was to get a letter from Cron. or his mother about these clothes, etc., and as Mrs. Monroe was dead and no Cron. to be found, I gave it up and made no further inquiry. Consequently I inserted nothing about the third examination of the body found at Oak Orchard Creek in the "Broken Seal."

Freemasonry was not in 1826 to 1831 looked at in the position as it is now. Almost every learned man like Webster and others, except John Q. Adams, seemed to suppose that it might have been formed as a benevolent and charitable society; and the character of such men as Washington, Lafayette and Franklin, was a strong presumption that the character of Freemasonry must not be so bad. But now it is looked upon in a different light as truth developes its nature; for however good the character of its members may be that does not represent the character of the institution. It is now fully known that it was founded upon a lie claiming that Solomon was a Mason and that the temple was built by Freemasons, and that Hiram was killed at the time, and that the Saints John were Freemasons, etc., without one particle of reason; that it is a system of anti-Christ. Its supposed character therefore worked in its favor. Mrs. Monroe's testimony about the clothes had an effect upon the less suspicious ,and popular attention was turned to slavery. Masonry was left to grow and many sons of Anti-masons joined it. Men like Washington, who had joined it, although he visited the lodge only two or three times and thought it child's play, left nothing positively against the institution, as many others have done and are doing at this day. Notwithstanding the word of God requires proper examination and full renunciation of these oaths.

This Masonic trick to prove that the body found at Oak Orchard Creek was not the murdered Morgan was evidently the most successful case to favor Masonry and turn the attention of the people from the truth and the character of the institution. It was even put into Thatcher's Medical Dictionary as an extraordinary case of mistake in identification. The character of Freemasons was evidently considered a full test of the character of the institution; for, many and many a time, I have had to encounter the difficulty of sons and relatives of Freemasons saying, "I know Freemasonry cannot be bad as you represent it, because my father or uncle, a minister and a good Christian man, would not belong to it were it as bad as you represent it." Thus Freemasonry was judged of by relatives and friends, and this Masonic trick was well managed to aid this opinion.

SAMUEL D. GREENE.

"You don't Know Anything about us." Is this True?

BY REV. J. K. ALWOOD.

Masonry and her children endeavor to stop the mouths of opposers, with the expression "You know nothing about us." This goes upon the assumption that she has never been exposed, her secrets have never been revealed. Taking the expression at par, the conclusion follows that Morgan's book, Bernards "Light," and all other pretended revelations of the mysteries are simply so many lies. Well, suppose we agree to this. Suppose that three men have written for the sole purpose of coming before the public as authors, to gain nothing but hatred and bitter persecution from Masons—as a matter of fact this is what they have gained from that quarter,—and utter neglect from others, as they have until very recently, and as they would perpetually in the absence of the very best of evidence to the truthfulness of their statements, and the bitter cup of remorse to drink through life and in the hour of death for having written and published slanderous falsehoods against a "benevolent institution." Nay, let us suppose there has never been a scratch of a pen, or the utterance of a syllable of revelation of Freemasonry or any of her daughters. Let other facts stand as they do, is it true that men of common sense in this country "know nothing about Freemasonry?" Among the "other facts" are these: They have published in their "Monitors," in their pompous parades, in the streets, in their funerals, and in private conversation very many things concerning their craft. They have told us of the sublime antiquity and regality of its orlgin; of the nobility, the greatness of its patrons, the elevating character of its lofty instructions, and the general amiablity of its character. They exhaust the vocabulary with the unsparing draft they make upon eulogistic terms. No commendatory adjective of the language is permitted to escape. All conceivable excellencies are ascribed to it, not secretly, but most publicly. And yet, in the face and eyes of all those professions and professed descriptions, they gravely tell us "You know nothing about our institution."

Now let us give full credence to this last statement. Then it follows as an inevitable conclusion that all the other statements are false. If it is still true that we (outsiders) "know nothing about it" after they (its inmates) have drafted into service every good discriptive word in order to make us know much about it; then the conclusion is inevitable that those good words have been hypocritically used, and used to deceive; and of this there can be no doubt. It is doubtless true, as a distinguished seceding Mason said, "To read Masonry correctly you must read it backwards." That is, you must believe the exact contrary of its pretensions and professions is true. Doubtless all Masons who are ignorant of the expositions which have been made by seceders, are sincere when they tell us, "You know nothing about Freemasonry;" for they know that all its professions of good are made to gain friends and reputation. And they believe the real secrets have never been divulged; therefore they conclude we know nothing about the real secrets of the order.

Here is another conclusion from the premises before us: There can be nothing good in the secrets of Freemasonry. For they have publicly professed every good even to Divinity. "Hail Masonry Divine," they have it in their song —and they virtually tell us that they lied when they made those public professions of good; for they say we know nothing about it, although they have professed to give us a description of its character; therefore, on their own showing, the mysteries of the thing are all bare. By their own showing there can be no good in it. Doubtless this is the fact. All good has been publicly ascribed to it, leaving none for its secrets; therefore there can be no good in them. This is true. Another conclusion is, that they are generally liars —or rather that it is a lying institution; for it professes all good, when, by its own showing there can be no good in it.

An eminent divine, talking from personal knowledge says, "They will all lie; for they are sworn to do it." Whether this statement be correct or not, it is an inevitable deduction from their own showing that every one of their members who attributed any good quality to the order uttered falsehoods when he did it; and as it is well known that they generally praise the institution, it follows that they are generally liars; and it is a false statement that "You know nothing about us," for they have informed us that they are generally if not universally liars.

Observations and Experiences of Secret Society Principles and Men in the Evangelical Association.

BY REV. H. W. HAMPE.

In my last I promised to state some of the reasons and causes that induced me to protest against the influence of these secret clans in the Pittsburgh conference.

In the month of February, 1867, the writer had a dream in which the inner corruption of conference members, caused by the influence of secret society principles, were set before me, some by belonging to them, and others by longing after them. This sight I shall never forget. What, professed ministers of the Gospel bound in the snares of the devil, and now willingly doing his bidding; their hearts filled with hatred against their brethren, who hate the principles of such secret clans, and conspiring to drive them from the Gospel field! It is enough to bring sorrow to an angel's heart, if they are capable of it.

The particulars of this sight I shall keep to myself for the present. I would state here that Christ does not only declare them corrupted who work evil, but in the sight of God the desire for a sin corrupts the inner man already, Matthew v. 28. My duty was there and then pointed out to me to do at the risk of my character and position; I therefore sent in my name to conference forthwith for an appointment, and received Erie circuit situated in Erie county, Pa. During that year those articles on Masonry appeared in the New York Independent from President Finney, which confirmed my mind the more in regard to the truth of that which had been shown in that dream. I accordingly began to study the principles of Masonry, in those books that profess to reveal them, and some of the Masonic standard works, and in the light of God's word, and found those principles of a corrupting tendency to an alarming extent. If sanction is given in the mind of the best man, it would destroy not only his morals, but the inner life of the Christian believer.

As I now commenced to speak in private in reference to these things, and occasionally, when my text required, gave a proof of its dark doings by the Divine Word, I soon came to be noticed by Masons. At the conference session at Orangeville, Mercer county, Pa., some had been in secret conversation, who were secret society men, concerning me, as they expected me to present to the conference then a resolution against secret societies. They had then concocted a plan to hinder discussion on the matter by putting the resolution upon the table without discussion. But as I saw then that it was yet too early, I did not offer anything, only a brother asked me whether I intended to offer such a resolution to the conference then, if I did that he would help me. I told him that my time for such an action had not yet arrived; that the matter must be brought up by petitioners from the membership in order to make these men gorge up the corrupt stuff which they had swallowed. I told him to wait awhile, as I saw plainly the time for action had not yet arrived. So the secret brotherhood were foiled in this their plan.

I now prayed for God to open the way for this his cause. In the summer of this year, the Masons held a moonlight picnic (for night serves their purpose best, in the vicinity of Pittsburgh, which was accompanied by a dance. A member of conference attended who was a Mason. Whether he took part in the play, or only looked on is not said; but what an influence his presence there had, we see by the following conversation between a Christian mother and her daughter:

"Child, where were you so late last night?" "I was at the Masonic picnic and we had a good time of it. They had quite a dance."

"Why, daughter, are you not ashamed to go to such a place?" "Why, mother, your preacher was there too, and took part in the pic-nic, and seemed very much pleased with it, and I don't think there is very much, or any wrong in it."

After this a brother asked me what was to be done; that the young members and people would be thoroughly corrupted by such examples. I said that the best thing the members could do was to circulate petitions against secret societies and ask for resolutions to be passed against such societies. He asked me whether I would write them and send them out. I told him that I would. Accordingly I wrote and sent out eleven, to as many different charges. This made a stir among the brotherhood of the conference. Letters were written, and soon some pieces appeared in the Evangelical Messenger, by Rev. Hollinger, of Pittsburgh, who was a Mason, headed, "The Dangers of the Church!" Among other things secret societies were named as dangerous, but opposition to such clans was, in his estimation, more dangerous than those societies.

The fact was this. This man was planned by them to be elected Presiding Elder in the place of an old veteran, and at conference did succeed by a majority of two, and the old veteran was to be sent on a poor appointment, where the year before a lodge brother had drawn that year an appropriation out of the missionary fund, which this year was discontinued and one appointment added to it, which had that year only made up $20 for its preacher. But the old veteran refused to be treated in that way and took a super-relation and went home.

Shortly before conference, a certain conference member came to another member, an Anti-mason who was stationed in Allegheny City, and said to him, "Now, here is my demit. I have left the lodge. Now if you report me a Mason after this, I will bring charges against you." The brother asked me afterward what relation a demitted Mason sustained to the lodge. I told him it acknowledged him a member of the craft until he denied or disclaimed all fellowship with them. It relieved them from all pecuniary contributions and pecuniary help, but not from their obligations. (See Mackey on Demit.) He is still in their clutches unless he divulges and declares himself a free man.

Conference met in High Street Church in Pittsburgh. Five of those petitions came to my hand and at the proper time I presented them to conference. The brotherhood tried to table them; but finally had a committee appointed to answer the petitions, but composed of men biased against them. The next day the committee brought in a verbal report against them, and charged me with being the cause of this disturbance. I got up and defended those petitions. Among other things I quoted the vow I had taken at my ordination, to drive away as far as in my power, strange and erroneous trine, "and this I am now doing by these petitions and by words and doc-doctrine; and now, brethren, have you not taken the same vow?" This was a poser and some were dumbfounded. After I was through, the bishop took the word and admonished them to keep out of these societies.

After he was through, Bro. W. W. Orwig, ex-bishop, spoke about as follows: "Forty years ago when I entered the ministry, no member of our church was allowed to belong to secret societies, much less a preacher. Though we as a church had, and have, now no standing rule against such combinations, yet the inherent principle of our church was, and is yet against them; and I admonish you, brethren, keep out of them for conscience' sake." After he had finished, some of the secretist brethren confessed to membership in these orders, and said for the good of the church they would leave them. One, who was a high Mason, said that he would refrain from any active and public participation with the craft. During the admonitions and confessions and repentance (!) an ex-editor of the Evangelical Messenger said to me, "It will be hard for them to kick against the pricks." This man had formerly belonged to a secret clan, and was visited by a committeee of General Conference, to see whether, if elected to the editorship of the Messenger, he would leave the secret society. Upon which then he was elected to the editorship. Undoubtedly his conscience was then at work, as he was then sweating profusely. Another one said then and there that the murder of Morgan was never proven. When I saw what a deceptive principle was now manifesting itself in some of those men, my dream came freshly to my mind and I had to weep and tremble for the future of the church, and I prayed the Master to foil all their machinations. This has already been in part answered.

I was now a marked man. A spirit of Cain took hold of some of those men against me. One told me afterwards that some outsiders had threatened to mob me in the streets of Pittsburgh. How it was I do not know; on my part I heard and felt no evil, though in the midst of enemies, for I felt and knew that God was with me. After this one could plainly see from their movements and looks, which spoke plainer than words, "We will make you feel it!" I prepared accordingly; and indeed I heard one actually utter those words; now what can mere admonition effect with such men? are they not past feeling, and do their hearts not hanker after those Dagon assemblies and principles? For such men there is no hope, but by deep and true repentance (Rev. ii. 14–16). During this conference year the foreman on the afore-mentioned committee, who was then editor of the Evangelical Messenger, was deposed from office for attacking one of the doctrines of the church, and his ministerial license withheld for immoral conduct, and at our next conference session which was on my charge at Erie, Pa., in March, 1871, this man's case came up in the form of an appeal; and such subterfuges as were tried by his friends to clear this man and bring him back to the editorial chair were astounding to my mind, the leaders being secret society men. But they failed, though on confession of his wrong his license was again voted him. I was then appointed to a charge in Summit county, near Akron, Ohio, with a colleague. I was sent there to counteract the machinations of the friends of the said deposed editor, and was successful. In my next I shall show the workings of the craft against me throughout that year.

"The Morality of Prohibitory Liquor Laws."

There has never been a license law yet framed which was not sure to be broken by every man who should sell liquor under it within a month from the day on which he obtained his license. And, on the other hand, in every such law yet there have been ten thousand loopholes, which made conviction for any violation of it simply impossible. More than this, the whole system of license is an utter abomination. It makes a monopoly in this traffic. The clear and manifest truth is, that if anybody has a right to sell liquor, everybody has.

The great question then is, "Has anybody a right to sell intoxicating liquors?" And to this question we temperance people reply with a thunderous "No! It is a traffic which thrives only on the poverty and degradation and misery of men and women and little children. Against it we charge (1) that it causes nine out of every ten of all our crimes; (2) that while it may pay fifty millions of dollars into our national treasury in the way of license fees, it draws six hundred millions of dollars out in the way of expenses for the prosecution of crimes committed by drunken men; (3) that it causes two-thirds of all our pauperism; (4) that it maintains a standing army of six hundred thousand common drunkards in our land; (5) that it transforms, annually, seventy thousand sober, useful citizens into mere burdens and curses to society; and (6) that it sends, annually, seventy thousand men down into drunkard's graves." And we say that a traffic which is instrumental in in causing such immense loss of life and money to our nation, and which is so awfully destructive to happiness in our homes and to the souls of men, ought to be crushed out with a more fiery indignation and with a more resolute purpose than we cherished when we trampled out the rebellion. As patriots, as men, and as Christians, we say that this infernal traffic has no right to exist, and can present not one righteous claim to our toleration. The abolition of the liquor traffic is the result which we temperance people are striving to obtain by legislation. We would not have the State say to any man, "You shall not drink;" but we would have it say to every man, "You shall not sell."

I take it that no one will question the power. or the right, of the State to legislate in regard to this traffic. It is not a question of morals, but of State economies. Whatever may be said about the rights of individuals, society has an undisputed right, and is under an undeniable obligation to protect itself and its members. We recognize this right and obligation partially, and in certain directions. We levy duties upon goods imported to protect our home industries from harm; and we establish quarantines to guard against the incoming of Eastern and Southern pestilences. But does it make any difference from what quarter the danger comes, or in what shape? We temperance people say that it does not make any difference, and that the State is under an equal obligation to protect one portion of its people from harm, which is not merely threatened, but actually inflicted, by another portion, as it is to guard our industries, or our health from harm that may come over the ocean. Now, here is a traffic, engaged in by comparatively a few, which has made its curse felt in every family among our forty millions of people; which, confessedly, adds not one cent to the real wealth of the country; and which, scattering fire-brands, arrows and death, ministers only harm in every direction; and we temperance people say in regard to this traffic that the State is under a solemn obligation to put its strong hand of repression upon it.

At the same time, we acknowledge that the legislation we have thus far secured is only tentative. We are trying after better things; and we do not intend to stop till we get them. If our legislators will give us nothing better than a license law, we will take that, although we are as far as possible from being satisfied with it. Even a license law, however, is enough to put the infernal traffic under a ban, as being the only business a man can engage in which needs legislative enactment to make it lawful.

If our law-makers give us Local Option, we accept that as a step in the right direction,—as better than license, though still very far from what we want. When they give us the Adair law, or similar enactments, we are still better satisfied; but only satisfied with them as being still nearer approaches to the goal we are striving to reach, and which we shall reach, when, at last, the conscience of this American people is educated up to the right point. —S. G. Hopkins in Chris. Union.

My Opinion.

It will be my design in this article to show that the United Presbyterian church, while faithful in maintaining all her distinctive principles, should give special prominence, at this time, to her opposition to secret societies,—should exclude her members from her communion, as a last resort, and should, in every proper way, exhibit a faithful teatimony against them,

I do not mean that we should abandon our position in regard to other principles, but that is quite enough for us now, "having done all" that we have done in the past, in the way of defending them "to stand." Or to put it in military phrase, not to assume the aggressive on the part of our line where the advocates of an uninspired psalmody meet us; not to advance our lines where the advocates of unrestricted communion have massed their forces; but while holding and strengthening our positions on these parts of our line, to concentrate and assault in solid column the force of secretism.

Now for the reasons:—

1. This is the weakest part of the enemies' lines; here we can make a breach easier than at any other point. No evangelical church with a learned and godly ministry, and a numerous, intelligent membership confronts us as on some other parts of the line. No evangelical church is willing to set forth as the champion of secret societies. We are not assaulting any cherished principle or practice of any Christian church. We attack an order or orders, which are really inimical to the whole church of Christ, whose spirit and principles are subversive of Christianity, whose Gospel is "another Gospel," and whose Saviour is not the Lord Jesus Christ. Masonic manuals and text-books contain abundant proofs that the religion of the order is Christless. The extracts from the address of Rev. Alexander Fullerton, published in the March No. of the Repository show the same thing. Let us look at one or two sentences of that address. On page 453 of the Repository, we have these words:—

"It, (Masonry,) simply says that to the purposes of this union, and the necessities of its work, these things" (the doctrines peculiar to Christianity") "are foreign." On page 454 we read; "From its hymns, its prayers, its lectures, it eliminates every element of difference or alienation" between "our noble brotherhood,"—a brotherhood composed of Christians, Jews, Mohammedans, Infidels, etc., all "the peculiar doctrines of Christianity," are eliminated" from the prayers and hymns of this noble brotherhood! Let one insert in this connection one or two passages of Scripture:—"Jesus saith unto him, I am the way, the truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the Father, but by me," John xiv. 6. "Whatsoever ye shall ask in my name, that will I do, that the Father may be glorified in the Son." "If ye shall ask anything in my name, I will do it." John xiv. 13, 14.

"That all men should honor the Son even as they honor the Father. 'He that honoreth not the Son, honoreth not the Father which hath sent him." John v. 23. Will any intelligent Christian man who knows what he is asserting, maintain that the prayers from which Christ and all "the doctrines peculiar to Christianity" are knowingly and intentionally excluded will be acceptable to God? And yet these are the prayers which the Masonic brotherhood offer to God! "In the simple fervor of our mutual faith," says Fullerton, "our noble brotherhood lays its aspirations before the throne." Surely the eyes of Christian men cannot be closed much longer to the true character of this order,

The order of Odd-fellows is equally objectionable in this respect. Here is an extract from a "Lecture on Odd-fellowship:"—"Its principles stated and defended by Rev. J. Dillon—Vancefort 1874." "The order is founded on a triad of principles,—Friendship, Love, and Truth,—and not, as before stated, on agreement in religious doctrines, On this broad platform men of the most opposite belief can meet with, and fellowship each other; whereas, if unity of faith were required as the condition, union would be impossible, for one would have as much right as another to make his views the standard religious basis of the association. To effect such a union, therefore, the order found it necessary to exclude all points of faith and doctrine on which men honestly differ. The orthodox view of the person and work of Christ, it is a well known fact, is not now and never has been received by all professing Christians. . . . And still there are those who, no doubt honestly reject the orthodox faith. Many of these belong to the order, and in deference to their faith, it was deemed expedient to leave the name of Christ out of its prayers."

Many who are sincerely and intelligently attached to our principles on psalmody do not feel that there is the same necessity at the present time for giving a special prominence to our testimony on this subject, as on the subject of secret orders. Can we not all more heartily oppose orders which "eliminate" Christ and his mediation from their prayers and praises, who "deem it expedient to leave the name of Christ out of their prayers," that even seem to oppose good men who differ with us on the matter of praise?

2. We can muster a stronger force to unite in the assault at this point There are thousands in other churches who are ready to join us just as soon as we begin battle in good earnest. They see and admit the evil, and if we can make the fight so earnest, that sides must be chosen, they will stand with us. We would lose a few members from some of our churches by rigidly enforcing the articles of our Testimony on this subject; but there would be gains, which would far more than compensate for the loss. If we do not now carry into practice our principle on this subject, we will find it still more difficult to do so a few years hence, unless something shall occur to awaken the public conscience on this subject.

I am disposed to think that a large proportion of the ministry of the United Presbyterian church is opposed to these organizations; they see and deplore the evils, just as they did the sin of slavery a few years ago, but their hands are tied, and but few of them will dare to lift a finger in opposition to them. But there is, I think, a crisis not so very far in the future which will compel many of those who are now silent to stand and act with us.

3. This is an auspicious time to advance boldly and determinedly against secret societies.

The Ku-Klux Klan and the White League by their wicked doings have made the danger of such societies apparent. All patriots, as well as all Christians, should be willing to join in an earnest effort to banish all secret oath-bound societies from the country. There, perhaps never was a time since the excitement aroused by the murder of Morgan subsided, that the minds of so many of our people were alive to the dangerous powers which these orders exercise. People are beginning to see that the political corruption of the country is in no small measure due to these orders. Non-principled men are put into office, who would not get in, if they were not so effectually helped by their brethren of the "mystic tie.' Unscrupulous demagogues know this, and connect themselves with them to gain their selfish ends.

If the United Presbyterian church shall succeed, with the divine blessing, in bringing the Christian people of our country to see these secret orders in their true character; if she can tear the padlock from the lips of many good men who are now silent, and get the powerful influence of all evangelical Christians turned against them, she will have accomplished a work worthy of her past history, and worthy of her honored name. Let no one say this is a hopeless undertaking; her prospect for succeeding is better than it was a few years ago when she led the van against the slave power.

The people and churches of our country, and the members of these orders themselves, are greatly in need of light on this subject. There are many professing Christians in these orders who have never seriously considered their anti-Christian character, they have not noticed the entire exclusion of Christ's mediation from their rituai, they have never thought that the whole genius of these orders necessarily demands a Christless ritual, they have never thought that they are giving their countenance and support to orders which in their religious fertures are more anti Christian than even Judaism itself. Judaism approaches the Father through a promised Messiah. Sociniarism through a created Saviour, but these brotherhoods wholly rejecting Christ, the only Way, "lay their aspirations before the throne in the simple fervor of natural faith," as Fullerton expresses it, which is simply the faith of the untutored savage, or the blinded pagan who has never heard the name of Jesus.

The United Presbyterian church may fail in her duty in reference to these societies,—we trust she will not,—her ministers may be slow to agitate this subject as it should be agitated; her sessions may hesitate to grapple with the evil as they should. but God reigns, Christ is king, and the time will come when "all men shall honor the Son even as they honor the Father." "The Lord will hasten it in his time."

—The General Agent after having attended to important business here, has gone to Iowa for a series of lectures and to get further aid for the Publishing House Fund. He everywhere has favorable responses to appeals for aid in raising this fund.

—The Corresponding Secretary is yet in Southern Illinois. After speaking at Mound City, he went toward St. Louis among the earnest friends of Washington and Randolph counties.

—Elder Barlow expects to turn homeward this week, stopping for a a few days in Michigan to lecture and visit friends. His brief work at Wheaton is likely to have a good and abiding effect. Friends will address him again at Syracuse.

—The Illinois Agent is slowly recovering and hopes to be at work again soon. The Treasurer of the State Association reports few responses yet from those who made pledges last fall for Bro. Hinman's support. Friends must not forget this duty. Address funds to H. L. Kellogg, at this office.

—The Wisconsin agent is at home at Wheaton, for a short time.

—The Secretary of the Iowa State Association reports that Bro. Hankins does not accept the State agency on account of too much local work calling for his labors.

From the General Agent.

BRAMBLE HOUSE, LAFAYETTE, Ind., Aug. 20th, 1875.

I came here from Cincinnati, via Indianapolis, hoping to find friends to our cause, and if practicable, arrange for something to be done in this stronghold of secrecy, but upon this as upon former visits, I seem to be a little unfortunate or untimely. Rev. D. G. Bradford, pastor 1st Presbyterian Church, is in Illinois; Rev. W. C. Dickinson, pastor 2d Presbyterian Church is in Denver, and Rev. F. Fisher of the United Brethren church is absent. Our venerable friend, Robert Stockwell, Esq., is very feeble in health, but his attendants think he may be able to see me to-morrow, A. M. I find but few friends here as yet and those timid. If Freemasonry is so beneficent in its character and influence, it seems a little incongruous that there should be so many saloons and so much intemperance where it occupies the field without opposition. One hearing the boasts of the order would expect to find a state of society bordering on the millenium, where its authority was paramount, but the appearance to a sojourner indicates anything but a "perfect state of society" under its regimen in Lafayette. I called on our indefatigable co-worker, A. Robinson, in Indianapolis, and found him the same determined, earnest, skillful opponent to the "unfruitful works of darkness." He has greatly promoted our work in that city by his untiring efforts and it is with no small degree of satisfaction that one meets such a prudent, fearless defender of the Christian faith and American principles despite the frowns, proscriptions and proffered aid of a vigilant, almost omnipresent and powerful order.

A few hours in Cincinnati afforded me an opportunity to call at the book room of the Western Tract and Book Society, where I found Rev. A. Richey hard at work on financial problems, which in these hard times, he assures me, need special attention in his department of work. In this, however, Bro. R. is not singular, but has many co-workers in reforms who can appreciate his journey through the financial wilderness, by faith, and who can fully sympathize with him in his trials. Rev. Dr. French of the U. P. church, gave me a most cordial welcome and we were soon discussing ways and means of introducing our reform in the city or rather of advancing the work already begun by the N. C. A. and other agencies. Haste compelled me to decline his very kind invitation to dine with him and also to occupy his pulpit on the Sabbath. With a hearty handshake I bade him farewell and left with his blessing on our cause. I trust the time is not distant when a series of lectures can be given in this city, which shall greatly strengthen the cause throughout the State.

The Mercer Convention.—Western Pennsylvania Organized.

In response to a call issued some weeks ago by a committee appointed by the National Anti-secret Association, a respectable number of persons from different parts of Western Pennsylvania, opposed to secret orders, met in convention in the Court House of Mercer on the 11th inst., at 2 o'clock, P. M. The meeting having been called to order. Rev. J. A. Clark was appointed Chairman, and Rev. Samuel Kerr, Secretary pro tem. The convention was opened with prayer by the chairman.

The object of the convention, as stated, was to organize an association auxiliary to the National and State Anti secret Associations, embracing within its territorial limits the whole of Western Pennsylvania.

The following committees were appointed: On Enrollment—Revs. Robt. McWatty, and L. J. Crawford. On Finance—Messrs. Orson Burwell, James Spear and Rev. C. F. Hawley. On Resolutions—Rev. D. W. Collins, D D., Rev. A. Y. Houston and A. Floyd, Esq. On Constitution and By-laws—Revs. C. F. Hawley and L. I. Crawford. On Permanent Organization—Revs. J. D. Glenn, E. Small and Mr. Ligo.

No business being now before the convention, the President asked for brief and pointed remarks on the general subject of secret societies. In response Professor Mahard made a telling speech, in which he assigned the reasons why he could not have connection with the Masonic or any other secret order. Forcible remarks were also made by Prof. Blanchard, Revs. Hawley, Crawford and others. The convention then adjourned to meet at 7½ o'clock in the evening. Closing with prayer by Rev. J. D. Glenn.

EVENING SESSION.

The convention reassembled at half-past seven o'clock, and was called to order by the President pro. tem.

The session was opened with prayer by Rev. J. C. McElree. Prof. C. A. Blanchard was then introduced and delivered a very able and eloquent address in opposition to Freemasonry. After some announcements had been made the convention adjourned until eight o'clock the next morning, the benediction being pronounced by the President pro. tem.

SECOND DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

The convention met at eight o'clock, A. M., Rev. J. A. Clark presiding. The first hour was spent in prayer and conference. A telegram conveying the greetings of the Ohio Anti-secret Association, which had just closed its session in Xenia, Ohio, to this Association, was received, and the Secretary was directed to reciprocate these friendly greetings through the Cynosure.

The Committee on the Constitution and By-laws reported, the report was accepted, considered and adopted, and the Secretary was ordered to append to the constitution the names of all who express their willingness to become members of the association.

The Committee on Permanent Organization submitted the following report, which was adopted:

President—Rev. A. M. Milligan, D. D., Pittsburgh, Pa.

Vice Presidents—Rev. C. F. Hawley, Millbrook, Mercer Co.; Rev, H. H. Hervey, Hartstown, Crawford Co.; Rev. J. D. Carrel, Erie Co.; Rev. D. Dodds, Baldwin, Butler Co.; Rev. E. T. Jeffers, D. D., New Wilmington, Lawrence Co.; Rev. Wm. Stanfield, Venango Co.; Rev. J. R. Baird, Armstrong Co.; Rev.——Mateer, Cuylerville, Clarion Co.; Rev. G. C. Vincent, D. D., Brookville, Jefferson Co.; Rev. Thos. Stevens, Indiana Co.; Rev. T. D. Sproull, Westmoreland Co.; Rev. H. G. March, Warren Co.; Rev. T. P. Patterson, Uniontown, Fayette Co.; S. G. Caughey, Esq., Beaver Co.; A. Floyd, Esq., Allegheny Co.; W. A. McNary, Esq., Canonsburgh, Washington Co.

Recording Secretary—Rev. Samuel Kerr, Harrisville, Butler Co.

Corresponding Secretary—Rev. C. F. Hawley, Millbrook, Mercer Co.

Treasurer—A. Floyd, Esq., Pittsburgh, Pa.

The President and Corresponding Secretary were directed to appoint Vice-presidents in the counties not represented. The convention adjourned until 2 o'clock P. M., the benediction having been pronounced by the President.

The convention met at two o'clock, and was opened with prayer by Rev. Josiah Alexander. The Committee on Resolutions reported. The report was accepted and adopted. Pending its adoption, the matters to which it referred gave rise to a spirited and interesting discussion, in which Dr. Collins, Prof. Blanchard, Revs. S. C. Reid, C. C. Cummins, S. Alexander, C. F. Hawley, E. Small and others participated. The following is the report as adopted:

WHEREAS, Secret societies of whatever name or grade, requiring of their members an oath of secrecy and obedience in respect to matters which are unknown to those upon whom such obligations are imposed, are in conflict with the spirit of the Gospel, good government and our true manhood; and whereas, Freemasonry, in our opinion, is the chief of the orders of secrecy in this country, claiming to make man religious while it ignores the Christian religion, claiming to be charitable whilst its pretended benefices are selfish and to favor its own order, professing temporal advantage to its members, while it deludes and deceives the mass of them, and believing that to this order all secret orders are auxiliary and tributary; therefore,

Resolved, 1. That we enter our solemn protest against Masonry and all other secret societies as exerting a baneful influence upon the church of God, the religion of Christ, and all the true interests of society.

2. That it becomes every lover of the sacred interests of this country to assist in bringing to light the hidden things of these secret orders and in making manifest their true character, that they may be judged by the Christian conscience of the whole people.

3. That we will not support by our influence or our votes for places of civil or ecclesiastical office, honor or trust those who are identified with secret orders, knowing them to be members of such orders.

On motion the convention adjourned until 7½ o'clock, P. M. Closed with prayer by Rev. Crow.

The convention reassembled at 7½ o'clock in the evening, and was opened with prayer by the President. A vote of thanks to the citizens of Mercer, for their generous hospitality was moved and carried unanimously.

The following paper was submitted and adopted:

WHEREAS, Philo Carpenter, Esq., of Chicago, Illinois, has offered to give to the National Christian Association a building and lot in Chicago to be used as a tract and publishing house in this reform against the lodge, whenever the sum of thirty thousand dollars is contributed to carry on the publishing work; therefore,

Resolved, That in our opinion the great cause in which we labor imperatively needs such a publishing center, that the condition is a reasonable one, and that we will assist according to our power and opportunity in raising the sum required.

Rev. A. M. Milligan, D. D., delivered to an overcrowded house a very forcible and eloquent address on the oaths and obligations peculiar to the Masonic order. Prof. Blanchard, in responce to frequent calls from the audience made some happy and well-timed remarks. The convention then adjourned, the President pronouncing the benediction.

Veterans in the good cause, such as Prof. Blanchard and Drs. Milligan and Collins, pronounced the convention a grand success. The discussion was largely participated in by the members, and was interesting and animated throughout, and always conducted in the best of feeling. Prof. Blanchard lectured on the night preceding the convention and on the first night of it to large and appreciative audiences. Here, as well as elsewhere, he has won golden opinions by his manly, able and eloquent utterances in opposition to the unfruitful works of darkness. Foes as well as friends turned out in large numbers to the night meetings.

It is due to the Masonic brethren to say that they deported themselves with becoming decorum throughout the entire occasion. It is to be hoped some of them "were pricked to the heart" as they listened to the words of truth and soberness addressed to them by the persons referred to. One of them, at least, on the second day of the convention, expressed himself as being "in a great strait," and apparently was almost ready to exclaim with the apostle on a certain occasion, "O, wretched man that I am, who shall deliver me from this body of sin and death." Much good, we feel confident, has been accomplished by this convention. For the good done let us thank God and take courage, and let us labor and pray for still grander results in the future.

Iowa and the Reform—An Opportunity for Editors and Preachers.

MASION CITY, Iowa, Aug. 21, 1875.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

Permit me to give a few jottings from the field. The field is ripe for the harvest, I am called for in every direction, and yet the friends of our reform are slow to see the financial need of the cause. I opened fire at Hampton on the night of the 18th; had a very large audience, a goodly number of the craft among them, and notwithstanding many threats had been made so that the women did not come (except two or three and they did not stay,) yet we had an enthusiastic time and the way is now open for an organization to be attended to in a few days.

The Master of the lodge put on a bold front and proposed to pay all expenses in the way of hall rent and hotel bills, for as many lectures as we are disposed to give. So that opens the way for Bro. Ronayne when he comes. He thought that these exposures would add to their number of such men as they wanted. I suggested that there were a great many reckless men who wanted protection in crime, and such doubtless see in these oaths protection, right or wrong, murder and treason not accepted.

AUG. 25. Just returned from Wesley and Plymouth; had a very good time at Wesley, but at Plymouth could not get a place to hold meetings at all without paying $6 in advance for the Court House; but the very fact of opposition, will, and has already done us good, and the people are asking, Have we an institution in our midst that cannot bear investigation? if so it is high time we know it. I am glad Mr. Ronayne is about to make us a visit, the country is all on tiptoe in consequence of this announcement. He will be at Clear Lake at the time of the State Editorial Convention, and also the State Camp-Meeting of the M. E. church, and both of these gatherings are largely of the craft, and we expect a good time. J. HANKINS.

Bro. Kiggins at Pittsburgh, Ind.

PITTSBURGH, Ind., Aug. '75.

Editors Christian Cynosure:

The people of Pittsburgh and vicinity have just been favored with hearing Mr. Kiggins, who lectured on the evenings of the 9th and 10th inst., on some phases of the subject of secretism. A respectable audience was out each evening notwithstanding the pressing labor of the farmers, and unfavorableness of the weather,

The Odd-fellows were well represented, behaved themselves very gentlemanly, and paid close attention, even while the initiatory ceremonies of the first degree of their order ware briefly made to appear most ridiculous and ludicrous. Some of them the next morning were commiserating Mr. Kiggins because he seemed to be so honest and sincere in telling downright falsehoods. This is the first time the subject has been openly discussed here by one actively engaged in the great reform movement. The inception of that agitation and spirit of investigation so much needed, we hope has begun, and will result in good, leading men who are blinded and fettered by the lodge, to the light and truth and to a proper relation of the obligations they are under to renounce "the hidden things of darkness," and to have no fellowship with the unfruitful works. Let open, free, and earnest discussion go on. Let us, as friends of God, as followers of Christ, as lovers of our fellow-citizens, rally and come to the front equipped and ready for action. The enemy is strong, but we are assured of victory through Christ, who, without all contradiction is on our side.

Mr. Kiggins is one eminently qualified for the position he occupies owing to his affable and gentlemanly manner, and his presenting the truth in such mildness and candor cannot but gain the respect of even those whom he opposes. A friend of the cause.

S. B. HOUSTON.

Prof. C. A. Blanchard in Mercer County, Penn'a.

Prof. Blanchard spent two weeks and two days with us in Mercer county. He preached three sermons, lectured three times in the interest of temperance, and delivered ten Anti-masonic lectures. So far as I can learn there was scarcely a man, woman, or child of us who listened to him at Millbrook, who were not converted to the National Christian Association movement.

From Millbrook he went to Sandy Lake. This town swarms with Masons, Odd-fellows, United Workmen, and grangers. His first effort was to lecture on temperance at the regular monthly meeting of Sandy Lake Temperance society. Mr. Blanchard as a temperance lecturer will not soon be forgotten there. He was advertised for a course of five lectures on Masonry at Sandy Lake. The audience and the interest increased until the fourth lecture of the series, when the country around seemed moved. The crowd, which had been greater than could be seated before, now became a perfect jam. The sittings and the "standings" of the audience room were all taken, the vestibule was crowded with those who were glad to find room to stand; while many others who could not crowd within the walls of the house, gathered around and listened to catch the words of the young man eloquent,

The men of the lodge being given an opportunity to reply to any of the arguments submitted in foregoing lectures, though they had respectfully declined other evenings, now stood forth in the person of the Master of the Masonic lodge, and others, and occupied an hour in discoursing upon a conversation had upon the streets and an article published by Mr. Blanchard in the village paper, which discourse was spiced with noisy demonstrations from the crowd of lodge men present. Mr. Blanchard then obtained the floor and delivered the lecture of the evening with telling effect. On Sabbath night he preached to a crowded audience contrasting the true gospel of Jesus Christ with the false gospel of Masonry.

Mr. Blanchard then took leave of the thriving town of Sandy Lake, not however before the Master of the Masonic lodge had announced that he would lecture on Monday evening in reply. The Master's lecture was given while Mr. Blanchard was at Mercer. A person was engaged to report the lecture, and at its close one of the resident pastors arose and announced that Prof. B. would return to Sandy Lake and reply to the Master on the next Friday evening. The crowd who were in attendance to hear Mr. Blanchard's reply was greater than at any previous time.

Mr. B. began by reading the written report of the Master's speech and calling upon his friends to contradict any statement in the report which they deemed incorrect. One replied that the Master was present and would speak for himself. After so much of the report had been erased as the Master took exceptions to, Mr. Blanchard began his reply to the defense of Masonry, the Master being allowed to stand on the defensive and maintain his position as best he could, as Mr. B. reviewed his acknowledged utterances. If I should say that in this tilt of lances the Master was horsed and rolled in the dust, a vanquished foe, I should simply give utterance to the sentiment of a large part of the audience. What the lodge men think of the matter I am unable to say; as they have, I am informed, been very reticent ever since.

The next evening Mr. B. lectured at Zion church, five miles from Sandy Lake, to a quiet, attentive audience; and the following Sabbath evening he preached to a large and deeply interested audience at Millbrook, and on the morrow took his departure from us.

On the following Tuesday evening, the friends of the reform met in the Wesleyan Methodist church in Sandy Lake and organized the Sandy Lake Christian Association with a constitution and preamble pledging us in all lawful and consistent ways to oppose the progress of secret societies.

I have purposely omitted giving an account of the Western Penn'a Convention held at Mercer until the Secretary shall have reported that matter.

Yours for the things that are true and lovely, C. L. Hawley.

Correspondence.

What I have Seen and Know of Speculative Freemasonry.

It was in the year 1817–18 that the first Masonic lodge was organized in the (then) small town of Wooster, O. I shall speak of Masonry as the only secret oath-bound organization, except the gangs of counterfeiters and horse-thieves spread over the western country at that day, which were in every sense secret combinations, each having a special object in view, and bound by oaths, by their grips, signs and passwords, they knew each other, to protect, defend, aid and abet, and when apprehended and brought up for trial, were often rescued or sworn innocent by unknown parties of the clan. So justice was averted and the criminal escaped the penalties of the law. Notwithstanding their distinct operations, they could occasionally "mix up." A member of either could, very plausibly, take a hand in either, or all of these secret brotherhoods.

In speaking thus, there were honorable exceptions on the Masonic side. There were young aspiring men of respectability then as well as now, who were induced to believe there was something exalting and useful in that pretended "ancient brotherhood," and after taking a few degrees learned the character, the doings and workings of the inside lodge, but who appreciated time as a talent, ceased to meet with them, as did Washington and thousands of others, to go in and out, and walked no more with them. Judge Whitney's description of the composition of lodges in general, held good in those days as well as now. In process of time those other clans were put down by the strong arm of the law, and had the older brotherhood shared the same fate, a million of souls would have been saved from the works of darkness. No marvel that Morgan exposed the silly thing; but who ever thought he would suffer martyrdom for exposing the audacious fraud.

In 1826 when the news arrived of the abduction and murder of Captain Morgan, the brotherhood were taken by surprise, and kept mum until a circular was mailed to all the lodges West, by the Grand Lodge of New York, one of which found its way to "Ebenezer Lodge, No. 27, Wooster, O," directed to Benj. Church, Sec. This, the said letter, I handed to said secretary, who immediately obeyed the mandate and hastily called a special meeting of said lodge. The next day they were jubilant; the knot was untied; they knew how to resort to the present subterfuge; to deny and laugh off, misrepresent and place Morgan anywhere but in the Niagara.

From that time until the present, I have stood opposed to all secret combination, political or religious, and I glory in the present great move by the best men of our nation. May God speed the day, when all secret organizations that conflict with religion, reason, and the great principles of our compact as a nation, when all men shall be free to do right without molestation, and when it will be unpopular for a man to make a fool of himself by going through the degrading ordeal of lodge initiation.

The present orders have nearly ruined our religious meetings by their conformity to the world being yoked together with unbelievers; and those who administer to us in spiritual things suffer want to the great deterrment of the church, quite too often for the cause and prosperity of the work of God. "Clouds they are without water, carried about of winds; trees whose fruit withereth, without fruit, twice dead, plucked up by the roots." Who are those arrayed in all the gew-gaws and regalias, that a Hottentot ought to be ashamed of? Ministers, elders, deacons, class-leaders, stewards, etc., have a heavy load to carry to the gates of the New Jerusalem; but it's popular and pays to carry the burden. Will popularity atone for the abuse of Scripture, garbled, perverted and mystified as it is, in these unsanctified lodges? Will it pay to try to serve God and Mammon, and practice to the unfruitful works of darkness? Nay, verily.

It is now nearly sixty years since I became acquainted with the members of Ebenezer lodge. I have been in various parts of the United States, in almost all communities and society. I have found "Masonry" what it purports to be, the same, unchangeable in spirit and letter, a one-sided selfish scheme of favoritism, a machine that is always working for the benefit of the craft, "right or wrong." Here is a mystery I leave for its advocates to solve. Professing to be governed by the fundamental principles of the Bible, making large extracts for lodge purposes, holding it up in their public processions, saying to the spectators, "Behold the man of our counsel;" yet, notwithstanding this show for the sanctity of the Word, I have to know the first one made better by the lodge teachings, or his former reputation outside the lodge improved. I have known, on the contrary many, yea, very many, who have lost their former standing, reputation, and all that constituted the man for time and eternity. Surely there must be wrong somewhere; for "by their fruits ye shall know them."

Through a long, practical life of industry, observation and reflection, I conclude: first, that "speculative Freemasonry," inside and out, in theory, practice and craftiness, to be a genuine fraud, and the wildest humbug ever practised upon the credulity of mankind; and second, that it emanated from the Fall, for which we have abundant circumstantial evidence, but shall not stop to prove. Suffice it to say that its history can be traced through various countries, both ancient and modern, assumed different shapes and forms at different periods of the world, until it cropped out in 1717, with the first apron we read of; not, however, in its original simplicity, but much improved, all covered with "hyeroglyphics bright." Shall we say it represents purity, or rather shame and confusion? It is claimed to be the "handmaid" of religion. Well, what next? "Ye shall not surely die." And as to its boasted benevolent proclivities, it is the greatest and the latest hoax out. F. Leyde.

Letter from Bro. Hart.

Woodstock, Ill., Aug. 16, 1875.

Dear Bro. K.:—Mr. Callender's article in the last number, has the merit of a very original and novel idea. It is one that will bear to be repeated and kept before the people, that to depend upon the greatness and goodness of its members to vindicate an institution, is tacitly to confess its want of intrinsic merit. The Anti-masons in this county are moving for a political convention to nominate candidates for county officers, who will not be biased or swayed from an open course of equal and exact justice towards all citizens by secret obligations of partiality towards the members of any clique, clan, ring, or caste. A hopeful and a happy day will it be for our nation when the people shall be so utterly disgusted with the abominable favoritism of the lodges and the corruption it diffuses through every department of government, that they will not only demand such nominations, but sustain them by triumphant majorities. As yet, while a few here are fearless and sanguine of speedy political success, the greater number of Anti-masons with whom I have become acquainted are in complete bondage through fear. Some of my old friends in the sincerity of good-will whisper to me, "You are right in your opposition to Masonry, but you'd better not say much here. The lodge is a very powerful body here;" i. e., they can do you great harm, better be still. It reminds me of a refractory but rich member of a church at the East, who had exposed himself to church discipline. When process was about to commence against him he said meaningly to the pastor, "Recollect, I can do you and your church great harm."

"Yes," said the pastor, "you can, and so can the devil; but we don't expect a Christian brother to have the disposition which the devil has to make such a use of his power."

An institution or an individual from which men expect harm for speaking the truth and following that which is good, is certainly of the devil. Men are not afraid to speak what they think of the church of Christ, or of those who manifestly have the spirit of Christ, because they know that the Gospel forbids Christians to avenge themselves, and that true benevolence worketh no ill to friend or foe. But everywhere men are seen trembling and silent through fear of Masonic vengeance. Needs there further proof that Masonry is of the devil? Let them eggue; fire our dwellings; draw the dagger; by these things shall all men know whose children they are.

Yours, fraternally,

I. A. Hart.

Self-Betrayed.

LAKE CITY, Minn., July 26, 1875.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

It is sometimes difficult to meet the impudent denials of Freemasons, who tell us that their secrets have never been revealed. It is gratifying, however, to be able to reflect, that, owing to the thoughtlessness of some of them, these same secrets do become known. As I was traveling on board the steamboat Potomac, between Portsmouth and Cincinnati, on the 29th of last April, I held a consultation with one who wore the compass and square on his coat. Upon inquiring whether they used Mackey in their lodge-room, he said they had laid it aside.

"Do you use Sickels?"

"No."

"How about Webb?" at the same time showing a copy of Webb's Monitor.

He glanced at this and replied: "We don't use this edition, but an abbreviated one"

Said I, I suppose "I have seen it." In traveling I met with a small book in which "f. c. rfts" stood for fellow-crafts, and "G. M. H. A." for Grand Master Hiram Abiff.

"Yes," said he, "of course you could read it;" evidently taking me for one of the order. He then told me of a man on board the boat who was selling a book which revealed Masonry.

"Indeed," said I, "who is the author?"

"I don't remember the name. The man asked me if it was true? Of course I denied it; but such things will get out somehow or other."

"Perhaps," said I, "it was only the open work of Masonry that he was publishing."

"No, sir, he was telling things he had no business to tell."

"Can't you think of the author's name yet?" "Was it Morgan?"

"Yes, that was the name," said he. I inwardly thanked him for the disclosure which he thus unwittingly made, adding to the many other corroborations which I had received from others.

While on the cars between Cedar Rapids and Cedar Falls, I conversed with two men who were evidently members of the order of Freemasons. As I presented some testimony showing that Freemasonry had been revealed, one of them freely admitted that in the days of Morgan the whole thing had been pretty effectually exposed; but claimed that the system is very different now. Here was another admission, and strong testimony, too; for leading Masonic works tell us that Masonry cannot change. I then spoke of the anti-Christian character of Freemasonry, and said that every prayer in Mackey's Manual of the Lodge kept out the name of Christ, and that this was necessary, because Jews, Mohammedans, infidels and Christians could all be members of the lodge. They denied that it was anti-Christian, and averred that Christ's name is used in their prayers. "The New Testament" said one of them, "is all of the Bible that is fit to be read."

"Yet many Jews are good Masons, and they reject the whole of it," said I. A fine specimen of Masonic Christianity, indeed, declaring that more than half of God's Word is not fit to be read!

About the same time a young Methodist brother about to take orders to preach, told me that it was almost impossible to get appointments of a favorable kind unless one were a Freemason; yet he intended to try. This agreed with the testimony of another whom I met in Ohio, and old man and a member of the M. E. church. "There is a time every year," said he, "when every itinerant preacher in the M. E. church is intirely dependent for a good place upon the bshops and presiding elders, and these are usually Freemasons; hence the inducement to join the society of Freemasons." There are many, very many agreements between the sly hints given in the Masonic works of Mackey, Sickels and Webb, and the plain revelations made by Morgan and Bernard There are pictures and figures in Mackey's Manual which were enigmas to me until I opened Morgan's illustrations. Then all became plain.

I am satisfied that some persons are disposed to doubt, as I once did, whether Freemasonry has ever been revealed. An examination of Masonic books themselves is well calculated to dispel such doubts. A. MAYNE.

Lesson for Sept. 12.—John x. 1-11.—The Good Shepherd.

1 Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that entereth not by the door into the sheep-fold, but climbeth up some other way, the same is a thief and a robber.

2 But he that entereth in by the door, is the shepherd of the sheep.

3 To him the porter openeth: and the sheep hear his voice: and he calleth his own sheep by name, and leadeth them out.

4 And when he putteth forth his own sheep, he goeth before them, and the sheep follow him: for they know his voice.

5 And a stranger will they not follow, but will flee from him: for they know not the voice of strangers.

6 This parable spake Jesus unto them: but they understood not what things they were which he spake unto them.

7 Then said Jesus unto them again, Verily, verily, I say unto you, I am the door of the sheep.

8 All that ever came before me are thieves and robbers: but the sheep did not hear them.

9 I am the door: by me, if any man enter in, he shall be saved, and shall go in and out, and find pasture.

10 The thief cometh not, but for to steal, and to kill, and to destroy: I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly.

11 I am the good shepherd: the good shepherd giveth his life for the sheep.

GOLDEN TEXT.—He shall feed his flock like a shepherd.—Isa. xl. 11.

TOPIC.—The Lord is our Shepherd.

OUTLINE—
I. The False Shepherd.
II. The True Shepherd.
III. The Good—the Chief Shepherd.

QUESTION HELPS.—What is the first point in outline? vs. 1, 8, 10. Is this the first time that we have this comparison? Can you name passages of the Old Testament in which it occurs? Ps. xxiii.; Isa. xl. 11; Ezek. xxxiv. 23. Why does Jesus begin with the words, Verily, verily? How were the sheep-folds constructed? You say there was but one door—why? What does the Saviour say of those coming in some other way? What is a thief? A robber? Who does he mean? (False shepherds.) Was he then speaking to them? Is there any but one way into Christ's fold? v. 7. Who is the door? Why is he so called? v. 8. Who does he mean by all that came before him? How were they thieves and robbers? What is said of the sheep? Meant by hearing them? v. 10. What does he say of the thief? How do false teachers resemble the thief? Acts xx. 29.

What is the second point in Outline? vs. 2-6. Who does Jesus say is a true shepherd? Why did you say Christ is the door? How does the true shepherd enter by him? What is the first motive with every true minister? John xxi. 16. v. 3. Who was the porter? Who in the parable probably intended? (A. The Holy Spirit.) Does he open the door for the true shepherds? Acts xiv. 27; 1 Cor. xvi. 9. Whose voice do the sheep hear? Meant by hearing his voice? What is it said a true shepherd does? "Leadeth them out" to what? What does the true pastor do? Jer. iii. 15. v. 4. Does the true shepherd lead or drive his flock? How is it with the true shepherd in God's field? 1 Tim. iv. 12. How do the sheep treat such a shepherd? What is the most effective teaching? (A. Godly example.) 1 Pet. ii. 12. v. 5. Who intended by the stranger? Why flee from him? Meant by not knowing his voice? 2 John x. 11; Rom. xvi. 17. v. 6. Did our Lord by the parable condemn the Jews? Why did they not understand him?

What is the third point? vs. 9-11. Who is the good shepherd? Is there any way into his fold but himself? John xvi. 6. How do we enter by him? Acts xvi. 31. What is said of those who enter in? Meant by this? See 23d Psalm. v. 10. What is the great purpose for which Christ came? Kind of life? How more abundantly? Phil. iv. 19; Rom. viii. 33. What has the good shepherd done to obtain this? v. 11. Is Christ now the good Shepherd? Does he ever welcome straying sinners into his fold? John vi. 37; 1 Pet. ii. 25. What have you learned from the study of this passage?—Evangelical Repository.

The importance of properly instructing younger scholars in the use of a reference Bible is often overlooked. A teacher in Utica, New York, states in a recent letter to us, that a young person who had been for six or seven years in the Sunday-school, and for the same period a member of the church, did not know how to use the marginal references in her Bible, and often wondered what they meant. This teacher very properly suggests, that Sunday-schoo classes composed of young persons, be carefully drilled into the correct and ready use of the references, so that they may avail themselves of this valuable, and we might say, indispensable-method of studying a Bible lesson.—S. S. World.

Make no Christian living your standard of what is right in faith and practice, however high his name, his rank or his learning. Let your creed be the Bible, and nothing but the Bible, and your example Christ, and nothing short of him.

Forty Years Ago.

Speech of Hon. Joel R. Poinsett of S. Carolina.

On being installed Deputy General Grand High Priest of the General Grand Chapter of the United States at Washington, 1830, Mr. Poinsett said:

"COMPANIONS AND BRETHREN: The honor conferred upon me on this occasion, by my companions, would at any time command my most grateful acknowledgments; but to have been chosen by them during my absence from the country, to fill this responsible office, at a period when our ancient and honorable institutions are so unjustly assailed, has awakened warmer and deeper feelings than I can find language to express.

I cannot but regard the clamors which have been raised against us from whatever cause they may originate, and the charity and noble principles of our order lead us to judge favorably of the motives of our adversaries, as a fortunate circumstance; for it will induce us to be more mindful than ever of our duties as Masons and to practice more earnestly those virtues out of the Chapter, which are inculcated in it. Those persons who have organized themselves into an opposition to Masonry, cannot know what the virtues and duties taught by our venerable traditions really are, or they would be convinced that to be Anti-masonic is to be anti-moral, anti-charitable, and in this country, Anti-christian and anti-republican.—If they would only read the prayers and charges of the volume I hold in my hand, (the Abimon Rezon) they would not say "We are opposed to all conventions of men where such doctrines are taught—we will withdraw our trust from all those who are guided by such principles." If they knew the benefits derived from our honorable and wide-spread institutions by the poor and distressed in distant and foreign lands, by the shipwrecked mariner, the wounded soldier, and the heart-sick traveler, they could not say to their fellow citizens, "we will deprive you of these advantages—you shall renounce them, or We will put you to the ban." No American would so act. The Anti-masons must labor under false impressions, and the cloud which now hangs over us will soon be dispelled by the light of truth. Let us in the meantime answer the aspersions that are cast upon us by rigidly practicing the virtues that are taught us in every lodge and chapter we enter, and above all, let us abstain from every act of retaliation. When called upon to vote for a public man, never let us ask the question, is he or is he not a Mason. It would be unworthy of us both as honorable men and as Masons, to be governed by such motives in our choice of those who may best serve their country. In this country, Masonry has not yet been made a political engine. Let us never be driven by our opponents into a course so contrary to our principles, and which would inevitably disgrace our institution.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage, is the true policy on the temperance question.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

THE ROCK ISLAND HOLINESS CONVENTION, AUGUST 18, 1875.

FARMINGTON, ILL. Aug. 21, 1875.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Our National Secretary once said to me, "There is this comfort in opposing secret societies: it brings us to be associated with the best men and women on earth." Dea. H. G. Griffin of Cambridge, Dea. Daniel Little of Geneseo, Judge Spencer (Methodist Episcopal) of Rock Island, with their families, belong to this class of people. So also the good brethren Chapman, father and son, where I am visiting here at Farmington.

I promised a more definite account of the Rock Island Convention.

Rev. L. Hawkins gave a Bible reading on Psalm 51, David's Psalm of penitence and prayer for sanctification from the murder of Uriah. The doctrine which the exercise brought out was this:

1. This is a prayer recorded by inspiration, proper for David, of course also proper for us.

2. It confesses actual transgression: "Against Thee, Thee only have I sinned and done this evil."

3. It confesses also native born depravity; "Behold I was shapen in iniquity, and in sin did my mother conceive me."

4. It prays for entire cleansing both from actual transgression and inherited corruption: "Wash me (throughly or) thoroughly from mine iniquity, and cleanse me from my sin." "Purge me and I shall be clean, wash me and I shall be whiter than snow."

5. The time of this promise is now, and the place HERE in this world.

The speaker then called on his class to exercise this faith, and to profess it on the spot, and to aid them in such confession he read and had them sing a sanctification hymn, the refrain of which was

"I am whiter than snow."

and with an agreeable vehemence, and an eloquence and earnestness admirable in any cause, he pressed his hearers up to the profession and solemn declaration that they did then and there believe the promise, and did certainly know that they were perfec ly cleansed from all actual transgression and inward defilement by the blood of Christ.

The objections to this method are these:

1. God's "now" is an eternal "now." One day is with him as a thousand years and a thousand years as one day Mr. Hawkins however demanded of his class that they should believe and profess that they had, then and there, in that half hour then present an l passing received the gift of cleansing by the application of Christ's blood; whereas neither Mr. Hawkins nor we could know but that God might see proper to take us, or some of us, through a discipline of days, weeks, months and even years before making the penitent consciously certain of the joyous rest into which it is his privilege to enter and into which he may and will enter by faith.

2. Bro. Hawkins urged us, not only to be cleansed in Christ's blood, but to state that we now know and are positively certain that we were entirely cleansed and so "whiter than snow." Now there is no precept in the Bible which commands us to make that profession.

3. Human character and life are too complex to warrant such an assertion without liability to grievous error and mistake. A man must try his sanctification as he does his neighbor's, by his fruits. A cheap sanctification, produced in an hour was not the way most of those were led who there related their experience of the blessing. Bishop Hamlin used to say: "We must wear out our works before we get to Christ," and this ordinarily is true.

PER CONTRA.—ARGUMENTS IN FAVOR OF THE CONVENTION.

1. The power and spirit of Christ was manifestly in and upon the meeting.

2. The errors of theory or of method were no more numerous than in almost every effort to revive religion.

3. The objection really felt by the mass of religious worldlings to these holiness movements, is, not that the standard is too high, but that holiness is insisted on at all by any standard.

4. The churches deplorably need such efforts. Mr. Hawkins insisted with great truth and cogency, that if in any church transgressors were not taught God's ways and sinners converted, according to the Psalmist, then that church fails of the real end and object of church organization. And this is true.

In short, I am in favor of these direct specific efforts to sanctify Christians and believe that the hand of God is in them. J. B.

HOLINESS.—EFFORTS TO ATTAIN IT.

Aug. 23, 1875.

There was a time I well remember, when Christians who claimed to be "orthodox" and denied that title to Methodists, regarded direct efforts to obtain "the immediate forgiveness of sins, and the life everlasting" by prayers, by earnest efforts, by anxious seats, and requesting the prayers of the congregation, as mere fanaticism. When the "Four days meetings, inaugurated by Mr. Finney and his friends, first came into Vermont, I well remember hearing Dr. Merrill, of Middlebury, say to some minister; 'The Methodists say we used to think it a piece of fanaticism to have conversions during a camp-meeting; and now, say they, you don't allow a sinner five minutes but demand immediate repentance and submission.'

Now there is inherently or Scripturally, no more fanaticism in seeking immeate holiness, than in seeking immediate conversion. Both are alike the gift of God for which he "will be inquired of." Regeneration, in theory, is instantaneous; and holiness is no less so. That is to say: if we ever enter a sinless heaven "where sin cannot enter," there must be some moment when our sanctification is completed. When that moment occurs, I am inclined to think, is one of those things which "it is the glory of God to conceal." The formation of a holy character is a habit-forming process; "First the blade then the ear, then the full corn in the ear." And conversion or regeneration itself, in practice, is ordinarily a process requiring time. But considered as gifts of God, drawn and derived from him by believing prayer, I see no conceivable reason why one should not be as immediate as the other.

In this view of the matter, the phrases of the sanctificationists seem more and more warrantable to me; such as "obtaining the blessing;" "the second blessing," etc. etc., and the fact that, in Europe and America, the attention of God's moving host is being turned to the subject of personal holiness, as in the meetings of Pearsall Smith, and in the Inskip National Holiness Camp-meetings, and in local holiness conventions like this at Rock-Island, seems to me to be an augury of good, and if the dews of God are falling I propose to have my fleece out that I also may share in "the time of refreshing."

There is this, however, to be said: in Rock Island, where the devils that preside over the altars of secrecy reign over the church and the court-house, and dictate to both, not one word was publicly said against them by way of reproof, warning or advice. Yet in private conversation brethren assured me that they regarded the lodge as an anti-Christian thing. I do not know enough of the methods of those brethren perhaps to criticise, but if it should be true that policy or timidity occasioned this silence, I know that it must have been displeasing to God. There was the uttermost freedom concerning whiskey and tobacco. A brother said when he attempted to consecrate his body a "living sacrifice, holy and acceptable to God," the thought that his body was reeking and redolent with tobacco shocked and silenced him till he resolved to quit it and reclaim. How much more abominable are the swindling, swearing, horse-play blended with prayers, in the lodge? Why strain out the filthy gnats of tobacco, and swallow the camels of the secret idolatries? That millions swear to conceal each others' crimes; that they should keep up a weekly theatrical play of assassination of Hiram Abiff till they become sufficiently hardened to murder in earnest; above all that they should insult the God of heaven by "another Gospel which is not another"—one would think that people met to explain what men must do, and what they must refrain from in order to be holy, would surely have something to say about these abominations which are defiling our whole land. But perhaps they are imperfectly instructed, and need but clear information to range them with the hosts of light against the myrmidons of darkness. We shall see. J. B.

THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

For a year or more the public has been promised a deliverance from Thurlow Weed on the disposition from William Morgan, and his book of reminiscences had reached the date of that tragedy. When at last his letter appeared in the New York Herald there was doubtless much disappointment at inconsistency, and that its first object should be a personal vindication. Mr. Weed, however, has made an addition to the ample testimony which fastens this murder on the lodge, and refutes a slander charged first on him and then on all Anti-masons. It has been of more value in calling wide notice to this tragedy. The Herald felt compelled to diminish the force of Mr. Weed's letter by suggesting that Freemasons had no adequate motive for murdering Morgan, thus casting a shade of doubt over the fact. The Troy Times has found two retired sea captains who write that years ago they met a person in Smyrna, Syria, who claimed to be the William Morgan of Anti-masonic fame. Masonic circles will do what they can to believe this unindorsed story, otherwise it will be little credited.

Morgan's body was brought to Batavia to the residence of Samuel D. Greene, where the second inquest was held, and from whence it was buried.

Mr. Greene was naturally and intensely interested in all the proceedings and testimony, and his letter on the first page of this number as of the first importance. It fills an important gap in Mr. Weed's letter, furnishing a satisfactory explanation of the testimony at the third inquest which puzzles Mr. Weed. It is almost impossible to believe that Mrs. Monroe could have such a vivid recollection of her husband's clothing and so poor a one regarding his person. Mr. Greene has written another letter reviewing the various dispositions of Morgan reported by the lodge which will soon appear. A Rochester, N. Y., paper has also published from the Bench and Bar an article of intense interest on the legal experiences of John C. Spencer, Judge Marcy, and others in the Morgan trials.

Mr. Weed was a member of the Rochester committee appointed to investigate the Morgan outrage, and Bates Cook was on the committee from Lewistown. Mr. Weed was also member of a committee to ascertain the fate of Morgan, and as such signed the report from which the following is taken, and shows that his opinion was once settled, however the conservatism and weakness of years may have shaken it:

"For ourselves we do conceive that the body discovered on the shore of Lake Ontario has been identified as the body of Capt. Wm. Morgan, beyond the shadow of a doubt. In this discovery we cannot but trace the hand of an overruling Providence, who, when all human efforts were found too weak effectually to penetrate the mysterious secret, has chosen in his own time, and by his own means to throw a broad light upon this dark mystery. This induces us to rely with a stronger hope upon the same Providence to unravel the remainder of this entangled skein, and to provide means for bringing all the perpetrators of a daring outrage to merited punishment."

Death of Mrs. J. B. Walker.—This estimable lady, the wife of our Presidential candidate, died at her home in Wheaton, Ill., on Sabbath morning about daylight, Aug. 29th, 1875. She was a true-hearted woman and wife, and an enlightened and sincere Christian, whose whole life has been an illustration of the Christian religion. She entered into her husband's plans and sustained them throughout as the head of his household with a constancy and devotion which ensured their success, and with scarce a thought for herself. Her health has been declining for several years past by the force of her disease which was apoplexy. She is to be buried in Mansfield, Ohio, by her husband, who has watched over her decline with tenderness and care. A biographical sketch of her will be given in the Cynosure.

NOTES.

—The full reports from the Western Pennsylvania work are an interesting feature of this number. The Mercer meeting had the effect, as was hoped, to bring the ends of the State together as will be seen from the notice on 13th page for a State convention to be held in the same place. The practical disadvantages which must be felt in this State should stir up the friends on either wing to close upon the center with right and left, attack and conquer it for the reform without delay.

—The third quarterly meeting of the N. E. Pennsylvania Association took place as appointed, Elder N. Callender writes, on the 17th and 18th ult. The next meeting will be held in Scranton, in October, and an invitation sent to the Corresponding Secretary N. C. A., to be present and speak. The committee of arrangements are S. A. Reynolds and Dea. S. Parker of Waverly, and Clark Lowry of Green Grove, Pa. A full account of the quarterly meeting will soon be reported.

—In an explanation of the twenty-first degree of Scotch Rite Masonry, called Noachite or Prussian Knight, the Hebrew Leader tells us the order meets on the night of the full moon in each lunar month. The place is lighted by a large window or opening, so arranged as to admit the rays of the moon, the only light allowed. The presiding officer of these "sons of light" sits facing the moonlight and is supposed to be unknown to the members who sit around like a flock of owls.

—The American Freeman, Bro. Needels' paper, has the first enlarged account of ex-President Andrew Johnson's funeral. we have seen. He died and was buried as he lived, a Freemason. The funeral services were not interrupted, if the published dispatch is to be credited, with any ceremony of the Christian church or any allusion to the Christian's hope.

—Past Master Ronayne gave the third degree amid great enthusiasm and before a large audience at Father Matthew Temperance Hall on the evening of Aug. 29th. His old tyler of Keystone Lodge, No. 639, also his ex-secretary of the same lodge, William Aiken, acted respectively as senior warden and senior deacon on the occasion. A large number of Masons were present who paid respectful attention. The members of Garden City Lodge, many of whom were present were doubtless astonished to hear that a Past Master of that lodge had told Mr. Ronayne that he had no objection to the expositions of Masonry so long as the lodge was not misrepresented. Mr. Ronayne expects to be in Mason City, Iowa, the last of this week.

—The Lutheran Standard puts the question of trying to take severe hold of evil systems with gloved hands in a reasonable way when it says:

"There is not a particle of sound reason in the popular cry against attacking error and errorists. Preach the Gospel, teach the truth, save souls, build up the church, is all right and good; but that does not involve letting the sects alone and rebuking nothing and nobody. Those who keep up the cry, Don't condemn error, only proclaim the truth, are like the farmers who keep crying, Cultivate your corn, never mind the hogs that are in it. Those who think it unkind and harsh to drive the hogs out might just as well quit the whole business."

Justice to Charles G. Finney.

Dear Cynosure:—Your notice of so eminent and godly a servant of Christ as Charles G. Finney, is not all that I hope you will say in regard to a prophet so loved and honored by the faithful Christians of his age. We speak of him as a prophet in the New Testament sense, and understand the word as designating the qualities which should distinguish every Gospel minister. Prophets are men that "reprove the world of sin, righteousness and judgment, co-ordinate with the work of the Holy Spirit. "Whatever is reproved is made manifest by the light, and whatever doth make manifest is light."

Mr. Finney obeyed the Gospel requirement, "reprove, rebuke, exhort with all long-suffering and doctrine." He was a theologian, but he used theology in its spiritual application, to awaken men to a sense of sin and danger in order that they might seek remission of sin by faith in Christ. No man probably would have pitied and prayed for the mere scholastic theologian more than he. Such a man in the pulpit, whether Arminian or Calvinist, was outside of the class of preachers to which Charles G. Finney belonged. We say this because in all recent notices of him, he is spoken of as a theologian, or a theological writer and put into the same category with the venal doctors of the traditions of men, and thus his heart is misrepresented, while the teachers and preachers of smooth orthodoxy honor themselves by claiming his companionship.

Charles G. Finney was cast out by all classes of theologians in his day; both by those who claim his fellowship now and those who affect to dissent. The Old School hated and maligned him. The New School men who write patronizingly of him now, for years after he went to Oberlin, would not sit in the same pulpit with him. His own principles never were changed. He was the same man, as we personally know, thirty years ago that he was three years ago. It was his doctrine of holiness, and more especially his reform principles that they hated and resisted, until those principles had triumphed.

Mr. Finney was an abolitionist, an Anti-mason—a man who rebuked fashionable and worldly churches and ministers. When he was a Presbyterian minister he denounced the ministers and churches who opposed dancing and allowed slave-holding, and said there was "a jubilee in hell when the General Assembly met." He spoke out, and spoke firmly against Masonry and worldly fashions in the church of Christ. And ministers of all denominations for these faithful reproofs would hold no fellowship with him. Charles G. Finney, like his friend, Arthur Tappan was a Christian reformer, and if the prophets and Christ and the Apostles were examples, there can be no true Gospel minister who is not.

Finney made Oberlin. In his revival efforts thousands of young men were converted to right principles. Many of these followed him to Oberlin. There were no men at Oberlin to neutralize his evangelical and reformatory influence; and the first Oberlin preachers went out, evangelists in spirit like their teacher. They were as salt cast into the churches of the North and West, and for many years, from 1830 to 1850, a spirit of evangelical piety prevailed which filled the churches with converts, and brought in most of the men who are now the foundation men in our churches. Out of this wide spread evangelical revival grew the anti-slavery, the temperance, the tobacco and the other reforms of the time. We well remember when the pagan desire for jewelry and trinkets and uncouth and unchaste fashions which prevail now in the churches, would have marked the wearer as a child of the world, if no worse.

Charles G. Finney in word and example rebuked openly and often every worldly and evil habit in the church, and every selfish and anti-Christian institution in the world. Who has mentioned these well known characteristics and his Anti-masonic treatise in their notices of his decease? Not one. They would condemn themselves thereby.

God caused C. G. Finney and his principles to triumph. The common people heard him gladly and soon became the majority. In state he triumphed in the anti-slavery reform, and and in the church by the decadence of denominational selfishness. When the triumph came the old opponents, upon whom Providence had forced the issue —without repentance we fear—came to march in his company, and will now build his tomb. Let us thank God that the humble, holy man accomplished his work, and pray that the ministers of our time may not be hirelings, who dare not prophesy against "dead works," Masonry, fashion, and selfish piety as he did. Note from Elder Rathbun.

Lisbon Center, Aug. 18, 1875.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

In your editorial of Aug. 12, you say that Elder Rathbun does not feel called to the State lecturship as you are informed by Bro. Springstein. I wrote to Bro. Springstein that I regretted that I could not serve the people of Michigan, as I had hired to Lisbon charge previous to the call, and they refused to let me go. I likewise said to him in my letter that I thanked the people of Michigan for the honor conferred on me, and should be happy to serve them at some future time as their State lecturer, when I am free to do so. Yours truly,

D. P. Rathbun.

Notice—Wisconsin.

Friends of the reform in Wisconsin who have made pledges to the State work will please pay them promptly to the Treasurer of the State Association, M. R. Britten, Vienna, Wis., who will forward to the State agent. Any others wishing to contribute to the State work will please forward to the same. A report of funds collected will be published in the Cynosure.

The Home Circle.

Let Your Light so Shine.

BY C. L. STODDARD.

What if it had been unwritten?
When written, what if unread?
What if writer and reader smitten
Had silently passed to the dead?

What then? Why simply one talent would lie,
Unused 'neath the darksome clod,
And with wearisome toil, in a round unbroken,
Would both have gone to God.

Let us use the gems, if we have them,
Of thought, of mirth and joy;
Our life will grow broader and deeper,
More gold and less alloy.

And some who read will be stronger,
And better for what we have done;
Life's race, whether shorter or longer,
Will win, if 'tis properly run.

And then, when the Master cometh,
To look over our record fair;
When our thoughts, words, and actions he summeth,
Each writing will be counted there.

"Rejoiceth in the Truth."

"Died in the triumphs of faith." Thus stated the preacher at the funeral.

Let us take a view of that last scene. Her debility increased and friends were fully aroused as to her condition. Told her plainly that there was no hope for her getting well. She talked about it cheerfully. Said, "Well, it makes but little difference; it will only be a little while before you all will come too." And, "I shall be there looking out for you," etc. Word went forth that she was "fully resigned," "willing to die," etc.

A loved watcher, ever by her side, however, did not feel satisfied; expressed fear that all was not as it seemed. Oh, how she agonized in prayer that her dying child might be so fully transformed ere her departure as to leave no doubt in regard to her safety.

The last night came. The writer had been called in to stay the night. This seemed to disturb the sick one. She was anxious to know why "Sr.—— was going to stay all night?" Her mother replied, "Why, dear, we do not know what may happen, and we thought we would like to have Sr.——with us."

Her countenance immediately expressed alarm, and she fairly shrieked out, "Oh, you think I am going to die?" "I don't want to die." "I can't die." "Oh, I don't feel as well as I did." "Let us have prayers again. Come in all of you, and I don't care if you all pray." Gathering into her room, husband, mother, sisters, and friends, we kneeled around her, and then the question was asked, "What shall we ask the Lord for you?" "Oh, pray that I may be easier and get well."

"Shall we not pray that the Lord's will may be done."

Hesitatingly she replied, "Y-e-s, but I want to live—if—it's—his—will."

"Dear——, can't you say 'the will of the Lord be done?"

Oh that I had power to depict the agony expressed in look and tone as she exclaimed,

"Oh, I've said that all the time. But —oh, d-e-a-r!"

The impression conveyed to the burdened hearts about her was that, in herself, now the testing time had come, she found no foundation for the profession she had been making, of being resigned to God's will.

When we asked, "Don't you trust Jesus for the salvation of your soul?", she earnestly replied, "Oh, yes, but I want to live, if it's his will."

That scene of prayer! Where burdened hearts struggled for the victory! How on our knees in solemn waiting, did we press her to resign herself for life or death to God. With drawn face and clinched hands she sat bolstered in her chair. Watch closely as love watches, no sign of yielding was discovered.

Finally, the effort seemed to relieve her breathing, and as she felt easier she wished to be laid down, and she dropped to sleep and rested quietly until the dawn of the morning. As she opened her eyes her beloved mother expressed her gratification that "she was still with us," and quoted a part of a verse of a hymn, to raise her thoughts to the Saviour, when with a frown she exclaimed, "Do stop!"

Her breathing becoming more difficult, the effort to talk was so great she did not try to do so, but seemed intensely conscious, wanting to be placed in her chair, and have the room arranged for the day, just as usual. At last, as though she had struggled as long as she could to keep breathing, she said to her mother, "Oh, dear, I shall die!" and turning her head again to one side she never breathed again.

We arrayed her for the grave, almost covered her with flowers, and laid the loved form in the silent tomb.

The preacher declared to that vast audience assembled, that "she died in the triumphs of faith." Her mother, with almost breaking heart, said to the writer at the close of the services, "Oh, that is not the kind of triumph I want to die in." She further said, "There has nothing ever come to me that has so stirred me up to live a better Christian life."

Ah, that, thought we, that is just what God wanted to do for all of us. It is the truth that will do good. Perfect charity "rejoiceth in the truth."

Whether this dear one is saved or not, is not for us to say. If so, it was "so as by fire," "barely saved!" We hope in the final day to find that through the mercy of God, washed in the atoning blood, she will have a place on the "right hand."

The Bible teaches us that in contrast to being barely saved, there is such a thing as "an abundant entrance" into the heavenly port, which shall be administered unto those who follow the chart of life, which you can find described in 2 Pet. ii. which after giving the particular items, it says to us, "Give diligence to make your calling and election sure," by adding to your faith in God the Christian virtues and graces, and "abounding," or increasing, in them (to him that hath shall be given). Then the promise is "you shall never fall;" and "an entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ."—Token of Truth.

A Habit worth Ten Thousand a Year.

One great fault and danger of the age is reading for amusement. Hence the voracious appetite of the public for sensational stories and novels, too many of which minister to the most groveling lusts of the human heart. We do not affirm that reading light literature for the purpose of relaxation from severe study or business toil is necessarily injurious, provided the works read possess literary merit, and breathe the spirit of Christian morality. But no man or woman can read an immoral fiction without contracting more or less moral defilement. Filth will make filthy. And even light literature, though pure in character, cannot be read constantly without injury to the mind. By addressing the imagination it beguiles one into a mental dreamland, where he tastes delights which not only cost him no effort, but also indispose him to that vigorous use of the higher powers of his mind on which the richest intellectual enjoyments depend. By acting powerfully upon the sensibilities, under conditions which do not call for their actual exercise in the form of appropriate deeds, it subtilety transforms one into a sentimentalist, ready to weep over imaginary woes, but hard, unfeeling, and reluctant to give when actual suffering stands in his presence. He who makes such light literature the staple food of his mind, feeds on sweetmeats, which, while they gratify his taste, clog his stomach, make him a dyspeptic, and shorten his existence.

Hume once said that a habit of reading is worth ten thousand a year. This is no exaggeration. Such a habit affords more real, profitable enjoyment than could be purchased with that income, provided, of course, the books read be of the right sort. "Books that are books"—books of history, biography, travel, philosophy, science, theology—books which impart knowledge and discuss the great problems of human existence, in the spirit of Christianity, must furnish the reading which alone enlarges and strengthens the mind, quickens the soul, refines the character, and imparts, next to spiritual exercises, the most exalted pleasures of life.

Granting the truth of these assertions, which cannot be successfully disputed, what shall be said of those fathers and mothers who, from sheer penuriousness, refuse to provide the books needfull to the formation of habits of reading by their children? Are there not thousands of homes in this land of many books, owned by men of means, in which a family library is a minus quantity? The children, when weary with work or play, look vainly round the vacant walls in search of something to occupy their attention and drive off ennui, that fiend of the bookless household and of the uneducated, empty mind. Books—not story books, except for the little ones—but entertaining books, dealing with the men of the past and present, descriptive of the great world beyond them, exciting them to high endeavor and true nobility of character, would fill the "aching void," and contribute to their happiness. Not finding these, they grow first restless, then discontented with their home life. Disobedience succeeds to discontent; and they enter the academy of Satan at the street corner. Bad leads to worse; and after worse comes depravity of life, a home forsaken, a promising child ruined, and a penurious father sinking with gray hairs and sorrow to a welcomed grave. A good, wisely selected library, a home made intellectually charming by the presence of books and conversation respecting their contents, might have prevented much of all of this. Surely the penury which grudges the outlay for a family library is as short-sighted as it is cruel!—Daniel Wise, D. D., in Western Christian Advocate.

Turkish Reform.

We need scarsely remind our readers of the boasting of the Turks, and the rejoicing of the Christians at the official declarations concerning improvements in the existing schools, and the erection of numerous new ones with advanced systems. In fact, however, matters in this line have virtually remained where they were, with the exception, perhaps, with the capitol and a few prominent cities. But in other places, where the people would have gladly made a change, the Government seems to have placed impedimeuts in their way. This is pointedly the case in the Christian provinces of Bosnia and Bulgaria. In these localities the parishes, as well as individuals, were inclined to improve their educational facilities. Where it was possible they established new schools, and in many places young men who had been educated in Europe opened private schools, with an advanced course of study, to which parents sent their children with alacrity. The Turkish authoritiea, however, did not like these efforts, and made short work with them; they closed the schools, confiscated the apparatus, and in some instances sent their founders or teachers to prison.

In religious affairs matters are in a still worse condition. A few years ago, under the influence of the Crimean War and the treaty of Paris, all the subjects of the Porte were permitted the free exercise of their religion, and equal civil rights were granted to all as to the Moslem. But of late systematic efforts have been made to curtail these grants. Last year the Christians of Constantinople were alarmed to learn of the revival of an old edict prohibiting Christians from living in Turkish quarters. This order was to be carried out in three days; and the result was that several thousand Christian families, including Germans, English, and French, were thus suddenly and unceremoniously ordered from their homes. The protests against this outrage were so energetic that the Government soon found that it had made a great blunder, which it laid to the charge of the misguided zeal of its subordinates; and matters were allowed to remain as they were.

In the same way the authorities, as secretly as possible, but with great determination, have begun to oppose the spread of Protestantism and the workings of evangelical missions, as is now the case in Syria. The converts are occasionally arrested in the night, and hurried in chains to prison, under the plea that this is to protect them from the exasperation of the natives. But it would not be difficult to protect them in some other way if it were necessary, and at best it is hard to see the protection which they derive from the chains that are placed on them at arrest.

In Syria there is a certain heathen sect which has only outwardly conformed to Moslemism, and among whom the American missionaries have labored with success. Without any other provocation than their Christian confession, these poor creatures have been exposed to the fiercest brutalities for a long time, and the very village in which they lived was devastated and plundered by the Government troops; and then, to clap the climax, all the schools of the American mission in the district of Ansari were closed. The measures adopted by the diplomatists to obtain redress for these outrages have as yet little or no effect. Neither the English nor the American Embassy has been able to procure a remedy, and the deputation of the Evangelical Alliance could not even obtain an audience with the Sultan, although the request was made to the Vizier by the English Embassador.—Christian Advocate.

The Vatican.

This word is often used, but there are many who do not understand its import. The term refers to a collection of buildings on one of the seven hills of Rome, which covers a space of 1200 feet in length and 1000 feet in breadth. It is built on the spot once occupied by the garden of cruel Nero. It owes its origin to the Bishop of Rome, who, in the early part of the sixth century, erected a humble residence on its site. About the year 1160, Pope Eugenius rebuilt it on a magnificent scale. Innocent II., a few years afterwards, gave it up as a lodging to Peter II., King of Arragon. In 1305, Clement V., at the instigation of the King of France, removed the Papal See from Rome to Avignon, when the Vatican remained in a condition of obscurity and neglect for more than 70 years.

But soon after the return of the Pontifical Court to Rome, an event which had been earnestly prayed for by poor Petrarch, and which finally took place in 1376, the Vatican was put into a state of repair, again enlarged, and it was henceforward considered as the regular palace and residence of the Popes, who, one after the other, added fresh buildings to it, and gradually encircled it with antiquities, statues, pictures and books, until it became the richest depository in the world.

The library of the Vatican was commenced 1400 years ago. It contains 40,000 manuscripts, among which are some by Pliny, St. Thomas, St. Charles. Borromeo, and many Hebrew, Syrian, Arabian, and Armenian Bibles.

The whole of the immense buildings composing the Vatican are filled with statues found beneath the ruins of Ancient Rome; with paintings by the masters, and with curious medals and antiquities of almost every description.

When it is known that there have been exhumed more than 70,000 statues from the ruined temples and palaces of Rome, the reader can form some idea of the richness of the Vatican.

Distance of the Sun.

Suppose we had a messenger whom we could send to and fro between the earth and the sun, and who could tell us exactly how long it took him to perform the journey; suppose we could also find by trial exactly how fast he could travel; then multiply his speed by the time occupied in coming from the sun, and we shall have the distance of that body, just as we would get the distance of two cities, when we knew that a train running forty miles an hour took seven hours to run between them.

Such a messenger is light. Let us find how long it takes light to come from the sun and how fast it flies, and we have the distance required. How hopeless a task it seems to find either the time or the velocity! But both have been found by methods which admit of being understood without any great amount of scientific knowledge. The time of the journey has been found by two entirely independent methods. The first is by the eclipses of Jupiter's satellites. The inner of these satellites revolves around Jupiter very regularly in less than two days. He passes through the shadow of Jupiter in every revolution, and thus becomes eclipsed. These eclipses can be observed with a small telescope, and the time noted within a few seconds. The time of revolution and the form of the orbit being precisely determined, the moments at which future eclipses are to occur can be exactly predicted. The first astronomer who accurately investigated this subject found that when the earth was between the sun and Jupiter the eclipses were seen several minutes sooner than they should have occurred; as the earth moved away, they were seen later, and finally, when the earth got to the opposite side of the sun, they were as much too late as they had been too early. As the earth returned, the eclipses again came earlier, and the irregularity continued in the same order year after year. The variation was found to be about eight minutes in time on each side of the mean. Persuaded that no such irregularity in the motions of those bodies could really exist, he attributed the appearance to the progressive motion of light, and hence concluded that this agent was about eight minutes in passing over the space which separated the sun from the earth. The most exact determination of this time was made about seventy years ago from an examination of all the eclipses of Jupiter's satellites, observations of which were to be found in the Paris Observatory. The result was 8 minutes 13.2 seconds.

The other method of finding the time light requires to pass from the sun to the earth is due to Bradley, who was Astronomer Royal of England in 1750. In making observations to determine the parallax of the fixed stars he was surprised to find an apparent annual motion of the stars of about 20 seconds, which did not correspond to the parallax at all. After long study on the subject, it occurred to him that, owing to the rapid motion of the earth in its orbit, no star would be seen in its true direction unless it was in the line of direction of the motion; but the motion of the light itself would be combined with that of the earth. The angle being twenty seconds showed that the velocity of the light coming from the star was ten thousand times that of the earth in its orbit. Since the velocity of the earth would carry it to the sun in about 57 days, light would, by this theory, require about one-ten thousandath of 57 days to reach the sun. Calculate this time and it will give eight minutes 12 seconds. The most exact observations of recent times give 8 minutes 18 seconds. There is therefore an outstanding discrepancy of five seconds only between the results of the two methods, and this is accounted for by the uncertainty of the old observations of Jupiter's satellites.

The terrestrial velocity of light is also obtained by two different methods. The mechanical difficulties involved in them may be judged by the fact that it has been necessary to measure a space of time less than a millionth part of a second. The most accurate method is that of Foucault, in which a beam of light is made to fall on a rapidly revolving mirror, from which it is reflected to a second mirror, which throws it back to the revolving mirror. If the light required no time whatever to pass between the two mirrors, the stationary mirror would reflect it back to the same point from which it came in the first place, for, however fast the other mirror might turn, it would be in the same position when the light was first reflected and when it came back after the second reflection. But if the light takes any time to go and come, the mirror will have moved a little between the two reflections, and the rays will be thrown back to a different point from that from which it came. By giving the mirror a velocity of a thousand turns per second the deviation of the second reflection was sufficient to be measured by the aid of a telescope, and the results of the measurements indicated that the velocity of light was 185,000 miles per second. Multiply this by the 498 seconds it takes light to come from the sun to the earth, and we find the distance passed over to be 92,130,000 miles, a result remarkably accordant with the other recent determinations of the sun's distance.—Harper's Magazine.

Children's Corner.

The Farmer's Son.

A farmer and his little child
Walked out one summer-morn,
Through meadow-land and forest-land,
And fields of golden corn.

"See, child," the sturdy farmer said,
"How fair the growing grain!
'Twill make thy father rich and free,
When winter comes again."

Then plucked he at the golden corn,
The little, gentle lad,
And kissed it: "Bless thee, corn," he said,
"That makes my father glad."

"Nay, child," he smiled upon his boy;
"The fair grain does its best;
Yet as it grows and ripens here,
Obeys but God's behest."

Then raised the lad his little hand,
And bared his curly head;
"Bless God, He loves my father, dear,
So loves us all," he said.

The sturdy farmer's eyes were wet,
"Amen!" then whispered he;
"'Tis rare I pray, but bless the Lord,
Who gave my son to me."

Suppose a Case.

'Let us suppose a case,' said Uncle Peleg to a little group. "Suppose two boys live in houses just alike, and dress just alike, and go to the same school; so, if you wanted to, you couldn't tell which was the best off. Suppose they keep right along together till they're twelve years old, and help each other so they'll be sure to keep even all the time.

"Well, suppose after awhile one boy finds a new friend that tells him he's tied to his mother's apron-strings, and he never'll be a man till he can do as he's a mind to without asking anybody. 'Girls ought to be at home evenings, and behave themselves; but its different with boys,' this new friend says. Suppose, now, this bad boy, who wants the other to be just as bad as he is, pulls a piece of tobacco out of his pocket, and tells our boy he must learn to chew the stuff before he'll ever be of any account; and then they try it together till somebody's awful sick. But suppose that somebody made up his mind to keep on trying, and, after a while his mouth gets so casehardened he don't know tobacco from sugar plums.

"Now, suppose our boy grows saucy to his mother—just as he would of course; and bimeby he takes a glass of liquor to keep the tobacco company—and well matched company they be, too. Then he smokes and swears, and swaggers and staggers, till you couldn't tell where he started from. If he earns any money, he spends it as fast as he gets it, and grows to be such a dirty fellow I wonder any nice, clean girl will have him near her.

"Now, suppose this other boy that lived in a house just like his, stuck fast to his mother, and thought he'd see what kind of a man he'd make that way. Suppose he didn't swear, nor smoke, nor chew tobacco, nor drink liquor. Suppose when he earned money he spent it for something he needed, or else saved it for a rainy day, and when he was twenty-one he looked about as clean as one of you girls. Suppose, now, these two boys live to be thirty years old, which do you think will be most of a man?"

"The one that minded his mother and didn't get dirty," replied little Sue, who had listened so intently that she did not notice the boy, who retreated further and further from Uncle Peleg while the "suppose" was being told.

"That's right, my dear; and suppose there's one here that's got started wrong, the best thing he can do is to go home, wash his mouth, and do as near as he can as his mother wants him to. Good mothers are the best friends boys or girls can ever have."—Youth's Temperance Banner.

Courtesies to Parents.

Parents lean upon their children, and especially their sons, much earlier than either of them imagine. Their love is a constant inspiration, a perennial fountain of delight, from which our lips may quaff and be comforted thereby. It may be that the mother has been left a widow, depending on her only son for support. He gives her a comfortable home, sees that she is well clad, and allows no debts to accumulate, and that is all. It is considerable, more even than many sons do; but there is a lack. He seldom thinks it worth while to give her a caress, he has forgotten all those affectionate ways that kept the wrinkles from her face, and made her look so much younger than her years; he is ready to put his hand in his pocket to gratify her lightest request; but to give of the abundance of his heart is another thing entirely. He loves his mother? Of course he does! Are there not proofs enough of his filial regard? Is he not continually making sacrifices for her benefit? ah! but it is the mother heart that craves an occasional kiss, the support of youthful arm, the little attentions and kindly courtesies of life, that smooth down so many of its asperities, and made the journey less wearisome. Material aid is good as far as it goes, but it has not that sustaining power which the loving sympathetic heart bestows upon its object.

Even the father, occupied and absorbed as he may be, is not wholly indifferent to these filial expressions of devoted love. He may pretend to care very little for them, but having faith in their sincerity, it would give him serious pain were they entirely withheld. Fathers need their sons quite as much as the sons need their fathers; but in how many deplorable instances do they fail to find in them a staff for their declining years!

Begin early to cultivate a habit of thoughtfulness and consideration for others, especially for those who you are commanded to honor. Can you begrudge a few extra steps for the mother who never stopped to number those you demanded during your helpless infancy? Have you the heart to slight her requests or treat her remarks with indifference, when you cannot begin to measure the patient devotion with which she bore with your peculiarities? Anticipate her wants, invite her confidence, be prompt to offer assistance, express your affection as you did when a child, that the mother may never grieve in secret for the son she has lost. —Rural New Yorker.

Child-Christians.

There is little danger of attaching too much importance to the religious culture of the children, and the following suggestions have great force:

It is not so rare a thing as once it was to see children among the ranks of God's people, but not yet do we realize the possibility and the full blessedness of this relation. We pray for the conversion of our little ones, but we do not really expect it. Mr. Beecher once said that "a converted child was, to many parents, like an apple that had ripened before its time—they were afraid it was unsound at the core." So we are fearful that they "do not fully understand," we are afraid that "the change is not genuine," we "think they had better wait awhile," forgetting that He who is able to keep them unto the end set a little child in the midst for our example. They are fresher from the hand of God than we are, it is easier to kindle the light of heaven when it has scarce faded, and the and the child-nature turns as sweetly towards Christ as it did eighteen centuries ago. We clothe this simple "coming to Christ," in mystical phrases, we tell them of a change which they cannot understand, and, waiting for it, many a child lives a life of Christian duty without its joy, while many another passes through the giddy years of youth, when the brain fairly whirls with the new wine of life, almost prayerless, because they are afraid to ask for it, and dare ask for nothing less.

Religious Intelligence.

—The Friends' Society in America will hold their biennial First-Day School Conference in Philadelphia, beginning on the 12th of November next.

—One who has been investigating the subject says that sixty-eight per cent. of the members of Evangelical churches are the fruits of Sunday School instruction.

—The third "National Evangelical Lutheran Sabbath School Convention" will be held at Wooster, Ohio, beginning October 26 and continuing till October 29. An extensive programme is announced.

—The Chinese Sunday School, which is held in Doctor Eel's church, Oakland, Cal., on Thursday and Sunday evenings, has had a very encouraging growth. Two years ago it began with twenty scholars; now it numbers two hundred and seven Chinese young men and boys.

—The Annual Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Diocese of Illinois will be held on Sept. 14. The question of electing a Bishop will come up again. It is said that Dr. DeKoven's friends will present him once more as a candidate. Among others mentioned for the vacant Episcopate are the Rev. Dr. Stephen H. Tyng and the Rev. Dr. James Mulcahey, of this city, the Rev. Dr. Alexander Burgess, of Springfield, Mass., and the Rev. Dr. Thomas F. Davis, of Philadelphia.

—The American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions will send in September three missionaries to Western Turkey, one to Eastern Turkey, and three to Madusa. Prof. and Mrs. Learned and the Rev. Mr. Doane sail for Japan in October. Five missionaries under the direction of the Board left the United States for Central Turkey August 7, and four for the Mahratta Mission August 11. A reception of these missionaries was given in the rooms of the Board at Boston, at which there were present twenty-seven missionaries, representing thirteen fields of labor in foreign lands.

—At the recent session of the Colorado Conference, Mr. Harwood spoke of the character and results of missionary work in New Mexico as follows: "Five years ago the Methodist Episcopal church had nothing in that country. Now there are five missionaries, four of whom preach in the Spanish language. There are one hundred and twenty-five Mexican and fifteen American members of the church, most, if not all, of whom are soundly converted. There are two hundred scholars in the Sabbath Schools, and the work, though bitterly opposed, is making steady progress. The value of the property now owned by the church is twenty-five thousand dollars."

—Beginning August 31st, the State Conferences of the Wesleyan Methodist churches will be held in order in Indiana, Michigan, Illinois, Kansas, Iowa, Minnesota and Wisconsin. The General Conference meets Oct. 20, in Sycamore, Ill. Rev. D. S. Kinney, the successor of Adam Crooks as publishing agent for the church, will visit all the Conferences in succession.

—The Presbyterians (Northern) last year received forty-nine ministers from other denominations, or nearly one-third as many as were ordained during the year. Neither was this exceptional. For the previous six years the number thus received averaged fifty-six, against an average of one hundred and thirty-one ordinations.

—The Methodist church is accomplishing a good work in Australia. It has three conferences, all flourishing. The first Methodist preacher there was a convict. He was under sentence of death in England for murder. He was converted, and became so thoroughly changed that, through the intercession of friends, his sentence was commuted to banishment.

—The statement of Bishop Bailey, of Baltimore, during a visit to Washington City, last month, that among those confirmed as converts to Catholicism were sixty-nine Methodists, has been investigated by a committee of the Preachers' Meeting, who reported, after a careful inquiry, that but three members of our church in that district had joined the Catholic church, and that within the past year, seven Catholics have been converted and joined our church.—Methodist Advocate.

—The Evangelical Messenger, having lately published a series of articles against the Romish church, the Catholic Universe attacks it most bitterly, much after the style of lodge journals with those who point out the evil tendencies of their false religious system.

—New York papers give a remarkable account of the healing of Rev. S. H. Platt, of the DeKalb Ave. M. E. church, Brooklyn, by prayer. For twenty-five years he has suffered from an incurable injury in one knee, caused by the kick of a horse. Four years ago a like injury happened to his well limb, from striking against a box, so that he could not stand or walk without crutches. At Ocean Grove camp meeting he was visited by a young lady who prayed for his recovery in his presence. In a few minutes strength seemed to return, and he was "whole" and well.

—A very significant feature of the late Theological Institute at Oberlin was the paper by Dr. Fairchild, on the "History of the Oberlin Doctrine of Sanctification." The Fellowship says of it: "He began by sketching the circumstances under which the doctrine first began to be held in Oberlin, and the influence it exerted on those who accepted it, which was, in some respects, injurious. He then reviewed the utterances of Cowles, Morgan and Finney, finding in the utterances of the last named writer, inconsistencies And finally, he insisted upon the fact that the doctrine of permanent sanctification in this life is utterly opposed to the doctrine of the simplicity of moral action, which is recognized as the foundation of the entire Oberlin philosophy, so far as it is distinctive. He said: 'Oberlin is the last place in the world where the doctrine of permanent sanctification in this life should be held.' The new paper seems likely to mark the beginning of a new era, if not in Oberlin, at least in the popular impression regarding Oberlin. It was noticeable that two of the men whose names were mentioned in the paper, Morgan and Cowles, being present, gave assent to Pres. Fairchild's present position in the matter."

News of the Week.

The City.

Last Sabbath evening Farwell Hall was filled with a large audience to hear from Hon. J. V. Farwell an account of his personal observations of Mr. Moody's work in England.——The Board of Cook county commissioners formally broke ground last week for the erection of a grand court house and city hall on the square occupied by the old building before the fire.——The whiskey ring of this city lately attempted the assasination of an ex-gauger who has made some damaging revelations of fraud to government officials.

A great event of the week is the failure of the Bank of California at San Francisco for unknown millions, said to be fourteen, followed in a day or two by the sudden and mysterious death of the President, Ralston, while bathing. It was first believed that he had taken poison before going into the water, but physicians are inclined to believe that a stroke of apoplexy was the cause of his death. Other banks in San Francisco have stood a heavy run, but the excitement is waning and it is believed that the bank will pay 50 per cent. or more to creditors.——The propellor Comet was run down by the steamer Manitoba on Lake Huron and sunk with eleven of her crew.——The reign of terror in Southern Illinois is now over, the citizens having organized and armed and caused the arrest of a large number of the Ku-Klux.

Foreign.

Some time ago the Prussian government prohibited the circulation in that country of the Volkszeitung, a Roman Catholic paper of Baltimore. Finding or supposing it to be still distributed under the name of the Freie Presse, the Government has issued an order forbidding the circulation of that paper also.——The Government of Bavaria has requested the bishops to submit official copies of the pastorals issued by them on the eve of the recent elections. The papers are demanding that the issue of political pastorals shall be made a criminal offense.——It is reported that the Italian Government will bring in a bill at the next Parliament for the suppression of the Roman Catholic clubs and co-fraternities of laymen. ——Last week Matthew Webb accomplished the feat of swimming across the British Channel from Dover to Calais, about 25 miles in 21 3:4 hours. He was almost exhausted from the long and continuous strain upon his system, and when first taken from the water was barely able to stand. He, however, shortly afterward recovered and walked ashore without assistance.——The insurgents in Herzegovina have attacked the towns of Focuiza and Roito, and Turkish troops are concentrating. The Grand Vizier has addressed a note to the Governments of Austria, Germany and Russia, thanking them for their friendly intercession in the interests of peace.——The Porte is concentrating a large force in the direction of Nissa, in consequence of the part taken by the Servians in the insurrection in Herzegovina. The military occupation of Servia is regarded as not improbable.

MISCELLANY.

Forty-seven millions of idle money are piled up in the banks of New York City, and no customers can be found to use it. One hundred millions of idle money are lying in the banks of the United States. The amount of currency in circulation is just seventy-eight millions more than it was in 1865, at the close of the war, when business was flush and prosperity at high tide.

Herzegovina, about which our cable dispatches have so much to say just now, is a province of European Turkey, containing 7,000 square miles, and a population of less than a quarter of a million. As in the neighboring provinces, the inhabitants are mostly members of the Greek church, and disliking their Mohammedan rulers at all times, hate them especially now that a tax is being collected. They have long desired independence, but it is the policy of the Great Powers not to weaken the Ottoman rule just now. If the provinces should throw off the Turkish yoke it would displease all their powerful neighbors to have them set up a government for themselves, while Great Britain, France and Germany would not relish their annexation to Austria or Russia. Should the present insurrection against Turkey continue, and involve all the other provinces, a change of programme might be made. Whatever may happen, however, will be determined more by Cabinet Councils than by the valor of the provincials.

The Pope has refused to consecrate the Roman Church to the Sacred Heart. "The missionaries of the Sacred Heart at Issoudon, in the Diocese of Bourges, has presented him with thirty magnificent volumes containing 12,000,000 signatures in favor of this step, but a French Catholic organ states that this pious campaign was undertaken rather inconsiderately, and the Florence Ultramontane paper declares that to consecrate the church to the Sacred Heart of Jesus would be an act of tautology. The church, it says, issued from the very heart of Jesus; it is His spouse; it belongs to Him in every respect. How and why then, consecrate it to Him? The Pope has accordingly replied "Nihil innovandum." The Debats hopes that people constantly trying to invent unknown devotions, to draw up new dogmas, and to introduce all kinds of superstitions which are not at all Christian, will profit by this lesson given them, not by free-thinkers, but by the infallible Pope.

The final reports of the census-takers in Ireland, in 1871, have just appeared and contain some information of interest. The area of the island is 20,819,947 acres, from which are to be deducted 600,000 acres covered with water. 4,000,000 of bogs, mountains, and other lands unfit for cultivation, leaving available about 16 000,000 acres. or 25,000 square miles, an area somewhat less than half of Iowa. Ten million acres are, again, in pasture, so that the cultivated land but little exceeds one acre for each inhabitant, the total population being 5,412,377. In 1841 the population was 8,175,000 the number of inhabited houses being 1,320,000. Now there are 960,000 houses returned. so that the population has fallen off 2,763,000 souls, and the number of dwellings 360,000. The decrease in population during the decade in 1861–71 was, however, only 386,000, and there now seems reason to believe that the tide has begun to turn, and the next ten years will show an increase. Of the 5,412,377 persons in Ireland, 4,150,867, or 76.7 per. cent. of the whole number, are returned as Roman Catholics. The remaining 23 3 per cent. are made up of 677,998 Episcopalians, 500,000 Presbyterians, 400,000 Methodists, and 50,000 members of about 150 other separate sects.

FREE TRACTS.

A Tract Fund for the Free Distributirn of Tracts

HAS BEEN SECURED AND SHOULD NEVER BE EXHAUSTED. A friend has pledged this fund a dollar for every otherdollar received, so EVERY NEW SUBSCRIPTION TO THE TRACT FUND COUNTS DOUBLE, and thus $10.00 pays for 20 000 pages of tracts.

The distribution of these tracts has already saved hundreds of young men from the lodge, but there is a great lack of funds to supply the constantly increasing demand for Free Tracts.

During the year ending July 1st, 1875 a little less than 150.000 pages of Cynosnre Tracts were gratuitously sent out. mostly in very small lots. The present demand is fully 100.000 pages per month. but funds are lacking to meet it.

Many of our most earnest workers in this cause of God are poor men, who would be glad to circulate thousands of pages of Antimasonic literature if they could have them free.

SHALL WE NOT HAVE AN INEXHAUSTIBLE TRACT FUND?

"THE ANTI-MASONS SCRAP BOOK."

Contains 24 Cynosure Tracts, bound together and is just the thing to select from. Price 20 cents. See advertisement page 15.

Enoch Honeywell Esq., pays for an unlimited number of his tract addressed "TO THE YOUNG MEN OF AMERICA." It is an excelent tract, bearing the printed endorsement of Executive Committee of the National Christian Association1 He has furnished the public over 150.000 pages of these tracts during the past year.

—The Catholic Review of New York states that the statement widely published that the Romanist murderers of San Salvador were furnished with a passport to heaven by their bishop, is a hoax of the New York Herald. The Herald is not celebrated for over-scrupulousness, but that may have been a result of its Catholic training. If the name of the bishop is proved different from that signed to the murderous permits, the case would be more clear.

—The death of Rev. James McCabe was announced not long since, who, in his younger days, gave some attention to Odd-fellowship. In 1845–6 he served on a committee of revision of the "secret work," and, it is thought, wrote the conductor's charge. That service probably opened his eyes to the character of the system, for ever since he gave "the order," says a lodge organ, "very little attention, if any."

Home and Health Hints.

To Preserve a Bouquet.

When you receive a bouquet, sprinkle it with fresh water; then put it into a vessel containing some soapsuds, which nourishes the roots and keeps the flowers as good as new. Take the bouquet out of the suds every morning, and lay it sideways in fresh water, the stalk entering first into the water; keep it there a minute or two, then take it out, and sprinkle the flowers lightly by the hand with pure water. Replace the bouquet in soapsuds and the flowers will bloom as fresh as when gathered. The soapsuds need to be changed every third day. By observing these rules, a bouquet may be kept bright and beautiful for at least one month, and will last longer in a very passable state; but the attention to the fair but frail creatures, as directed above, must be strictly observed, or "the last rose of Summer" will not be "left blooming alone," but will perish.—American Artisan.

To Dry Cherries.—As cherries are here, those wishing to dry them will doubtless be satisfied if they follow this plan; Cherries intended to be dried must first be stoned, then spread on flat dishes, and dried in the sun or warm oven; pour whatever juice may run from them over them, a little at a time; stir them about, that they may dry evenly. When perfectly dry, line boxes or jars with white paper, and pack close in layers. Strew a little brown sugar and fold the top of the paper over them, and keep in a dry, sweet place.

Cucumber Pickles.—The old style of laying cucumbers down in brine, then when wanted for use soaking them out in a brass kettle to make them green, is tedious, and I think rather dangerous. Now, I have good, nice solid pickles that were put down last summer, and the following is my method of preparing them: I pick from the vines, wash carefully, and when dry put them in good cider vinegar; tie a paper over the top of the jar; some seal them, but I have not. I like this way very much.

All do not know that lemons sprinkled with loaf-sugar almost completely allay feverish thirst. They are invaluable in the sick-room. Invalids affected with feverishness can safely consume two or three lemons a day. A lemon or two thus taken at "tea-time" is recommended as an entire substitute for the ordinary supper of summer, and will often induce a comfortable sleep through the night, and give a good appetite for breakfast.

Make the bed time and rising of your little ones as pleasant and joyous as possible. A happy beginning and ending will be likely to carry the rest of the day. Help the little ones over the difficult places in learning to dress, the buttons and hooks and pins, in unreachable places for unexperienced hands. Let bed time be associated with a good frolic with some noise attending, a prayer to Jesus, the smoothing of the head with loving hands, the good night kiss, the quick and innocent sleep.

Fat Meat for Consumptives.—A taste for fat meats is, unfortunately, not universal among children, and when it does show itself it is often, almost universally, repressed by parents. This taste is an expression of the wants of the living system which we cannot disregard with impunity. Without fats the organism cannot be built up in perfection. Fats counteract the tendency to consumption. Observation has established the interesting fact that persons who in early life show a taste for fat meats seldom fall victims to that disease; and, vice versa, that consumptives have generally shown an early repugnance to such food. There can be no question as to the lesson taught by this fact, that when the appetite exists it ought to be indulged, and that, if possible, it ought, when wanting, to be created by tonics and abundant exercise in the open air.

Farm and Garden.

Taking Care of Tools.

It will not do in these days, to leave the plow in the furrow, the harrow in the field, and the mower or reaper under an open shed with a leaky roof. These and all lesser implements must be carefully put away in dry quarters, for to allow them to rust during the Winter will injure them more than several campaigns of active service. The depreciation of machinery is very rapid, even when properly cared for; when neglected, this depreciation is simply destruction, quick and sure.

Reapers, mowers and drills should be taken apart and cleaned, each bolt dipped in melted tallow, and then replaced. Every portion of wood and exposed iron should be covered with a good coat of paint, if not already thus protected, and all parts made of steel should be taken off, well anointed with olive oil and wrapped in paper or put away in a damp-proof tool house or store room. The machines themselves should be kept in a building with a tight roof over it, and fowls should not be permitted to get access to them. Poultry take a perverse delight in perching upon such implements, but no tidy farmer will gratify them to this extent.

Plows should be brought in, well washed and cleaned from the soil, the wood work coated with petroleum and the shares and mold-boards scoured off, polished, and then brushed over with a thick wash of lime. They will not then rust in the least, and in the spring will come out clean and bright. No salt should be brought in contact with tools of any kind, nor old salt sacks be thrown over them. Harrows should be cleaned, the wood work oiled with petroleum or painted, and the teeth taken out and sharpened for next season's service. All repairs should be made against time of need, to avoid vexatious delays in the hurry of planting or harvest. Mechanics still work for somewhat less in the winter than in summer, when they are busier, and that is an important consideration. Besides, that old adage about "a stitch in time" applies most forcibly to farm tools. Wagons should now be washed clean, and immediately painted and put under cover. It is only a simple truth that such care of tools and implements as we suggest will lengthen out their period of usefulness far beyond that of their ordinary endurance.—New York Tribune.

--Carefully-conducted experiments have demonstrated the fact that seasoned wood, well saturated with oil when put together, will not shrink in the dryest weather. Wheels have been known to run many years, even to wearing out the tires. Boiled linseed oil is the best for general use, although it is now known that crude petroleum on even old wheels is of great benefit.

An approximate rule, doubtless sufficiently accurate for most practical purposes, is given for the measurement of grain, fruit, herbs, etc., in house or box, as follows: Find the length, breadth, and depth, multiply them together, annex two ciphers, and divide the product by 124; the result will be the number of bushels, and the fractional remainder, if any, may be reduced to pecks and quarts.

If the subscription price of the CYNOSURE was $2.50 or $3.00 a year, the price of many religious papers containing no more reading matter, we might afford to pay the postage ourselves, but at $2.00 a year we cannot do this with our present Subscription list.

Therefore let all send the postage, 20 cents a year, 10 cents for half a year with their renewals.

The commission on one new subscription for a year will pay the postage on your own and the new subscriber's paper. We would rather have the postage paid by commissions than in any other way.

Topics of the Time.

The people of San Francisco give another version to the failure of the great Bank of the Pacific coast by the general respect paid to the memory of its president at his funeral. And if it shall prove true that politics and private commercial quarrels are the cause of the disaster, the newspaper ring which combined to deceive the public in the first reports cannot be too severely rebuked. The Bank of California with Ralston at its head has long been the leading institution of the kind on the coast, and has steadily worked against the foreign agencies to prevent too large an exportation of coin. Its efforts have kept paper money out of California. But from its vast influence in this and other enterprises, it naturally aroused political hostility, and two San Francisco papers seem to have been especially eager to destroy the Bank and its head. A rival corporation had also arisen in the Bank of Nevada, managed by some of the wealthiest stockholders in the Nevada mines, which could secure a footing only at Ralston's expense. They succeeded so well as to cause the temporary suspension of the Bank of California and indirectly the death of its president. The rumors of poison and extravagant speculations had too little foundation to save the honor of the Associated Press agent at San Francisco from impeachment. If this was an exceptional error it might be pardoned; but the perversion of news by the press agents, who send first over the wires, is notorious. Nothing would raise the character of our great papers in the esteem of the public more than a united effort to expel from his position every agent whose integrity and judgment is not a reasonable warrant that press and telegraph will not be used for wholesaling falsehood.

It is reported from Washington that the Government is about to turn over the Indians from the Interior to the War Department, as Gen. Sheridan and Custer have long advised. While it must be acknowledged that the change might effect some reform in the Indian management, it will and should be seriously objected to by thousands of honorable citizens whose judgement in the case is equal to that of Sheridan or Custer. The army is neither free from taint of corruption itself, nor are the quarrels it has provoked from the Indians any promise of peace when they are in its sole power. A change is needed in this bureau no one will deny, but it should be made in the present management of the Interior department. The Indian Peace Commissioners are able and willing to be of great assistance in their proper place, and what they have already accomplished in spite of the Indian ring has inspired public confidence; but when government officers combine with thieves against them, they are forced into a position not easily maintained with honor. Let a change be made; but in the Interior department itself. Let a competent and honorable man, unsworn to the lodge and the villains that shelter in it, take Delano's place and rid the Indian management of dishonesty and the country will be satisfied with the result.

The Jesuits of New Jersey are losing their shrewdness. In over-confidence they are organizing the Catholics into a political "Catholic Union," and have issued an address which states to the faithful of that church that the "Catholics," having failed to get what legislation they want for their schools and other institutions, must now bring such influences to bear upon the legislature as will enable them to secure what they call their rights. For this purpose they have formed a "Catholic Union," with the approbation of their ecclesiastical guides, and they bind themselves by a solemn pledge to work for their church, and especially in the line of political action. This issue has for some time been made by the Jesuit leaders, but carried forward in secrecy. They have steadily fought for the subversion of our school system, gaining advantages slowly, but in some States so surely that their success seemed only a question of time. But an open war their principles are too well understood in this country to endure the shock of political battle. When they worked, like the lodge, to undermine the public school system by perverting the conscience of our people, every sincere and godly man trembled at their power, but open war is welcome to the truth and its champions. He who directs the hearts of men will yet save His Word and people from their enemies.

The Light which never Misleads.

"And as he passed over Penuel the sun rose upon him."—Gen. xxxiii. 3. "His marvelous light."—1 Peter ii. 9.

Whence came he? From a darksome night;
From wrestling, toil and tears,
To walk once more in God's own light
The Victor of the years;
But erst all bruised beneath the rod.
But now a Prince and crowned of God!

Oh, sweet the light of darkness born,
The joy which sorrow brings;
The stars which gild the night forlorn,
The hope which anguish sings;
Sweeter that light God doth impart,
Which wounds and heals the broken heart.

There is a light, pale, pure and clear,
Like moonbeams on the snow,
Which shows vast wastes, cold, barren, drear,
Where no green thing can grow,
A light oft sought with failing breath,
Guiding alone to fields of death.

There is a light which brightly streams,
To dazzle and perplex;
Like lightning's flash it fiercely gleams,
To startle and to vex;
Brilliant, it shines but to give pain,
Reveals alone what it hath slain.

There is a light which many praise,
Gilds much without, within;
Which labors much, but cannot raise
A hope which conquers sin;
It makes the eye look bright and clear—
Much beauty gives; but not a tear!

There is a light both clear and dry
Which many oft will please!
The words of Christ it doth decry,
The conscience leaves at ease;
It bids our pride lift up its head,
But leaves the heart both cold and dead.

There is a light men do not praise,
Brings little wealth or fame;
Its children shun the public gaze,
Or die without a name;
Though men to it pay little heed,
It never has or can mislead.

This light the weakest eye can bear,
It clears the strongest sight;
Gives to God's flowers their odors rare,
Dispels the darkest night,
Robs pride indeed of all its breath,
And quickens faith in midst of death.

It bids the drooping lift their head,
Softens the heart of stone,
Brings life to those whose hope hath fled,
Directs to Christ alone:
Reveals a home 'neath cloudless skies,
Where beauty blooms and never dies.

Is night upon thee, drear and cold?
Does truth seem far away?
Oh, learn from God's own Prince of old,
How night was turned to day.
Long, long he prayed 'neath heavy skies.
Ere God's own sunshine cheered his eyes.

Be cheered, poor wrestler in the night,
Truth's music's sad and low;
The sun shall rise and bring thee light,
Hold fast, nor let hope go;
Each night shall bring its angel fair,
If thou wilt bow the knee in prayer.

Across the Lake.

BERLIN, Mich., Aug. 31. 1875.

DEAR CYNOSURE:— While the shades of evening were gathering we embarked in the good steamer Menomonie for a short vacation trip into the neighboring State of Michigan. After a pleasant night disturbed only by the mighty heart-beat of the huge leviathan of the deep and the gentle ripple of the waters, at dawn we took our station on the vessel's prow to see her enter the port. At first nothing was visable save the expanse of waters and the blue heavens above. Presently the shore line, mantled in the blue haze that covers distant mountains, rose before us. A wide gap in the range of hills that shut in our vision, and the port lights on either side disclosed our place of anchor, Grand Haven. With giant strides her prow steadily holding the port our noble vessel moved on and entered the haven in the advancing light. The blue hills gradually changed hues to their normal green interspersed with patches of yellow sand. The little city of Grand Haven gradually revealed itself, at least the part of it not covered with the shifting sand from the neighboring hills. Our noble young captain took his stand above us in front of the helmsman's house, and laid his hand upon the mane of the monster and we marveled to see how meekly it obeyed his gentle touch. The huge mass with all its living freight marched straight for the wharf till you could have laid your hand upon it and gently stood still without touching it and then softly its side came to the landing with no jolt nor jar and we could only tell when we were fully anchored by the passengers beginning to move toward the place of egress.

We thought of that other anchorage. Will it thus be when the voyage of life is ended? Shall we thus peacefully enter the haven of eternal rest? Has the Captain of our salvation the skill of this earthly commander to bring the good ship Zion safe through into port? Aye, this captain, skillful though he be, may make mistakes and lose his vessel and cause the death of those whose lives have been intrusted to his keeping, but the Captain of our salvation is able to save to the uttermost all who put their trust in Him.

While waiting for the cars to bring us to this place, I wandered out into the town to see what I could find. I soon found that I had not yet entered paradise, but was still where Satan's seat is. A fine brick building hung out the marks of the beast and bore the sign "Masonic Hall;" and a little farther on a still larger stone block bore the three mystic links of the devil's chain, fit emblem of the soul-bondage of the infatuated mortals who hold nightly conclave within. This timber region seems to afford ample hiding places for all the mystic brood, and the latest chick, the grange. has gathered in and securely broods over the honest yeomanry that have not yet come to trust the mother-bird Freemasonry.

We took seats in the cars of the Detroit & Milwaukee R. R., and 22¼ miles travel through a country mostly poor and sandy, much of it uninhabited, brought us to this place. For most of the distance the corn crop, small by reason of dry weather and late season, had been nearly or quite killed by the heavy frosts of a week before, and looked like corn-fields in November. The peach-trees were all dead and three-fourths of the apple-trees.

There is not more fruit than in Northern Illinois, and the apple-trees, especially the young ones, are, except on the highest clay lands, three-fourths killed. Even the common cherry has been mostly killed by the cold winter.

Sabbath found us seated in a neat country church, listening to the earnest, simple, truthful words of a Baptist minister; a large number of the young men and boys loafing outside the church while the glad news of the Gospel was being proclaimed within. The wall of lofty green elm and maple and beech trees that in every direction shut in the vision, the small fields, most of them covered with stumps, and the slow fires that are here and there consuming the growth of ages, that the next generation will need to keep off the cold, make a decided difference between this and Illinois scenery. The crops of small grain have been fair and quality good. Mostly fall wheat is sown on fallow ground. The farmers are now busy about their sowing.

Judge Marcy in the Morgan Trials.

[From Bench and Bar, by L. B. Proctor.]

On the fifth of January, 1829, William L. Marcy was appointed an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court by Martin Van Buren, then Governor of the State. Soon after his appointment he was directed, by Mr. Van Buren, to preside at a special Oyer and Terminer at Lockport, appointed for the trial of the alleged murderers of William Morgan. Prominent among those charged with complicity in that dark crime was Ezekiel Jewett, of the United States army, commanding at Fort Niagara during Morgan's confinement in that fortress. He was therefore brought to trial before Judge Marcy at the special Oyer and Terminer referred to.

At this period Anti-masonry had become an exciting element in politics; had in fact super-induced the most vindictive political contests known in history. In no place was this contest so furiously prosecuted as in the county of Niagara, for in it the scene of Morgan's murder was enacted. Some of the chief actors in it, holding distinguished civil and military positions, with powerful influences to sustain them, were to be tried before Judge Marcy. This, of course, rendered his position as the Judge presiding at their trial one of great delicacy and difficulty. Though a politician from his youth, down to the time of his appointment to a high judicial position, ardently engaged in promoting the prosperity of one of the great political parties of the times, few men were better qualified to hold the balance between political excitement and the inflexible administration of justice than Wm. L. Marcy.

When Col. Jewett was placed at the bar for trial, there was one individual who knew, or was supposed to know, the full extent of his guilt.

This was Orsamus Turner, who had been duly subpoenaed as a witness against the prisoner. Amid the most profound silence he took the witness stand; it was an event that had been looked for with intense interest, and the vast audience assembled believed that the hour had come when the fate of William Morgan was to be revealed to the world and his murderers duly punished.

John C. Spencer, who had been appointed Special Attorney-General to conduct the prosecution against these abductors and murderers, had labored, as we have seen in previous trials, with untiring zeal, devoting all the strength of his great intellect to the task of bringing them to justice, but as yet with little effect, now believed that his hour for triumph had come, and that from the lips of Turner damning proof against the prisoner was to be elicited.

With calm emphasis he answered the preliminary questions put to him. But when the first question touching the guilt of Jewett was propounded, paleness overspread his features, with rigid determination his lips closed, unflinching obstinacy shot from his eyes; no further answer could be extorted from him. The silence of Turner gave a deep and painful interest to the scene—an interest which almost suspended the respiration of many in the court room, producing those painful emotions—that almost freezing anxiety always experienced when watching a person in the act of invoking some fearful doom upon himself.

Judge Marcy, sitting erect on the bench, his arms folded, his heavy eyebrows slightly contracted, his deep-set, expressive eyes fixed intently on the prisoner, the stern impersonification of justice, was the central figure in this absorbing scene.

John C. Spencer, his tall form slightly inclined toward the witness, the lines of his mouth drawn aggressively close, a glow of excitement spreading itself over features at all times striking, giving them now a deeper and more impressive expression, proved his entire absorption in the case.

Jewett, cool, composed and confident, sat by his counsel, his whole manner evincing a consciousness that he was master of the situation.

At last the almost smothering silence that presided over the court room was broken by the voice of the Judge, saying in a voice and tone which none but William L. Marcy could command:

"Witness, are you fully aware of the consequences of your refusal to answer?"

"I am," was the firm reply.

"Witness, it is not only you, but society at large that will be seriously affected by your refusal; once more the Court will give you an opportunity to save yourself from the consequences of your rash obstinacy."

The question was repeated by Mr. Spencer with stern, but calm emphasis. The faint flush that overspread the face of Turner was his only response to the question. Another momentous silence followed. It was momentary, however, just protracted enough to indicate unmistakably that the witness did not intend to answer.

"Sheriff," said the Judge, "convey the witness to the common jail of the county, keep him in solitary confinement until you are ordered to discharge him by the court."

That officer, with his assistants, approached the witness stand, and through the densely crowded room Orsamus Turner was led away to the dungeons of Lockport jail. Long and weary was his confinement, but with his confinement obstinacy increased, and as he never answered, the real murderers of William Morgan were never brought to justice.

In the month of November, 1828, Mather, another of the alleged Morgan murderers, was brought to trial at a court of Oyer and Terminer, held at Albion, N. Y. At this trial Hon. Addison Gardiner, then one of the circuit judges, presided. The important legal questions decided by Judge Gardiner during its progress, and afterwards adjudicated in the appelate courts of the State, give it a distinguished place in legal history.

During this protracted and exciting contest a scene occurred nearly as exciting as the one described in the trial of Colonel Jewett. One William Daniels, a witness called against Mather, was asked by Mr. Spencer whether, on the 13th day of September, 1826, he was at the residence of Solomon H. Wright in Newfane? The witness declined to answer on the ground that his reply might implicate him in the transaction that occurred there. Mr. Spencer contended that as the abduction of Morgan took place in September, 1826, and the statute of limitations having attached, the answer of the witness could not criminate him, being protected by that statute, he was bound to answer.

The defense insisted that if the answer of the witness tended to his infamy he should be excused from answering. After elaborate arguments by the distinguished counsel, Judge Gardiner, in an able and transparent opinion, decided that the witness could not legally be compelled to answer. Mather was pronounced not guilty by the jury and another of Morgan's supposed murderers escaped.

An exception was taken to Judge Gardiner's ruling on this and many other points, and to portions of his charge to the jury.

What constitutes the crime of conspiracy? and who may be made conspirators? Where should the place of trial be laid in the case of conspiracy? What constitutes a challenge to a juror for principal cause? and what constitutes a challenge as to favor, and the exclusion of jurors for the expression of an opinion. What the facts on which a challenge rests are disputed, what cause is to be taken? Does the fact that the juror belongs to the order of Free and Accepted Masons constitute a proper ground of challenge in a case where a member of that order is on trial? Can there be a new trial ordered in a criminal case for the misdirection of the court, where there has been an acquittal? were some of the questions brought up by the bill of exceptions in this case. It was Judge Marcy's fortune to pronounce the opinion of the Supreme Court on three points, and we point to the opinion as one of the ablest found in the local reports of our own as well as any other State. Though some of the propositions submitted to him in that case had been previously decided in the learned opinion pronounced by Judge Woodworth in the case of the People vs. Vermilyea, yet very many of them were unsettled until considered and decided by Judge Marcy in the celebrated case of the People vs. Mather.

It is proper to add that the rulings of Judge Gardiner on the trial of this cas were all of them subsequently affirmed by the Supreme Court on appeal.

Thus the reader will observe that in the affairs of government, in social relations, in matters of religion, and in courts of justice, "the Morgan affair" was all absorbing,—pregnant with interest and excitement. Much connected with it was ephemeral and now forgotten in our preoccupied age. But there was much connected with it of thrilling interest that was indurated beyond the action of time—much that will repay the lawyer, the student and the lover of history to review.

To the legal student the opinion of Judge Marcy in the case of Mather is of great value, for its pleasing style, itatus mre thought, its sharply defined, well sustained positions and extra research.

The late David Woodcock of Ithaca, a distinguished lawyer, an able and eloquent representative in Congress, and a versatile scholar, once remarked that "William L. Marcy's style as a legal writer is not excelled by any judge of his times, that he blended in an admirable manner the treasures of language with the treasures of learning."

A pastor met a man on the street who had been absenting himself from the church. Before enquiring why he was doing so, he replied, "Well, I have been behind for a year or two, but I hope to get straightened up again and then be back to my place." By being "behind," he meant that his business affairs had not been paying, and that he wished to do without his religious privileges as a matter of economy. Of course it is all wrong in any one to reason so, for he should save some place else than in the cause of God; but it teaches a lesson in regard to the influence of pew rents and other methods of exacting church contributions. If it was possible all churches should be free. Then, while families might have their places of sitting, strangers and "straightened" people could without delicacy attend the worship. How can this reform be accomplished? By the liberality of Christians. If every Christian will rise above his avarice and set the example of generosity, pew rents and subscriptions will soon be done away with. In this respect Christians are the great hindrance to Christian progress.

Lodge Symbolism.

BY J. H. H. WOODWARD.

We read in the fables of antiquity of that grey time of yore, the golden age and reign of Saturn—that happy time, when liberty and equality, justice and virtue were still ruling, and the inhabitants of the earth lived like gods, in perfect security, without pains and cares, and exempt from the burdens of old age. When the soil of the earth gave them fruits without laborious cultivation, when they were unacquainted with sickness and died away as if overtaken with sweet slumber; and when the lap of earth received their dust and their souls enveloped in light air remained as genii with the survivors.

From these times and upon these ideas is based the grand Masonic idea of equality. These are the halcyon days for which Masons sigh—the happy times when brotherly love, universal peace, concord of sentiment, harmony of action, amity and innocence as handmaids everywhere prevailed, and joy and sunshine overspread earth and heaven. When men were without guile, knew no wrong, and perpetrated no evil, and malice was without a lurking place. Masons yearn for such delights and times as these, not for the universal race of man, but for themselves alone, as the children of the sun, the elect of God, the self-righteous of earth.

Now Saturn in conjunction with Janus (another name for old Sol) inaugurated the golden age in the plains of Latium and is said to have reigned over men with wisdom and benignity. On having recourse to almost any Masonic (illustrated) Monitor, there will be found among the symbols of the Entered Apprentice degree, one showing a clouded canopy containing a number of stars and Jacob's Ladder which should be provided with seven rounds, and is, if correctly drawn. This is the symbol of a Mason's lodge. Again, on referring to the symbols of the Master Mason's degree, among them will be found one exhibiting the All-seeing Eye, sun, moon, stars, a comet and the human heart. This is the symbol of Masonic government. Now if the number of stars, in either of the symbols referred to, be counted, the number when ascertained will be found to be exactly seven, and precisely this number of Master Masons are required to constitute a perfect lodge, to wit: the master, two wardens, treasurer, secretary and the two deacons.

Again, on examining the stars depicted in either of the symbols named, they will invariably be found to be five pointers, and a five pointed star is the symbol of the Master Mason. These seven stars are the seven original planets of the solar system, and are personified by the seven constituting officers of the Master Mason's lodge. In the astro-mythological arrangement of the Masonic system, Saturn is made to represent the lowest constituting officer in rank, and corresponds with the first round in Jacob's Ladder, and in Masonic jurisprudence the junior deacon is the lowest constituting officer in the Masonic scale. He is appointed by the senior warden and in Masonic law is that officer's proxy. To the junior deacon is assigned a jewel to designate his rank, and that jewel is a square and compass with a quarter moon (lunette) in the center, which shows his intimate relationship with his superior officer, the senior warder, who is the personified moon, Queen Isis, or Ceres, as you may fancy. This jewel is worn suspended by the junior deacon from a blue velvet collar bordered with silver fringe.

Now on recurring to the Masonic emblems, we find as previously stated, that the level is allotted to the senior warden, and this emblem exactly typifies that equality which existed in the golden age, in the administration of that government in which Saturn took so prominent a part, and as the lowest constituting star of the Masonic galaxy he is personified by the junior deacon and in Masonic parlance, astro-mythologically speaking, Saturn is the junior deacon. Now how completely, be it observed, harmonize the stars, the officers and the sentiment or principles they represent!

But there is another figure under which the Masonic fraternity borrow their idea of equality, and it is almost sacrilege to mention it. It is this: there is no attribute of Almighty God that they do not appropriate, either directly or under a figure for their Masonic trinity; and the religious basis for their equality upon this view of the matter is that God is no respecter of persons, therefore Masonry declares she "regards no one for his worldly wealth or honors, but that it is the internal and not the external qualifications of a man that should recommend him to be made a Mason." Oh! you sons of Osiris, Bacchus and Baal, fall down and ask the forgiveness of that God whose power you defy, whose goodness you profane. and whose mercy you mock, by the base attempts to imitate His government, which you least understand! Ask mercy of Him, whose puissance is to you unknown, whose ways are inscrutible, and whose secrets no sin-worshiping Mason of this or any other generation ever yet fathomed or can fathom. May He extend to you that charity of which you stand so sorely in need, but which you would if you could, so impiously deny to the other children of His creation who are without the pale of your Masonic fellowship. And in conclusion one word more—an admonition—remember that he who dies with the guilty impiety and blasphemy of Masonry on his soul, can never, never enter that "spiritual temple eternal in the heavens, that house not made with hands" where the great Creator and his holy angels dwell.

The Wiles of Rome.

Louis N. Beaudry is a Methodist minister of French parentage and raised a rigid Romanist. He had a good opportunity of studying Protestant and Catholic communities and has written his experiences in a small volume, "Spiritual Struggles of a Roman Catholic." The Methodist Advocate has the following review:

One of the strongholds of Romanism is the idea that there is no salvation out of the Catholic church. It holds and teaches this dogma not only without equivocation but with great force. All Protestant churches, however moral, intelligent, cultivated and holy their members, it holds as mere "human institutions, which serve only to lead men astray;" that Protestantism is a protest against Christ and his church, against all law and Gospel; that it is a sin to read a Protestant book or attend the service of any Protestant church. These thoughts are impressed on the mind from childhood and the members of that denomination are made to believe that these positions are true. This is the reason why Catholics never attend the meetings of other churches in this country.

Romanism takes care of the children. First it claims them, that is, all children of Romanists, Protestants and heathen, as belonging to that church, and that it has the right by Divine appointment, and is therefore bound to rescue all that it possibly can by fair means or foul from either the one or the other of its opponents. A Romanist priest under oath has made the following statement: "I believe I have Divine authority to secure Protestant children from their Protestant mothers and make them Catholics. I deny the right of a Protestant minister to do the same." To accomplish this end, a Catholic priest will baptize a child of Protestant parents when brought to the church by a servant or nurse and then claim it as a member of the Catholic church. This has undoubtedly been done in a large number of cases in this country. In 1858, a boy seven years old, named Edgar Mortara, the son of a Jew residing at Bologna, Italy, who had been baptized by a servant girl, according to the Catholic church, was claimed by the priests, kidnapped or stolen away from his parents and educated in a Roman Catholic school, and became a monk. The Romish church claims all children and does not scruple at any artifice to get control of them, and when once in her power they are trained, prejudiced and warped as best suits her ends.

Like the Jewish Church, which was mostly symbolical and preparatory to the spiritual dispensation of our blessed Saviour, Romanism appeals to the external senses through symbols or an elaborate system of object teaching. Mr. Beaudry says: "The artist is doing vastly more in the church than the priest. The elaborate paintings on the walls of the churches; the gorgeous display of ornaments on the high altars; the splendid crucifixes and ponderous statues; the ever burning lamps and tapers; the swinging and smoking censers; the oratorios performed in the highest style of the musical art on pealing organs; the gaudy attire of officiating priests and acolytes or attendants, with the varied and theatrical changes of the services, are the chief attractions, both gravitating and cohesive of the church. Preaching is but a small item in the services and often there is no preaching at all." To the minds of those schooled in superstition, such performances and varied display must be impressive.

Again, remarks Mr. Beaudry, "The church ingeniously furnishes to every one of her members, old and young, good, bad, and indifferent, something considered religious to do or bear in nearly all her services and every day of life." This is done with crucifixes, prayer-books, beads or rosaries, scapulars, holy water, and other trinkets consecrated by the priest, and for which they have a superstitious regard, together with processions, mass, fastings and penance. Here is, indeed, something for everybody. The best and the worst are all directly interested in church duty and made to participate in religious performances. No matter what the outward life may be—drunkenness, profanity and debauchery are no barrier to church fellowship and devotional services. Indeed, it sometimes seems that the more wicked the conduct the more devout the performance of religious acts. We may wonder at the hallucinations under which these things are maintained, but must admit that there is great power in these devices, especially when in the hands of designing, skillful and unscrupulous men.

But the stronghold of Romanism is the confessional. Here the priest sits as a prince with the power of life and death over his subjects, and here all are taught from early childhood to come with trembling footsteps as into the presence of God. By trickery and the cultivation of superstitious dread of the priest. the people are held in the most abject subjection and fear. Not only, says our author, is each sin to be revealed to the priest, "but also the number of times each has been committed in thought, word and deed, with every attendant circumstance, including even dreams with their effect upon waking thoughts and actions. Numerous stories, like the following, are related in nearly all of their books of instruction to the young: A young lady of eighteen was guilty of a secret sin which she was ashamed to confess. She was soon brought upon a bed of death, where she was tormented and in despair. She died, and in three days after she appeared to one of her friends in a vision and spoke these words: 'Do not pray for me, sister. I am damned on account of a sin I committed alone. I might easily have obtained pardon by confessing it (to the priest), but did not, and have thus brought upon myself deepest damnation,' that is, by not confessing to the priest. "It is currently reported among college students that if any one is inclined to hide sin from a priest, the confessor sees a serpent's head protruding from the sinner's mouth," etc.

A woman had a brass kettle stolen by her washerwoman, who denied the theft. She reported to the priest, and when the woman came to confession he said, "Hark! what sound is this I hear like the rattling of a brass kettle!" The woman supposing that the priest had this knowledge in some supernatural way, confessed her guilt and returned the kettle to its owner. This shows how contemptible tricks are played off upon the deluded people by these deceivers. These priests are beyond the reach of the law and refuse, under all circumstances, to communicate what they learn at the confessional. It opens before them the secret thoughts of the wayward and frail, and gives them every possible opportunity to take advantage of the weakness of those around them. One of our missionaries in South America says that there a man dare not enter his own house when he sees the shoes of the priest at the door, till after his ecclesiastical tyrant shall have concluded his visit and left the house. They claim to be "above governments, emperors, kings and princes, as much as the heavens are above the earth. The angels and archangels are much below priests," etc.

And these priests are they who are seeking to gain the mastery of this country and of whom Bishop Gross says they will have control of it within ten years! They are enemies both of our religion and of our nation. All Protestant churches should combine to counteract their wiles and save the people from being ensnared by them.

From the Watchman and Reflector.

"That Simoon."

BY REV. G. W. HARRIS, BATTLE CREEK, MICH.

Editor of the Watchman and Reflector:—In his late address on Dr. Bene dict, and in reference to his experience as a Mason, Dr. Robinson speaks of that "simoon of Anti-masonry," which "left desolation in its track," and prays that "it may never come back again." This has been the Masonic method of referring to the excitement of 1826–30 since Masonry crept out of the den in which it was driven, and in which, for twelve years, it was concealed. The habit of Masons and the friends of Masonry is to speak of it as a "terrible simoon," a "whirlwind of fanaticism," or something equally bad. I have, however, a lively recollection of that excitement, but it has left on my mind no such terrible image of desolation, and it is sad to read such words from one of Dr. Robinson's character and position. There was excitement, but it was as the storm-cloud bursts, dispelling noxious vapors, and purifying the whole atmosphere. And Dr. Robinson's reference to it is not justified by any sober consideration of the facts in the case, and the only condition on which I could possibly unite with him in the wish he expresses, is that we may never have another provocation for such an excitement. This I hardly dare hope for. The provocation is likely to be continued, if not in a repetition of the outrages of 1826, in the existence and necessary workings of Masonry. The institution is a standing menace to the uninitiated, and Charles Sumner never said a truer word than when he said, "A secret society is a conspiracy against all other societies." Such an institution is to be regarded with jealousy and distrust, and its friendly relations to general society can hardly be expected.

As to the excitement of forty-five or fifty years ago, I know that it was justified—a thousand times justified—by the outrages which gave rise to it. Francis Granger told the exact truth, in the New York Assembly of 1828, when he charged the cause of it, not upon Anti-masons, but upon Masons, who did the kidnapping, arson and murder,—then justified these crimes by Masonic law, and then mocked at all efforts to bring the offenders to justice, —boasting of the power of the institution to screen its criminals, and making good its boasts by actually rescuing them from the clutches of the civil law. Masons claimed the right to inflict capital punishment on one of their own members who had exposed the swindle, and to exercise this right without interference from the civil power, and this power it did thwart and set at defiance at every step. Its relations to the civil government were that of an empe ium in emperio, and the government within the government must have full power to deal with those who had violated their obligations according to the letter of the penalty. What had the civil law and outside society to do with Masonic offenders? Hence, Masons said to those who enquired about the fate of Morgan, "He is put where he will stay put, and what is that to you? Look after your criminals, and we will look after ours."

This was the Masonic spirit of 1826-7, and when committees met in Western New York to investigate the facts in regard to Morgan's fate, they were beset with hootings, insults and persecutions, bitter beyond precedent. Indeed, Masonry was not only responsible for the excitement, but the Masonic spirit was itself infinitely the worst part of the excitement. At first it was violent, vindictive and murderous; but after Anti-masonry rose in its might, it became reticent, and sullen and sour, and retired to its cave, muttering vengeance. The agitation had its incidental unpleasantness, to be sure, as any reform must; but the work was a necessary one; it was forced upon an outraged community, and could not have been avoided. Had the people of Western New York ignored the outrages, as Masons desired them to do, indeed, had they not moved heaven and earth to ferret them out, they would have been the tamest set of cowards and slaves the world has ever known. The spirit which those daring crimes awakened was characterized by Judge (afterwards Governor) Throop as a "blessed spirit," and it was blessed in its purifying results, both upon the politics and the religion of that day. The churches were purged of a dark and unwholesome leaven, and powerful revivals soon followed. The pulpit and the religious press no longer pandered to the spirit of pride and vain-glory which had so long, to the disgust of single-hearted Christians, animated the bosom of the "old hand-maid."

I know nothing of the position which Dr. Benedict held as a Mason at the time referred to, but if, like a few ministers I do remember, he justified the murder of Morgan, and scouted the efforts made to bring to justice the perpetrators, and glorified the institution in the fulsome style of certain reverend orators, as the "hand-maid of religion," an institution so divine, glorious and powerful, that "the world in arms could not put it down," then I have no tears to shed over the simoon which swept him from his pulpit. Christian ministers, Christian men generally, felt themselves happily absolved from the institution by the very acts by which it seemed to have made of itself a suicide. In the State of New York 45,000 emancipated themselves, and of 300 lodges, all but about 75 gave up their charters. It was all demanded by a righteous, outraged public opinion, if not by higher considerations. Said John Quincy Adams, "It is my deliberate opinion that, from the time of the commission of the crimes committed at the kidnapping and murder of William Morgan, it became the solemn and sacred, civic and social duty of every Masonic lodge in the United States, either to dissolve itself, or to discard forever all administration of oaths and penalties, and all injunctions of secrecy of every kind to its members." Should it have been necessary for any minister of the Gospel of Christ to have waited for argument or persuasion to induce him to abandon the most wicked institution in the world?

In the name of all that is sacred and decent, what has a minister of Christ to do with that compound of heathenism, infidelity and tomfoolery, called Freemasonry? The most amiable, and least harmful thing about it is its tomfoolery, but ministers do not need even this. There are enough taken up with this, although it requires a peculiar grade of fools in grown up men to be pleased with it. Cadwalader D. Colden, an eminent citizen of New York of fifty years ago, and a Mason, said, "I never knew a very great Mason who was not a very great fool;" explaining that by a very great Mason, he did not mean a great man who had been a Mason, but a man who was "proud of the pompous titles of the institution, who was fond of its decorations; who persuaded himself that the affairs of the world all turn upon grips, signs and pass-words, and that without Masonry society could hardly exist, or if it did, would be deprived of its fairest ornament, and most beneficial arrangement." Am I censurable, if I do not want to hear "a great Mason" preach, nor aid in supporting him? Am I called upon to admire one who has been through the degrading and unmanly process of initiation, who has taken upon himself the horrid oaths and imprecations of the order, and will then unite with a profane brotherhood in singing "Hail Masonry divine?" Ministers need not say they are influenced by curiosity when they go into the lodge, for the expenditure of a few shillings will enable them to possess themselves of the whole thing, without allowing themselves to be taken to the preparation room, divested of their clothing, and with a dirty hood drawn over their faces, and a dirty blue rope coiled about their necks, then led into a gaping crowd in search of "light," and made to swear never to say anything about it after they find it, And is this necessary to make a minister influential? Not with me by any means; and I would welcome, not a deadly "simoon," but a hurricane of respectable proportions, to sweep it forever from the churches of Christ.

[Our publication of the foregoing from an old friend of forty years—who has seen good service in the cause, especially as an able journalist—must not be accepted as an endorsement of what he has written. We shall presume that Freemasonry is not the institution now-a-days that it was as revealed to the youthful eyes of our friend.—ED. WATCHMAN AND R.]

Third Annual meeting of the Indiana State Association meets in White's Hall, Marion, Grant Co., Oct. 12, at 7 P. M.

Michigan State Meeting at Yipsilanti, Oct. 27–29.

Friends in Michigan will take Notice

That the first anniversary of the Michigan Anti-secrecy Association has been appointed by the State Executive Committee at Ypsilanti, October 27, 28th and 29th. This time is well chosen to accommodate some of the best speakers in our reform, who are expected to be present, and it is very desirable that there should be a large representation from all parts of the State. The convention will be the opening of the fall and winter campaign, which promises to be a vigorous and successful one. The work in Michigan has suffered for want of a State agent and lecturer, but this want is now supplied by the action of the State Executive Committee, by the appointment of Rev. A. H. Springstein, a seceding Mason of three degrees, who will enter at once upon his work and from whom the Cynosure readers will hope to hear often. Those who know Bro. S. need no word of commendation or endorsement to insure him of a hearty welcome to their Christian fellowship and homes, and those who do not know him personally, may form a most pleasing and profitable acquaintance by arranging for meetings and sending for him. I trust the friends throughout the State will give to this brother a hearty reception and ample support. He is rich in faith, abundant in labors and consecrated to the work to which he believes the Master has called him.

But, brethren, remember that he has a body as well as a soul, and a family whom God has decreed "shall not live by bread alone," nor yet by faith without bread. I trust the friends by their fervent prayers and liberal contributions, will secure to this brother a happy admixture of these two essentials to his success. It would be to their advantage as well as to his to do so. Half-fed horses are unprofitable because they can do only half-work, while over-fed, pampered animals soon become lazy and useless; so with ministers and agents. Too much for the corporeal, induces lethargy, requiring frequent treatment at fashionable places of resort, or in severe attacks only a trip to Europe or the Holy Land will effect a perfect restoration. While, on the other hand, leanness often drives good men from fields of labor where they might be eminently useful, into inaction and obscurity. There is between the two extremes a golden mean in which Bro. Springstein would soon become a terror to the evil-doers of the secretism, and a praise to them who do well, wherever they are found. The report received from the meeting of the Executive Committee at Jackson on the 31st ult., is brief, but judging from the facts given, they ordered wisely and well. These brethren, as well as friends elsewhere, may be assured of the hearty co-operation of the N. C. A. and of each of its actuaries. True, we cannot always do what we would, but we are striving for the approval of Him who said to the woman, "She hath done what she could." J. P. STODDARD.

Anti-secrecy in "Egypt."

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Allow me to inform your readers that we are on the war path in Pulaski county, Southern Illinois. Secrecy has swayed the scepter for a long time. Men of anti-secret principles have been pointed out as being ignorant. The U. P. church has been a source of annoyance to the craft on the question of its honored position on account of secrecy, and crafty men have been making desparate efforts to clog her wheels, and in order to accomplish their hellish designs, they have resorted to every means; base falsehoods have been circulated; jack Masons have been heard to bray on the highest hills. What a fearful fuss these fellows make! One would think while hearing them, that these were the earnest men, but what do they say? "We don't know anything about Masonry." Why defend it then? "Because all great and good men were Masons;" and then comes a long, loud meaningless bawl from the crafty jack which drives any intelligent person to the conclusion that they desire an evil thing.

But the brilliant light that has been shed forth by the Cynosure, and the privilege of looking through the Religious Telescope has enabled the pious and intelligent people of this country to see the mustering forces of the great reform. Through these means they have learned that there is an association putting lecturers in the field against the lodge, and facing the enemy. Duty called us to enter our solemn protest against lodge-work, and for this purpose we appealed to the State Agent for a lecture. The news went out that on the 20th and 21st of August, lectures would be delivered in opposition to secrecy. Of course the Masons and jacks said much about the effect it would produce.

But time went on. Friday the 20th, came and brought C. A. Blanchard, the well-known, able and fearless defender of truth. The first evening a tolerably fair audience appeared at the place appointed for lecturing, which was nothing but a country schoolhouse; but nevertheless there were many anxious hearts, filled with true patriotic zeal, and with a great desire to hear an anti-secrecy lecture. Quite a number of the crafty brotherhood were present, and Bro. Blanchard commenced the first anti-secrecy lecture in the county. All was peaceful and quiet; nothing occurred to interrupt the speaker, but it was actually diverting to see the Masons when Bro. Blanchard proved so clearly to the minds of the people that the so-called ancient and honorable Masonic order was hatched in a London grog shop. Those crafty fellows would fetch a squirm and a twist which showed that their jewels were in danger of being lost.

After showing very clearly that the order was founded upon a fraud and a lie, the speaker passed on to show that instead of all great and good men belonging to the Masonic order the most pious and intelligent men of our nation were and are to-day Antimasons. After looking at the benevolence of the order, the first lecture closed without any objections or denials upon the part of the craft.

The second evening brought out a large crowd. Enough were present to have filled the house quite full, but a number of timid fellows staid out of doors. But all listened attentively to the speaker who deliveren a very able lecture which had a telling effect. At the close a few questions were asked and answered, when a poor silly dupe, noted for drunkenness, stretched himself up and tried to blow his bad breath in the people's face, but soon became ashamed and left the house. The majority of those present went away feeling that Masonry was of the devil.

Sabbath morning the Masons rallied to the defense. At the appointment of the Southern Methodist preacher, who is a Royal Arch Mason, on Sabbath, at 11 o'clock, A. M., the subject of Masonry was taken up. He went at it with great vigor, and in the course of an hour he drew up the reins out of breath, and well exhausted. The stuff he poured forth the Masons took in as if famished, and think it achieved for them a glorious victory. Sabbath night Bro. Blanchard preached for us and while he compared the Gospel of Christ to the gospel of Masonry, it was easy for any Christian to see the vast difference.

Bro. Blanchard delivered two lectures and preached two sermons for us, which were highly appreciated by all who heard, except a very few crafty men. These efforts will result in great and lasting good. At the close of these meetings expressions like this were heard: "Had it not been for these truths being presented to my mind, in less than six months I would have been in the lodge."

May the Lord hasten the time when these dens of iniquity and sinks of hell shall be removed from our fair land.

Yours for purity,

H. J. MULHOLLAND.

Lectures and Organization in Jasper County, Iowa.

LYNNVILLE, Iowa, Aug., 25, 1875.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

According to previous arrangements, Bro. James Hankins made us a telling lecture at Friends meeting-house in Lynnville, on the evening of the 13th, to a full house on the subject of Masonry. The craft was well represented. They kept their jewels until after the lecture was over and then you could hear them making expressions about the speaker in Masonic style; they knowing the truth was told, which they do not like to be brought to light. We are informed that the Methodist preacher made the expression, "The Quakers have let a jack bray in their house."

On the next day Bro. Hankins attended our quarterly meeting, which he said was pleasant to him, and his company and labors were very acceptable to us. On the seventh day evening he lectured out here at Chester, to a good audience, although the evening was rainy. Much good was done. May the Lord bless him in his labors, and guide him here for another lecture soon.

While here he also organized a Jasper county Christian Association, which we hope will do much good. The officers of the association are President, James Arnold; Vice-president, C. F. Renard; Secretary, T. K. Bufkin; Treasurer, Ellie Gifford. Address of all, Lynnville, Jasper Co., Iowa.

More anon, T. K. BUFKIN.

The Ohio State Meeting.

The Ohio Christian Association Opposed to Secret Societies held its first anniversary at Xenia, August 10th and 11th. Though only one year old, this Association is large and influential. Rev. Dr. Wishart of Ontario, Ohio, was President last year, and has been succeeded by Rev. Dr. George, President of Geneva College. A large number of delegates assembled at the Second United Presbyterian church to hold the Convention, and a fine spirit prevailed.

Great interest was created by the presence of Rev. Mr. Cogswell of Mansfield, Ohio, and Mr. Edmund Ronayne of Chicago, two recently seceding Master Masons. Mr. Cogswell publicly renounced the order in Mansfield at an anti-secrecy convention held some months ago. He delivered an address at Xenia, explaining the penalties of the first seven degrees of Freemasonry. He dwelt upon the profane use of Scripture language and symbols in the lodge, showing that while such sacred things are used very freely there, they are perverted in the most sacrilegious manner. The fearful oaths and penalties of the order are blasphemous in the extreme; as inviting God to become a party to the most cruel and wicked imprecations. The oaths are not binding because God will not consent to them. The great thing to be achieved in Masonry is to find the Master's word, lost in the killing of Hiram Abiff at the building of the temple. The scenes of Masonry are borrowed from the Bible, yet they are not true to that book. Hiram was never killed. No word was lost. Mr. Cogswell's address was very able, but we have not space to reproduce it here.

Mr. Ronayne of Chicago, is a Past Master of Key-stone Lodge, No. 639, of that city. He has, for many years, been an expert in the work of initiating candidates into Freemasonry. The formulas and ceremonies he has at perfect control, and being a man of great ability in the use of language, and a fine actor, he can perform his part with the greatest success. He is now actively engaged in the public initiation of candidates, thus exposing the shameful operations of the lodge. He became convinced some months ago that Masonry is a swindle and a dangerous engine in society, and resolved to induct no more candidates. Being dealt severely with by the lodge, he at once began to expose its workings. He made several speeches at the Convention, and occupied two evenings in a public initiation of the Entered Apprentice, and the Fellow Craft. Thus he held hundreds of men and women electrified while showing them how their friends are outraged and debased in the act of initiation into the secret things of Masonry.

Bishop Weaver also addressed the Convention, and made a most favorable impression of his hostility to the dark works of the lodge. The friends of the Bishop throughout the church will rejoice in this evidence of his approval of the attitude of the church toward secrecy.

We met at the Convention such gentlemen as Dr. Carson, pastor of the church in which the Convention was held, and for one year President of the National Association Opposed to Secret Societies. Dr. Allison, also a Xenia pastor, John Finney, the veteran anti-slavery man of Mansfield, and Dr. Wilson of Xenia, besides many others not named as officers and speakers. The officers for the ensuing year are as follows: President, Rev. Dr. George; Vice-president, Rev. M. Long, of Freemont; Secretary, Rev. W. Dillon of Dayton, who was also elected State Agent and Lecturer; Treasurer, Mr. Mattoon of West Unity. Rev. J. P. Stoddard, Agent and Lecturer of the National Association, attended, and assisted us with his great energy and experience. A number of friends from Dayton attended, among whom were Rev. W. J. Shuey, Rev. John Kemp, and Rev. Mr. McNary, pastor of the United Presbyterian church. Dr. L. Davis was assigned a place upon the programme, but was unable to be present. The meeting was the best we have ever attended, either national or otherwise. The work is moving rapidly forward, and God's blessing is manifestly resting upon it. The secrets of Masonry and Odd-fellowship are no longer a thing to be bought by the payment of large initiation fees and eternal slavery. The anti-secrecy literature and the lectures of seceding members of the orders are throwing a flood of free light upon the world, which will produce its wholesome results upon society.—Telescope.

Correspondence.

Some of the Beauties of Masonry.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

Although not agreeing with you on all points discussed in the Cynosure, I admire your independence in fighting a system that should have been curbed to some extent at least, long since. There is no society, sect or organization that ever had an existence in the history of the world that did not, in the course of its progress, become arbitrary, excessive and tyrannical. Extremity seems to be a cardinal principle of the human heart; but, thanks to another principle equally as strong in the human composition, excesses soon encounter moderation, check and balance, and re-action is sure to follow sooner or later. But I did not sit down to moralize, but to write you up an incident that came under my observation several years ago, which will serve to illustrate the workings of secret societies in general and Masonry in particular.

I think it was in the winter of 1871–2, that the incident, or rather tragedy occurred. I was then, as I am now, the publisher of a country newspaper, of modest pretensions it is true, yet I have always had an ambition to be up with my city contemporaries in all that pertains to news, sensations, local items, etc. I am never delighted so much as when my paper is filled with startling incidents of a tragical, romantic, wild, or sensational character.

I had heard that a newly born infant was found in a well in a small village about twelve miles from the county-seat, where I was then publishing my paper, and anxious to obtain all the facts for publication as soon as possible, dispatched a man to the scene with instructions to obtain every incident connected with the murder that it was possible to get hold of. He soon returned and had succeeded admirably. The infant had been discovered by a farmer who went to the well to get water for his horses. It had evidently been alive when born, but had either been killed before being thrown into the well, or had been thrown in alive. The latter theory seemed the more probable. The coroner was summoned, a jury impannelled, and an investigation commenced. All the evidence pointed to a "certain young lady as the mother," and a "certain middle-aged man as the father," and that the two had conspired together to get rid of the fruits of their guilt, was undeniable. These facts being conceded by all, of course the next thing to be done should have been the arrest of the guilty parties, their trial and punishment, but, to the surprise of all, the coroner, when he had reached the point in the investigation revealing the murderers, began to equivocate and show signs of weakening, and finally abruptly adjourned the inquest, to meet at another time and place! Before assembling again, the mouths of certain knowing ones were hushed in a mysterious manner. A physician who was supposed to be possessed of convincing facts, was induced to leave the country, and when the inquest assembled again, the testimony was vague, unimportant and flat, and the jury finally returned a verdict that the child came to its death from some cause unknown to them.

My reporter had informed me who the mother and father of the child were, and I had also learned who was the probable murderer, and you may therefore, imagine my astonishment at the final verdict of the jury. To me it was a plain case, and I knew that some of the jury at least, and the coroner positively, knew all about the case. But I could not understand it. However, I concluded to investigate the extraordinary action of the coroner and his jury and was not long in ascertaining from one of their own number that the father of the murdered infant, the coroner, several members of his jury, and several near relatives of the girl, were high and influential members of the different Masonic lodges in the county, and and had all conspired to hush up the diabolical crime!

The father and mother of the baby are still moving in the first circles of society in this city (they both moved here shortly after the murder), and I meet them almost every day. They hold their heads just as high and move through the world with as much impudence and effrontery as if they were as innocent as lambs. Of course the members of the Masonic fraternity here know that they are guilty, but associate with them just the same.

I shall not attempt to point out the moral of this true story, because it carries with it its own moral that all thinking persons will readily see. It is a specimen, at least of the workings of Masonry.

Respectfully,

TRUTH.

Words of Cheer.

KNOXVILLE, Ill., Aug. 30th., 1875.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

Yes, I want the Cynosure continued another year at least, for I like it well. I was slow at first to subscribe, supposing it was like too many of the religious journals which take the name of "Christian" merely to be popular with religious people. But now I am satisfied that it is in fact a religious paper, not of the modern type, but taking truth for its motto and the Bible for its base, and like Gen. Grant in the war, "'Tis the right man in the right place and is going to fight it out on that line."

I was speaking to one of my neighbors, whom I thought an Anti-mason, but found him to be only a non Mason, about subscribing. After learning that Mr. Blanchard was one of its editors, he would have nothing to do with it. He knew him in Galesburg and he was always fighting somebody. For my own part I thought that was just the kind of men we needed and if we had more fighting editors and ministers there would be more hope for future reform. If the Christian cause is a warfare between two great kingdoms of light and darkness, there must be some battles fought. We can't all be neutrals, not even act on the skirmish line. And it must be aggressive war, for all the enemy wants is "to be let alone," and if only let alone the consequence will be sure success and victory on their part, and total defeat to their opponents.

I only thought of offering a little commendation to the Cynosure, but will venture to present a little query: Is not the good time drawing near when according to Daniel's prophecy: "The people and saints of the Most High shall take the kingdom"? The thought has forced itself upon me since the Pittsburgh Convention and its political movement which I freely endorse. It would seem that the "beast" has had the kingdom and power most long enough. I will send on the subscription money as soon as I get threshing done and grain marketed. And in the meantime if I can raise a subscriber or two, I will. Free-masonry abounds and rules here although there is a fair proportion of non Masons, yet few Anti-masons that dare speak or act. The waters need stirring and troubling just here. Very respectfully,

H. M. BAILEY.

Odd-fellow Sharpness.

FORT BRANCH, Ind., Aug., 1875.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I desire to give you a little sketch of matters and things in this part of the pocket of Indiana. Secretism here reigns supreme, even those not connected with the lodge are so much under its influence that they either defend it or are culpably neutral in regard to it. We have had quite an illustration of their vaunted charity. A short time ago a man died in this neighborhood who was both an Odd-fellow and granger. The Odd-feilows notified the bereaved family to have the corpse at the cemetry at a certain hour that they might bury him according to the rites and ceremonies of Odd-fellowship; but the grangers in this neighborhood never having had the luxury of a public display of that kind prevailed on the family to start one hour sooner, consequently he was buried a granger. But soon after they got through, the Odd-fellows made their appearance with their fantastic regalia of colors and painted sticks which might have been taken for a procession of Celestials in honor of their heathen deities. But though defeated they had their revenge. There is a kind of life insurance institution in this lodge, and although the brother died insolvent, and had paid all his dues but six dollars, they made that a plea to cut the widow out of the insurance money amounting to about two thousand dollars. That is charity with a vengeance!

A Canvasser's Notes.

BUTLER, Ind., August 26, 1875.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

I will with your consent lay before your readers a few of my adventures with the craft in selling our publications. A very consequential Mason to whom I offered to sell a book lately, informed me that we could not possibly have any idea of the great power of the enemy against whom we were contending. I assured him that in this respect he was mistaken. "We know," said I, "his power, and are not ignorant of his devices, for we contend with Satan himself. But you are contending against a mightier foe; you are fighting against God, therefore you have an enemy more potent than ours."

A Methodist minister who wears a Masonic pin assured me that Masonry was religion and that it helped him along greatly in religious matters! I told him that if it was a religion those who adopted it as such might as well burn their Bibles as there was evidently a great difference between the two systems of religion. I heard the same gentleman preach soon after and noticed a peculiar expression of his countenance as he read the text, "Let your light so shine," etc. He evidently felt like the pro-slavery man who heard the Declaration of Independence read and thought that it had been written by an abolitionist. What a troublesome book the Bible must be to such men.

Yours, SUSAN EVANS.

OUR MAIL.

N. F. Murray, Elm Grove, Mo., writes:

"I fully endorse your paper and am a warm friend of the cause it advocates. I have always been opposed to secret societies of all grades. Was brought up in the faith by my father who was one of the early anti-slavery and anti-secret society men in Virginia. I expect to work and vote with our new reform party."

T. J. Muzzy, Joliet, Ill., writes:

"I have been highly edified by reading the Cynosure for the last year. I can wish it hearty God-speed. The hidden works of darkness will be brought to light. I am trying to circulate the Cynosure; find some that don't want it, and some that won't read it. So much apathy is discouraging. Almost all seem to be opposed to Masonry but they won't say anything. The fact is their opposition is all a sham."

Thos. Relyea, Waterloo, N. Y., writes:

"I cannot do without the Cynosure. I esteem very highly the political sentiment it is carrying out. I received a lot of Honeywell tracts, all of which I have circulated."

Isaac W. Lowman, Auburn, Ind., writes:

"I am truly in sympathy with the design of your publication. For over a year it has been making its regular weekly visits to my desk, and is not laid by till its contents are carefully perused. Masons, Odd-fellows and grangers largely abound in these parts. Cannot a lecturer be sent to Auburn or vicinity?"

John Gambles, Gambles, Pa., writes:

"I send you three new subscribers which will fill out my quota for the Banner Company. But I do not mean to stop here. If Mr. Clark has abandoned his Company we still have the Cynosure and shall press toward victory."

Orson Chamberlin, Webberville, Mich., writes:

"You can put me down as a life subscriber. I want to do all I can to help and support such a great and glorious cause. I was born and brought up where they butchered Morgan, and there is not a man on earth who hates and despises Masonry more than I do. I hope to see the day when it will be banished off the face of the earth."

The Sabbath School.

Lesson for Sept. 19.—The Resurrection and the Life.

SCRIPTURE.—John 11: 34-44. Commit 39-44; Primary Verse, 36.

34 And said, Where have ye laid him? They say unto him, Lord, come and see.

35 Jesus wept.

36 Then said the Jews, Behold how he loved him!

37 And some of them said, Could not this man, which opened the eyes of the blind, have caused that even this man should not have died?

38 Jesus therefore again groaning in himself cometh to the grave. It was a cave, and a stone lay upon it.

39 Jesus said, Take ye away the stone.

Martha, the sister of him that was dead, saith unto him, Lord, by this time he stinketh: for he hath been dead four days.

40 Jesus saith unto her, Said I not unto thee, that, if thou wouldst believe, thou shouldst see the glory of God?

41 Then they took away the stone from the place where the dead was laid. And Jesus lifted up his eyes, and said, Father, I thank thee that thou hast heard me.

42 And I knew that thou hearest me always: but because of the people which stand by I said it, that they may believe that thou hast sent me.

43 And when he thus had spoken, he cried with a loud voice, Lazarus, come forth.

44 And he that was dead came forth, bound hand and foot with grave clothes; and his face was bound about with a napkin. Jesus saith unto them, Loose him, and let him go.

The Raising of Lazarus.

We seem to trace in the Synoptists a special reticence about the family at Bethany. The house in which they take a prominent position is called "the house of Simon the leper;" Mary is called simply "a woman" by St. Matthew and St. Mark; and St. Luke contents himself with calling Bethany "a certain village" although he was perfectly aware of the name. There is, therefore, a distinct argument for the conjecture that when the earliest form of the Gospel of St. Matthew appeared, and when the memorials were erected which were used by the other two Synoptists, there may have been special reasons for not recording a miracle which would have brought into dangerous prominence a man who was still living, but of whom the Jews had distinctly sought to get rid as a witness of Christ's wonder-working power. Even if this danger had ceased, it would have been obviously repulsive to the quiet family of Bethany to have been made the focus of an intense and an irreverent curiosity, and to be questioned about those hidden things which none have ever revealed. Something, then, seems to have "sealed the lips" of those Evangelists—an obstacle which had been long removed when St. John's Gospel first saw the light.—Farrar.

The Time for Study.

In an article in the Evangelist, Dr. John Hall recommends to the young people of the church to fill the classes in the Sabbath School, not now and then, "as they have a mind to," but as regularly as they attend day school, and with as conscientious preparation. He urges them also to enter the higher classes as they grow up, and so acquire fitness to be "teachers of others." Of this period of study he says:

It may be said that this long continued process of learning does not amount to much; that active effort is wanted. Now, it is just there that the evil lies which we would fain reduce. Young people are impatient of slow, steady preparatory work, and wish to be conspicuous on the field of action. So they rush prematurely to "work," and are often conspicuous by their failure. One trained worker is worth two who are only feeling their way. One teacher who knows what he is talking about is worth two who are talking at random. And one who knows what he is doing, and who does it consequently with some comfort to himself, is likely to continue in the field after it has been deserted by successive generations of impulsive, "well inclined" incapables. How many ex-laborers there are in our congregations! If any one should doubt the value of this service in the eyes of the Master, who is the one competent judge in the case, let him study Luke x. 38-42, with its high eulogium from his holy lips on Mary, who chose "the good part," of which no solicitude of her sister's about "many things" was permitted to deprive her. And what was the nature of the choice on which the Lord looked with so much complacency? She "sat at Jesus' feet, and heard his word." This quiet, lowly, unobtrusive, silent kind of service is not "after the manner of men;" but it is to the Lord we stand.

—Our Home Friend is a Sabbath-school and home paper for the young folks lately started by P. H. Stauffer, Milford Square, Pa., Beside choice reading it is illustrated and has an excellent synopsis of the Sabbath-school lessons for the month. Monthly, with chromo, 50 cts. per year.

We may judge of the state of our hearts by the earnestness of our prayers. You cannot make a rich man beg like a poor man; you cannot make a man that is full cry for food like one that is hungry.

THE GALAXY for the month has a sketch of Mormon life and scenery, an opening paper on Sherman's Memoirs, a critique of Tennyson's new drama and an article on French plays justly attacking their immorality. Sheldon & Co., New York.

The Mutual Insurance Company of New York publish two finely printed pamphlets on "Care of the Sick" and "Accidents, Emergencies and Poisons" which are sent free on application. Aside from the frequent recommendation of alcoholic liquors they appear to be of value.

THE NATIONAL S. S. TEACHER for September has its usual good review of the lessons of the month, and has attractive articles on the Sunday-school Motor, Attractions in Sunday-school, Through the Scholar's Glasses, and How Mr. Moody Became a Preacher. Adams, Blackmer & Lyon Pub. Co., Chicago.

The Jesuit Order in Austria.

A "Catalogue of the Austro-Hungarian Province of the Society of Jesus" contains some interesting particulars respecting their order as it existed in Austria in the month of July, 1873. The total force which the order mustered in Austro-Hungary was 494, of whom 226 were priests; 120 students, and 148 coadjutors or lay brothers. Numerically the strongest settlement is in Innsbruck, where the theological section of the university is entirely in the hands of the Jesuits. It counts no fewer than 72 members. St. Andrae follows next, numbering 67, then Presburg with 54. The remaining settlements are, or then were, at Prague, Tyrnau, Kalocsa, Kalksburg, Linz, Mariaschein, Vienna, Steyer, Kapolna and Repuy. The Austro-Hungarian province also supplies the British Australian colonies with missionaries, and has detached a separate staff of 23 to cultivate that remote field of labor. From the lists it appears that 17 other members of the province are engaged in foreign countries, whereas 35 belonging to other provinces are employed within the Austro-Hungarian borders, but, neither among those 32 visitors nor among the Austrian brothers proper does the roll enumerate a single expelled North German Jesuit.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, SEPT. 9, 1875.

PLATFORM AND NOMINATIONS FOR 1876.

FOR PRESIDENT
James B. Walker,
of Illinois.

FOR VICE-PRESIDENT
Donald Kirkpatrick,
of New York.

PLATFORM.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage, is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. The charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

5. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by article 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate.

6. That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

7. That to cultivate the intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

8. That land and other monopolies should be discountenanced.

9. That the Government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency, and a return to specie payment as soon as practicable.

10. That maintenance of the public credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. And finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of Electoral Colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-president of the United States.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

GENEVA, Ill., Aug. 30, 1875.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I am glad to see you have secured Prof. Herman A. Fischer ("H. A. F.") as European correspondent. Mr. Fischer has rare practical judgment and good sense, and at the same time a thorough and deep spirituality and faith in Christ. As he is to visit and reside for two years in the educational centers of Europe, his ideas and opinions, with the sweep of information from which he will derive them, will be worth much to the Cynosure readers.

At the risk of some appearance of egotism let me say that three Sabbaths since I preached in Atkinson, Ill., in the Congregational church, and spoke the following Monday and Tuesday nights to good congregations in the same house against the secret orders. Then after visiting the Holiness Convention at Rock Island I saw Rev. William T. Allen of Geneseo, and am not without hope that that interesting and eloquent man may buckle on the armor of his youth in his old age and do good service for Christ. He has been speaking for temperance lately. I then went to Farmington, preached on Sabbath all day, at night on the secret idolatries of the country, to a good house in the Congregational church. Then visited Mr. and Mrs. Pettingill of Peoria, who were sick. I have prayed earnestly for their recovery and am looking for it. I then attended at Elmwood the funeral of Rev. Mr. Marshall, pastor of the Brimfield Congregational church, who has died in the bud and springtime of his usefulness. His young wife stood at the head of her husband's coffin and presented their only babe to God in baptism. The Elmwood church was packed and crowded to suffocation. I here endeavored to persuade Wm. J. Phelps, Esq., the founder of Elmwood, trustee of Knox college and an active and able civilian, to preside at Peoria, in the approaching State Christian Convention against secret societies. He shrinks from it at present. I hope he may yet do so. I have promised to correspond with some prominent citizens of Peoria on the subject of that proposed meeting which must be delayed on account of the present illness of Mr. and Mrs. Pettingill, who are to a great extent the embodiment of our cause in that interesting city.

From Elmwood I came up by rail and private carriage to Big Woods to attend the ordination of Rev. E. D. Bailey, a late graduate of Wheaton College, and secretary of the DuPage county Christian Association. Mr. Bailey is much beloved by the church and people of Big Woods and with his young wife receives a warm welcome there. Meeting Rev. Mr. Brewster at the ordination, I agreed to preach for him at this place, which I did yesterday, and am (Monday morning) writing this letter in his study.

"THE UNITED PRESBYTERIAN SYNOD."

But before coming here, after preaching the ordination sermon at Big Woods, I drove back through the same dark woods in the night to Aurora, and went thence to Somonauk, thence by buggy to the United Pres. Synod of Illinois, and I told that interesting people if "The home is where the heart is," I was at home among them. It is a new, large and beautiful church, with side rooms where their women provided an excellent dinner for the large assembly, so that the members worked on through the day and rode home with the members of the congregation at night. I addressed the Synod in behalf of our cause and submitted in writing requests for an annual collection for the National Christian Association, for the Christian Cynosure's circulation, and for a delegate and speech at our next National Anniversary. Dr. Wallace of Monmouth, and many good brethren were there. Rev. J. W. Bain, moderator. But what struck me most was a paper on Christian doctrine read by the good Dr. Scott, which is to be printed. It was clear and solid as a diamond, and as hard and sharp. If the doctrine of Christ's redemption could be conceived and stated by a human mind and in human language, Dr. Scott's article would have done it. As it is, it is a bolt of God against the sham theology of this day. Yours in Christ, J. B.

"THE UNITED CHURCHES OF CHRIST."

We learn from members returning that the United Presbyterian Synod which met near Somonauk, on the 26th ult. ordered an annual collection in all their churches for our NATIONAL CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION. We shall give the official statement when we receive the United Presbyterian.

This action is an important event in our history. It not only provides for bringing our cause once a year formally before the minds of a large and influential body of Christians of more than average intelligence; but it is the beginning of the realization of the lamented ADAM CROOKS' suggestion of "THE UNITED CHURCHES OF CHRIST." The time will come when Masonic Christians and Anti-masonic Christians cannot and will not walk together in church-fellowship. But fierce struggles must precede. Masonry, like slavery, will cling to the holiest altars which will tolerate it; and we must have the means of disciplining churches as well as men. This we can do by uniting in the "National Christian Association," all churches who accept its principles; leaving each denomination to its own ways in other respects; and withdrawing from every church organization which tolerates heathen worships by its members in the lodge. We trust our publisher will take measures, promptly, to secure weekly intelligence from all churches which act with us.

IS IT COWARDICE, OR WORSE?

On another page will be found an important letter, first published in the Watchman and Reflector, Baptist, of Boston, headed "That Simoon," to which the editor appends a note, in which he disclaims all responsibility for the letter, which he publishes because it came from an old friend. This editorial note closes with these words, "We shall presume that Freemasonry is not the institution now-a-days that it was as revealed to the youthful eyes of our friend."

"We shall presume." What right has our Bro. Editor to presume anything with regard to a question, or matter, now assuming such gigantic proportions in church and state? No man in his position has a right to assume anything in the above oracular style, when actual knowledge is of such easy attainment. An injury is wrought to the public mind by such a course, the magnitude of which is in exact ratio with the influence of the paper over whose columns the writer presides. As the editor "presumes," so will his uninformed readers "presume," and so will the labors of earnest men, such as the writer of the letter alluded to, be discredited and in a great measure lost.

Suppose for a moment that Rev. G. W. Harris is right in his animadversions on Masonry and the flippant manner "That Simoom" was referred to, who can measure the evil done to the cause of truth by the careless "presuming" of the Editor. If he is himself a Mason, and an ordinarily intelligent one, he knows that Masonry is essentially "the institution now-a-days that it was as revealed," etc. If he is a well-read Anti-mason, he equally knows the same thing, and his "presuming" was an insult to his intelligent patrons and an almost irreparable injury to those who are not well-read in this direction. If neither an adhering Mason nor an Anti-mason well-read, he must be ignorant as to whether Masonry is, or is not, the same as in the days of "That Simoom." If this latter supposition is true, then has our editor—being entirely ignorant—gone out of his way to throw a "sop in the way of the Cerberus" of the lodge, as a sort of apology for publishing a letter so offensive to the institution, and to work an injury to the cause of truth, the results of which eternity alone can adequately determine.

Bro. Editor, that was a presumptuous "presume" of yours, and, in all kindness, a very wicked one. Masonry is to-day, in the essential turpitude of its principles the same thing it was in the days of "That Simoom;" and you, as a public man, have no right to be ignorant of the fact, and thus go "presuming" and leading your readers to "presume" that this Masonic leopard and beast of prey, has changed its murderous nature or its spots, and thus become a harmless lamb.

Are such expressions as yours indicative of cowardice? or is it that, attended with something worse? We have no desire to be harsh, but feel that this course on the part of religious teachers requires plain handling.

A GHOST THAT WILL NOT DOWN.

The Morgan controversy revived has another illustration in the able article on another page from the Bench and Bar, the points of which are so plain as to need no argument. The general attention called to this subject can be only injurious to the lodge which flourishes best when least is said about it. The Cincinnati Gazette thinks the Masons took strange liberties with a county jail and a United States' fort and adds beside this proof of its belief in the Morgan murder:

"We have listened to an address at a high Masonic celebration, which did not affect to treat the murder of Morgan as a myth, but which accepted it and responsibilities, and drew a comparison between Masonry and Christianity; the first antedating the other by thousands of years, and yet guilty of but one murder, while the other, the orator said, had left a bloody track."

The Troy Times publishes statements from S. I. Masters of Greenwich, Washington county, N. Y., and Andrew Hitchcock of West Troy, corner West and Canal streets, of their seeing Morgan in Smyrna in 1830, wearing the dress and manners of a Turk. This has long been a favorite disposition of the case by the lodge. But the Boston Globe gives us another story from the St. Paul, Minn., Pioneer-Press signed by A. P. Rogers, who tells us that his father, a Methodist preacher, who was acquainted with Morgan, found an old man living in a solitary cabin in the wilds of Northern Maine, in 1844, whom he recognized as the veritable Morgan of Western New York, and was positive in his judgment although the hermit removed so soon as he was discovered, In a recent letter Mr. Samuel D. Greene, who ought to have known Morgan if any one did. says that Morgan's body, as decided by the second inquest, was brought to his house in Batavia and buried therefrom, and his grave is there to this day. He sums up the various attempts of the lodge to throw off the responsibility of the murder which are in brief these: (1) It was attempted to be proved that the body found and identified could not be Morgan's, as a Freemason had stated that he himself cut Morgan's throat. (2) Morgan was taken up by the Masons kept in Buffalo jail a while and then discharged as a fool. (3) A woman, Mrs. Monroe, was brought from Canada to claim the corpse as that of her husband drowned a few weeks before. (4) A Freemason swore before a justice that he saw Morgan and had a conversation with him in Cornhill street, Boston where he was selling his book. (5) Morgan went among the Apache Indians, married a squaw, taught the art of Masonry, became a chief, and had a son who was one also. (6) He fled to Van Dieman's Land, became the editor of a paper published in Hobartown and was visited every two years by a son living in San Francisco. (7) He went to Syria, became a Turk and died in peace. Masons to this day publish the last three stories in their vain effort to deceive. The fact that he is so often and in so many ways disposed of by them is proof enough of that their stories are false.

AN IMPORTANT POLITICAL MOVEMENT.—Pursuant to call in the last Cynosure several gentlemen from Illinois, Indiana and New York, met in the office of the Cynosure and appointed a National Committee, whose names will be given in full next week, the paper being too near full to allow room for in this issue.

The names of the persons on this national Central Committee are in themselves a host, and each one a tower of strength in his State and neighborhood. None were put on the Central committee but those who are known to some of the persons present and known to be enlightened and devoted to the cause. Members of the National Central Committee were appointed for Ill., Mo., Conn. Penn'a, Mich., Wis., Ohio, Ind., N. Y., Minn., Vt., Kansas, Cal., Oregon, Me., N. H,, Miss., Md., Iowa, Neb., N. C,, and the Territory of Washington. The spirit of the meeting which has inaugurated this movement to purify American politics seems to us a sign of the times full of joyous hope. Minutes in full next week.

PRESIDENT FINNEY.—The Christian public are hungering for memoirs of this great disciple. We are called on by various individuals to write more concerning him; and we see by a statement in the Advance that Mr. Finney wrote largely of the scenes and labors of his early life. If such manuscripts exist, they will be published, and it will be long before this remarkable man passes from the American press; so that the hunger for information concerning him will be appeased. Our chief anxiety is, lest his memory should be marred by falling into hands incapable or unwilling to do it justice, the men who can only garnish his sepulcher, because they hated his holy, sin-reproving life.

ADAMS' LETTERS.—We have received a copy of John Quincy Adams' letters on Masonry, with an introduction by Charles Francis Adams, from the Publishing House of the United Brethren, at Dayton. Concerning these letters little need be said. John Quincy Adams is by universal consent placed in the foremost rank of American statesman. In power if intellect, and purity of character, he was like Saul, head and shoulders above his brethren. These letters addressed to different persons contain his opinions respecting Freemasonry. They once aided the American people in throwing off the chains with which secret conspiracies had bound them, and they are like good wine the better for age. The introduction as little needs commendation as the body of the work. Charles Francis Adams is almost if not quite, the only living American statesman whom an American has a right to name without a blush. The peddling tricksters who "lay pipes," "set wires" and run caucuses, are as far below the measure of such a man as selfishness and chicanery are below benevolence and honor. The sentence from his hand on the title page is worth remembering forever:

"I shall never disavow my old work or shrink from the attribution of it to my hand, whether in private or in public. C. F. ADAMS.

3rd August, 1875.

Concerning the mechanical execution of the book we can say that it is neatly and strongly made up and published at the exceedingly low price of one dollar. Every friend of our cause who can procure a copy will find it a fit companion for Finney on Masonry, and that is saying enough to recommend any book.

FREE PRAYER ROOM.—Bro. Baker, editor of the Free Methodist, tells us in a late number of that paper of a noon prayer-meeting experience in Chicago which cannot be called less than dishonorable to the cause of Christ. The leader after reading a few passages of Scripture referring particularly to sanctification, followed as is usual with a few remarks on the same important theme, when he was interrupted by singing and talking, and a member of prayer-meeting committee stated that this was a controverted subject, and therefore must be ruled out. We have several times referred to the arbitrary management of this meeting on the subject of controverted points. Controverted points!—What doctrine of our holy religion, what principle of true reform is not controverted. We have heard leaders of the Y. M. C. A. and Mr. Moody himself argue in the noon meeting for the pre-millennial advent of Christ, which is certainly as much a divided question, with not a tithe of the practical bearing, as the subject of holiness or of the Christian reforms. Now it would be a cause of great strife to attempt to break down the rule set up by the Y. M. C. A. committee for the ordering of their noon meeting. But if another daily meeting could be opened, under such relations as to promise permanency and honest religious character, where the Holy Ghost which gives liberty, might speak freely through the Lord's people, it would influence the whole religious thought of the city and country about. Such a meeting has been contemplated in connection with the Carpenter building, and is in itself of importance enough to be urged as a reason for securing Mr. Carpenter's donation.

——The Illinois Ku-Klux from another link of the chain binding the long row of "orders" to Freemasonry. The United States Commissioners have arrested several of the Franklin county gang who have been bound over to appear at court. One of the number unbosomed himself and evidently told all he knew of the affair. He was sworn in on the 22nd of July. Nine members were present, and the band numbers 400 in Franklin county, and 1000 in Williamson. He was made to take an oath that he would not reveal any of the secret signs or passwords of the organization, known as the Golden Ring, and would go wherever and whenever called on by the Grand Master, to first warn, then whip, and th n hang all offenders. The penalty of e treachery was to have his tongue torn out by the roots. But beside this decided mark of kinship with Masonry these sheeted assassins were briefly examined by the U. S. Commissioner, and although known to have led in a midnight attack on an unoffending citizen, and were representatives of hundreds more, they were set free on bail at the cowardly sum of from one to two thousand dollars. There is little room to doubt that if the leaders and others of this outlaw band were not connected with the lodge they would never have obtained liberty at so paltry a rate.

—Considerable space is given on the 12th page of this number to a sketch of the historical status of Freemasonry as viewed by Dr. Mackey. It will be seen that the tone of Masonic pretense is greatly modifying. Eight years ago when Brennan published a translation of Rebold's History which gave some damaging facts on Masonic antiquity, the publication was practically suppressed and it is now almost impossible to obtain a copy. The discussion of its principles has driven the lodge into self-defense and its ground of historical pretension is being shaken from under the system. Hence the change in the tone of Masonic writers on this subject. Soon other positions will be found untenable until the truth will prevail to drive the dark order to its native hell. Our lecturers will find this article of value in their work; its admissions dishonoring the cant phrases of lodge orators are too plainly made to need special mention.

—The local paper of Greenfield. vents its Masonic indignation in a long notice of the meetings lately conducted there by the General Agent and Mr. Ronayne. The editor dares not deny the accuracy of the exposition, but is mildly indignant that such proceedings should be carried on before a mixed audience and in a church of God. He should have discernment enough to know that such disgrace lays at the door of the lodge.

Obituary.

The Telescope publishes the following notice of the death of one of the warm-hearted laborers in our reform and others on the Pacific coast:

We learn from a number of the Seattle Intelligencer (Washington Territory), of the death of a dear old friend of ours, Hon. John Denny, a life-long and faithful Christian, who died at Seattle. King county, Washington Territory, July 28th, in his eighty-third year. He was a native of Lexington, Kentucky, and in the war of 1812 h', at the age of nineteen, enlisted, under Col. Richard M. Johnson, and served through the war, participating in the battle of the Thames, where fell the noted Indian warrior, Tecumseh. Removing to Illinois, he served twelve years in the legislature, as senator from Knox county, in which position he was brought into intimate relation with the then young statesmen, Lincoln, Douglas, Baker, Washburn, Trumbull, and Yates. In the year 1851 he, with his family, crossed the plains and settled in Marion county, Oregon, where he was once nominated as the Republican candidate for governor, but he withdrew from the contest before the election in order to promote interests involved in a contest between two other parties then engaged in a struggle for the ascendancy. About the year 1859 he removed to Washington Territory, where some of his sons had settled several years before; and one of these (Arthur S. Denny, we believe,) represented the interests of Washington Territory in the national capital a few years later. Father Denny served several years in both branches of the territorial legislature after his removal to Washington Territory, where his ability and patriotism were greatly promotive of the moral and material good of the territory.

While in Oregon, teaching in our new college there, some seventeen years ago, we spent several months in the home of Father Denny, whom we found a most delightful companion, a warm and faithful friend, a devoted servant of God, and a patriot and citizen worthy of the best days of Greece, Rome, Israel, or America. After his removal to Oregon he connected himself with the United Brethren church, of which it is almost superfluous to say he was a valuable and influential member. What his church relations were after his removal to Washington Territory, where our church has operated but little, and that not permanently we are not prepared to say. He, on the questions of slavery, secrecy—and, otherwise—was an earnest believer in and advocate of the principles of the United Brethren church, and, from his correspondence with the Cynosure office, we learn that he was earnest in his devotion to these principles during his last years.

This notice is not of the life and death of an ordinary man. Intellectual, well-read, of keen wit, and truly eloquent, Hon. John Denny, even in old age, was a power for good. Blessed be the memory of our faithful friend.

The Home Circle.

God the Giver.

Blessed be thy name forever,
Thou of life the guide and giver;
Thou canst guard the creatures sleeping,
Heal the heart long broke by weeping,
God of stillness and of motion,
God of desert and of ocean.
Of the mountain rock and river—
Blessed be thy name forever.
Thou who slumberest not, nor sleepest,
Blest are they thou kindly keepest;
God of evening's parting ray,
Of midnight's gloom, and dawning day,
That rises from the azure sea
Like breathings of eternity;
God of life! that fade shall never—
Blessed be thy name forever!

Contending for the Faith.

Christians are taught of God and therefore know the value of Divine truth. It renders free from the chains of sin. It saves the soul. For such truth accordingly believers are willing to make sacrifices. They buy it and sell it not. They labor to defend it and extend it. They are commanded to contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints, Jude 3, and they recognize the importance of that which is commanded.

To set up an opinion among the brethren and insist on it, though others regard it as unreasonable, or to pounce upon a view modestly uttered, as if it were a damnable heresy, would be a different thing. That would show a contentious disposition. To quarrel about trifles is not Christian; and compared with the truth unto salvation every human thought and sentiment is a mere trifle. One need not have trouble with another, even if they do have different views. They can have them and still walk together, each being willing, in humility, to show deference to the other. Introducing strifes where God's Word has not rendered it a necessity in conscience, is to be avoided as carnal.

But when the faith is assailed, peace must end until the assault ceases. It may look to some as if the mind of Jesus were exhibited when souls quietly submit to the efforts made to overthrow or corrupt the faith. It seems a mark meekness and humility, and of a quiet and peaceful disposition. And yet it only seems so. It is rather a mark of a most lamentable lack of conscientiousness. It indicates a pride that exalts itself above God's Word, and an uncharitableness that suffers many to perish rather than rebuke sternly those who would lead them to perdition.

When goods are committed to a steward, it is not an exhibition of humility on his part to decline any defense of them. He is simply unfaithful to his master, if he permits them to be carried off without having made an effort to protect them. And this would be especially the case if he had been espe cially warned that assaults would be made, and commanded to contend earnestly for that which was committed to his charge. He would deserve to be dismissed as a coward and a knave, if he, pretending to love sweet peace so well, would not take up arms in defense of the treasures entrusted to him. What he loves so well is slothful ease and carnal self-indulgence.

The truth of God unto salvation has been entrusted to His people. They are to preserve it for themselves and for future generations. This is to be done that God may be glorified and that the souls so dearly purchased may be saved.

It is no honor to God to have men's opinions passed off for divine truths. It does not give glory to His name to substitute for His saving truth a human lie which can only destroy. "Why do ye also transgress the commandments of God by your traditions?" "In vain do they worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men." Matt. xvi. 39. By refusing to hear the Lord, the honor of obedience is withheld which is due; and by permitting error to be taught in His name, instead of His truth, He is made responsible for the follies and errors of men, and thus dishonored. If we are unwilling to contend for the faith, permitting it to be assailed at pleasure, we are unwilling to show any concern for the glory of Him who delivered that faith to us for our welfare, and who commanded us to hold fast that which we have, that no man take our crown.

The refusal to contend earnestly for the faith therefore implies a lack of charity. The faith is needful to save; its loss involves the soul's perdition. Those, therefore, who will not contend for the faith say by their conduct, that the souls which Christ has purchased are not precious enough in their sight to justify a breach of peace on their account. Their ease is dearer to them than the immortal souls of their brethren, or even than their own salvation. For it is only by continuing steadfast unto death in the retention of the truth that they themselves can be saved. If they at any time let it slip, they endanger their own souls as well as contribute their share towards having its saving power removed from among men and its place supplied by ruinous error.—Lutheran Standard.

Sleeping Church.

Mr. Moody relates the following: "There was a little story going the round of the American press that made a great impression upon me as a father. A father took his little child out into the field one Sabbath, and he lay down under a beautiful shady tree, it being a hot day. The little child ran about gathering wild flowers and the little blades of grass, and coming to its father and saying, "Pretty! pretty!" At last the father fell asleep, and while he was sleeping the little child wandered away. When he awoke his first thought was, Where is my child? He looked all around, but he could not see him. He shouted at the top of his voice, and all he heard was the echo of his own voice. Running to a little hill he looked around and shouted again, but all he heard was the echo of his own voice. No response! Then going to a precipice at some distance, he looked down, and there upon the rocks and briers he saw the mangled form of his loved child. He rushed to the spot, took up the lifeless corpse and hugged it to his bosom, and accused himself of being the murderer of his own child. While he was sleeping his child had wandered over the precipice. I thought, as I heard that, what a picture of the church of God! How many fathers and mothers, how many Christian men are sleeping now, while their children wander over the terrible precipice a thousand times worse than that precipice, right into the bottomless pit of hell! Father, where is your boy tonight? It may be just out here in some public house, it may be reeling through the streets of London, drunk; it may be pressing on down to a drunkard's grave. How many fathers and mothers are there in London—yes, praying Christians, too—whose children are wandering away while they are slumbering, sleeping? and Is it not time that the church of God should wake up and come to the help of the Lord as one man, and strive to beat back those dark waves of death that roll through our streets, bearing upon their bosom the noblest young men we have? O, my God, wake up the church! And let us trim our lights and go forth and work for the kingdom of God."

A Few Leaves Turned Down.

Let me turn down, with their knowledge, hower, a few leaves of, and mark a few pages in, God's word for those who need comfort and support:

For the weak Christian, let me turn down the leaf and mark the 12th of Matthew, 20th verse. "A bruised reed shall he not break, and smoking flax shall he not quench."

For the heavy burdened, Matt. xi. 28, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."

For the despondent, John vii. 37; John iii. 16.

For the thirsty and hungry, John vii. 37; John vi. 35. Here is a passage for the afflicted one, Isaiah liv. 7. "For a small moment have I forsaken thee: but with great mercies will I gather thee."

Here is good news for the backslider, Hosea xiv. 4, "I will heal their backsliding, I will love them freely: for mine anger is turned away."

I have marked a few passages for the faithless. Acts xiv. 31; 1 John i. 7; Romans viii. 1.

Here is comfort for those who mourn on the poor results of their work. This is what Christ said, John xvii. 12, "Those thou gavest me I have kept and none of them is lost."

Scotch Church Architecture.

There is another thing I have noticed about this church-going Edinburgh. I have been into a great many churches, and have not found yet an exception to the rule, except in the very ancient ones which were formerly used for Romish purposes; and even in these there is a very determined and in most cases successful attempt to overcome the defects of such buildings for Protestant-preaching, intelligent worship. I refer to the thorough good sense of the church edifices, the absolute subordination of the entire building to the purpose for which it is to be used. In these Scottish churches the pulpit is the center, nothing else is the center. The aim of the building does not seem to be to glorify some architect in the production of some useless pile, to be called a church, in which the people, thrust behind pillars and tucked into corners, can hear nothing and see nothing; but the aim of the building does seem to be the glory of God, through such sensible arrangements of pew and pulpit as shall enable all the people to take part in the intelligent worship of him. If there are any hinderers of the Gospel as a class, I think they are the American architects of churches. The last thing they seem to think of, as a general rule, is the use to which the building they are rearing is to be put. I wish some of them would come to Scotland and take some lessons in the art of a true church building. I do not mean to say these Scottish churches are not beautiful; they are. It is right to lavish beauty on the house of God. Only I insist, beauty should be subordinated to and conduce toward high and noble use. "In that very end its beauty lies." A preaching place should be a preaching place; beautiful as possible, for religion sanctifies beauty; but all the time, with all in it sternly held to the holy purpose of a preaching place; namely, the giving the preacher the best chance to preach, and the people to hear, the Word of God. In the arrangement of auditorium these Scottish churches are frequently circular in form. The people are grouped about the preacher. The preacher stands thus seen of all and heard of all. Or, if not circular, they are square, not long, as is so common with ourselves, and every pew commands the pulpit, and the pulpit commands each pew. Another main advantage of such arrangements, is that the galleries are available. They are turned towards the center. They are as well fixed and furnished as are the pews on the lower floor. The consequence is, the galleries are in as great demand as are the bottom places. In Scotland your congregation is as much in the gallery as it is below. And thus is seen and shown the possibility of a church not spread out on the ground floor, but with upper spaces economized in galleries and with the galleries used. I have been impressed with this strong Scotch sense in church building. I hope the day is not far distant when we shall have more of it in America.—Rev. Wayland Hoyt.

Gems From Mathew Henry.

God's favor is the only favor that is satisfactory to the soul, and puts true gladness into the heart.

Those that do the will of God heartily will do it speedily; while we delay, time is lost, and the heart hardened.

If those that should be our helpers in the way of our duty prove hindrances to us, let not that drive us from it.

All good men lay the interests of God's church nearer their hearts than any secular interest or concern of their own.

We lose divine favors if we slight them.

It is good to belong to the family of a godly man; it is safe and comfortable to dwell under such a shadow.

Children often fare the better for the piety of their ancestors in this world, even though they may be themselves degenerate.

Our daily devotions must be looked upon as the most needful of our daily works, and the most pleasant of our daily comforts.

The tree of life is better than the tree of knowledge.

Overcoming Obstacles.

Life is full of difficulty. No sooner do we overcome one obstacle than another bars our way. So we find ourselves continually in need of, first, a good foundation of patience, than an invincible

> "—courage, wise and sweet
> Which can make the path of duty
> Green beneath our willing feet."

With these in possession we are prepared to take a calm view of the difficulties before us, see where the points of resistance lie, and how the forces at our command may be brought to bear upon them.

When we are called upon to do battle against some giant wrong, or to conquer a mighty foe, there is something in the magnitude of the matter that lifts us into enthusiasm. But where all the victories we win are over Liliputian enemies it is hard to keep one's courage glowing and resolute. To kindle a hot fire with green wood; to churn cream that won't come, to wait for bread that won't rise, to write a newspaper article when every idea in the brain has taken flight, to make one's old Sunday suit over as good as new, these things make cowards of us all, and yet the obstacles we have to overcome in every-day life are generally no larger or more important than these.

The true quality of the hero manifests itself in little things—in meeting with unruffled patience the minor ills of life, in preserving a tranquil determination that no false logic can shake, in refusing to be upset by trifles, and in going on "without haste and without rest" to the accomplishment of the purpose in hand, just as though every breeze was favorable and the final success assured. This dauntless resolution, this invincible patience, this courage never to submit or yield, is capable of cultivation, and is found not in the lives only of great heroes like Frederick the Great or Gustavus Adolphus, but in many lives that pass in obscurity and have never a biographer.

There are two or three questions which it is well for those beset with difficulty to ask and answer clearly before they give their thought its act. What is the citadel of the fortress to be carried? By what means is that citadel best approached? Then comes the plan of the campaign, thought out to the last detail before any part of it is put into execution. Housekeepers that apply this method to the solution of their perplexities are greatly aided thereby; the same is true of farmers, and a business man without some such plan is sure to fail. We are too apt when we find ourselves in a maze of doubt and perplexity to strike out blindly without regard to economy of strength or judgment in its application, thus often making matters worse instead of better. We need, of all things, at such times, to possess our souls in patience, and stand still till we are sure the next place we plant our feet will be firm ground, not quicksand; We cannot afford, at such times, to let our feelings get the better of us, to lose our self-possession, or even to think of giving up discouraged. With patience, with unconquerable will, with clearness of perception to see that the obstacles in our way actually are, and with courage and persistence never to yield till they are overcome, what may we not hope to achieve? Victory may be delayed, but it will be ours, if not in the precise shape we have pictured to ourselves, yet in a real ministry of ourselves that shall make us more than conquerors and greater than he that hath taken a city.—N. Y. Tribune.

The True Economy.

The question is not, how cheaply we can manage to keep soul and body together, but how can we bring both body and soul to the highest condition of vitality and power? To live is something more than to exist. How can we live most and best? How can we feed intellect and affection, conscience, sympathy, imagination, reverence, as well as the physical system? All pinching and restricting of diet is injurious in the long run. The bean-man, the bran-bread-man, the one-meal-a-day-man, the man who goes mousing about the world intent only on cheapness, never makes the scales of power kick the beam. He wastes more than he saves. He checks an income instead of stopping an outgo. The men who make the most ado over the petty prudencies of life, and perpetually obtrude their parsimonious practices on public notice, never amount to anything, or do anything of account. Man wants all he can use, assimilate, organize, reproduce. The things that strengthen and beautify his essential manhood, that enrich his sentiments and refine his sensibilities, that ennoble his intellect and enlarge the scope of his being and the horizon of his possibilities, belong to him by right, as the crown and purple belong to royalty.

Every man ought to aspire and labor to live generously, and have a comfortable and tasteful home, and surround himself and his family with everything that tends to increase health and happiness, and create an atmosphere of intelligence and refinement. The charities and humanities are not luxuries, that the poorest man on earth should deny himself of them. The loving, trustful, adoring sympathy that forgets its own wants and meagre resources, and breaks the costliest thing it has on the head of the one beloved, is not a recklessness to be censured but a devotion to be commended for its divine nobility. Saving may be ant-like and beaver like, but sacrifice is God-like.—W. T. Clarke in Herald of Health.

Children's Corner.

Only a Rose.

A. S. FISK.

Only a rose in a childish hand,
Only a rose that is pure and white;
While the little hand is brown and hard,
The face care worn, though the form is slight,
Only a rose; yet the dark eyes beam
And the face is brightened with softer light.

Only a rose from a lady's hand;
With nod and smile, it was gaily thrown,
Eagerly caught by the waiting child:
Smile and flower, they are both her own.
And a wordless yearning fills her heart
For a life of sweetnes she has not known.

Back of her, there in the city, stand
Churches with slender spires and tall,
Where the silver chimes from scores of bells,
On the Sabbath breezes rise and fall;
By thousands numbered, the written names
On the rolls they kept, if you told them all.

Yet no one knows of this little waif,
A lamb ne'er gathered in any fold;
But Satan knows, and with cunning craft;
Is forging a chain to clasp and hold,
Link by link, he will weld them well;
They will weigh like lead, though they shine like gold.

Oh! had we our Master's love for souls,
To seek them carefully one by one,
Feeling as Satan feels, their worth;
Bidding as Jesus bids them, come;
Till none should grope in a darkened path
And long for a better life, alone.

Ancient Book Rolls.

"Papa," said Frank, "what did people use to write on before paper was invented?"

"They sometimes used little tablets coated over with wax; and the pen was a piece of iron pointed at one end and flattened at the other, so that they could scratch the words with the pointed end and scrape them off the soft wax with the flattened one. The pen was called the stylus, or style; so when we talk now of persons writing, we say a good style, meaning the sort of writing; but, then, it meant the instrument employed in writing—the pen, in fact."

"But wouldn't what was written on wax always be in danger of getting rubbed off?"

"So they found; and tried many other things, until at last they discovered that they could mark on the broad leaves of the papyrus; a plant which grew everywhere along the marshy river side in Egypt."

'And did everybody use this papyrus?"

"Yes, in gEypt, where it grew in great plenty. But, at last, the king of a place called Pergamos thought he should like to form a library of his own, which would have been a wonderful thing to own in those days—so he sent to ask the king of Egypt to let him have a large supply of this papyrus grass. But this Egyptian majesty felt jealous of so great a design, and refused to let any of it be exported or sent out of the country."

"What did this King of Pergamos do?"

"He set to work like a sensible man, to find a substitute, as it was no use looking about his country for the grass itself, for it happened to be one of the places where it did not grow. He at last succeeded in drying the skins of sheep and other animals which answered very well."

"What, to write on?"

"Yes; and I dare say that you have seen it very often. It is called velum or parchment, and was generally used before the discovery of paper. At first the parchment was rolled round a stick at one end; or if it was a long one, on two sticks, one at each end. It was then placed in a cylindrical box often made of cedar to preserve it from insects, and this box was at times beautifully carved. The Scriptures were written on this kind of scroll, and the Jews to this day read from rolls, in their synagogues or churches. That the public records were thus inscribed, we learn from the Book of Ezra where we are told that 'search was made in the house of rolls, where the treasures were laid up in Babylon, and there was found a record thus written.' And when in latter times state records were kept as they were by the Normans in England, they were inscribed on parchment rolls of thirty feet long, perhaps, and are carefully preserved to this day, giving us an idea of the laws, trade, and doings of our forefathers."

"These parchment rolls must have been very expensive, especially the very long ones, were they not, papa?"

"Yes, they were, and very many valuable writings have been destroyed people having erased them for the sake of the parchment which they wanted to use over again for fresh subjects."—The Children's Friend.

What Kindness Will Do.

How the wheels of the old cart creaked! The road was quite tired of hearing their complaints, when lo! suddenly they became quiet, and went smoothly on, making no doleful sound.

"How now," cried the road; "what has happened that you take things so easily to-day? Has the master taken off half your load?"

"No," said the wheels; "he hasn't done that; our burden is, if anything, heavier than before; but this he has done, he has oiled us, so that whatever we may have to bear we have no longer the heart to say a word against it."—Mrs. Prosser's Fables.

Canine Sagacity.

An interesting example of the exercise of reason on the part of a dog is published in the Philadelphia Medical Times. The incident happened some thirty years ago, and is told as follows: "A man named Cosgrove, the keeper of a low tavern near the rail-road station, had his arm broken, and came many times to the office to have the dressings arranged. He was always accompanied by a large, most ferocious-looking bull-dog, that watched me most attentively, and most unpleasantly to me, while bandaging his master's arm. A few weeks after Cosgrove's case was discharged, I heard a noise at the office door, as if some animal was pawing it, and, on opening it, saw there this huge bull-dog, accompanied by another dog that held up one of its front legs, evidently broken. They entered the office. I cut several pieces of wood, and fastened them firmly to the leg with adhesive plaster, after straightening the limb. They left immediately. The dog that came with Cosgrove's dog I never saw before nor since.

Masonic.

The Origin of Freemasonry, as Traced by its two Historic Schools.

ALBERT G. MACKEY, M. D.

[From the Voice of Masonry.]

The question of the origin of Freemasonry as a mystical association has for more than a century and a half attracted the attention of many scholars of Britain, Germany, France and America, and a body of treatises and essays on the subject has been published, the extent of which would surprise any one not familiar with Masonic literature. At the present day the historians of Freemasonry who are engaged in the discussion of this question may be divided into two schools, which may be appropriately distinguished as the mythical and the authentic. The former of these is the older, for the latter has become prominent only within the last three or four decades. Masonic opinion is, however steadily, and, indeed, rapidly, moving in the direction of thought that has been adopted by this latter school.

The differences between these two schools are very strongly defined, and are, in some respects, entirely antagonistic.

The mythical school of Masonic history was inaugurated about the beginning of the last century, by James Anderson and Theophilus Desaguliers, both Doctors of Divinity, and who had been mainly instrumental in elaborating what has been called the revival of Masonry, by the establishment, in 1717, of the Grand Lodge of England. Dr. Anderson was a man of acknowledged learning, the minister of a Scotch congregation in London, and a writer of some reputation. Dr. Desaguliers was recognized as a distinguished scientist, and a popular lecturer on experimental philosophy. But it is Anderson who is really to be considered as the founder of the school, since he first promulgated its theories in the "Book of Constitutions," which he published in 1723, by order of the Grand Lodge.

Unfortunately for the interests of truth, Anderson was of a very imaginative turn of mind, and instead of writing an authentic history of Freemasonry, he accepted and incorporated into his narrative all the myths and legends which he found in the manuscript records of the Operative Masons.

According to this too visionary writer, Masonry began with Adam and extending through the line of the antediluvian patriarchs to Noah, was by him communicated to his descendants of the New World. Being transmitted successively through Abraham, Moses, Joshua and David, it at length reached Solomon, who, by the aid of the Freemasons, built the Temple at Jerusalem. After the death of Solomon the institution was patronized by his successors, and by the Kings of Babylon, Assyria and Egypt, until it was finally transmitted into Europe.

Much of the apparent absurdity of Anderson's theory may be explained by the fact that he makes Masonry, geometry and architecture synonymous terms. Hence his history of Freemasonry in the early ages of the world is really nothing more nor less than a history of the art of building during that period. Thus he argues that as "both the families of Seth and Cain erected many curious works," therefore "we may safely conclude the old world could not be ignorant of Masonry." With Anderson, every monarch who patronized the construction of a palace, a temple, or other public edifice in his dominions, was a Grand Master, and the workmen engaged on the building were Freemasons. Especially does he indulge in these speculations while describing the Temple of Jerusalem, where he supposes that King Solomon brought the mystical system of Freemasonry to the highest state of perfection.

The Masonic writers of England who immediately succeeded Anderson have not insisted on that part of his narrative which traces Freemasonry to the Garden of Eden, but they more fully develop his theory of the establishment of the order at the Temple of Jerusalem, the division of the craft into lodges, with degrees and officers, in short an organization precisely such as now exists. This scheme was accepted and continued to be acknowledged as the orthodox historical creed by the fraternity during the whole of the last and the greater part of the present century. It was incorporated into the ritual, much of which is founded on the assumption that Freemasonry is to be traced, for its primitive source, to the Temple of Jerusalem. The investigations of the more recent or authentic school have very nearly demolished this theory. Scholarly men, at least, among the craft, no longer concede even its plausibility. Yet the influence of its prevalence for so long a period is still felt, and perhaps while the organization continues in its present form will never be wholly overcome. The temple still holds its place in the ritual as the type of every Masonic lodge, and its Master is recognized as the representative of the king of Israel, while important events, transmitted, it is said, by oral tradition, are commemorated as having occurred during the construction of the edifice. But all of this is now explained, not historically, but symbolically, And so important and, indeed, essential to Speculative Masonry is the Temple of Solomon as a symbol, but as a symbol only, that to eradicate it from Masonic symbolism would be equivalent to destroying the identity of the institution. The ground floor, the middle chamber and the holy of holies are familiar places in every lodge, and the brazen columns of Jachin and Boaz, which stood at the porch of the Solomonic Temple, are still indispensable decorations to every room or building which is exclusively devoted to Masonic purposes.

The theory of the origin of Freemasonry that is now beginning to be most generally accepted by intelligent members of the order is that of the authentic school of Masonic history. This school might rather be called the iconoclastic, and indeed its disciples have not unfrequently been denominated the iconoclasts of the order, because of the sturdy and effectual blows they have inflicted on the extravagant images of the legendary or mythical school.

The leaders of the authentic school in England are Hughan and Woodford; in Scotland, Lyon, and in Germany, Findel. If a prodigality of credulity has been the weakness of the mythical school, their rivals may be charged with having sometimes exercised an excess of incredulity. They decline to accept any statement whose authenticity is not supported by some written or printed record, and a few of them have gone so far as to circumscribe the history of Freemasonry within the narrow limits of that period which commences with the revival, or, as they prefer to call it, the foundation of the Grand Lodge of England, in the beginning of the eighteenth century. Others, however, have been more liberal, and now, as a general rule, their theory of the origin of Masonry has been accepted by the more intelligent members of the fraternity, while the fanciful and legendary speculations of the old writers are gradually giving place to the well supported statements and the logical deductions of the authentic school. By most of the leaders of this school the complex question of the origin of Freemasonry is being solved in the following way:—

There existed in Rome from the first days of the kingdom, and all through the times of the republic and of the empire until its final decay, certain guilds or corporations of workmen, which are well known in history as the "Roman colleges of artificers."

Numa, who is said by Plutarch to have founded these guilds, established only nine, but their number was subsequently greatly increased. From the Roman writers who have treated of the form and organization of these colleges we learn enough to show us that there was a great analogy in their government to that of the modern Masonic lodges and this especially in their character as a secret society and in the initiations and esoteric instructions to which candidates for admission and the younger members were subjected. Of these guilds the one to which Masons particularly refer is that which consisted of architects or builders. The authentic school of Masonry does not claim, as the mythical most probably would have done, that the Roman colleges of architects were lodges of Freemasons. They simply contend that the facts of history exhibit a regular and uninterrupted derivation of the Freemasonry of this day from these Roman guilds, although the course of the succession was affected by various important changes. But these changes have not been sufficient to altogether obliterate the evidence of the relationship. This relationship is thus indicated. From a very early period the Roman people were distinguished by an active spirit of colonization. No sooner had their victorious legions subdued the semi-barbarous tribes of Spain, of Gaul, of Germany and of Britain, than they began to establish colonies and to build cities. To every legion which went forth to conquer and to colonize was attached a guild or college of architects, whose members, taken from the great body at Rome, marched and encamped with the legion, and when a colony was founded, remained there to cultivate the seeds of Roman civilization, to inculcate the principles of Roman art and to erect temples for worship and houses for the accommodation of the inhabitants.

When in time the corrupted empire was threatened with extinction by the invasion of its Northern enemies, the legions were recalled to sustain and defend the central power, but the guilds of architects and builders most frequently remained in the towns and cities which they had assisted to erect and where they had acquired a citizenship that they had probably lost at home.

In the course of time the proud mistress of the world became extinct as a power of the earth, and the colonies which she had scattered over the Continent became independent kingdoms and principalities. The descendants of the Roman colleges of artificers established schools of architecture and taught and practiced the art of building among the newly enfranchised people. A principal seat of this body of architects was at Como, a city of Lombardy, where a school was founded which acquired so much reputation that the masons and bricklayers of that city received the appellation of Masters of Como, and architects of all nations flocked to the place to acquire the correct principles of their profession. From this school of Lombard builders proceeded that society of architects who were known at that time by the appellation of Freemasons and who from the tenth to the sixteenth century traversed the continent of Europe engaged almost exclusively in the construction of religious edifices, such as cathedrals, churches and monasteries. The monastic orders formed an alliance with them, so that the convents frequently became their domicil, and they instructed the monks in the secret principles of their art. The popes took them under their protection and granted them charters of monopoly as ecclesiastical architects and invested them with many important and exclusive privileges. Dissevering the ties which bound them to the monks, these Freemasons (so called to distinguish them from the rough masons, who were of an inferior grade and not members of the corporation) subsequently established the guilds of stone-masons, which existed until the end of the seventeenth century in Germany, France, England and Scotland.

It may be observed in passing, that the historical connection between the modern Freemasons and the craft guilds of the Middle Ages, is very strongly pressed by the authentic school of Masonic history, more especially since the researches of Toulmin Smith, Brentano and a few other writers have developed the many points of that connection.

These stonemasons, or, as they continue to call themselves, Freemasons, had one peculiarity in their organization which is necessary to be considered if we would comprehend the relation that exists between them and the Freemasons of the present day. The society was necessarily an operative one whose members were actually engaged in the manual labor of building, as well as in the more intellectual occupation of architectural designing. This, with the fact of their previous connection with the monks who probably projected the plans which the Masons carried into execution, led to the admission among them of persons who were not Operative Masons. These were high ecclesiastics, wealthy nobles and men of science who were encouragers and patrons of the art. These, not competent to engage in the labor of building, were supposed to confine themselves to philosophic speculations on the principles of the art, and to symbolizing or spiritualizing its labors and its implements. Hence there resulted a division of the membership of the brotherhood into two classes, the practical and the theoretic, or, as they are more commonly called the Operative and the Speculative.

The Operative Masons always held the ascendency in numbers, but the Speculative Masons exerted a greater influence by their higher culture, their wealth and their social position.

In time there came a total and permanent disseverance of the two elements. At what precise period this event occurred we cannot say, but it was somewhere between the middle and the close of the seventeenth century. At the beginning of the eighteenth century there were several lodges in England, but for a long time there had been no meeting of a general assembly. In the year 1717 Freemasonry was revived, and the Grand Lodge of England established by the four lodges which then existed in London. This revival took place through the influence and by the exertions of non-operatives or speculative Masons, and the institution has ever since preserved the character. Lodges were speedily established all over the world—in Europe, America and Asia—by the mother Grand Lodge at London, which, for that purpose, issued provincial deputations or patents of authority to introduce the order into foreign countries. No important change has taken place in the organization of the association since that period. As soon as a competent number of lodges had been established in any independent State, a Grand Lodge was at once constituted; and now, in every kingdom of Europe, with two exceptions, in every State of the American Union, in the Dominion of Canada, and other British provinces, and in each of the South American republics, there is a Grand Lodge exercising sovereign Masonic power, while in some colonies which have not attained political independence Provincial Grand Lodges have been instituted, with slightly inferior prerogatives.

Such is the theory of the origin of Freemasonry as a mystical organization, that has been adopted by what I have called the authentic school of historians and which is now very generally accepted by Masonic scholars.

It is evident from what has been said, that the Freemasonry of the present day is a philosophic or speculative science, derived from, and issuing out of an operative art. In denominating it a science, we should be more precise were we to say that it is a science of symbolism. This science of symbolism, once so common as to have been deeply studied by the ancient philosophers, and by the modern Gnostics, Rosicrucians and Alchemists, is now maintained and cultivated in all its perfection by only two institutions—the Roman Catholic church and the order of Freemasonry. One of the authoratative definitions of Freemasonry is that it is "a science of morality, veiled in allegory, and illustrated by symbols." But a more correct definition would be that it is "a system of morality developed and inculcated by the science of symbolism."

Its original descent from an association of builders has given to its symbolism a peculiar character. All the labors of operative or stone masonry, its implements and its technical language, have been seized by the Speculative Freemasons and appropriated by them as symbols, each of which teaches some important moral or religious truth. The cathedrals which their predecessors erected, some of which till remain as proud monuments of sheir surpassing skill in architecture, have been replaced for esoteric reasons, by the Temple of Solomon, which has became, with one exception, the most important and significant of the symbols of the order.

Religious Intelligence.

—A revival at Aurora, Ind., under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A. has accomplished wonderful results. Over one hundred conversions are reported and as many accessions to the churches. A similar meeting in Brownstown is now being held. The latest reports state that no church in town is large enough to contain the crowd, and the meetings are now held in the Court House.

—Mr. K. A. Burnell, the earnest lay preacher, is now engaged under the auspices of the Illinois Y. M. C. A. in the renewed spiritual canvass of that State. The first of last month he was holding a series of out-of-door and in-door services in the town of Earlville.

—The provision of the draft of the new Spanish Constitution in relation to the exercise of religion is explained to mean that non-Catholic worship will be tolerated indoors, but that no public religious ceremonies other than Catholic will be permitted. The Catholic religion is declared to be the religion of the State. It should be remembered that this is no more than a draft of an article of the Constitution prepared by a committee.

—Mr. Henry Varley, the English evangelist who spoke last winter in New York, has been holding a series of religious meetings in Edinburgh.

—Phillip Phillips, the well-known religious singer, is making a tour of the world. He is to reach Calcutta in September, and will sing in aid of the Methodist chapel there.

—At the Evangelical Convention at Sea Grove, Cape May, on Saturday, a resolution favoring the disciplining of liquor-dealing church members, as well as those that drink intoxicating liquors, was defeated. A resolution denouncing Sunday excursions and Sunday liquor-selling was adopted, and also a resolution recognizing Sunday Schools as important and valuable agencies, asking for their closer connection with the churches, and more care in the selection of Sunday School literature.

—The next term of the Chicago Theological Seminary opens on the 15th. Prof. C. A. Blanchard who has been released from duties at Wheaton College this year expects to begin a theological course there. Mr. W. I. Phillips, well known in Northern Illinois as among the first colporteurs for our own cause, is also a student. He has been supplying a church near Morris, Ill., during his summer vacation.

—Mr. Dawson, one of the converts of St. Louis, under Mr. Hammond's labors, has been holding meetings at Adams, Burton and Liberty, Ill., for about six weeks, and with very happy results. The conversions at Burton and Adams have numbered about forty each, of whom twelve united with the church at the former place on the 22d ult. The Baptists worked harmoniously with them, and have also received additions. At Liberty, though the meetings were not so successful, yet much good was done. Mr. Dawson goes next to Richfield.

—Rev. A. J. Drake, of the Congregational church at Atkinson, Ill., is now taking his first vacation in a ministry of thirty years; and yet in that time he has not been out of the pulpit a single Sunday. Since April last he has received sixteen members into the church at Atkinson. This is a record ministers who cannot live without their month's vacation would do well to emulate.

—Rev. C. F. Hawley sends word to the Bible Standard that there has been a great revival of holiness on the Sandy Lake Wesleyan circuit, Allegheny county, Pa., the past year.

—The Wesleyan church of Syracuse, N. Y., is also reported as enjoying a glorious revival.

—Rev. Thomas H. Hanna, late of the Second United Presbyterian church, Pittsburg, Pa., and more recently supplying the pulpit of the United Presbyterian church of St. Louis, has accepted the call extended him from the First U. P. church of Xenia, Ohio, to become their pastor, and will assume the duties of his new pastorate there the first Sabbath in September.

—The new Minutes of the General Assembly show a roll of 4,706 ministers, 304 licentiates, and 4,999 churches, an increase of over a hundred ministers and over fifty churches over last year. The benevolent columns show an increase of contributions for most of the causes. There is, however, a falling off in foreign missions and in sustentation.

—Rev. Jos. T. Cooper, D. D., of the United Presbyterian Theological Seminary, lately met with a painful accident. He had been on a visit to Mount Vernon, and on going on board the boat his head struck an iron beam causing him to fall backwards and sprain the knee joint. It was with difficulty he was conveyed to Philadelphia, where he is now confined with a painful injury.

—A young Norwegian, who was converted under Moody and Sankey's preaching, has returned to his own country and started a Sabbath School, the first ever opened in the North of that country.

News of the Week.

The City.

The Inter-State Industrial Exhibition opened last evening, Sep. 8th, with a grander display than ever.——Mrs. A. B. Norton, a member of the Texas editorial excursion now visiting Chicago, was severely injured by the cars on the arrival of the excursion, and is not expected to live.——Mayor Colvin made a display of his powers as executive last week in ordering the release of a riotous laborer from jail, at the request of the employer, without trial or investigation.

General.

A resolution was introduced into the Connecticut House of Representatives, to amend the State constitution so as to forever prohibit any State grant to sectarian institutions. The Democratic members of the house voted almost as a unit in favor of the expressed wishes of the Roman Catholics.——Secretary Bristow has received a bid offering to pay twenty-one hundred dollars per month for the privilege of printing government stamps free. It is supposed the company bidding expects to be identified by the advertisement which it gets by printing its name and business on the stamps. The Secretary refuses to become a partner in this arrangement.——The watch factory at Elgin, Illinois, has begun work on three thousand watches for the English market.——The Northern Pacific railroad has been turned over to the bondholders of the corporation, for the sum of one hundred thousand dollars. ——The Bank of California is found to have some 8 millions assets above liabilities and its directors have subscribed as much more to its stock. It is expected to resume soon. It is now known that the death of Ralston, the president of the Bank was from apoplexy, not poison.——A very unusual execution occurred at Ft. Smith, Arkansas, on Friday last. Six men, four whites, one negro and one Indian were hung at the same time under sentence of the U. S. District Court.——The Indian ring have been circulating among the Sioux chiefs and persuading them to ask an exorbitant price for the Black Hills region. The aggregate of their demands will reach, it is said over $100-000,000, which will quickly fall into the hands of the infamous ring.

Foreign.

The National Council of Switzerland has passed resolutions for the suppression of convents and organizations o fsisters of charity.——A convention of the United States with Italy for the exchange of money orders will probably be soon agreed to, and be put n operation next year.——A special dispatch from Rome, says that the Pope invited Archbishop Ledochowski to Rome on the expiration of his term of imprisonment of February next, to attend a special consistory, at which he will receive the insignia of the Cardinalate.——The Synod of Irish Archbsihops and Bishops of the Roman Catholic church, summoned by Cardinal Cullen, under the express authority of the Pope, met at Maynooth, Aug. 31st. Cardinal Cullen presided. The proceedings were held with closed doors. It is understood that the education question will be the subject of deliberation.——Don Carlos refuses to disband his armies. He is concentrating his forces at Guipuzcoa, and calls out able bodied men, between eighteen and fifty years of age, throughout Navarre.——The Khedive of Egypt has decreed that hereafter the calendar used by Christian nations will be used in that coun ry instead of he Mohammedan.

Home and Health Hints.

THE HAY FEVER.—Hay fever, if not a malady of the most serious character, is nevertheless an unpleasant one; and, in the interest of those who are liable to it, a discovery which two Continental professors appear to have made between them cannot be too generally known. The victims of this curious epidemic can never venture into the sunshine or get heated by exercise between about the middle of May and the end of June without an attack of violent sneezing, inflammation of the nose, severe headache and general depression, in short, all the symptons of a most distressing cold. Prof. Helmholtz observed that the malady was invariably characterized by the presence of very minute infusoria, not unlike the queer little creatures that we sometimes see in rain water butts, only much smaller. These he found sticking most tenaciously in the lower cavities and recesses of the nose, and he noticed that at low temperatures they were very sluggish and inactive, but woke up, as it were, when warmed. Here, then, was the secret of the disease; but it was Prof. Binz whose investigation suggested the remedy. He found that infusoria might be killed by quinine, and of this fact Helmholtz availed himself of his treatment of hay fever, from which he himself had been a sufferer in the early summer for twenty years. The learned Professer made a very weak solution of sulphate of quinine, and, lying flat on his back with his head down, he poured a little of it into each nostril, and found instant relief. The remedy is a cheap and simple one, and ought to prove very valuable to those whom this queer affection deprives of half the pleasure they find in a country walk at this delightful season of the year.

EVENING DAMPS.—One more fruitful cause of disease remains to be noted, viz., excessive diurnal changes of temperature. The range of the thermometer from noonday to morning or evening is not only greater in the country, but the heavy dews consequent upon this render the changes more perceptible and less easily resisted by the human system. During the day the heat is felt more severely than in the city where shelter during exercise is obtainable for most of the day, and when evening comes on, with its cool breezes, incautious persons expose themselves with little or no additional clothing. They came into the country to be comfortable, they say, and they ride or sit in the open air till thoroughly cooled if not slightly chilled. At the same hour the next day they are again chilled, and so on until intermittent fever or some one of its kindred diseases, so cordially invited, steps in and takes full possession. We by no means repudiate the malarial origin of these diseases, but we do say that such a course of conduct strongly predisposes the system to the influence of that dread unknown destroyer.

Such checks of perspiration are also frequent causes of intestinal diseases—more frequent than any other, as is notoriously seen in the greater prevalence of dysentery and kindred disorders when the contrast between the temperature of night and day is most marked.—Dr. Searle.

JELLY.—The juice of apples boiled in shallow vessels, without a particle of sugar, makes the most sparkling, delicious jelly imaginable. Red apples will give jelly the color and clearness of claret, while that from light fruit is like amber. Take cider just as it is made, and not allowing it to ferment at all, and if possible boil in a flat pan very large and shallow. Any one living near a "house" for boiling sorghum juice can make this jelly to perfection.

Farm and Garden.

Farming for God.

One other character figures by the side of "Old Beam" in my boyhood memories—"Old Conner." He used to peddle peaches; he had a sharp face; did not want us boys to steal his peaches; he had a good knack for making boys work. My father schooled my brother on his farm one summer. It would have been better for me if I had been put to the same business of hard work early and late, under his keen eye, for one season. This man waa to me, at first, simply "Old Conner," as street-loafers, field-hands, and school-boys called him. But I afterward found out that his peach-orchard belonged to the American Board, and all his apples to the Home Mission Society, and his grapes to the sailors. If I do not remember the items right, it does not matter. One thing is certain; upon that rocky farm, on a high hill where we could see almost everywhere, he lived wholly for others; he pinched himself, and lived snugly, for others. And he looked out sharply that no devil incarnate in a wicked man should cheat the Lord in trading with "Old Conner." He would not have an idler treading on God's farm; he stirred up the the boys by candlelight on frosty mornings; he made his pigs and young cattle honor the Lord by attending closely to their business of growing fat and strong. Abel Conner—a name well known in heaven—did business wholly for God; and he was so hearty and kindly in it in his own house that his son, after him, remembered the poor, and became a whole hearted giver just like his father. This man's solitary study of the Bible, and hard pleading with God to know the right way, and readiness to consecrate himself and to give God his own, taught him how to do business for God better than I could have done it in seven sermons.—Congregationalist.

A correspondent of the American Farm Journal writes: "A thorough trial has convinced us that coal ashes scattered around the roots of plum trees from five to six inches in depth, and for an extent of about four feet in circumferance is the best remedy for the annihilation of that destroyer of this luscious fruit, the curculio. For many years a fine and apparently healthy plum tree of the green gage variety has every spring gladdened us with its countless snowy blossoms, only to bring disappointment. Our coal ashes from two coal stoves had, during the entire winter and spring, being placed in a huge pile in the yard, with the intention of having it carted away during the summer. However, learning of the value of coal ashes for old apple trees, the thought struck us that there would be no harm in trying it for the young plum tree, as it might destroy the curculio eggs in that vicinity. Accordingly, coal ashes, as above described, were placed around its roots, and the remainder of the ash heap scattered in the same manner around four or five English cherry trees, hitherto useless, since their fruit had been so stung that it had always been worthless. Never did trees blossom more profusely, but it was a good fruit year, and the ashes were not supposed to have benefited them in this respect. As the small green fruit began to form, very little of it fell to the ground, and that was unusually large, plump, perfectly sound and healthy, and very abundant in quantity."

RENOVATING BUGGY TOPS.—Enamel leather tops which have become hard, but have not lost their color, can be softened and much improved in appearance by oiling them with pure castor oil. This oil is readily absorbed by the leather, and will not fry out in the sun. When the leather has turned gray, apply a coat of hatter's blacking, after the oil has struck in, and rub well with a cloth to bring out the polish. Most varnishes dry too hard to be used on tops, shellac varnish being the only kind that can be used with safety, but this will crack unless the coat be applied very thin.

Publishers' Department.

Since we stated in the Cynosure two weeks ago, that we would publish the names of persons sending six or more subscribers, at one time we have received but one such name, C. A, Blanchard, who sends us eight subscribers. If you will send us six names at one time, whether they are renewals or new subscribers, it shall be published in the paper. This is a good time to speak to those whose time is just out. An agent met a man in Peoria who has taken our paper for some time, and asked him how he liked the Cynosure. "Very much," said he, "I take a number of papers, but not one out of which I can get so much that is good to keep as the Cynosure. And, by the way, my time is up and I must renew." That man has not renewed yet. He probably had not the money ready at the time and is waiting for the agent to call on him. There are many others of the same class, and where they are not there are new subscribers to be procured.

SUBSCRIPTIONS RECEIVED DURING WEEK ENDING SEPT. 4, 1875, FROM S Bayles, A Blair, C A Blanchard, J L Barlow, J M Bishop, E S Bunce, J Blanchard, O C M Bates, J Christie, N Churchill, C Conkling, J C Card, B C Elrod, S Fletcher, Jno Fait, A Fenn, T Graefe, R Goreley, A Gibson, J W Hobson (2), C A Hunt, J Harley, T Hodge, G Helber, F Huber, N M Johnston, G W Keller, J Kerr, W S Keil, M S Kirk, H S Limbocker, W S Magill, R Metcalf, H M McLaughlin, A Mussleman, S G Miller, S A Pratt, W Pinkney, E T Preston, M Pettengill, D P Rathbun, H R Smith, H C Stoughton, T H Tracy, D Thompson, J A Vance, E Whipple, J S Yakey.

Postage on the Cynosure.

THE POSTAGE ON THE CYNOSURE MUST BE PAID AT CHICAGO. It is twenty cents a year.

The cost of postage now depends entirely on the size and weight, and therefore some smaller papers charge but fifteen cents; and others about the size of the Cynosure charge twenty-five cents a year for postage.

If the subscription price of the CYNOSURE was $2.50 or $3.00 a year, the price of many religious papers containing no more reading matter, we might afford to pay the postage ourselves, but at $2.00 a year we cannot do this with our present Subscription list.

Therefore let all send the postage, 20 cents a year, 10 cents for half a year with their renewals.

The commission on one new subscription for a year will pay the postage on your own and the new subscriber's paper. We would rather have the postage paid by commissions than in any other way.

When postage is not paid we shall have to shorten the time of subscription sufficiently to pay it.

How to Send Money.

Post office orders, checks or drafts on Chicago or towns east of Chicago, and currency by express may be sent at our risk. If it is not possible to send by either of the four ways named, money in a registered letter may be sent at our risk, but it is not as safe.

The date at which subscriptions expire is with each subscriber's name on the address label. Send renewals before this date occurs. Notice if this date is changed to correspond; if not or if the paper fails to come, write without delay.

We discontinue during the first part of each month all subscriptions which expire during the preceding one except such as are ordered continued with a promise to forward the money soon. We do not like to lose a single subscriber and will not remove names simply because the cash is not received promptly, if we understand that the paper is wanted. Address all letters with subscriptions or orders for Books, Tracts and donations to the Tract Fund to EZRA A. COOK & Co., 13 Wabash Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

Topics of the Time.

Charles Nordhoff, a correspondent and author of some note, says from a personal examination of affairs in the South, that, considering the influence over the colored men exercised by Republican politicians, the prejudice now existing between the races can only be broken down by at least one term of Democratic State government, so that such prejudices may be removed when it is found that these political opponents are rather imaginary than real tyrants. If there could be any assurance that law would be enforced, and murdering Ku-Klux and White Leagues properly punished under another management, the experiment might be pronounced a success before trial. But the recurrence of scenes like that of a week ago at Clinton, Miss., will not inspire confidence in the suggestion of Mr. Nordhoff.

To whatever cause it may be attributed the impotency in enforcing law is answerable for all the troubles of the South. The best officials have recognized this and labored to bring society back to a proper recognition of the law and its officers. The occasional intervention of United States troops, while a necessary evil, has not tended to assist their honest efforts; and the frequent changes in political leaders, who in turn buttress their administrations with new and contradictory statutes, continually undo whatever advance may have been gained. But the South is not alone in this great danger. In every State and at Washington the unsettled state of the laws is a sad and significant omen. Laws which should be regarded as permanent have become subject to the caprice of the party in power. Legislators take satisfaction not in proving honest custodians of the law, but in originating the most contrivances possible to be bound in the statutes and ground through the over-fed mill of the courts. Thus all reverence for law is being surely wiped off the American conscience and we are preparing to receive a dictator with acclamations.

Guibord, a Catholic who introduced lithography into Canada, was a member of a society interdicted by the Bishop of Montreal, and therefore when he died in 1869 his burial was forbidden by the priests in his purchased lot in the Catholic cemetery, where the remains of his wife already lay. His society went before the courts and the matter has been carried by appeal from one tribunal to another until the Queen's Bench decided against the Bishop. When the commands of the highest court in the British Empire were about to be executed a week ago the Catholic mob at the beck of their priests assailed the funeral cortege with deadly energy and has guarded the grounds ever since, while the authorities mindful of their duty, wait a favorable moment when the decree can be carried out without bloodshed. With other people such a resistance of law by Catholic powers would be sufficient excuse for their subversion. But neither the time nor place seem suited to make of this case what "John Brown's body" has been to us.

The Philadelphia Times calls attention to the necessity of a National recognition of Freemasonry next year in the following: "Although the fathers of the nation were mostly prominent Freemasons, who framed our system of government in the spirit if not in the letter of those ancient social laws which control the action of the brethren of the mystic tie, yet it appears that our local Masons will take no active part in celebrating the coming Centennial as a society. To a new branch of the Masonic order, known as the Knights Templar, has been assigned the duty of making a display next year, and to this end the Grand Encampment of the United States has been invited to meet in this city next May, and the invitation has been accepted." While it is neither true that "the fathers" of nation were "mostly prominent" lodgemen, nor that our government is modeled after the partial and degrading lodge-system, there is no doubt there are men enough in that institution who will make every effort to foist their swindle upon the country as a first-class Americanism. They are wise in selecting the Knight Templars to represent them. While the Blue lodge will rank far higher in the average of intelligence and sobriety of appearance, the abundant spangles and barbaric ornaments of the Templars tend to conceal the fact and make a display attractive to the crowd. This body is less in number also, and are more sworn and so more manageable morse likely to make public any arrangement of doubtful character. Within a few years the arrogance of the lodge has claimed the rank of a national institution before the representatives of England, Japan, and the Sandwich Islands, shall it be allowed to speak with false tongue for American principles before the assembled nations?

A Voice from Vanity Fair.

Where the minister, the editor in Saratoga that has the moral stamina, the godly love and fear in his heart to speak out boldly against popular iniquities that stare him full in the face? O where? Against gambling dens, gambling hells, club houses, horse racings, boat racings, for pleasure and filthy lucre, against nightly revelings? Who dares cry out in Saratoga against Freemasonry, Odd-fellowship and other secret abominations that are a curse to the church, a curse to the world? Against grog-selling; the devil's broth; distilled damnation! Where, I repeat, is the professed teacher in Israel here, who has life, soul, God-fearing and God-loving enough to thunder, thunder, THUNDER, against these works of darkness, death and damnation? Lips are closed! How otherwise? There are grog-sellers in the church, murderers of fathers, murderers of mothers, wives and little ones. Here are gamblers in the church; horse-racing members in the church; pleasure-goers in the church; Masons, Odd-fellows in the church, that eat out the very life of Gospel purity and love. And why are the lips of ministers closed that come from the four winds to Saratoga year by year? Where is Elijah, Elisha, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, Daniel, Paul, Peter, James and John? Where is Luther, Wesley, Whitfield, Baxter, Bunyan, the sons of thunder—O where?

What did Paul on Mars Hill? Hush idolatry? His spirit was stirred within him and he said, "Ye men of Athens, I perceive that in all things ye are too superstitious." (Acts xvii. 22.) Among the numerous gods worshipped in Saratoga, the almighty dollar, filthy lucre, the love of gain, "the root of all evil" is the chief. Ministers engage in games of chance, giggle, talk nonsense, crack jokes with the ungodly. Come and see! Attend the hop, the dance! See if it is not true. Dance? O no! They merely look on and see what the devil is doing! Saul didn't throw any stones at Stephen; he only took good care of the clothes of those that were committing murder. Ministers attend gambling-dens, sink-holes of perdition; horse-racings and the like. Bet? O no! They merely look on to see what Satan and his imps are at. They are on the devil's premises. But where voice of warning, the crying aloud, the sparing not? Silence gives consent. The partaker is bad as the thief. "Be ye not partakers of other men's sins?" Why were Ananias and Sapphira struck dead instantly? For keeping back part of the price. How many corpses, think you, dear editor, would there be in Saratoga and elsewhere in pulpits, in chairs editorial, were God to deal in strict justice instantly, as in times of old?

Some years ago, before our civil war, when the slavery question was agitated, there was one brother, in a public assembly here in Saratoga who ventured to open his lips for the oppressed, against "the sum of all villanies." Many slave-holders South and a host of pro-slavery men from the North were present. What the result of this one voice in the name of the Lord? Had a bomb-shell bursted in their midst, the alarm could not have been greater. The whole assembly was confused, agitated. The outcry on every side was, "Out with this disturber! Out with him! Put him out! Quick!" The poor man barely escaped with his life. Slave-holders were enraged; pro-slavery men were enraged; hotel-keepers were troubled; ministers and editors were perplexed; every man, woman and child had a voice in this upheaving. "Sirs ye know that by this craft we have our wealth." Our craft is in danger to be set at naught; and also the temple of the great goddess Diana should be despised, and her magnificence should be destroyed, whom all Saratoga worshipeth; all with one voice cried out: Great is Diana (the almighty dollar) of Saratoga!

Beloved editor, do you know what Saratoga is during four or six months every year? Read John, read Bunyan's Vanity Fair in his "Pilgrim." Worse than Sodom! Hear what Christ says: "And thou, Capernaum [Saratoga], which art exalted into heaven, shalt be brought down to hell; for if the mighty works which have been done in thee had been done in Sodom, it would have remained until this day." Matt. xi. 23.

"HOME THRUSTS," at Saratoga.

"What! will I ca' a man my superior, because he's cleverer than mysel'? will I boo down to a bit o' brains, any mair than to a stock or a stane? Let a man prove himsel' better than me, my laddie—honester, humbler, kinder, wi' mair sense o' the duty o' man, an' the weakness o' man—and that man I'll acknowledge—that man's my king, my leader, though he was as stupid as Epps Dalglerish, that could na count five on her fingers, and yet keepit her drucken father by her ain hand's labor, for twenty three years."—Sandy Mackaye, in Alton Locke.

It is vain to trust in wrong; as much of evil, so much of loss, is the formula of human history.

Lodge Principles Historically Examined.

BY SAMUEL D. GREENE.

The principles of Freemasonry and all secret societies have got to be examined, as all other subjects are, in the light of evidence. Parades cannot prevent it, nor the exhibition of gewgaws, nor burying of their dead, nor even if they should pretend to have the right to lay all the corner-stones of every public building in the Union, and parade at all the centennial observances of Lexington, and Bunker Hill, or the National birth. The assertion is, Freemasonry and these numerous associations are opposed, some more and some less, to universal rights, to the laws of God and his church on earth, to the laws of man necessary to equity in the dispensation of justice and civil liberty.

Let us at once enter the field of our present labors. This field presents an anomaly. It is no longer hedged up. It is no longer covert but overt. I would therefore in the first place ask all, solemnly and seriously, whether Masons or not, to candidly investigate speculative Freemasonry. Take no longer what has been taken for granted to be true. Examine this in the light of evidence as you do all other other matters, and its superstructure will tumble from its high exaltation of infidelity, of falsehood and of base deception.

The oath to hail and conceal and never have Freemasonry where it would be legible or intelligible to themselves or others, so long as it could find an apology in their breast for its observance, would forever be a covert for all the iniquity practiced under the apprehension of its penalty. This very fact is sufficient to create distrust of the most lively nature and sink the institution with all its fixtures in the estimation of freemen. Men of veracity and respectability not unfrequently flatter themselves with the idea, that the extreme vanities with while they have associated are likely to remain untold. Therefore with many, while it bore to them the features of a harmless, as well as a foolish diverison, no serious objections against it would be advanced. Thus hundreds of good men have received Freemasonry in its incipient steps, and have never taken the trouble to trace its origin or to discover its design; until that Being who brings all the hidden things of darkness sooner or later to light, and who will make manifest the counsels of the heart, hath brought the acts of the Masonic society to bear upon itself. When it assumed the prerogative of trying and punishing by its laws those free American citizens who had fulfilled the laws of Freemasonry agreeably to its letter, but contrary to its designs; although the punishment was contrary to the laws of God and of the land, but merely to satisfy its avidity and secure its folly and iniquity; particularly when it had torn one free citizen from his fireside and his family, and had deprived himself of his liberty and of his life, had made his wife a widow, and his children orphans; when it had, by its laws also applied the torch of the incendiary to the dwelling of an inoffensive citizen and dragged him from his home to a Masonic lodge-room;——I say when it had boasted of its power, and the world in arms could not subdue it, and when it had said in its heart, "I am and there is none else beside me;" then it was that God by his sovereignty and his grace, caused the conscientious recipients to review their steps over the trackless waste, which they by credulity had been made to march, and with humility, shamefacedness and disgust were made to behold this ancient pretender, a child of the 18th century, a school of infidelity, a cover for iniquity and an engine to destroy our civil and religious liberty; and with horror and with fearful trembling, we found ourselves (though as we humbly trust wedded to our Saviour) the instruments of the wicked and designing to bring into contempt the history of the world's creation by divine inspiration, and to level our Holy Bible with the working tools of a mechanic; and to take the holy name of God in vain; and to adopt the most contemptible things as a god, and to bring the history of our Saviour, the resurrection of the dead, and religious ordinances, of prayer, of faith, of hope, of charity and all the sacred history of the Bible into a farce and utter contempt. All this is done with the most cunning artifice and imperceptibly received when it was extolled to the skies.

Two things are only necessary to insure the downfall of Freemasonry. The first is that the people shall be quite sure that Freemasonry is fairly before the world; and the other is to get them to read it; to examine it in the light of the present age. The people of these United States are generally enlightened and intelligent. Freemasonry has had more than its share of popularity; and on account of the supposed secrecy and amiability its advocates have given to it, there has been much error imbibed, and different opinions have been formed in relation to it. The generality of Freemasons suppose the initiation rather an unmeaning and foolish ceremony, but that its design and object is to support morality, benevolence and brotherly love. These are the principles many honestly suppose it to possess. But while this is the cloak, the serpent is coiled in the application of its ceremonies as they are advanced, and at the top of the ladder where the design and object is thoroughly explained.

In the first place then I will present to you what evidence there is that the initiatory rights and ceremonies of speculative Freemasonry are published. We come to a knowledge of these facts in the same manner that we come to the knowledge of all other facts; by testimony. The same means must be resorted to in this as in all other cases of the like to ascertain the credibility of their testimony. How do we know that our blessed Saviour was on earth 1875 years ago, and that he performed mir cles, healed the sick, caused the lame to walk, the dumb to speak, the deaf to hear, the blind to see? It is by testimony. And how was this testimony obtained? It was by eye witnesses and by experience. This testimony then is true and conclusive. We then are supposed to know Freemasonry upon the same principle. It is from those who have taken upon them its ceremonies and been conversant with its principles, that we can derive our knowledge of it, and also from its own writings. It is from the same testimony also that we learn the fact that many were ignorant of Freemasonry in its design, when they were only acquainted with its initiatory rites and forms. The design was not made known to the novitiate. This would have destroyed the whole plan, and Freemasonry with the help of honest Masons, long ago would have been a mass of ruins. Freemasonry and Illuminism are counterparts. The same door to go in at, which is the Entered Apprentice; the same ladder to climb; its incipient steps equally blind; its character and pretensions equally good; its result the same; its final object the subversion of Christianity, the spread of infidelity and atheism, and opposition to the laws and government except so far as they shall serve the object of selfishness and design. Illuminism and Freemasonry are both exposed and by proving one we prove both, and we have only to read both to find they are the same. Freemasonry is proved to be before the world by forty-one seceders, who testified to the same, severally, to twenty-one degrees, at a convention of Freemasons held at Leroy, Genesee county, New York, on the 19th of February, 1828. At a subsequent meeting on the 4th of July, 1828, one hundred and thirty-six publicly declared the same.

But this is not all the evidence. The disclosures perfectly correspond with Masonic works in many essentials. Again Freemasonry has been proved in courts in challenging jurors in the case of Elihu Mather, at the court of Oyer and Terminer, held at Orleans county, New York, Judge Gardiner presiding. All was proved to the Royal Arch as is published. Again Freemasonry was proved to seven degrees at New Berlin, N. Y., when the overseer of the poor brought a suit against Thurlow E. Witherell, for exhibiting the first seven degrees. And again at a court in Newport, R. I., on the challenge of a jury all was proved to seven degrees; and in all these last three cases by Freemasons who had not renounced the order. Also at Great Barrington, Massachusetts, on the trial of Capt. Allen for using his pistol to keep a seceding minister from going into the pulpit on the Sabbath to preach, all was testified to, to seven degrees; and in all four of these cases the Freemasons swore, when the questions were particularly put, that they swore in the Royal Arch oath to "aid and assist a companion Royal Arch Mason when engaged in any difficulty and espouse his cause so far as to extricate him from the same, if in his power, whether he be right or wrong." "Furthermore, that a companion Royal Arch Mason's secrets given me in charge as such, and I knowing them to be such, shall remain as secure and inviolable in my breast as in his own, murder and treason not excepted." Again, Freemasonry has been proved in ecclesiastical tribunals and by Masons professing Christianity before Rochester, Genesee and Oneida Presbyteries, and in the first and second Presbyteries in the city of New York, and in Genesee Synod to thirty-three degrees by those who were seceders and those who were not. The same has been proved by the Baptist associations and Genesee consociations in answer to the Rev. Joseph Emerson of Wethersfield, Connecticut.

I could enumerate many more cases together with the opinion and assertion of some twenty thousand seceders, and not a solitary instance has a Freemason sworn these things were not so; but always when called upon, swore they were. Then if we can believe human testimony, Masonry in all its forms is before the world and the testimony also. Ought not Masonic philanthropists to take some witness up and try him for perjury and make an example of him that their institution may stand clothed in its garb of innocency and their characters be retrieved? But they cannot, they dare not attempt it.

Profanation of an Oath.

An oath may be profaned,—is profaned (1.) when the jurant has no lawful call to take an oath. In this case both the administrator and the jurant have a curse resting upon them. If the administrator administer an oath to one having no lawful call, he makes himself partaker of the sin of the jurant.

2. An oath is profaned when the administrator has no lawful authority, and there is in this case also a curse resting on both the parties, because in this case the jurant makes himself partaker of the sin of the administrator. And all these curses will remain on both these parties until they are brought to a righteous repentance and reformation; until "Christ redeems them from the curse of the law, being made a curse for them." Gal. iii. 13.

3. When the administrator is lawful, and the jurant swears falsely, the latter has two curses resting on him, one for profanation, the other for perjury.

4. When the administrator administers an oath binding to do that which is sinful, both parties are guilty of perjury and profanation. In swearing this unlawful oath, the jurant makes himself partaker of the sins of the administrator. In this case, the administrator profanes his authority in enforcing the violation of the ninth precept of the moral law; and the jurant makes a profane use of the ordinance of the oaths; first, in taking, and second, in keeping an unlawful oath. And God says, "I will bring it (the curse) forth, saith the Lord of hosts, and it shall enter into the house of the thief, and into the house of him that sweareth falsely by my name: and it shall remain in the midst of his house, and shall consume it with the timber thereof, and the stones thereof." Zech. vi. 4.

What prepares both the administrator and jurant to avoid an unholy, and make a holy use of the ordinance of the oaths? We answer, nothing at all but the grace of God—nothing but the grace of God both in the administrator and in the jurant; for "whatsoever is not of faith is sin," and "without faith it is impossible to please him"—to please God. Then the grace of God, and faith in exercise are absolutely necessary in both parties, and nothing but faith and repentance for the sin of profaning an oath, can save either of the parties from the wrath and curse of God.

In the case of Freemasonry and other secret associations, there is a three-fold curse resting on both the parties. On the administrator: (1.) because he has no lawful authority to administer an oath; (2.) because he administers an oath to one having no lawful call to take an oath; (3.) because he administers an unlawful oath. There is also a three-fold curse on thejurant: (1.) because he has no lawful call; (2.) no lawful administrator; (3.) because he swears to do that which is sinful—swears to keep secrets, not knowing whether they are right or wrong. And besides all this, in this unholy and profane transaction, the administrator makes himself partaker of the sins of the jurant, and the jurant makes himself partaker of the sins of the administrator; and thus a six-fold curse is resting on the heads of both. And these curses are always increasing in their aggravations, especially on the part of the administrator, until the parties confess and forsake their sins. And as they were confederate in committing these horrible sins, so ought they to be in confessing, objuring and forsaking them. If men may enter into a social compact to profane the ninth precept of the divine law, why not enter into a solemn social league to objure that monstrous deed, and to perform the opposing duties? Certainly the latter would not be an unreasonable service.

A minister of the Gospel has no power to administer a Freemason oath. The presbytery that ordained him had no such power to give, because they received no such power from God. And, "there is no power but of God." Rom. xiii. 1. And so, a lawfully ordained or appointed civil magistrate has authority to administer an oath in civil cases, or in civil court, because the court clothed him with that authority. But the court never clothed him with authority to administer a Freemason oath, because the court never had such authority to give. God has never given to any ecclesiastical or civil court any such power, and of course they can never give a power which they themselves never received from God. And this power is inherent in no man or court, but only in God: and of course an oath ought not to be administered in the name or by the authority of any man or court, but in the name and by the authority of God only. To administer an oath in the name of any man or court, is to administer it by their authority. An oath is a divine, not a human institution, and therefore must be administered in the name, and by the authority of God, and not in the name or by the authority of men. A secret association has no more right to administer an oath than it has to preach the word, dispense the sacraments, exercise the keys of the kingdom of heaven, or administer civil government. The authority of all secret associations is assumed—not derived from God, the church or the state.

Then it is certain that there can be no such a thing as administering or swearing a lawful oath in any secret association; because in these profane institutions—having no divine appointment, there can be no person having a lawful or divine call, either to administer or take an oath; an oath being both a divine ordinance, and an act of religious worship. Every candidate in swearing the oath connected with taking the first degree, violates or profanes the ninth precept of the moral law; and the profanity of all their oaths is progressive. Each successive oath is more profane and wicked than its predecessor. And in taking on themselves their last degree—their last profane obligations, all their preceding obligations are reaffirmed. How then can either church or state fellowship the members of such intensely profane and wicked associations? Can they do so without fellowshiping unrighteousness, having communion with darkness, concord with Belial, part with infidels, and agreement with idols? Cor. vi. 15. And is it not the duty of all to have fellowship with righteousness, communion with light, concord with Christ, part with believers and agreement with the temple of God? Those who associate with wicked societies are doing so to their own destruction. "He that walketh with wise men shall be wise, but a companion of fools shall be destroyed. Prov. xiii. 20. B.

Timely Questions.

In a recent number the Christian Intelligencer, New York, called attention to the flagrant violation of the Sabbath law by the Pennsylvania Railroad Company in running two excursion trains on Sabbath, the 15th ult., from New York to Philadelphia and back—the object being the accommodation of persons wishing to visit the Centennial grounds and buildings. In its last number the Intelligencer, regarding this movement as an experiment to test public sentiment on the subject or prepare it for such excursions in all directions during the Centennial year, puts to the chairman of the Centennial Commission these questions: "Is it the intention of the Commission to run the Centennial Exhibition in all its branches in full blast, on Sabbaths, during the term of its continuance? Is it their purpose to have the Exhibition Grounds, and the various Exhibition Buildings open to sightseers and the public generally on that holy day and to invite their attendance? Is it one of their financial expedients to receive money for the admission of visitors to the Centennial Grounds and Buildings on the Lord's day?"

The religious press and the religious people of this country have a right to an answer to these questions, and to have that answer given now. If it is to be made a feature of our Centennial celebration that the sacredness of the Lord's day shall be disregarded, if for gain or any other secular object the exhibition is to be kept open on this day, if on all the railroads concentrating in Philadelphia the Sabbath peace and quiet of the communities through which they pass are to be disturbed by excursion trains, if the whole surrounding country is thus to be demoralized, it should be made known now, that all who would deplore such a profanation may seasonably make their protest and order their course in regard to the celebration. It seems to us a becoming respect for the men who, under God, gained our independence, should restrain those in charge of its Centennial celebration from so outrageous a desecration. To allow it, will be, in effect, to invoke the curse of God on the nation.—United Presbyterian.

Political Issues.

The opinions of leading politicians on the issue now being made up for next year's campaign are stated below by the New York Witness, with its own excellent ideas on political reform, which are most to be criticized from our standpoint for not including enough:

Governor Tilden says the great issue of the Presidential election will be administrative reform: and if it swallow up all other issues the party out of power is sure to win, for the obvious reason that there is nothing recent against it, whilst there is abundance of charges against the party in power. What with the doings of the Jaynes, Sanborns, Butlers, Richardsons, Carpenter, Banfields, Harrington, Shepherds, and many other prominent men in the Republican ranks, this would be the strongest ground on which to oppose the Republican party. Ex-Senator Carpenter says the currency will be the controlling question, and that inflation will win—a prophecy which will turn out true if integrity and intelligence have forsaken the majority of the voters. Senator Morton says the Southern question will still be paramount, seeing that the snake of slavery is only scotched and not at all killed. The Southern whites and the Democratic party are bound by all their past career and by their mutual interests to undo, in one way or another, all that has been done for the elevation of the freedmen to citizenship, and thus reverse the decision of the war. Free trade and protection have both zealous advocates, who look on the tariff question as paramount.

A very large body of the people think that the attempt of the church of Rome to destroy the common schools will be the paramount question at approaching elections; and still others regard the prohibition of the traffic in intoxicating drinks as above all other questions.

With such a diversity of opinion it is clear that there can be no general division of the people on a single question, and that politics are likely to be a good deal mixed. If, indeed, one party would take the right side on all these questions, and the other take the wrong side on them, there would be a clear issue; but this is not likely. Both will doubtless be alike zealous in profession, at all events, for administrative reform, and both parties are very much divided on the currency question and the tariff question.

On the rights of the colored people and reconstruction of the South on the basis decided by the war, the Republican party is evidently the only reliable one, and so it is for the defense of the common schools, if we may judge by the close alliance of the Democratic party with the priests of Rome in Ohio and other States. On the temperance question, also, the Republican party is much more likely to go forward in the right direction than the Democratic party, although neither is to be relied upon.

The best course that could be pursued would be for the good men to come out of both parties and form a new party on such a basis as the following platform: (1) Equal rights to all, and all protected in them; (2) economical, efficient and honest administration, Federal, State and municipal; (3) honest currency, payable in gold on demand; (4) a greatly simplified and purely revenue tariff; (5) prohibition of the liquor traffic by national and State laws, except for mechanical and medicinal purposes; (6) entire separation of church and state, including abolition or of all exemptions and prohibition of all grants or gifts of public money or property to denominations or denominational institutions of any kind. To this we should like to see added, as a matter not merely of choice but of national necessity, postal telegraphy.

It is a question how much patience good citizens should have to get their rights under the law. If the government licenses robbers and murderers to do their fiendish work, then it no longer makes law but negatives it; for law is for the protection of life and property not for their destruction. It would not be very difficult to show that the whiskey-seller is as real a robber and murderer as ever filled a cell or stretched a rope on the gallows. But he is not so in the sight of the law, and there is where the troubles lie. The State, by one little act, encourages a man who would otherwise be a good citizen to engage in a business which transforms him into a destroyer and robber of his race. That act of government is license.

We believe there is such a thing as justifiable homicide, as when a peaceable citizen kills a ruffian who attempts to take his life. We do not plead for justifiable destruction of property, but it is strange that one man, by the most outrageous methods, can depreciate the price of property in a large town and yet be as secure in a little filthy shanty as a lord in his castle.—Telescope.

What the New Amendment Proposes.

The friends of the Christian Amendment are in favor of maintaining all the religious freedom that the country has ever had, and all that it has now. But they are not willing to have the Government administered on "a purely secular basis," for that would abolish the Christian Sabbath and make all days alike, and then no Christian man could hold office. Courts and custom houses, and legislative assemblies, would be open to transact business on Sunday; nay, the election might be held on that day, as in France, and then all Christian people would be excluded from participation in official honors or service. The theory of secularism is a theory of the most enormous injustice and oppression. But there is no consistent middle ground between the constitutional recognition of God and Christianity, and this downright atheistic secularism.

The friends of the proposed recognition do not expect to make the nation religious by a constitutional amendment, any more than they expect to make it religious by Sabbath laws, or laws providing chaplains, thanksgiving days, etc.

But who objects to Sabbath legislation on the ground that the government cannot make the people religious by law? The argument would be weak enough here, silly, indeed, in the extreme, but no more weak or silly as applied to the law, than it is as applied to the amendment. The nation needs just such laws for its own preservation, and that they may not be declared void or be swept away as an unconstitutional encroachment upon religious liberty, it needs a sure basis in the constitution itself on which these laws may rest. And to furnish that basis, is the precise object, no more, no less, of the movement for the recognition of God and Christianity in the national Constitution.

Those who oppose the amendment, are bound in consistency to oppose all such laws. For they involve just as much a union of church and state, and a violation of religious liberty, as the proposed recognition of God and Christianity in the Constitution. The only difference is, that without the amendment, the laws are open to attack as an unconstitutional usurpation of power, whereas with the amendment they would remain just as they are, but securely entrenched behind a constitutional provision. The only alternative before this nation is either a government founded on "a purely secular basis," which, of course, sweeps away the Sabbath, thanksgiving days, chaplains, the Bible in all public institutions, etc., or a government founded on the recognition of God and Christianity. If we choose the latter, then that recognition must be as distinct in the constitution which is the norm and vitalizing source of all valid law, as it is in the laws enacted under it. Otherwise, the discrepancy between the laws and the constitution will give rise to endless doubts and endless litigation, injurious alike to the interests of the citizen, and of the State.—Tarrytown Argus.

Pennsylvania.

The Executive Committee of the Penn'a Christian Association met for business Aug. 8th, at Ararat Presbyterian church, when it was voted to hold the annual meeting of said body in Mercer, Mercer county, Pa., December 7th, 1875; and that Rev. C. F. Hawley and other brethren thereabout be requested to provide the speakers and make all the arrangements for said meeting.

The Indiana State Convention will be held in White's Hall, Marion, Grant Co., on the Columbus and Chicago branch of the Pan Handle, and the Wabash and Michigan roads, on the 12th, 13th, and 14th of October. The first meeting will be on the evening of the 12th at 7 o'clock, and will be addressed by Prof. C. A. Blanchard. Let all be on hand on Tuesday evening. Meetings will continue over Wednesday and Thursday. Brothers Wright, Stoddard, Hill and others will be with us. No reduced rates can be had on the railroads.

Michigan State Meeting.

The friends in Michigan will take notice that their State Executive committee have appointed the first anniversary of their association to be held in Ypsilanti, Washtenaw county, October 27–29. Ypsilanti is easily reached from all parts of the State, being located on the Michigan Central railroad thirty miles from Detroit. Arrangements are being made for a good representation of good speakers and for a setting into activity the organization already affected. Let every reformer in the State make it a business to attend if possible and roll on the ball.

An Anti-secret County Convention will be held at Spartansburg, Pa., on Friday, September 24, 1875, at 1 o'clock, P. M., for the purpose of placing in nomination candidates for county offices who are entirely free from membership in any secret oath-bound society. By order of County Com. L. KETCHUM, Chairman.

The Friends of Reform in Indiana

Have reason to be greatly encouraged by the prompt and energetic manner in which their agent is working up their approaching State meeting. If you are inexperienced in such matters, you have but little idea of the planning, consulting, corresponding and work indispensable to success in such an undertaking. Bro. Needles of Missouri is a practical man, and was not far out of the way when he said, "One worker is worth two talkers in this cause;" but where the work and talk are happily combined, it is a lucky hit and fortunate for all interested except opponents. If the friends in Indiana are wise in consulting their own interests and the welfare of the cause they love, they will not suffer this golden opportunity to pass unimproved, but will follow this bold lead with a grand rally at Marion, Oct. 12th. It may require a sacrifice on the part of some, but the cause is worth the offering. When God and his country called, Putnam left his plow to rust in the half-finished furrow to repel the invaders, and posterity commends him for the noble deed.

The lodge pirates and slave-traders have smuggled their contraband cargoes into the churches and, vampire-like, are sucking the blood of honesty from our body politic, until the whole nation is turning pale with corruption. The confidence of man in his fellow-man is departing and the cry from every quarter is, "Who will show us any good."

The remedy for this evil and boding desolation is to be found not in ignoring the fact or in stupidly submitting to be robbed and trodden down to make a highway for greedy minions to ascend up into high places, but in turning the secret emissaries of foul midnight conspiracy out of office, and putting honest men into their places. Let the pulpit and the church be thoroughly purged from men and women who count the "gain" that comes through subservience to the lodge "godliness," and who, for fear of being pierced with porcupine quills or tainted with offensive odors from these nocturnal vermin, suffer the souls of men, for whom Christ died, to perish, trusting in the vain hope of entering the "Grand Lodge above" through the ceremonies of a Christ-rejecting, God-defying system of intellectualized heathenism.

Let there be a grand rally to the rescue. Let the Putnams leave their plows, if need be, and let Gideon's invincibles answer to the roll call, and let the purpose of reform be so thoroughly evinced that your opponents will no longer doubt your sincerity, or real friends hesitate to step boldly to the front. Reform News.

—Bro. Stoddard, the General Agent, is now in Iowa attending meetings in Tama county, and looking after the sale of land conditionally donated to the National Association by Bro. Clark of Oberlin. He hopes also to visit Missouri this trip.

—The Bartholomew County Association of Christians opposed to organized secrecy met last Saturday evening in the lecture room. A number of telling speeches were made. D. Shuck and C. F. A. Gantzckow were elected delegates to the State Association. C. G. Mensch, H. Wray, and D. Shuck were selected as a committee to make arrangements to secure one of the anti-secrecy lecturers to lecture at this place and at Columbus some time this fall. —Literary Ensign.

—Bro. B. S. Laughlin makes the following very encouraging statements in a private note, respecting the late meeting of the Niagara County Christian Association: "Bro. Rathbun was with us and spoke to a crowded house. At the opening lecture the house was packed. A good attendance at the convention; some thirty or more joined our association. The afternoon lecture was listened to by a large and appreciating audience. Thursday evening the church was packed to its utmost capacity. Slips, aisles, porch and altar, were filled to repletion. The best of all, God was with brother Rathbun, and helped him to lay bricks for Masons to plumb, level and square, without a Christ, and also made some bricks for anti-Masons to lay in their edifice, showing up the fallacy of recognizing an enlightened adhering Freemason as a Christian. We cannot serve God and mammon. The meetings were a success from beginning to end. The Niagara County Association is alive and means business. A full report will be presented ere long for publication. May the good Lord bless, protect and care for brother Rathbun, all through this uneven life."—Wesleyan.

Honest Work in the Michigan Free Methodist Conference.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I send you for publication the report on secret societies adopted by the Michigan Conference, Free Methodist church.

The report should be prefaced with an explanation. I found a class-leader in the F. M. church who had been a Freemason twenty years. Though he had answered satisfactorily the usual questions when he joined the church, he would not reveal anything that he had seen or heard in the lodge. He told me he considered the obligations binding. I then told him and his pastor that he was just as much a Mason as he ever had been, and was just where the craft would have him be, just where he could do most for the devil and the most against the cause of Christ.

When the name of this preacher was called in conference, I raised the question whether his class-leader had, in the opinion of the conference, renounced Masonry. I wished to know if our church required such men to divulge when called on to do so. General Superintendent Hart decided that they were not required to divulge unless they had special conviction to do so. He said that he himself was once there. The opinion in the conference was clearly divided on the subject. I was greatly amazed at such a decision.

This report was designed, in part, to meet this peculiar case. When the report was read a lively discussion took place and it looked at one time as though it would be rejected, but we looked to God and the current changed. The report was unanimously adopted.

A. H. SPRINGSTEIN.

"REPORT ON SECRET SOCIETIES."

We believe that all secret societies are essentially Masonic. We believe that Masonry is totally and thoroughly bad. We hold that a Freemason does not cease to be such till he renounces. It is the obligation that makes one a Mason. So long therefore, as any man is bound to any extent by Masonic obligations, he has not renounced. The Word of God requires us to have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness. This, in reference to secretism, may mean non-affiliation. The same authority enjoins us to reprove the works of darkness. This, in the case of one who is or has been a Mason, clearly implies divulgence. Christ has said, "Every one that doeth evil hateth the light, neither cometh to the light, lest his deeds should be reproved (discovered.) But he that doeth truth cometh to the light, that his deeds may be made manifest that they are wrought in God." We hold that no one can at one and the same time be a Freemason and a Christian, for whom the Son makes free, is free indeed.

As a band of Christians we shall, by the help of God, continue an uncompromising opposition to Masonry in every form, whatever its name may be. Because we love the souls of our fellowmen for Jesus' sake, we will in any wise reprove our neighbor and not suffer sin upon him. As a church, we are always anti-sin, consequently we are Anti-masonic.

We not only do not recede from the position we have held in the past, but we pledge ourselves through grace to increased activity in the service of Him who came to destroy the works of the devil, till we see all enemies put under his feet. Our motto is, Down with error! Up with truth!

From the Iowa Work.

Mason City, Iowa, Sept. 6.

Dear Cynosure:—As you are aware, Bro. E. Ronayne, late of Key-stone Lodge, A. F. A. M., is among us. He exhibited the third degree at Clear Lake on Wednesday night, last week, and Friday night the Entered Apprentice degree at Mason City, also Saturday night the third degree at Mason City. I never saw work so well done in any lodge; especially the killing of Hiram was a grand success. A large audience greeted him every night. Masonry must become disgusting whenever such demonstrations are seen. Especially was he severe in his denunciations of the minister who degrades and disgraces his calling in engaging in and defending such abominations. One of our city divines (a Mason) could not stand it and took occasion to leave about the time the candidate bowed for the first prayer. We go to Hampton to-night, from there to Eldora, from there to Guthrie county to attend the annual meeting of the county association, and in the rounds I expect to attend the yearly meeting of the Friends at Oskaloosa to commence on the 9th and hold one week, and through this people I hope to arrange for a fall and winter campaign.

More anon, J. Hankins.

Sept. 7, 1'75.

Dear Cynosure:—You will pardon me for writing so frequently. I do not lengthen out my epistles much, so I shall be under the necessity of writing oftener. Mr. Ronayne and myself exhibited the third degree in Masonry at Hampton last night to a very large audience, most of the craft being present. It was very manifest from the start that they were there for the purpose of interruption, and well did they carry out the design. But finally Bro. Ronayne informed them that he had come there to work that degree and he was going through with it if it took all night. All the Masons in Iowa would not deter him from carrying out his plan. But not until we began the killing of Hiram did we have anything like quiet, indeed the action of the craft was such that if there are any decent men yet connected with it they would immediately withdraw, and never have anything more to do with an institution that so demoralizes men as to cause them to act like demons. I am sure that they hurt the lodge more than we did or could by all our exposures, as true as they are. Among the prominent disturbers were a Mr. Raymond, an ex-editor, and a Mr. A. J. Smith, one of the leading lumber merchants of the city, and also, as I was informed, one of the pillars of the Congregational church. What a pillar! But the degree was worked and it made impressions, and I would be glad to hear what kind of a character the next man has who sends in a petition for membership into that den of iniquity. Bro. Ronayne went on to Eldora, and from there he goes to Guthrie Center, and then no further arrangements having been made I presume he will return to his home for a short rest. Wherever he goes the craft must die.

I have already sent in my resignation as State agent, not because I am less at heart in favor of the reform, but because it is impossible to pay expenses, much less get any support, and until the friends learn to pay as well as pray our cause will go slow. I shall still hold myself in readiness to go wherever and whenever my services are needed and arrangements made to pay expenses. If the people expect to dance they must expect to pay the fiddler.

Bro. Cogswell's Experience at Sparta, Ohio.

Mansfield, Sep. 6, 1875.

Dear Cynosure.—By request of Bro. Alexander Needels, Moore, Dill, and others, I made an appointment for four lectures at the above named place.

On arriving at the Town Hall at 7:30, where the meetings had been appointed to be held, the first show of Masonry "visible" was the janitor being sent away taking the key with him. In the mean time, persons were arriving from all points until it became a vast crowd; the spirit of the inhabitants were aroused, and propositions made to burst the doors open. But that was overruled by taking out the windows, forming steps, and in came the people. The hall rapidly filling, open came the doors, and in a few minutes every spot was occupied and numbers around the windows who could not get in.

My first lecture was "A Glimpse of the Lodge." Commencing at 8 o'clock and closed it at 9:30; everything passing off in a very satisfactory manner. My second lecture Wednesday evening was on "Experiences of Lodge Life," commencing at 7:30. closing at 9 P. M,, when an announcement was made for two lectures on Thursday at 2 P. M. and 7: 30 P. M.

At this stage of the meeting the champion of Masonry (a lawyer Beard) arose and gave us the following: "I think your honor is premature in making an appointment for to-morrow evening; as the grange will occupy this house." I, supposing him to be the Master of the grange, proposed he would postpone his meeting until Friday evening, as I wished to leave on that morning. A number then said, we could have it; he, Beard, having nothing to do with the grange. He then spoke about as follows: "I wish to say a few things; I have in my possession documents of conventions held in Syracuse, New York, also at Pittsburgh, Pa., at which your honor made a speech, which goes to show that this pretended Christian Association, is nothing more than a covering to advance the American party which is to unite church and state, and your honor is engaged to advocate that object."

At this stage, there was much warmth of feeling by the citizens, and Mr. Weir, a warm friend of the cause arose and said this was the speaker's old dodge of diverting the people's minds, "and we will not have that subject discussed." I informed Mr. Beard that this was not a pretended Association but a real one. He then admitted the fact. I moreover said we intended keeping at it until we crushed this monstrous evil out, until we broke its neck and then the arms and legs would drop off themselves. The meeting was dismissed at 10 o'clock. Thus closed the second day.

Thursday's lecture at 2 P. M., subject "How old is Masonry;" listened to by a very appreciative audience, who seemed very attentive and profited. At 7:30 P. M., we repaired to the hall and found it occupied by the grange, numbering four men and five women, which bid defiance to the citizens generally. In the mean time hundreds of people were assembled, great annoyance was manifested by them, and propositions were made to burst the doors open. One citizen succeeded in obtaining from their leader at the window the assertion that they would be through by 9 o'clock.

The vast crowd of men and women waited, discussing Masonry, and the grange, its last child, and were determined to know what rights they had, or if the trustees and the lodge or grange were to rule the town. Nine o'clock arrived but the hall was still held. At length they came out, and the town bell announced the meeting. The hall was quickly filled, and at 10 P. M., the writer commenced his lecture which lasted until 11-30 P. M. To add, the grangers took away the lamps and did every mean thing they could. I expect it will be the last of grangerism in that house. It is nearly dead; and this is one way effectually to kill it quite. "So mote it be." Hence closed this day, and between twelve and one we sought our couch.

Reflections.—The old issue heretofore with (champion) lawyer Beard, was to traduce our speakers by evil epithets, and stating they did not know anything about it because they had not been in the lodge; the books were also lies, &c. I gave them to understand that our lecturers knew more than the general mass of Masons, and that every word they said was true, also the books published were likewise true, etc.

I became anxious to know what they said of me, and found out two charges; the first was that I was making a good thing out of it and had engaged to come for $40; the second was I was too egotistical. The readers know such amounts as the above are not paid to lecturers in this cause. My arrangements were "pay my expenses," and anything over will assist against other expenses in the cause. In reply to the second I stated in my lectures, I had come there with a good representation, backed up by the Masonic fraternity of Mansfield, who had taken considerable trouble to find out my antecedents, and to their chagrin had found out too much for their comfort or satisfaction. Hence the "egotism." We have every belief much good was accomplished by the meeting.

Association Greetings.

[The following reply from the late Convention in Western Pennsylvania to a word of cheer from the Ohio State meeting has been delayed through misapprehension.—Ed.]

To Rev. Wm. Wishart, D. D., Prest., and Rev. Wm. Dillon, Sec'y of the Ohio Anti-secret Association,

Dear Brethren:—The friendly greeting of your Association conveyed by telegram through you to the Anti-secret Association of Western Penn'a lately in session in Mercer, was received too late to return an answer prior to your adjournment. Owing to this fact, the Convention ordered an answer to be returned through the press, and in pursuance of this order, I hereby most cordially reciprocate on their behalf, the friendly feelings expressed in your communication, and I am happy to inform you that our convention, like your own, was a grand success. We have taken our position, we have displayed our banner, and by the grace of God we are determined to wage war upon the "unfruitful works of darkness" until the victory shall be ours. We will publish our proceedings in detail at an early day. Fraternally yours,

Sam'l Kerr, Rec. Sec'y.

Dear Bro. Blanchard:—At the Chester Heights' camp-meeting one year ago, the Rev. John Thompson and Rev. E. I. D. Pepper both publicly renounced Freemasonry. I have written to both those gentlemen to ask them to contribute an article to the Cynosure, giving their views on the subject. Our preacher, Rev. John Dyson, does not belong to any secret order. He once joined the Odd-fellows but soon left them, as he says it was all balderdash. Our other preacher, Rev. C. I. Thompson, who has charge of the Schuylkill district, is a Freemason. I asked him this week if he still retained his connection with that order. He said, yes, his name was there. I replied, "I am very sorry that you can give your name and influence to such an invention of the devil, in view of the state of our church." He said, "A grea, many good men belong;" and I added-"and a great many bad men."

Our dear Bro. John Jones is much prostrated by sickness, and regrets much that he cannot do more for the cause. He has done much already in contributions and prayers. I am trying to do something.

The "Square" a Lying Device.

WEST UNITY, O., Sept. 4, 1875.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

In your paper of Aug. 12, is an article from the Square that we wish to notice a little.

He says it would seem as though Masonry was to be again called to put on its armor, and step forward in defense of its time-honored principles. So it seems that they have had their armor on before, but the time, or the result of the battle, they did not see fit to inform us about. They certainly did not refer to the "Morgan" times; their lexicographer (Mackey) informs us that they came out of that fight with but one-tenth of the men they went in with. In view of such facts we think they should be very slow about buckling on their armor. He accuses us of trying to impress upon the minds of Christians the anti-Christian character of the institution, and he tries hard to prove that it is not.

He says, "Freemasonry dates its birth from the shedding of light upon the world." We turn to the record and read, "And God said let there be light and there was light, and the evening and the morning was the first day." But we find that man was not created till the sixth day. Now will the Square please tell us who were the Masons from the first to the sixth day? But admitting that Adam was made a Mason at the creation, we wonder if he did not smile on being required to take an oath not to violate the chastity of a Master Mason's mother, or suffer it to be done in his presence, etc. To our minds it is clear that the oaths of Masonry were all manufactured after the Fall. Again, "it is only misrepresentations that we have to guard against, and surely Christian people are not the kind to look for that from." We think his article proves beyond a doubt that he is not a Christian.

Again, "Although our boast is the unsectarian character of the institution, still the follower of Jesus, if he really is a follower, can always see in it that which must challenge both his admiration and respect. So that a man, to be a true Christian, must not only respect, but admire Freemasonry." Again, "Freemasonry of to-day commemorates five great events in the history of the world, each typical of the Messiah." Hardly sufficient, we think, to atone for the sin of cutting the name of this same Messiah from the Bible.

Again, "It is folly to assert that Masonry is un-Christian, as we understand the word, when the first step taken by the candidate is his acknowledging the existence of a God." Surely if the belief in a God makes a man a Christian, the Egyptians, who had some million of gods, and the Greeks, who had more than thirty thousand, must have been eminent Christians.

Let us suppose a case. A man fresh from the Nile lands in this country and applies for admission in a Masonic lodge. Being questioned as to his belief in the existence of a God, he informs them that he and his ancestors from time immemorial, have been devout worshipers of the sacred tumblebugs of Egypt, and there is probably not a South Sea Islander or a Digger Indian on the Pacific coast but what is a Christian, as the writer in the Square understands the word; and it proves Masonry to be a Christian institution just as conclusively as Laban proved his Christianity by following Jacob seven days to recover his stolen gods.

Again, "As Christians, in making that assertion of our belief in a God, we believe in God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Ghost." But when you make it as Jews, Mohammedans, Mormons, pagans, free-thinkers, etc., what then? Why just simply that you don't believe any such thing.

Again, "When a professor of Christianity asserts his belief in a God, it would be simply ridiculous to make him define the God-head every time;" but when they refuse to define it at all, simply declaring their belief in a God, we think we have a right to doubt their Christianity. Such men remind us of "Hosea Bigelow's" candidate—

> "I stand upon the constitution,
> As prudent statesmen say who've plan'd,
> A way to get the most profusion,
> Of chances as to where they'll stand."

Again, "We open and close the lodge with prayers." But to what God? The prophets of Baal prayed at Mount Carmal from morning even unto noon, and yet Elijah brought them down to the brook and slew them there. Again, "The great characteristic of Masonry which has so much excited suspicion, as to its innocence, is the impenetrable secrecy." Impenetrable secrecy! and this right in the face of the fact that Past Master Ronayne has probably initiated more candidates into the "sublime mysteries" within the last three months than any W. M. in the United States in the same length of time. We are ready to admit that there are Masonic secrets that never have been revealed, and as good old Samuel Hale of Mallet Creek once told us in one of his lectures, "never will be till the last Freemason is brought to judgment." For instance; how so many Masonic culprits have managed to escape justice.

Again, "The greatest benefit conferred upon man by his Heavenly Father, we, as Christians concede to be the inestimable gift of His only Son." But as Jews you say of this same Son, "Away with him, Crucify him." He speaks of the thousands of intelligent Christians hailing from the different Masonic lodges; and why not mention the hundreds of thousands who are not Christians? That you have multitudes of them in the lodge, no honest man, much less a Christian, will attempt to deny.

When I was a young man, a high Mason lent me Paine's Age of Reason to read, and recommended it very highly. When I returned it, I asked him if Masonry did not require a belief in God? Like the writer in the Square, he said it required a belief in a God. But when asked if it did not require a belief in the Bible, he answered, "No. Freemasonry requires a belief in no such —— nonsense." (He put a horrid oath where I put the blank.) And it is no uncommon thing now to find the worst enemies of the Bible the greatest defenders of the lodge.

Again, "Without the church Masonry could not thrive in a Christian community;" and vice versa, we suppose a church could not live in a Masonic community without the lodge.

For the war,

J. G. MATTOON.

Our Reform Needed.

August 17th, 1875.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—You are always interesting, and the recent reports of the speeches and proceedings of the late Convention gave renewed and increased interest to the cause in which you are engaged. Although there are many careless ones passing along the highway of life who care for none of the things which you so ably expose, yet there are others, "the salt of the earth," whose ears are ready to hear and whose hearts are ready to rejoice when the true light of truth shines amid the darkness which is so much loved by "the secretists." (See Sermon on Secretism by Rev. Cross just published.) That is a forcible term to denote the class, and when it is clearly understood, an enlightened public sentiment will send it among its proper companionship. What is its proper companionship? Let us think a moment. All the faculties of man have their right and wrong exercise. His passions have their right and wrong time and sanction. None exist without having beneficial uses, and none, alas, without having their wrongful abuses. We say that it is right to eat for daily sustenance, but we know it is wrong to eat merely to gratify the palate. Thus the word glutton is a term of reproach to any man, so the drunkard, slanderer, the envious, sordid, etc. Each of the words denoting man's captivity to his passions, are but the over-exercise, wrongfully, of dispositions or powers which should be guided, controlled, and made serviceable to ourselves and others. Let it be here clearly understood that only thus should any one of our powers be exercised, and then we shall find ourselves disposed to receive the best guidance of the revealed will of Deity in the Scriptures of Truth. When other lights are followed no Christian can give his sanction. "Lo, here! Lo, there!" has been the cry, is now, and shall be the cry which too often has led, does, and shall lead astray the gaping crowd of poor, gullible humanity. The broken crystal may pass for the diamond, but, like the fish caught by glittering bait, the deceived ones continually suffer.

The bait of secretism is in this day one of the delusions. In past days, sociality was almost a synonym for gluttony and drunkenness. Thanks to teetotalism which has rescued the term from such unhallowed associations. Now secretism is pawned upon the youth of our country as synonymous with prudence and discretion, and the oath-bound societies claim credit for training their members to the charming accomplishment of a silent tongue. Discretion is good, but it requires no such machinery as dark chambers, guarded by drawn swords, and horrid penalties to train to its exercise.

Go on, dear Cynosure, and although your sails may not yet be filled by fair winds, nor your track yet completed, be assured the country needs you as much as, or more, than railways, and the day is not far off when "a secretist" shall become a term of reproach.

Yours sincerely,

T. HARDHEAD.

OUR MAIL.

R. Metcalf, Lockford, Cal., writes:

"I am doing all I can for our reform but this is a hard place. The lodge has almost supreme control here, and we have but few friends, and most of them are afraid to say a word against the powers of darkness. I stand alone in this place—an outspoken opposer of the lodge. They may burn me out as they did our brother in Iowa, but I shall fight it out on this line."

G. W. Kelber, McPherson, Kan., writes:

"There is no organization of secrecy here yet, except the grange, and we hope there will be no more. If we only had a good lecturer here I believe the tide could be turned forever against them. If we can get the matter started a little more, we want Bro. Stoddard to visit us and lecture for us. There are several points here that need lecturers, and it would yield a rich harvest. Now is the best time to work out here, before the secret orders get organized and in working order."

O. C. M. Bates, Constantine, Mich. writes:

"I am truly sorry that my subscribers for the Cynosure have nearly all dropped off. One says he cannot stay in the church if he reads the Cynosure; it reflects too much light on Gospel ministers. Another says the paper tells lies, a Gospel minister told him so. He don't seem to realize that some ministers are sworn to lie."

Jno. Fait, Brimfield, Ill., writes:

"I am a member of the anti-secrecy society and expect to be so long as I live. We ought to have a lecturer at Oak Hill and at Brimfield, but I am not able to pay the expenses and there is no one here to help me."

E. T. Preston, Newton, Iowa, writes:

"I have been opposed to secretism since the time of the murder of Morgan. I abhor the "beast" and his "image". They are both rampant here. The Masons are building a fine temple in Newton at this time. The "Odds" contemplate building soon. I would like to have some tracts for gratuitous distribution. A year ago I got some books and tracts which have gone through many hands. Our cause is working in a quiet way, but it is working."

Robert Goreley, Fort Branch, Ind., writes:

"Although my corn was ruined by the wet weather, and my wheat damaged, and I a poor man besides I can't think of doing without the Cynosure. For forty years I have wondered why the press was so silent in regard to this mystery of iniquity, Masonry, and now I thank God that I have lived to see the old harlot exposed. May God bless and prosper you in the good work."

Luther Landon, Kennebec, Kan., writes:

"No words of mine can convey to you the interest I take in the cause you so nobly advocate. It makes my heart joyful to know the cause is moving on gloriously. I hope God will speed the day when like slavery, secret societies will be done away with. I feel a great interest in what is written for your paper by members of the M. E. church, as that has been my home for many years; and unlike some of your correspondents who talk of leaving it because of the secretism in it, I expect to stay and give what influence I have against the monster. I shall do what I can to get the accursed institution out of my church that she may be pure in practice as she is in principle. My advice to all within her borders is to stay and pray mightily to God for purification, and may God nerve us for the work. The season has been all that could be desired. Crops of all kinds are good."

L. Ketchum, Spartansburg, Pa., writes:

"I am just as much in favor of the principles advocated in your paper and am more encouraged to still persevere in this good cause than ever before, although when I think of the apathy and lack of activity on the part of the majority of individuals hereabouts, I have gloomy thoughts; and at other times when I contemplate that God is on the side of right, and in reading of the progress of our cause—did I say "our" cause? I mean the cause of God, for such I believe the crusade against the works of darkness to be—I am stimulated to still do what I can to help."

W. S. Keil, Senecaville, O., writes:

"I like your paper ever so much. It should be circulated and read throughout our whole vast and favored land for it offers to the people facts and arguments against the dark orders that are certainly unanswerable. May God bless and prosper the cause is the prayer of your old and unwavering friend."

SCRIPTURE.—John 11: 47-53. Commit 47-53; Primary Verse, 47.

47 Then gathered the chief priests and the Pharisees a council, and said, What do we? for this man doeth many miracles.

48 If we let him thus alone, all men will believe on him: and the Romans shall come and take away both our place and nation.

49 And one of them, named Caiaphas, being the high priest that same year, said unto them, Ye know nothing at all,

50 Nor consider that it is expedient for us that one man should die for the people, and that the whole nation perish not.

51 And thus spake he not of himself: but being high priest that year he prophesied that Jesus should die for that nation:

52 And not for that nation only, but that also he should gather together in one the children of God that were scattered abroad.

53 Then from that day forth they took counsel together for to put him to death.

A Pastor's Duty and Privilege.

It is a pastor's duty and privilege alike to cheer, cherish and encourage the school by his presence, his prayers and sympathy. His kindly smile and cordial greeting, his warning words and tender exhortations find a ready entrance to the young heart. Every one thus comes to feel that the pastor is his personal friend. In this connection we should speak of the pastor's duty to the teachers and officers of the school. It may well be doubted whether he can render them a more essential service than by securing a practical teacher's meeting, or forming them into a normal class. In this way his influence can be increased greatly, and his Christian workers be prepared and stimulated to do more and better work than ever before. Insist that the church and congregation support the school. They will not prize very highly that which costs them nothing. Have all contribute therefore, to sustain this department of your labor, and never forget that a Sabbath-school-loving pastor will make a Sabbath-school-loving people.—Baptist Teacher.

Let no teacher say as to the unsaved scholars of his class, "There are yet four months and then cometh harvest." He should enter in to reap at once. Even for the scholar who has been told to-day for the first time of salvation by Christ, the teacher should ask at the mercy seat, immediate regeneration, and ask in faith. The time for that scholar's fuller instruction is after his regeneration not before. God wants no delay on the part of those who represent him, in the offer of faith filled prayers for the souls of their charge. He is as ready to send his Holy Spirit for the regeneration of a new scholar as for one who has been under faithful training for many months or years. No more instruction is now needed to fit a soul for salvation than Philip gave to the eunuch by the wayside. When the simple message of salvation has been given to his scholar, the teacher should intercede with God, in faith, for that scholar's acceptance as a child of God. The Holy Spirit—not a thorough system of instruction—regenerates the scholar. Plying God in faith, with prayer, not plying the scholar in anxiety, with sound instruction, is the teacher's hopeful work for his scholar's salvation. Teacher! are you improving your present harvest time in faith? —S. S. World.

Gems of Masonic Mystery.

SELECTED BY C. C. BONNEY, ESQ., CHICAGO.

Some five years ago a Masonic work appeared entitled, "The Mysteries of Masonry." A copy of it fell into the hands of Elder Barlow, from whom it received a worse handling than the man who fell among thieves. Indeed the absurdities and falsehood of the book were made so manifest, that not only the priests and the Levites of the lodge would not defend it, hut Anti-masonic Samaritans even cared nothing for so bad a case. Finally Mr. C. C. Bonney, a Mason, lawyer, and leading Methodist of Chicago, has stumbled on a rare copy and in the August number of the Voice of Masonry, describes it as "the most interesting and valuable work on Masonry I have ever seen," and accompanies his commendation with extracts from which the following are taken. Our readers will appreciate their beauties without special mention.

To the selfish man, Masonry is a dreary road, strewed with unmeaning ceremonies, and the dry husks of the past.

To teach the truth, and inculcate the precepts of charity, for the sake of a Divine life, are the sole ends and objects of Masonry.

Every word, action or substance in Masonry, represents some rational idea, or spiritual truth.

All things proceed in series of life and death, through three discrete and six continuous degrees, in likeness of the degrees of Masonry.

The key to unlock the mysteries of the universe is found in the numbers 3, 5, and 7; 3, 6, and 9; and 2, 4, 8, and 12. These numbers correspond to the laws contained in the numeral digits, etc., as will be shown.

The brain is divided into nine groups, or three great columns.

The discrete temperaments rise above each other, like a majestic column, with its base, shaft and capital. The bilious supports, the lymphatic sustains, and the sanguine crowns, vivifies and enlivens the whole.

The three primitive colors are numbered, 3, 5 and 7, which are the great representative numbers in Masonry, and the exact combining powers of the most perfect colors, when combined by either weight or surface.

The blue ray contains the active, chemical principles of light. Hence it becomes the peculiar emblem and symbolic color of Ancient Craft Masonry. Its combining power is seven, signifying what is holly.

Scarlet is the symbo ic color of Royal Arch Masonry. Deep golden scarlet signifies love of the Lord; scarlet proper, celestial good, and light scarlet, spiritual good.

The white and yellow metals signify good and truth. Hence in Masonry, the uninitiated are said to possess nothing of metallic kind.

Woman does not arrive at truth by a process of reasoning, but by a perception from affection. Hence she cannot be made a Mason.

A child should be instructed by females till the age of ten or twelve years, and by males afterwards.

There are three principal degrees in Masonry, to which all the others refer; the Entered Apprentice of Instruction, the Master's of Wisdom, and the Royal Arch of Regeneration.

The fulness of all things is represented by the number ten. There are, therefore, ten degrees in Ancient Masonry, namely: 1. Entered Apprentice. 2. Fellowcraft. 3. Master. 4. Mark Master. 5. Past Master. 6. Most Excellent Master. 7. Royal Arch. 8. Royal Master. 9. Select Master. 10. High Priesthood. These have existed substantially unchanged since the building of the second temple.

Masonry is a divine institution, representing the regeneration of man; and all the symhols of Masonry are also divine representatives of things in regeneration.

A denial of God as a divine person is evidence of insanity or incapability of reasoning. Therefore no atheist can be made a Mason.

Christian Masons worship God under the three names of Father, Son and Holy Spirit, complete in the person of Jesus Christ.

There is no such thing as mere literals in Masonry. All things are symbolic, and representative of Deity and His divine attributes.

The due guard of an Entered Apprentice Mason is an acknowledgment of the Lord, and represents our acceptance of the life taught by the Holy Bible, square and compass.

The penal signs signify that spiritual death results from their profanation.

Three things constitute the true Mason, namely, wisdom, love and obedience.

Cowans signify evils; and eavesdropper, falsities.

Length, breadth and thickness signify love, wisdom and use. These qualities heing equal, signify perfection.

The plumb, the square and the level represent the active principles which govern the operations of the universe.

Worship by representatives is forbidden; they are for instruction, while worship is through the emotions of the heart, coming forth into utterances and acts in keeping the ten commandments.

St. John the Evangelist was the apocalypse of Masonry.

Without the Jewish doctrine of the Emanuel, and the Christian doctrine of the divine humanity, there is neither sense or reason in the Jewish institutions, and the sacred Scriptures.

If sin had not come into the world, the Spirit would have come forth in the natural order of progression, putting off the gross body of matter, and finally the man would have been translated, and taken to heaven, as was the prophet Elijah.

Profound secrecy is the order of heaven to all who are not in the love of the neighbor.

Love is the Master and occupies the East of the lodge. Wisdom is the Senior Warden, and holds the West. Science is the Junior Warden, and is stationed in the South.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, SEPT. 16, 1875.

PLATFORM AND NOMINATIONS FOR 1876.

FOR PRESIDENT
James B. Walker,
of Illinois.

FOR VICE-PRESIDENT
Donald Kirkpatrick,
of New York.

PLATFORM.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage, is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. The charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and heir oaths prohibited by law.

5. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by article 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate.

6. That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

7. That to cultivate the intellec without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

8. That land and other monopolies should be discountenanced.

9. That the Government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency, and a return to specie payment as soon as practicable.

10. That maintenance of the public credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. And finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of Electoral Colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-president of the United States.

A NATIONAL SIN.

The more the railroads have run on the Sabbath the more has conscience and discipline run down among their employers until extraordinary precautions have been taken to detect and prevent theft and fraud. Conduotors have been watched by hired detectives, they have been forbidden to take anything but tickets, and various plans have been undertaken to prop up their honesty. The Pennsylvania railroad has adopted a uniform without pockets for conductors and tickets and cash are deposited in abag hung on the shoulder, to which an officer at the end of the route holds the key. Street car conductors who have no Sabbath are proverbial pilferers, and their bell-punches advertise them as suspected men. Facts like these are plenty. In connection with the Centennial there seems to be a general determination on the part of all who can profit by it to unite for a setting aside the day of God. The Christian Statesman is speaking earnestly on the subject and the following from its columns in response to a request we cheerfully publish:

This city just now presents severa facts worthy of the grave consideration of the friends of the Sabbath throughout the country. A couple of years ago, a number of public spirited gentlemen formed a Zoological Society, and obtained a desirable location in Fairmount Park, where to establish and maintain a collection of living animals for the pleasure and instruction of the citizens. From the first this garden has been thrown open to the public on the Sabbath, and according to a published statement of the Directors, the revenue from admissions is greater on that day than on all other days of the week combined. The cars and boats furnishing conveyance to this resort, ply busily throughout the Sabbath, a large force of policemen is on duty in the garden, and the tickets of admission are sold and collected by policemen in uniform, the city government, thus, bestowing on the transaction its explicit sanction and approval.

The extent and beauty and patriotic purpose of the Centennial Exhibition Buildings now being erected near Philadelphia, supplies another inducement to Sabbath travel. The Pennsylvania railroad has begun to run "Sunday trains" from several different and distant points in the city to these buildings besides a special excursion train which leaves New York city on Sabbath morning, stops for passengers at all principal towns on the road and returns in the evening.

There is a growing apprehension that the Centennial Exhibition itself will be kept open on the Sabbath. More than a year ago the city councils were urged to seek from the Legislature a modification of the Sabbath Law of the State, with a view to this occasion. The Sunday papers frankly avow their expectation that, with or without permission of the law, the exhibition will be open on Sabbath as on other days. The fact that the railroads already find it profitable to run "Sunday trains" to the grounds, indicates the magnitude of the pecuniary interests which will oppose the closing of the gates on the day of rest. Christian people can no longer rest in the easy conviction that of course the American nation, in the celebration of this memorable anniversary, will respect the Sabbath. The danger is imminent and undeniable, and calls for the prompt and emphatic expression of the best public sentiment to avert it.

The Christian people of Philadelphia are not indifferent to the facts here stated. The Ministerial Union, after fruitless correspondence with the Zoological Society, has appointed a committee to test the question in the courts. The Rev. Dr. Hatfield of the Methodist church, preached two sermons to crowded audiences in midsummer, on "The Centennial and the Sabbath." The action of the Centennial Commission will be carefully watched, and influenced, as far as possible, in favor of the observance of the Lord's Day. Meanwhile, Christian men throughout the nation are asked to regard these facts with prayerful interest, and the religious press is invited to speak out frankly and boldly against the threatened desecration of the Sabbath under the sanction of the national government and in face of the assembled nations.

NOTES.

—The sermon begun in the present number by Rev. James Williams of the Methodist Episcopal church, a reformed Mason, adds to a good argument the zeal of self-denying personal experience. Read it and pass it on.

—The colored men of Atlanta, Georgia, lately aroused the suspicions of the press of that city that another insurrection was being planned. But it was found to be only a Good Templar or some secret temperance order. The fact should suggest to the freedmen that the "secrecy" of their temperance meeting is a needless if not costly extravagance, and shows significantly how jealousy and suspicion may become a habit among people educated in the night schools of the lodge.

—A word to some of our exchanges: if original articles and notes in the Cynosure are worth copying are they not worth the acknowledging?

—The action of the Michigan Free Methodist conference reported on another page commends itself as a clear, straightforward statement of the position Christian ex-Masons should hold toward the lodge. If the obligations taken under unholy influences still retain any hold on the conscience it proves there must be yet a purifying from "dead works" before the man is free in Christ. Bro. Springstein has felt the bitterness of this iniquity and the friends in Michigan may thank providence for giving them such a worker for their State Agent.

—Upon the statement of a Philadelphia paper that our government is framed "in the spirit if not in the letter" of the laws of Freemasonry, the Evangelical Repository makes an application which we have urged at times before the attention of friends of the constitutional reform. The Repository says: "The one has no recognition of Christianity; neither has the other. Here is something for those who desire the religious amendment of the National Constitution to think about. It is boldly asserted that that document was framed in the 'spirit if not in the letter' of Freemasonry. That society ignores the name of Christ, and there will be a long and hard struggle before that name shall go into the National Constitution which Freemasons, and some kindred associations, exclude from their religious ritual, and even from their prayers. Here is where the religious amendment question will ultimately meet with its main opposition, and the friends of the movement may as well understand this in time."

—A telegram to the Tribune tells of the death of Robert Stockwell, an aged and warm friend of the reform, at the house of his son-in-law at Lafayette, on the afternoon of Thursday last at the age of ninety years. Bro. Stockwell was a member of the Methodist Episcopal church and one of the pioneers of Indiana, having engaged in trade at Princeton at an early day and amassing a fortune, estimated at his death at half a million. He has made large donations to religious institutions, $50,000 to Asbury University and $10,000 toward building the Trinity M. E. Church of Lafayette. His heart was warm toward our reform and had not the infirmity of years prevented would undoubtedly have given largely towards its extension.

Political Action.

A meeting was held in Chicago, September 6th, of gentlemen in favor of political action against the lodge. It was called to order by J. L. Barlow of New York and Mr. C. R. Hagerty of Chicago was elected Chairman and C. A. Blanchard, Secretary. The chairman called on Rev. Mr. Barlow to lead in prayer, after which the object of the meeting was briefly stated by Mr. Stoddard of Illinois, and others.

Voted: That we now proceed to elect a National Central Committee to act for the American Party.

Voted: That the following gentlemen shall constitute that committee: J. P. Stoddard of Illinois, chairman; G. W. Needles, Missouri; J. A. Conant, Connecticut; S. D. Greene, Massachusetts; Hon. G. S. Westlake, Pennsylvania; Amos Wilcox, Michigan; M. R. Britten, Wisconsin; Samuel Hale, Ohio; Dr. S. L. Cook, Indiana; Peter D. Miller, New York; O. B. Cravath, Minnesota; Gen. J. W. Phelps, Vermont; N. B. Blanton, Kansas; Hon. R. Feemster, Mississippi; David Edwards, Maryland; D. W. Lyons, Iowa; P. B. Chamberlain, Washington Ter.; Jas. Kennedy, California; S. C. Kimball, New Hampshire; Leslie C. Hurd, Nebraska; J. T. Walsh, North Carolina; J. S. Rice, Maine.

Voted: That the National Central Committee or a majority of them have power to elect members for States and Territories not represented and also to fill vacancies arising from any cause.

Voted: That J. P. Stoddard, C. A. Blanchard and Dr. Walker be a committee to prepare an address to the people of the United States.

Voted: That each member of the National Committee be urged to secure the appointment of a State Central Committee composed of one member from each Congressional district, to see to the organization of county and town committees and to an enrollment in every district throughout the State of friends of our cause.

Voted: That Elder Freeman be requested to take a copy of the minutes to the office of the Standard and ask their insertion.

Voted: That a full report be printed in the Cynosure.

Voted: That we do now adjourn.

THE PENNSYLVANIA ELECTION.—Our readers are generally apprised of the issue made by the temperance men of Pennsylvania for the coming November election, in their nomination of Robert Audley Browne for Governor and Elijah F. Pennypacker for State Treasurer. The antecedents and firm position of Mr. Browne have been mentioned in these columns; but few, perhaps, are so well acquainted with Mr. Pennypacker's interesting history. He was born in Chester county, Pa, in 1804. His parents were Mennonites and of German birth. In middle life he united with the Society of Friends of which he is still a member. The Temperance Blessing of Philadelphia, a paper honestly for temperance, whatever may have been its failings, has the following sketch of his active life:

"He is strictly a self-made man. Being studious he soon prepared himself to teach school, and while teaching others, improved his own mind. Always taking deep interest in the promotion of general education, he became prominently known as its advocate and as such was elected to the Legislature in the fall of 1831, and was re-elected in 1832-3, he was again re-elected in 1835. Mr. Pennypacker stood firmly with Gov. Ritner, Thad. Stevens and Thomas H. Burrowes, and it is claimed the glorious triumph that followed was specially due to these four champions of the common schools. Mr. Pennypacker was an able and determined advocate of the matter, and entered into the contest with all his heart. It was during his last session in the Legislature, 1835, that Governor Ritner organized the Board of Canal Commissioners; Mr. Pennypacker was chosen secretary of the board, a position he held two or three years, when he was appointed Canal Commissioner in a board composed of Thad. Stevens, John Dickey and himself. After serving with honor his term in this Board, Mr. Pennypacker returned home and, Cincinnatus like, again took hold of the plow. But always prominent in every good cause, he took part in educational meetings, open temperance societies and the Anti-slavery agitation. He was the backbone of this latter cause, and he never failed to feed, clothe and shelter the poor fugitive, and to point him to the North star. So too, when the war came his sympathies went with our gallant army and the Union cause. Mr. Pennypacker is a modest, retiring man, has never aspired to office, and was always selected without any solicitation or connivance on his part. Only in defense of principle does he even allow his name to be used.

Elder Rathbun and the Michigan Lecturship Again.

YPSILANTI, Mich., Sept. 9, 1875.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

Permit me to say a word about Elder Rathbun and the State lecturship. I was pleased with his correction of a mistake made in the Cynosure of Aug. 12th. My article published in the Cynosure contains no such statement as Bro. R. corrects.

When I read the editorial referred to by Bro. R., I was surprised. Bro. Rathbun's "note" in the Cynosure and my published letter do not disagree. Who made the mistake?

A. H. SPRINGSTEIN.

We apprehend all the difficulty in this case is in the note of August 12th, in which the Cynosure says that Elder Rathbun's church do not wish to spare him and he sends word that he does not feel called to the State lecture work. The statement would have been more definite and satisfactory if it had been said that under the circumstances he did not feel called to Michigan. Contributors will please notice the annoyance caused by the fault of their editor and be careful to say enough; more so to say only enough.

Religious Intelligence.

—The next session of the Indiana Annual Conference of the church of the United Brethren in Christ, will be at Bethel, in Clarke county, commencing October 6th, 1875.

—The First Church of Christ in Wheaton, Ill., which worships in the College Chapel, welcomed a new pastor on the first Sabbath of the month, Rev. L. Taylor, for many years pastor in Farmington, Ill. His introductory sermon, if an indication of his future work, was full of hope for earnest Christian effort in the future and that the character of the church for piety and Christian reform will be fully maintained. The former pastor, Dr. J. B. Walker, has returned from Mansfield, Ohio, where he has laid the remains of his beloved companion. He will continue to reside in Wheaton taking a deep interest in the College and the religious interests of the place.

—Within the last month the Western Tract Society of Cincinnati has lost two of its Vice-presidents: Pres. Finney of Oberlin, and Rev. W. Davidson of Hamilton, Ohio, one of the leading clergymen of the United Presbyterian church.

—On the first Sabbath of this month Jesse Calvert of the Brethren or "Tunkers" preached an able and eloquent sermon against the lodge in the woods near Milford, Indiana.

—At the late meeting of the White River Conference, U. B. church, at Williamsburg, Ind., Rev. Halleck Floyd, member of the Executive Committee of the Indiana State Anti-secrecy Association and its delegate to Pittsburgh, was elected presiding elder for the Marion district. Prof. Milton Wright of the Telescope, J. T. Kiggins, State Lecturer, and Rev. W. J. Pruner, President of Hartsville University, were present at the conference.

—In the council of delegates from all the Presbyterian churches in Christendom met at London on the 20th of July the use of the Psalms in religious worship was presented by Prof. J. R. W. Sloane of Alleghany City, as we learn by the following from the New York Observer: "The United Presbyterian Assembly of this country, when appointing delegates, had instructed them to see that the Confederation or Alliance should confine itself in its devotional exercises to the use of the Book of Psalms, and that a specific guarantee to this effect should be inserted in the constitution. The delegates from that church being unable to attend, had requested the Rev. Dr. Sloane of Alleghany, whose church—the Reformed Presbyterian—desired similar action, to press this request on the conference. With great tact, earnestness and ability, did Dr. Sloane present the matter, influencing the assembly very deeply. Not a few were disposed to comply with the first part of the wish of these brethren. At meetings in London, Edinburgh, Glasgow, Belfast or Dublin, public sentiment, it was known, would most probably lead to the exclusive use of the Psalms, as has been the case in all the meetings, public or private, on the present occasion; but it was deemed impossible to insert any such article as was asked for in the constitution A committee was therefore appointed to draw up a letter in reply to the communication received from the United Presbyterian delegates." Thisaction will, it is feared, shut out the co-operation of United and Reformed Presbyterians in the council.

News of the Week.

Mississippi Riots.

At a political meeting at Clinton, Miss, on the 4th inst., some White Leaguers on the outside of the crowd began making disturbance and firing followed in which some half dozen whites were killed and several colored men. The White League then rode through the adjoining country shooting the blacks. The number murdered by these unhung wretches is not known but supposed to be from 40 to 60. Gov. Ames applied to Washington for troops, but it is believed that the State authorities can preserve peace and punish offenders. Several companies of infantry are within a short distance if they are needed.

Disasters.

A severe storm swept over Lake Michigan, Southern Wisconsin and Northern Illinois a week ago, continuing 48 hours and closing with a severe gale on Thursday night. The rainfall was enormous in some districts, flooding the streams and washing away culverts and bridges. The Chicago and North-west railroad and Western Union suffered greatly near the Illinois State line. On the former road the St. Paul Express ran into a wash-out near Harvard, Ill., wrecking the train, killing four men and injuring a large number. Two freight trains were also wrecked near the same place with loss of life. A freight train of the Western Union road was also wrecked killing the engineer. On the Illinois Central many bridges are gone and the track washed away for a mile. At Normal, the storm swept away buildings. On the Lake a number of vessels were lost and the storm is considered the worst for years. The propelier Equinox sunk off Point au Sable, with all on board. Several vessels were wrecked along the beach on each side the Chicago river, but only one life was lost so far as known. Several crews were in emminent peril but were rescued.

General.

The Illinois State Fair opened at Ottawa on Monday with the largest display of thoroughbred animals ever exhibited in the State.——The Maine election resulted in the election of Connor, Republican, by 5,000 majority. Both branches of the Legislature will be Republican.——The Pennsylvania Democrats have adopted an inflation platform and nominated a hard money candidate for governor.——The New York Republican convention last week nominated Frederick Seward for Secretary of State and Gen. F. E. Spinner for Treasurer. Both have stood high in the national appointments, one as Assistant Secretary under his celebrated father, the other as U. S Treasurer since Lincoln's first term. The platform of the convention is for protecting the blacks and specie basis.——The fast mail train starts from New York for Chicago on Wednesday via the N. Y. Central and Lake Shore roads. The Pennsylvania road started a corresponding train from New York on Monday, but no mails were carried.——In New Jersey a large vote was polled on the 7th for the new State Constitution. The Catholics had men at all the polls. The instructions given by the priests to their parishoners to vote against the amendments, served to draw out a pretty full Catholic vote; but it served as well to draw out a comparatively strong anti Catholic vote in opposition. The constitutional amendments were carried in spite of the Catholic opposition.

The Home Circle.

Veiled.

In the half-finished tower of granite, the great refractor stood,
Around it resounded the tools of workers in stone and wood.

A veil was over the eye that longed for the gates of light,
And the glance that could rive the Pleiads was under the lids of night.

Voiceless and hooded, yet holding the mysteries deep of the sky,
The kingly face bendeth; and droppeth the burning and marvelous eye.

The eye that could meet, on the far-away shores of Creation, the gleams
That come o'er the sunless gulfs, with footfalls silent as dreams.

Bowing his head like a discrowned king imprisoned in stone,
The shadow-girt telescope stands till the task of the workers is done.

Oh, soul! with a vision to open the outermost gates of life,
Silent and veiled bending down, mid the workmen's clamor and strife.

The Hope that would fly with its beacon of flame to kindle it far
On the hills that rise awful and lone past the light of the dimmest star leads,
Is hooded and roofed; and the thought which erst wandered with God is stilled,
Till the heavens pour light, and the unveiled soul with God is filled.

Giving as an Act of Worship.

There are three ways in which the grace of Christian liberality is commonly presented and commended; as a matter of duty, as a matter of pity, and as a matter of profit. It is well that the subject should be presented in all of these aspects; but there is another, and very important one, which is much overlooked, viz., giving as an act of worship. It is especially important that we should consider the duty in this its highest aspect, on account of the general tendency to degrade it. Is it not a very common thing to look upon the collecting of money for charitable and evangelical purposes as nothing else than a necessary evil? "If our Christian work could only be carried on without that continual appeal to the purse of the Christian community how much better it would be; if we could get rid of this constant begging for religious purposes, how much more smoothly and comfortably would everything get on." So many seem to think. They see the beauty of praise and prayer in the house of God; but they see no beauty, nothing but stern, secular, hard necessity in the bringing of an offering. The vessels used in the communion service are sacred in their eyes; but the collection plates are common, if not unclean—secular, if not profane—something of the world brought from dire necessity into the church.

Such ideas as these would have no place if giving to the Lord's cause were looked upon in the light in which it is presented from first to last in the word of God, viz., as an act of worship, a sacred duty, a devotional exercise.

It could very easily be shown that giving is a very natural way of expressing many of the feelings which enter into our devotions, such as reverence, gratitude, love. But not to be tedious, we present at once the scriptural testimony, or such portions of it as we can find space for.

Taking up the Old Testament, the very first act of worship of which we read was an offering: Gen. iv. 3, 4. Passing on to the father of the faithful, we find him giving tithes to Melchizedek, as priest of the Most High God. When Jacob at Bethel suddenly found himself, before he knew it, in the house of God and at the gate of heaven, he hastened to bring an offering with him. No funds were needed to build that temple or keep it in repair, or maintain its ministers; and yet the solitary worshiper brought a princely offering unto the Lord.

The entire Mosaic economy might be appealed to as a proof that God desires to be worshiped by offering. A very large part of the service consisted in the presentation of offerings to the Lord; and besides the offering prescribed by law there was an indefinite margin left for free-will offerings—purely spontaneous acts of worship. Observe too that the same language is used in setting apart the tenth of substance as the seventh of time. It is not "So much money is needed for this and that and the other thing, and you must bear your share of the burden," but this: "It is the Lord; it is holy unto the Lord." Lev. xxvii. 30. And this same tone is kept up throughout: "Honor the Lord with thy substance." "Give unto the Lord the glory due unto his name; bring an offering and come unto His courts." And so in many other instances.

Turning to the New Testament, here again the very first act of worship we meet is a presentation of offerings: Matt. ii. 11. And mark, it was not to replenish an empty exchequer, or prop up a sinking charity fund, or extricate a struggling evangelization society, that the wise men presented these offerings, but simply to worship the Lord. Again, read Matt. v. 23, 24, and you will see that the Lord Jesus recognizes the offering of gifts to God as among the duties of His kingdom, and moreover that he recognizes it as a strictly devotional exercise, demanding a right state of heart as imperatively as the Holy Communion itself. For the apostolic view of the subject, reference may be had to the directions given to the Christians to lay aside their contributions on the first day of the week, i. e., on the day specially set apart for worship.

A word now in reference to the place that giving holds in the New Testament worship. Our ordinary public worship consists of three parts: hearing, asking, giving. The last of these is two fold, for what we have to give is of two kinds, "the fruit of our lips," and the fruit of our labors. We thus find that giving as a part of worship ranks along with praise. And is not this the highest place of all? It is a great privilege to be allowed to stand in God's presence and hear Him speak. It is a greater to be permitted to speak to Him as supplicants. But is it not the greatest honor and highest privilege of all to be permitted to bring Him a present out of the poor things which we can command? "It is more blessed to give than to receive;" and therefore, if we are to distinguish between the different parts of worship, the service of song and the offering of gifts take precedence both of prayer and of the reading and preaching of the word. They are second in sacredness and dignity only to those solemn sacramental acts of worship by which God's covenant with us is signified and sealed.

As to the significance of giving as an act of worship, it might be shown that it is a most appropriate expression of the homage which we owe to God as the stewards of that which is really His—the gratitude we owe him for all his gifts, and especially His "unspeakable Gift"—the love to God and man which inspires self-denying devotion to the cause of God and man—and the faith which is exercised by those who really believe it to better to give to God than to lay up for themselves. All this, however, is left without illustration, that space may be had for a few inferences from this view of the subject.

1st, in regard to the blessedness of giving. The only difficulty here is in the counting of the gains. (1) Every act of worship, simply as an act of worship, is "twice blessed,"—there is the blessing realized in the experience it self, and there is the reward afterward. Take the case of prayer, for example. In the very offering of prayer there is spiritual profit gained—the first gain. And then there is the answer which comes in its own time—the second gain. So it is with giving. There is blessedness in the feelings which as an act of worship it expresses; there is blessedness in the very expressing of these feelings; and then, there is the manifold return which God will certainly make, if not in kind, then in better kind, according to His promise and His invariable procedure. But (2) what is offered of our substance not only is itself "holy to the Lord," but consecrates all the rest. Just as giving a part of our time to God hallows all the rest (for what Christian is there who does not feel and rejoice to think the whole week is consecrated by the Lord's day at the beginning of it) so the giving of a part of our substance in worship to God hallows all the rest, makes it much more enjoyable and more beneficial. Then, (3) besides that special blessedness which is attendant on giving as an act of worship, there are all the advantages which spring from giving simply as a matter of duty or benevolence, such as the satisfaction of having discharged duty, the joy of doing good, the pleasure of watching the ripening fruit of your liberality. To say then that giving as an act of worship is "twice blessed" is but to beggar the theme. It is blessed a thousand fold.

2. As to the mode of giving. Much might be said here, but we shall only insist on regularity and system. If it is a part of worship, it should be regular like all other parts of worship. And surely once every Lord's Day ought not to be considered too frequent. "Upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store as God has prospered him, that there be no gatherings when I come." Observe the last clause. It is obvious that the apostles wished the duty discharged calmly, deliberately, systematically, as in the presence of God rather than of Paul. How different is the course so generally adopted now! The people gathered together, the case fully and feelingly presented, a powerful appeal is made, and then a collection or subscription taken up before the excitement has died away. Surely the other is the more excellent way.

3. As to the extent of the obligation. Are the poor to be excluded from any part of the worship of God? Are the children to be excluded? Are any to be excluded? Thank God, his worship is not restricted to any age or class. "Upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store." Let no one despise the smallest gift. Think of the poor widow and what the Lord of Glory said about her. By all means, let the poor be encouraged to give, and let all the children know the luxury and blessedness of it.

4. As to the amount of the giving. The Lord Jesus is sitting over against the treasury, and looking you full in the face as you drop your offering, representing, symbolizing, embodying, expressing your gratitude and love to Him. Realize this, and then please yourself as to the amount. "Ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that, though he was rich yet for your sake he became poor, that ye through his poverty might be rich." Do you? Do you? Do you? Then give just what you think right.—N. Y. Witness.

How the Pope Spends a Day.

"Winter and summer the Pope, notwithstanding his eighty-three years, rises at half-past five o'clock, and dresses himself without assistance. He nearly always awakens himself. After a short prayer, he enters one of his private chapels, where the Blessed Sacrament is always preserved, and which contains some precious relics, among which are fragments of the crib of Bethlehem, and another of the true cross; a piece of the skull of St. John the Baptist, and some of the teeth of St. Peter. Then he prepares to say mass. At seven o'clock he descends to a smaller and less adorned chapel, where he says mass, and where those who have permission to do so receive communion from his hands. He celebrates mass with great devotion, and with such piety that he is often moved to tears. The Holy Father next hears another mass, said by one of his chaplains, and then after giving his benedictions to the priest and his assistants, he retires.

"It is now three quarters past eight o'clock, and his holiness takes his breakfast, which consists of a basin of broth and a cup of black coffee. Cardinal Antonelli now comes to confer with him, except on Tuesdays and Fridays, when he is replaced by his substitute, Mgr. Marino Marini. At ten o'clock the Pope reads his letters, which, as will be easily imagined, are usually very numerous. He then looks over the Osservatore Romano and Voce della verita. Then again the special audiences. The men come in the evening dress, with cravats.

They genuflect thrice on entering, and then kneel before the Pope, who raises them up. Cardinals and princes alone have the right to sit in the Pope's presence. This is one of the most fatiguing parts of the Pope's duty. The secretary's department is literally inundated with demands entreating audiences, and during the winter season the number is incredible. At eleven o'clock the Pope takes a basin of soup and a glass of Bordeau wine which is sent to him by the Nuns of St. Joseph, and is made from a vine especially devoted to his use.

Men only are permitted to enter the Pope's apartments. When an audience is over the Sovereign Pontiff rings a bell placed on the table, and another person is admitted by the prelate who is on duty that day. At about twelve or half-past, when the Pope leaves his chamber to walk in the garden of the Vatican, or in the library, or, perhaps, in Raphael's stanze and loggie; on his passage he sometimes meets a number of families, deputations, and persons who are reviewed in public audiences. He blesses their medals, rosaries and crosses which they bring in abundance. He exchanges a few words with them, and listens to their questions, and often pronounces a short allocution. At half-past one the Pope returns from his walk. He dismisses his court, and re-enters one of his chapels, where he remains unti two o'clock in adoration before the blessed sacrament. At three he dines."—Catholic Review.

Receipt for Making Tattlers.

Take a handful of a weed called Run-about, the same quantity of root called Nimble-tongue, a sprig of herb called Backbite, either before or after dog-days, a teaspoonful of Don't-you-tell-it, six drams of Malice, a few drops of Envy, which can be purchased in any quantity at the shops of Miss Tabitha Teatable and Miss Nancy Gad-about. Stir them well together, and simmer them for half an hour over the fire of Discontent, kindled by a little Jealousy, then strain it through the rag of Misconstruction, and cork in the bottle of Malevolence, and hang it on a skein of Street-yarn, shake it occasionally for a few days, and it will be fit for use. Let a few drops be taken before walking out, and the subject will be able to continually speak all manner of evil.—Selected.

Dr. Hussey, formerly a noted New England physician and surgeon, gives the following results of experiments tried by himself; "Two drops of the oil of tobacco, placed on the tongue of cats brought up in the midst of tobacco smoke, was sufficient to destroy life in three or four minutes. Two drops on the tongue of a red squirrel destroyed it in one minute. A small puncture in end of the nose with a surgeon's needle, bedewed with the oil of tobacco, caused death in six minutes." We might refer to a multitude of witnesses giving incidents of like nature. Such men as Drs. Waterhouse, Eberle, Barrow, Rees, Clay, of Manchester, England, M. Favignot, Grahl, of Hamburgh, Paris: Sir Astley Cooper, Prof. Hitchcock, Dr. Gruelin, of Germany, and a host of others as well as Dr. Adam Clarke, whose testimonies carry with them the weight of the highest medical knowledge confirmed by long years of observation and successful practice.

Interesting Facts.

The organ of vision is considered the most delicate organization of the human frame; yet many who were born blind have been enabled to see by surgical operations, and the following is an interesting fact concerning one of that class:

A youth had become thirteen years of age, when his eyes were touched by a surgeon. He thought scarlet the most beautiful; black was painful. He fancied every object touched him, and he could not distinguish by sight what he perfectly well knew by feeling; for instance, the cat and dog. When his second eye was touched he remarked that the objects were not so large in appearance to this as to the one opened at first. Pictures he considered only partly colored surfaces, and a miniature absolutely astonished him, seeming to him like putting a bushel into a pint. Stanley, the organist, and many blind musicians, have been the best performers of their time; and a school mistress in England, could discover that the boys were playing in a distant corner of the room instead of studying, although a person using his eyes could not detect the slightest sound. Professor Sanderson, who was blind, could in a few moments, tell how many persons were in a mixed company, and of each sex. A blind French lady could dance in figure dances, sew, and thread her own needle. A blind man in Derbyshire, England, has actually been a surveyor and planner of roads, his ear guiding him as to distance as accurately as the eyes of others; and the late Justice Fielding, who was blind, on walking into a room for the first time after speaking a few words, said: "This room is twenty-two feet long, eighteen wide, and twelve high," all of which was revealed to him with accuracy through the medium of his ear. Verily, "we are fearfully and wonderfully made."—Ex.

A child needs smiles as much as flowers need sunbeams. Children look little beyond the present moment. If a thing pleases, they are apt to seek it. If it displeases, they are prone to avoid it. If home is the place where faces are sour, and words harsh, and fault-finding are ever in the ascendant, be ye sure they will spend as many hours as possible elsewhere.

Many a Christian forgets his prayers every day, who has never forgotten his breakfast so much as once during his whole life-time.

If you walk by faith, you will never live in sin; faith purifies the heart, gives you to realize the presence of a holy God, and will set the whole force of the soul against evil.

The Gleaner.

I am a little gleaner
  Among the harvest sheaves;
I follow in the reaping,
  For what the reaper leaves;
For, haply, by the wayside,
  Some handfuls may be tossed;—
As said the careful Master,
  That nothing shall be lost.

Drops fill the boundless ocean,
  Sands pile the mountains high;
So all the bounteous garner
  Must single grains supply.
And when to feed the hungry
  The richer offering comes,
The full loaf on the table
  May not disdain the crumbs.

I'm sorry 'tis so little
  My little hands can do;
But Jesus will accept it,
  If but my heart is true.
And sometime—'tis the promise
  My heart in hope believes,
I'll bring the blessed Master
  The full and joyful sheaves.

The Manly Boy.

What is it makes a manly boy? It is not size or weight, for there are some large, heavy boys that are anything but manly. We saw one once, a big burly fellow, about fourteen years old, with a fist like a small sledge-hammer, and a voice as loud almost as that of a mule; but we did not think he was very manly when we saw him pick up a small boy, who was quietly playing with a little wooden wagon, and lift him above his head, while he screamed in his ear as loud as he could, and then set him down. The little fellow was pale with fright and cried; the big fellow laughed aloud and went his way, ha-ha-ing as he went, and no doubt thinking he had done a very fine thing. But he was not manly.

Nor does the power to smoke cigars without getting sick, make a manly boy. Some boys think so, we know. We have even seen small boys, nine or ten years old, pick up stumps of cigars which men have thrown into the gutter, and puff away at them, holding up their heads, and stalking along, as if to say, "Ladies and gentlemen, look at us. We are men, we are. We smoke and we don't get sick." But they are not men.

A manly boy is one who shows some good, manly qualities. We don't expect him to be as large as a man, strong as a man, or wise as a man. But he will be truthful, honest and well-behaved. He will never speak of his father as the "governor," or the "old man," nor will he speak of his mother as the "old woman." He will not be ashamed to have it known that he loves both his father and his mother; nor will he be afraid of all the ridicule which silly boys may heap upon him because of his love. They may call him a "baby," and say what they please about being "led by his mother's apron strings;" he does not mind that, for he knows he is right.

He will never engage in low, mean sports; he loves real sport, but will do nothing for fun that he would be afraid to talk about at the dinner-table. He does not torment small boys, but is ready to help them when he can. His sisters are not careful to hide their work, their books, or their toys from him, lest he should disturb or destroy them; he would never think of that. He is careful not to get greedy at the table, or rude in company, but remembers that others have rights as well as himself.

Does anybody say this is all very well to talk about, but that no one ever yet saw such boys as are here described? We answer, "There are such boys, plenty of them and we have seen them." They are as full of fun as other boys; they equal anybody at the different sports in which boys delight; they swim and skate, and play ball, and roll hoop, and run just like other boys; but their behavior is gentle and kind.

These manly boys, when they grow up will make real men; they will be, in the best sense of the word, gentlemen —Congregationalist.

Ants Recognizing their Relatives.

Huber, the younger, one day, took an ants' nest to populate one of those glass contrivances which he used for making his observations, and which consisted of a sort of glass bell placed over the nest. He set at liberty one part of the ants, which fixed themselves at the foot of a neighboring chestnut tree. The rest were kept during four months in the apparatus, and at the end of this Huber moved the whole into the garden, and a few ants managed to escape. Having met their old companions, who still lived at the foot of the chestnut tree, they recognized them. They were seen in fact, all of them, to gesticulate, to caress each other mutually with their antennae, to take each other by the mandibles, as if to embrace in token of joy, and they re-entered together the nest at the foot of the chestnut tree. Very soon they came in a crowd to look for the other ants under the bell, and in a few hours our observer's apparatus was completely evacuated by the prisoners.

Educational.

—Lincoln College, Mo., has met a severe loss in the death of its President and founder, Rev. Randal Ross. This institution was started after the war at Springfield, Mo., as an auxiliary to the growing interests of the United Presbyterian church, and is passing through the severe and self-denying struggles of every new institution in a new country.

—Avalon Academy, in charge of the United Brethren church opened encouragingly September 1st. It is located at Avalon, Mo., twelve miles from Chillicothe in a quiet, healthful region of natural beauty, and in its courses of study, classical and English, gives a valuable addition to the common school or a suitable preparation for college. Rev. M. H. Ambrose is principal.

—The Fall term at Wheaton opened on Thursday last with a large increase of students and encouraging prospects for the year. Mr. Blake, a recent graduate of Oberlin, has been engaged as instructor in mathematics during Prof. Fischer's absence in Europe.

—The Literary Ensign reports the opening of Hartsville University on the 6th inst., as encouraging in the number and character of the students. Rev. M. L. Bailey was appointed agent for the University by the late White River U. B. Conference, which also heartily endorsed the institution and its faculty.

—Rev. John Baldwin of Berea, O., who has given the Methodist Episcopal church the labor and hard earnings of a life-time, said to Rev. D. Yant not long since, "I have given the church one hundred and fifty thousand dollars, with which Baldwin University was founded. Now it is under the influence of these secret orders. A continued series of fairs and festivals is held. Once the proceeds go to the church, the next time to the lodge. It grieves me to think of this."

SERMON ON MASONRY.

BY REV. JAMES WILLIAMS.
Presiding Elder of Dakota District, Northwest Iowa Conference.

Preached in the M. E. church, at Elk Point, D. T., Aug. 11 1875.

M. E. PREACHERS VS. SECRECY.

In the Union County Courier of July 14th the following was published:—A responsible gentleman informs us that a week or two since, Rev. James Williams, the Presiding Elder (or the "proscribing elder" is suggested as the name by a friend at our elbow,) of Dakota District, took occasion, in a sermon at the Clyde school-house, to brand the persons belonging to secret societies, as anything else than pure-minded gentlemen, and the sermon was followed by a prayer by Rev. S. T. Moore, who upon his arrival in our city less than one year since, represented himself as a Mason, in which he adopted the sentiments of a preacher. No objections have been raised to discussing the principles involved in secrecy, but men of small calibre and narrow views, who are unable to discuss principles, enter upon a personal tirade, and call that slang preaching. The sermon was delivered in a community where there are but few, if any, members of secret orders, and knowing that if the members of these societies were as bad as represented, they should be exposed, a number of the citizens of Elk Point and vicinity have united in a request to have the sermon repeated in Elk Point. We hope the Rev. gentleman will find it convenient to comply, as an anxiety exists to know what new revelation he has received on the subject. The following is

THE REQUEST.

To Rev. James Williams:

The undersigned residents of Elk Point and vicinity, not having been fortunate enough to hear your sermon delivered at Clyde's school-house on the 4th day of July last, against secret societies, and having a great desire to listen to the same, would respectfully ask you to reproduce it at your earliest convenience, in Elk Point, D. THE REPLY.

ELK POINT, July 20, 1875.

Messrs. Vinson, Mallahan, and 22 others:

SIRS:—On my arriving home this morning I find a request published in the Union County Courier for me to preach a sermon on Secret Societies. I have the honor to state that I shall be happy to comply with your request and name Thursday evening, July 29th, at the M. E. church. Yours truly,

JAMES WILLIAMS.

[NOTE.—The sermon will not be the same as the one preached in the Clyde school-house, as in that one I only gave expression to my convictions in one division of my subject.]

The Sermon.

Acts iv. 11-12.—"This is the stone which is set at nanght of you builders, which is become the head of the corner. Neither is there salvation in any other, for there is none other name nnder heaven given among men whereby we must be saved."

In appearing before you this evening, it is with some anxiety, not as to where the truth lies, and final victory, but as to my ability to do justice to the subject, as it is one of vital importance to our holy Christianity and our great Republic. We find in our midst a system despotic in its government, unchristian in its character; binding its votaries by unlawful oaths, with death penalties annexed, "to forever hail, never reveal, and ever conceal" the secrets of the system and its adherents; crime not excepted. A system professing to be charitable in its aim, yet excluding all from its pale, except those who are perfect in body, sound in mind, young in years, and in comfortable circumstances for money. A system professing to take our Holy Scriptures as its rule of faith and practice, and yet carefully excluding Him of whom "Moses in the law and the prophets did write"; Him who is the "all in all," the "alpha and omega," the "beginning and the end" of the New Testament. A system professing to be ancient and honorable above all others, and yet for its defense forces its adherents to calumny, slander, and misrepresentation. Professing to interfere with no man's religious views, yet says to the Christian who prays within its sacred halls: You must not approach the throne of grace in the name of Him who has said, "No man cometh to the Father but by me."

In approaching the subject for discussion a perplexity arises as to what it is. So strange and contradictory is it that if you ask six different men of equal intelligence, and they members of the order, you will receive almost as many different answers. It reminds me of the dispute over the color of a certain reptile:

"'Tis green; I saw it with these eyes."
"I've seen it, sir, as well as you,
And must affirm again, 'tis blue."
"'Tis green! 'tis green! sir, I assure ye."
"Green!" cries the other in a fury,—
"Sirs!" cries an umpire, "cease your pother;
It's neither one nor yet the other.
'Tis red! I caught it yesternight,"—
He ope'd the box, and lo! 'twas white.

So in treating it all that I can do is to refer to the system itself and to its authorities to determine what it is and what it professes to do. One thing is certain:

Freemasonry professes a religious and saving character, and this without Christ or the conditions of the Gospel. I do not say that it brings railing accusations against the Gospel; sometimes it comes with words that sound favorable thereto, with many beautiful passages taken from the Divine word, but so the great Arch enemy came in ages past, with the words of God in his mouth, to overthrow our Saviour. So in the last days he comes in like manner, to the overthrow of the church that Christ purchased with his own blood, rather than submit to the shameful conditions of peace which Satan offered in the wilderness. But we will listen to what Masonic authors say concerning its religious pretensions. Masonry has its doctrines, its prayers, its hymns, its altars, its covenants, its priesthood, its rituals, its burials, its temples. It professes to be Divine and inspired of God.

"Hail Masonry divine, Thon art divine."—Sickel's Monitor page 144.

It professes to save its disciples forever. "The common gavel is an instrument made use of by operative masons to break off the corners of rough stones, the better to fit them for the builder's use; but we as Free and Accepted Masons, are taught to make use of it for the more noble and glorious purpose of divesting our hearts and consciences of all the vices and superfluities of life, thereby fitting our minds as living stones, for that spiritual building, that house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens."—Sickel's Monitor, page 34.

It is said to be a religious institution. "All the ceremonies of our order are prefaced and terminated with prayer, because Masonry is a religious institution."—Mackey's Lexicon, page 371.

Finney quotes from Town: "Every good Mason is of necessity truly and emphatically a Christian: and is assured of his election and final salvation." The same sentiment I have often heard expressed, and by some in our midst. "In age, as Master Masons, we enjoy the happy reflection consequent on a well-spent life, and die in the hope of a glorious immortality."—Sickel's Monitor, page 114. "In short by diligent observance of the by-laws of your lodge, the constitutions of Masonry, and above all, the Holy Scriptures, which are given as a rule and guide to your faith, you will be enabled to acquit yourself with honor and reputation, and lay up a crown of rejoicing which shall continue when time shall be no more."—Ibid, page 151. Here we have an apparent appeal to the Holy Scriptures as binding on their faith and practice, but let us see what it takes to constitute Masonic saving faith. "It asks only for a declaration of that simple and universal faith in which men of all nations and all sects agree, the belief in a God and his superintending providence. Beyond this it does not venture, but leaves the minds of its disciples on other and sectarian points perfectly untrammelled."—Mackey's Lexicon, page 404. In the installation these questions are asked: "You agree to be a good man and true, and strictly to obey the moral law. Ans I do."—Sickel's Monitor, page 137. "You agree to promote the general good of society, to cultivate the social virtues and to propagate the knowledge of the mystic art. Ans. I do."—Ibid, page 139. Here we find all that is required to make a true Mason. And Past General Grand High Priest Mackey sums it up in these words: "The religion then of Masonry is pure theism, on which its different members engraft their own peculiar opinions."—Mackey's Monitor, page 404.

But what does it propose to do for its faithful followers? "The Entered Apprentice is the type of unregenerate man, groping in moral and mental darkness, and seeking for the light which is to guide his steps and point him to the path which leads to duty and to Him who gives to duty its reward."—Sickel's Monitor, page 26. As the candidate is led onward we find the way opening before him and described in these words: "The Entered Apprentice is to emerge from darkness to light. The Fellow Craft is to come out of ignorance into knowledge. This degree therefore by fitting emblems is intended to typify these struggles of the ardent mind for the attainment of truth and above all the Divine truth, the comprehension of which surpasseth human understanding, and to which standing in the middle chamber, after his laborious ascent of the winding stairs, he can only approximate by the reception of an imperfect and yet glorious reward in the revelation of that hieroglyphic light which none but craftsmen ever saw."—Sickel's Monitor, page 61. Mackey in his Lexicon on page 297, speaking of the Master's degree, says: "None but he who has visited the holy of holies, and traveled the road of peril, can have any conception of the mysteries unfolded in this degree." Now hear the summing up. "These three degrees thus form a perfect and harmonious whole, nor can we conceive that anything can be suggested more which the soul of man requires."—Sickel's Monitor, page 78. Mackey says on page 16 of his Lexicon: "A Mason, who by living in strict obedience to the obligations and precepts of the fraternity is free from sin."

But we notice in all this that the name of Christ is studiously avoided; and, although his own words are used in prayer, yet he must not be asked to bear them before the throne although he is the appointed advocate with the Father for us. And while Masons are taught to build "spiritual houses," and have "a holy priesthood" and to "offer acceptable sacrifices to God", the words "through Jesus Christ" are left out of the quotation. But we are told in his word, that none of these can be done but "through Jesus Christ." In the words of our text, "There is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved." Christ is the "all in all" of the Scriptures, and "God hath highly exalted him' and given him a name which is above every name, that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven and things in the earth, and things under the earth, and that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to to the glory of God the Father." Masonry speaks of and looks forward to the resurrection of the body. Mackey in his Lexicon, page 408, says, "A resurrection from the grave and a future immortality were the great lessons which it was the design of the ancient mysteries to inculcate. In like manner by a symbolic ceremony of great impressiveness the same sublime truths are made to constitute the end and object of Freemasonry in the third degree." Though as I said Masonry looks forward, and endeavors to impress upon the candidates the truth of the resurrection of the body, yet it ignores Him who is "the resurrection and the life."

But do I hear some Mason in my audience saying that there are references made to Christ in some of the late Monitors, by speaking of God as having been incarnate, and referring to the "Lion of the tribe of Judah." These expressions are calculated to be misleading in their character to the Christian, and I must refer again to Masonic authority to ascertain how much authority these references have in the system. I have stated before on the authority of Masonic authors, "that Masonry is pure theism," and that private members may engraft their peculiar opinions thereon but must not introduce them into the lodge. But now hear what Chase, in his Digest of Masonic Law, says, Page 206: "To require that a candidate profess a belief in the 'Divine authority of the Bible' or a 'state of future rewards and punishments' is a serious innovation in the very body of Masonry." Again, on page 207 we read: "Blue Lodge Masonry has nothing whatever to do with the Bible. It is not founded on the Bible, if it was, it would not be Masonry, it would be something else. Masonry is a mere charitable institution, nothing else, and it is founded upon tradition. Solomon, to whom it is traced, and who is said to have been the first M. E. Grand Master never heard of the New Testament. He was not a Christian. We must therefore blot out the memory of Solomon, and also that of the other Grand Masters, or we must not insist upon a belief in the authority of either the Old or the New Testament. The position which Christian Masons assign to the Bible is a very natural, but not a necessary one. It is thus to them as Christians and not as Masons." Thus the Bible becomes a creed book. Masonry cannot admit such narrow minded restrictions, and it is easy for us to discover the inspiration that makes the adherents of the system brand as "guns of small calibre" and "narrow minded," all that dare break its fetters and proclaim Christ the Crucified Redeemer, as the only hope of the world.

We have found in our examination that Masonry does profess a religious character, and to give in its first three degrees "all that the soul of man requires," and yet attaches no merit to Christ not even so much as to mention his name. Are we prepared as Christians to acknowledge Freemasonry as Divine, as inspired of God as it claims itself to be? This system which took its present form in the year 1717 in a rum tavern in London; this system that carefully excludes from its charmed circles all those who are not fit for military service; this system that rejects Christ who died for all mankind; can this lead us to light and God, and Heaven? One has said, "Truly combinations of good men, and holy church organizations have been known to apostatize, but when have Christless or secular organizations ever arisen to the sublimity of sons of God? And yet we are presumptuously told that Masonic faith becomes a beam of light to guide the devoted Mason to Heaven. It is true it professes a God, but it is not the true God, for we are told in the Divine Word that "Whosoever denieth the Son the same hath not the Father." 1 John xi. 23. And again. "Thus saith the Lord, the King of Israel, and his Redeemer the Lord of hosts, I am the first and I am the last, and beside me there is no God." And yet this religion looks down from the sublime pedestal on which it has exalted itself, and with compassion views our lower forms of religion and exhorts the craft to demonstrate the superior excellence of the faith they possess. Mackey's Lexicon, page 405. O how humbling to our glorious Christianity to see its ministers acknowledge this claim by going "Neither naked nor clad, barefoot nor shod, hood-winked with a cable-tow about their neck;" poor, blind candidates seeking light at the door of a Masonic lodge; turning away from Him who has said, "I will send another comforter, even the spirit of truth, and he shall guide you into all truth." And heeding the voice of this false religion saying "follow your guide and fear no danger." But if its faith is unchristian, what are its teachings? Christ said, "Let your light shine before men." "I speak openly to the world, in secret have I said nothing." Masonry binds its adherents with fearful oaths to say nothing. Christ said "Swear not at all." Masonry heaps oaths an oaths. The Bible says, "Thou shalt not kill." Masonry claims the right to kill, and has exercised it, too, on more than one occasion. The Bible says "Call no man Master; be not ye called Rabbi; seek not honor one of another." Masonry lavishes honor on honor, has masters without number, "Worshipful and Grand;" heaps title on title up to "Grand High Priest, Grand Pontiff, Perfect Prince," and even grasps the attributes of deity and places the title of "All Puissent," upon a sinful man. Is it not possible that Paul speaks of this in 2 Thessalonians when he speaks of him who "opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God. So that he as God sitteth in the temple of God;" and are we not when we hear these wonderful titles, and listen to these lofty pretensions as to what it will do for men, and see how little it really does, yea, how positively opposed to the true doctrine of God that saves mankind, forcibly reminded of the words of the Apostle Peter: "These are wells without water, clouds that are carried with a tempest, to whom the mist of darkness is reserved for ever. For when they speak great swelling words of vanity, they allure through the lusts of the flesh, through much wantonness, for those that were clean escaped from them who live in error. While they promise them liberty, they themselves are the servants of corruption, for of whom a man is overcome of the same is he brought in bondage." "Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them," says the Bible. Masonry teaches to hide in darkness. The Bible says, "Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you and persecute you. That ye may be the children of your father which is in Heaven." Masonry says, derange his business; oppose and persecute to the very death those that violate their Masonic obligations. And I well understood the import of the threat spoken in my ear by a prominent Mason of many degrees, after I renounced the system, as he said in an undertone, that it might not reach others: "You will yet rue the steps you have taken in dust and ashes." And I well understand the words of a Masonic minister in my own Conference, when he says of me, "He must come down." And I well understand the whisperings that come to my ears from our own midst, "This sermon will move him from the district." These are all the breathings of this relentless system, which proposes to rule or ruin.

Again, the Bible makes our loyalty to Christ the grounds of our acceptance with God. Masonry makes our loyalty to the secrets of the institution, the cardinal virtue on which our entrance to the Grand Lodge above is assured. At almost every point of Christian teaching, Masonry comes in conflict directly or indirectly. Can you wonder then that some of the disciples of Christ seeing these things and hearing the words of Jesus saying, "Ye cannot serve two masters," have broken from its shackles, and cast all on the Saviour, even though it is in the face of dark threats, from those who are able to "kill the body," but thank God, are not able to kill the soul; fearing Him rather who has said, "he is able to destroy both soul and body in hell." It is asserted by some, that it is a charitable institution, and yet it does what no church on the face of this earth would be guilty of doing. It excludes from its privileges the poor, (by making its fees so heavy that they cannot pay them), the lame, the infirm, and women. And while Christianity has its hundreds of institutions of charity and education, yet with all its boasted age you may travel from Maine to Oregon, from Dakota to Florida, from Palestine to North America, from Asia over the islands of the Pacific, to Great Britain, and not find one home for the friendless, one orphanage, one asylum for the poor, or one hospital for the afflicted built or sustained by Masonic charities.

But says one, their charities are confined especially to the order. Place the money given to the support of the institution in the hands of any first class business man of integrity, and he will distribute double the so-called charities and leave himself a fair percentage for his trouble. And in this connection I must again refer you to the fact that its members are mainly chosen from the shrewd business men of our towns and cities. "But we support the churches of Christ of which we are the twin sister and hand-maid." And I have even heard some of the knowing ones who had delved among the rubbish of the upper degrees say, that the Bible itself owed its preservation to the charities of the order. It supports the churches as the wolf supports the lamb! It literally "takes in" ministers free, that they may give to it the weight of their influence and the dignity of their profession, and thereby help to cover up its dark workings, and very wisely to keep him from stultifying himself, tells him he must not allow his zeal for the order to draw him into debate. We find what use they sometimes have for these ministers, when we see one of them at the behest of the lodge, from which there is no appeal, with horses under full whip hurrying down toward old Fort Niagara to secure the change of horses for the carriage that was unlawfully bearing the ill-fated Morgan to his death. But it serves a still better purpose, when they can keep them still, and point to them as being good men, and say, when the truth is told of the system, "Do you believe that such good men as these would adhere to a system that has such obligations and penalties as these expositions say?" And thus the ministry became the great bulwark of an institution, that to be hated by every good man needs but to be seen in its true character and workings. I cast the insult back, that the church of Christ has to subsist on Masonic charities. True the enemy may persecute, and drive from place to place, and even bathe his weapons in the blood of the one that dares assert that Zion is free, but this has ever been the precursor of glorious victories for truth, and he who has said to the true and faithful disciple, "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world," has also said, "All power is given to me in Heaven above, and in the Earth beneath." Nay, it is the covering of Christianity which this loathsome institution has been able to throw around it that has been its only protection. I long to see the time come when the great spiritual body of Christ will break away from all the entanglements of the world and venture all on the only means that ever can benefit this world.

While I am speaking of the connection of ministers with the order, and the use that is made of them, I cannot but refer to the position that St. John the Baptist, and St. John the Evangelist are made to assume in the system. They are said to have been eminent patrons of the order, and are incorporated into the very system itself. We are given to understand by Masonic writers that previous to A. D. 1717 the lodge was composed of operative Masons with only an occasional one admitted as a patron. Neither of these were stone masons. Now can we imagine, that "that" Voice, "who made his dwelling in the wilderness, scorning the habitation of men, being clothed in coarse raiment, eating locusts and wild honey, having on him the great commission to proclaim Christ and prepare his way, as an eminent patron of an order that even in the full light of the Gospel day rejects the Redeemer he came to proclaim? or the Evangelist? Was it while actively engaged in his younger days as a fisherman at Galilee, or was it while following Jesus through Palestine and leaning on his breast; or was it while on Patmos seeing those glorious visions of the day to come, that he learned to love an institution which rejects entirely his beloved Lord? I really would not be surprised to hear some wise Masonic delver inform us that John on Patmos did not see Heaven opened at all, but found himself unexpectedly in a session of some Grand Lodge. There is not the first intimation either in the Scriptures, history, (Masonic or other) or from the nature of the men, their occupations, or on any other grounds, that these great and good men ever heard of a Masonic lodge, and I demand better proof than mere intimations, or assertions, before I can pin my faith to such a statement. Dr. Daleho, a compiler of the book of Constitutions for the Masons of South Carolina, says, "Neither Adam nor Moses, nor Joshua, nor David, nor Solomon, nor Hiram, nor St. John the Baptist, nor St. John the Exangelist belonged to the Masonic order. Hypothesis in history is absurd. There is no record, sacred or profane, to induce us to believe that these holy and distinguished men were Freemasons, and our traditions do not go back to those days. To state that they were Freemasons may make the vulgar stare, but will rather excite the contempt than the admiration of the wise. It is a fraud, and an insult to the common sense of any intelligent man."

We find also that Masonry has no place for repentance, but assures that man can by a system of self-culture prepare himself for God's favor. The very first words of the Gospel trumpet to all men however good is: "Repent." But perhaps I ought to qualify my statement concerning repentance. It did have at one time about forty thousand, making four-fifths of the whole number of Masons then in the United States, who stood weeping between the porch and altar, with a repentance not to be repented of, leaving the craft to walk no more with it forever.

We have now looked at the ssytem in its religious aspect. I turn to consider the despotic character of its government. And as I have not in the other, neither will I while considering this point depend on mere assertions for the establishment of my position, but will candidly refer you to their own writings, "the law and the testimony."

I notice first the organization of the Grand Lodge at the Apple Tree tavern, England, in February, 1817, and June 24th of the same year. "Among the regulations which were proposed and agreed to at this meeting, was the following: 'That the privilege of assembling as Masons, which had been hitherto unlimited, should be vested in certain lodges or assemblies of Masons convened in certain places, and that any lodge to be hereafter convened except the four old lodges at this time existing, should be legally authorized to act by a warrant from the Grand Master, for the time being, granted to certain individuals by petition, with the consent and approbation of the Grand Lodge in communication, and without such warrant no lodge should be hereafter deemed regular or constitutional.' In compliment to the brethren of the four old lodges, by whom the Grand Lodge was first formed, it was resolved, that every privilege which they collectively enjoyed by virtue of their immemorial rights, they should still continue to enjoy, and that no law, rule or regulation, to be hereafter made or passed in the Grand Lodge should ever deprive them of such privilege, or encroach on any landmark which was at that time established as the standard of Masonic government."—Chase's Digest, page 11-12.

—The Sisters of Charity, instead of being expelled from Mexico, left that country rather than submit to the laws lately enforced, which embrace the following particulars:

No "holidays" but the Sabbath and those appointed by the Government.

No religious procession outside of the enclosures of religious establishments.

No distinctive religious dress or habit to be worn in the streets.

No bequests made to religious establishments, or orders to be legalized.

All religious establishments must be open to the inspection of Government officers on demand.

—Pope Pius, in a recent letter to a professor at the Louvain University, strongly censures the wickedness of those persons "boastfully styling themselves Catholics, who obstinately adhere to the liberty of conscience, liberty of the press, and similar kinds of liberty which the church has always condemned." And yet there are popular Roman Catholic orators who would have us believe that their church is the great friend and promoter of liberty!

—It is said that the order of Jesuits numbered at the beginning of the present year 9,101 members, of whom 2,303 resided in France, 1,527 in Italy, and 1,080 in England and her colonies; 1,588 were employed on missions, and the rest reside chiefly in the United States, where St. Louis is their chief seat. This would give us about 2,703 United States, at least 2,700 too many.

FREE TRACTS.

A Tract Fund for the Free Distributin of Tracts

HAS BEEN SECURED AND SHOULD NEVER BE EXHAUSTED. A friend has pledged this fund a dollar for every otherdollar received, so EVERY NEW SUBSCRIPTION TO THE TRACT FUND COUNTS DOUBLE, and thus $10.00 pays for 20,000 pages of tracts.

The distribution of these tracts has already saved hundreds of young men from the lodge, but there is a great lack of funds to supply the constantly increasing demand for Free Tracts.

During the year ending July 1st, 1875 a little less than 150.000 pages of Cynosnre Tracts were gratuitously sent out, mostly in very small lots. The present demand is fully 100.000 pages per month. but funds are lacking to meet it.

Many of onr most earnest workers in this cause of God are poor men, who would be glad to circulate thousands of pages of Antimasonic literature if they could have them free.

Farm and Garden.

PRESERVING POTATOES.—Potatoes will be crisp and mealy all the winter and spring if excluded from light by layers of moist sand, and kept just above freezing temperature, and such as fully appreciate a good article will scarcely be induced to use potatoes, stored, exposed and handled in the ordinary way. Every farmer knows how mealy and appetising potatoes are when just dug in the fall; also, when first taken from his out-door pits in the spring; and how rapidly they deteriorate in quality after a short exposure in his cellar or outbuildings. Years ago, when 200 bushels to the acre was a fair yield and 25 cents the highest price, farmers were compelled to store and handle in bulk without care or special attention, but their entire market value would be merged in the enhanced expense. Now everything is reversed, and so light is the average yield in some States, and so great is the expense of producing, that 70 cents scarcely pays its cost, therefore it behooves producer and consumer alike to adopt the most efficient means for preserving and handling, which may be cheaply and tolerably well done as follows: Such potatoes as are intended for winter use and spring market should be immediately put in barrels, with as much moist sand as will shake among them, and only opened as required for use. Those intended for the fall market should also be put in barrels, but without sand, for the buyer can more cheaply obtain it at home than pay the transportation to his more distant market. Farmers wanting to winter large quantities, and finding it inconvenient to obtain barrels, can keep them fresh by alternate layers of sand and potatoes in his cellar bins. The extra labor and barrel cost about 50 cents, and nearly doubles the real value of three bushels of potatoes for consumption.—N. Y. Tribune.

FALL SOWING of GRASSES.—Farmers should not forget to sow grasses the latter part of summer or early in the fall. We speak of it now that plans may be made in time and preparations completed when the season arrives for putting the seed in the ground. August and September are the best months for the purpose, and all such forage plants as timothy, blue grass, orchard grass, clover, and, indeed, all the perennials, do better when sown then than at any other period of the year. They get a good growth before frost and may be cut next spring, but if sown in the spring a whole year must elapse before they can be cut. Besides, fall-sown grasses are so advanced and well-rooted by the succeeding hot season that they will stand it better than if they had been sown only a few months before.

Timothy should be sown on the richest of bottom land that is dry enough for wheat, in quantities of twelve pounds to the acre. Cut when in full blossom.

Herd's grass is suited to land which is wet. It will grow almost in running water and yields a better return on this land than any other cultivated grass, but, of course, the richer lands will produce better yields. Herd's grass and timothy make an excellent mixture, being ready to cut at the same time, and better than either grass alone. If sown alone, a peck of seed to the acre is the right quantity. Mixed with timothy, the quantities are about a peck of timothy to four quarts of Herd's grass.

Blue grass requires very rich soil; make it rich if not already so. Mix as follows: one bushel each of orchard, meadow oat and wild rye; four quarts each of blue grass, red and white clover. The blue grass and white clover will finally take possession of the ground, but in the meantime the others will have fully recompensed all labor and expense. These grasses are chiefly valuable for winter pasturage.—Inter-Ocean.

Home and Health Hints.

To Avoid Contagious Diseases.

By contagious diseases are meant such as may be propagated by touch, or by being in the direct presence of the patient himself, or from some material derived from him, such as scarlet fever, smallpox, etc. Infectious diseases are produced by some noxious matter in the atmosphere—not produced or augmented by the body itself—of such are ague, typhoid fever, etc. In the latter class of diseases the necessary precautions are to try and change the character of the surrounding air by enforcing strictly sanitary laws; which is in a great measure different from the course to be taken in avoiding contagious diseases. This consists chiefly in the shunning of all unnecessary contact with the sick, and in destroying all noxious material they may create. Whenever we see a person sick with a contagious disease no excessive fears should be allowed to occupy the mind. It is wholly needless, and more than this, it predisposes the system to the disease it so much dreads, by diminishing its tone. A good plan is to eat or drink something before entering the sick room, as it is supposed that when the stomach is acting the catching poison is to a certain extent repelled, hence after meals would be the time to choose.

Some think or believe that the virus of a sick room is introduced into the system through the spittle coming in contact with the poisoned air and then swallowed. Therefore it would be well to eject, and not to swallow it. Cleanliness is a good preventive to contagion; those exposed should take a bath morning and evening; also change clothes daily.

After leaving the sick room, take a brisk walk, as this will excite nerve force, and air the clothes. It is not well to sleep in the room with a person having a contagious disease. Therefore, when called upon to watch a night with the sick—which every humane person is, and others ought to be willing to do—it is well to take a book and try to keep awake all night. For when asleep the system is relaxed, thus offering less resistance to contagion. Certain odors are also sometimes beneficial as preventives—as camphor, hartshorn, vinegar, and many other substances, although modern science has branded them as popular delusions

Science has introduced disinfectants, which deserve great merit. Of these, the carbolic acid is deemed the best of all; an ounce may be put in a glass of water, and then used by sprinkling. Among others always at hand are wood charcoal, quicklime, and fresh earth.

Ironing Shirt Fronts.

In a first-class laundry starch is made in the usual manner; to a pail of starch a whole sperm candle is used. When the linen is dry, it is dipped in the cold starch and ironed in the ordinary way; then it is dampened with a wet cloth and the polish-iron passed over it. This is an ordinary smoothing-iron, ground off so that the edges are still rounding. To this last manipulation the linen is indebted for the peculiar laundry gloss we admire so much but which many house-keepers have vainly striven to leave upon the wristbands and bosoms of their husband's shirts.

Postage on the Cynosure.

THE POSTAGE ON THE CYNOSURE MUST BE PAID AT CHICAGO. It is twenty cents a year.

The cost of postage now depends entirely on the size and weight, and therefore some smaller papers charge but fifteen cents; and others about the size of the Cynosure charge twenty-five cents a year for postage.

If the subscription price of the CYNOSURE was $2.50 or $3.00 a year, the price of many religious papers containing no more reading matter, we might afford to pay the postage ourselves, but at $2.00 a year we cannot do this with our present Subscription list.

Therefore let all send the postage, 20 cents a year, 10 cents for half a year with their renewals.

The commission on one new subscription for a year will pay the postage on your own and the new subscriber's paper. We would rather have the postage paid by commissions than in any other way.

When postage is not paid we shall have to shorten the time of subscription sufficiently to pay it.

Topics of the Time.

Republicans and Democrats have held their conventions, framed their platforms and made their nominations in New York, with a result unusual in party history. The only difference between them seems to be the party name and the roll of candidates. Their principles are so highly colored with anti-inflation, anti-third term, anti-repudiation, anti-official fraud, etc., that there is scarcely a shade of difference to distinguish them. Such a condition cannot long be held, for the necessity of two parties with the same issues cannot be understood by sensible men. If one or the other had made a strong plank against the rum traffic or lodge despotism in politics and intervention in courts, they would have taken a stand to which thousands of the best citizens would rally. The Democrats in their proposition: "Corporations chartered by the State always supervisable by the State in the interest of the people," make room without doubt for an examination of Grand Lodges, but it was written for no such purpose; and if it was, the wedge is sharpened to too fine a point. It would bend or break before it would break through the tripple-plated false oaths of the lodge.

When Mr. Moody and his companion turned homeward from England, the thought that a blessing might come with him to America, impressed all the churches and has increased daily. There are other signs of a religious awakening. Great revivals in this country have frequently followed panic or depression in business. This was especially the case forty years ago and in 1857. There has been a prolonged stringency in business succeeding the panic of '73, and although there is considerable prosperity the country does not rally. There has been a great reaction from religion and theology of the Beecher style toward the word of God in its holiness and power; the holiness camp-meeting movement has gone on in the same direction; and the conviction is deepening and widening that Christ and his word should thoroughly permeate our political system to save the nation from wreck. Great meetings have been held in Chicago in which this expectant spirit in the countenances of the audience was very marked, and forced decent recognition from the gibing, half-infidel press. All look toward Moody as the messenger of God to strike the rock and set free the waters of salvation, and while occasionally preaching to his old neighbors around Northfield, Connecticut, he waits for a call. Invitations from nearly all the large cities come to him which he has not yet accepted. God give him grace to discern the Spirit of the Lord. But it is needless, it is dishonoring, insulting that Spirit to wait for mere human agency. In what heart may not the glorious sanctifying work begin to-day? Who may not in this honest hour return to that Saviour and that love whose companionship and blessing the world has interrupted?

Godly fear in the breasts of many former admirers of H. W. Beecher is rising up at length to rebuke his excesses under the sweet, grave name of piety. All summer, while he has been away from the memorable scenes of Brooklyn in the White Mountains, he has held a public service on the Sabbath in a tent erected especially for the accommodation of thousands whom he knew could not reach the place without traveling for miles on the railroads. These soulless, but not greedless corporations ran trains from every quarter, and pleasure-seekers and worldly-minded professors used the name of a religious service as a cover to Sabbath desecration. On a late Sabbath this collusion of pleasure-seeker, money-maker, and popular preacher required forty-five cars and one hundred and seventy-five vehicles to convey the crowd from distant points. A number of New England ministers and religious papers have spoken out plainly against this unblushing iniquity to Mr. Beecher's infinite disgust; and when an enterprizing manager at Lake Pleasant, Massachusetts, engaged the preacher and the railroads for a "great Sunday show," a vigorous protest from seventeen Congregational ministers in the vicinity caused the plan to be given up. These facts and that only eight Brooklyn clergymen would sign a request for a reception to be tendered Mr. Beecher on his return are gratifying tokens of returning sense to the many who have been betrayed by this false teacher.

Tempora Mutantur.

The world turns mild; democracy they say,
Rounds the sharp knobs of character away,
And no great harm, unless at grave expense
Of what needs edge of proof, the moral sense;
For man or race is on the downward path
Whose fibre grows too soft for honest wrath,
And there's a subtle influence that springs
From words to modify our sense of things.
A plain distinction is obscured of late;
Men, if they will, may pardon; but the state
Forgets its function if not fixed as Fate.
So thought our sires; a hundred years ago,
If men were knaves why people called them so,
And crime could see the prison portal bend
Its brow severe at no long vista's end;
In those days for plain things plain words would serve;
Men had not learned to admire the graceful swerve
Wherewith the esthetic Nature's genial mood
Makes public duty slope to private good;
No muddled conscience raised the saving doubt;
A soldier proved unworthy was drummed out,
An officer cashiered, a civil servant,
(No matter though his piety were fervent)
Disgracefully dismissed, and through the land
Each bore for life a stigma from the brand,
Whose far-heard hiss made others more averse
To take the facile step from bad to worse.
The Ten Commandments had a meaning then,
Felt in their bones by least considerate men,
Because behind them Public Conscience stood
And without wincing made their mandates good.
But now that "Statesmanship" is just a way
To dodge the primal curse and make it pay;
Since office means a kind of patent drill
To force an entrance to the Nation's till,
And peculation something rather less
Risky than if you spelt it with an s;
Now that to steal by law is grown an art,
Whom rogues the sires, their milder sons call smart,
And "slightly irregular" dilutes the shame
Of what had once a somewhat blunter name;
With generous curve we draw the moral line:
Our swindlers are permitted to resign;
Their guilt is wrapped in deferential names,
And twenty sympathize for one that blames.
Add national disgrace to private crime,
Confront mankind with brazen front sublime,
Steal but enough, the world is unsevere,
Tweed is a statesman, Fisk a financier;
Invent a mine and be—the Lord knows what,
Secure at any rate, with what you've got.
The public servant who has stolen or lied,
If called on, may resign wtth honest pride;
As unjust favor put him in, why doubt
Disfavor as unjust has turned him out?
Even if indicted, what is that but fudge
To him who counted-in the elective judge?
Whitewashed he quits the politician's strife
At ease in mind, with pockets filled for life
His lady glares with gems whose vulgar blaze
The poor man through his heightened taxes pays,
Himself content if one huge Kohinoor
Bulge from a shirt front ampler than before.

Our Foreign Letter.

ON BOARD BOLIVIA, Sept. 1, 1875.

The sea-gulls are seen following our ship and a number of the passengers are writing in the saloon, both of which facts indicate that land is not far off. This is a cheering thought too, for though we had a pleasant passage on the whole, it has been rather long, and one night's tossing in our berths caused by a very high sea has satisfied most of us land's folk that a sailor's lot is not enviable. We left New York on the 21st of August after spending a very pleasant week visiting and seeing sights in and about the Metropolis. Our boat belongs to a Scotch line and the officers and sailors are all Scotch I believe. The passengers are of various nationalities as well as various ages, characters, aud dispositions. The oldest is an Irish lady of eighty-six years, who is going back to the home of her childhood after an absence of fifty years. She seems to be a pious woman and to enjoy reading the Bible and listening to hymns. But she will drink the wine and ale ordered by her companions who are two generations behind her in age. She began the journey of life too far ahead of the temperance crusade. For some reason or other all the passengers except our party of two, have failed to be reached by the influences against strong drink that have affected our own country so beneficially for the last few years. One party of six seem to have brought a full supply of the different shades or varieties of the "abominable stuff," as Moody calls it. With the exception of the drinking, smoking and card-playing in which so many of the passengers indulge they would be pleasant company. But the exceptions are rather too numerous and important.

Another interesting passenger is a little Scotch girl of seven summers, who crosses the Atlantic with no relative or friend on board except the numerous papas and mamas she has adopted since she came on board. Both she and the old lady enjoy the passage as well as any of us, much better in fact than most of us. It may be well to a ld that the little miss is in charge of the stewardess, and expects to have friends meet her at Glasgow. Since this letter has become a sort of descriptive muster-roll I will speak of one more party; a family from Louisville, Ky. The head of the family was born in London, his ancestors having moved there from Switzerland. Very early in life he went to France with his father's family afterwards to Germany where his relatives are now living, seventeen years ago he emigrated to America and is now with his family going to Italy where he takes charge of some marble quarries in the interest of some American firm. The looks of the family indicate that this is another of the numerous fulfilments of the prophecies concerning the children of Israel. One unmarried lady is on her way from far-off Omaha to Leipsic, and the rest come from various places and go to various places. So we meet, get acquainted, and in a few days will part. There is something of sadness in the thought of the constant changes going on in the circle of our friends and acquaintances, and to the believer it is a comfort to know that one God watches over all who will follow the good Shepherd.

Sept. 2, 10 A. M.

We just sighted the Irish coast and all the passengers rejoice, as does also yours truly, HERMAN A. FISCHER.

Honoring the Arch Traitor.

BY REV. A. D. LOW.

Jeff. Davis is getting to be quite a "lion" again. No, not again; for it is evident that the enthusiasm lately manifested in this portion of the Northwest to do him honor, is only an eruption from a tratorous volcano that for prudential reasons, and by Herculean efforts, was kept under cover during the rebellion. How far it will succeed in its obvious design of restoring "his excellency" (?) to the confidence of the people, and thus elevating him to some high and lucrative office, will of course depend upon the number of his Northern brethren, their alacrity in flying to the relief of a distressed brother "whether he be right or wrong," and their faithfulness in keeping his secrets, "murder and treason not excepted."

After consenting to address the Agricultural Association of Winnebago county, Illinois, and apparently before it was known here that he had withdrawn that consent, the "Hon." Jeff. received a similar invitation to "address the people of Southern Wisconsin." To show at once, and in a few words, how a man representing "the Southern Wisconsin Agricultural Association" can prostrate himself before "the representative man of the South," and how another man representing the people of Southern Wisconsin in the halls of Congress dared rebuke both the worshiper and his idol, I submit to the readers of the Cynosure both the invitation and the commentary:

JANESVILLE, WIS., Aug. 11, 1875.

To His Excellency, Jefferson Davis:

HONORABLE SIR:—The people of the Northwest have learned with much satisfaction that you have consented to address the Agricultural Association of Winnebago county, Ill., on the 14th prox. The Southern Wisconsin Agricultural Association will hold its annual festival and exposition on the 6th, 7th and 8th of October next, and I am requested by its executive officer to inquire if your Excellency can be prevailed upon to visit our city and address the people of Southern Wisconsin on the last of the above named days—Oct. 8. In view of the kindly greetings that will avail (await?) you by the people, and in view also of the important results that may grow out of friendly meetings between the people of the Northwest and the representative man of the South, may we not hope that you will come to us and speak to our people on the day named, even though it be at no inconsiderable personal inconvenience to yourself? Hoping for favorable reply, I have the honor to be, in behalf of the Association, very respectfully, J. B. WHITING.

To the Editors of the Janesville Gazette:

By your issue of last evening it appears that "His Excellency," Jefferson Davis, has been invited to deliver the annual address before the Southern Wisconsin Agricultural Fair at its coming session.

As there seems to be some doubt about his acceptance, notwithstanding he is assured that the people are longing to greet him with tokens of high personal regard, I beg leave to suggest whether in case of Mr. Davis' failure to come, it might not be well in his stead to procure some one familiar with the "life and times" of Wilkes Booth, who would pronounce an eulogy upon the public services and high moral truth of that individual.

As we appear to be engaged just now in canonizing our country's great ones, it seems to me that Booth should not be neglected, nor Benedict Arnold forgotten. Respectfully yours,

CHAS. G. WILLIAMS.

"His Excellency" is yet to be heard from. What the effect of this correspondence will be upon the interest or reputation of the parties concerned, remains to be seen. I cannot but hope that it will result at least in opening the eyes of some to the nature of an institution that binds its members to sustain one another, even when guilty of the highest crimes against God and the government, "murder and treason not excepted."

Evansville, Wis. Sept. 9, 1875.

WHAT WAR DOES.—War always and necessarily "lays the ax at the root of the tree" of progress, intellectual elevation, and moral advancement. It is truly a war waged against humanity in its broadest sense, against the body and the soul.

"Napoleon," says Horace Mann, "shortened the average stature of the Frenchmen two inches by selecting all of the taller of his thirty millions of subjects and killing them in war.' This is the inevitable influence of all wars. The robust, those in the prime of life, those of stalwart frame are selected,—the bone and muscle of the nation,—while the weak and the deformed remain to conduct the industrial pursuits and attend to the duties of peace.

The exposures of the camp and field, and indeed the whole influence of war, which at best is a fearful attack on the health, including poor and insufficient food, unfavorable habits, must of a positive necessity break down the most vigorous constitutions. It is a positive fact that soldiers as a class, when they return to their homes, are shattered in constitution, a mere wreck of their former selves. Such infirmities of nec essity are transmitted to their posterity to the third and fourth generations.

Hence, by crippling, maiming and destroying the most vigorous of the nation, war must abridge productive industry, cut off the chances of wealth and retard material progress. Just to this extent the education of the masses is prevented, benevolent institutions circumscribed in their operations, and all reforms are crippled.—Dr. J. H. Hanaford.

Two Ways.

There are two ways of building up a visible church. One is by vigorously propagating the truth, and by making error give way and hide itself. This is the true course, and the one that calls for the greater exertion and sacrifice. It is the only way to save the world. Sin in all its forms must be destroyed. Satan must be put to flight. The truth as taught in God's word must be advocated. Popular evils must be squarely met, exposed, put to flight, and destroyed. Before them no Christian must quail. The greater the evil the greater must be the faith. Millions may marshall themselves under the dark banner of sin, but the true follower of Christ must go forth to meet and overcome the minions of hell.

The other is the popular way to build up the visible church—swim on the popular current, compromise with sin, let outside influences dictate the course. If rum be popular, touch it lightly. If slavery be the ruling power, modify the rule to suit public taste. If formality be in vogue, then be formal. You may get some members thereby. Preach, sing, pray, exhort and conduct the revival in due form. Let formality win the day. Float on the current. This course calls for compromise where it will pay in numbers and in money. Where any sin or system is unpopular, then drive into it. Those who follow this plan look through popular elements at the Bible. They make the Bible subserve their purposes. They corrupt the pure word of God. If wine-drinking be popular, they say the Bible defends it or allows it. If instrumental music in public worship be popular, they bring the Bible to aid in its defense. If novel-reading be popular, then do not say anything against novels; rather defend them. If secret societies be popular, as they are at this time, then curse the rule in the discipline excluding them. This is the miserable policy indicated by the organ of "light from the east." It is not because secret societies are in themselves right that this organ defends them so earnestly, but because they are popular. There is money in them. It wants a pull at the purses of the secretists. It wants to build up our cause by a compromise. It wants to worship the beast lest we be thrown into the fiery furnace. It sees no hope of our success without bowing to the secret orders of the day. They will give us success in the cities. If we succeed, we must not ask God, but secret societies! Oh!—J. V. Potts, in the Telescope.

The Struggle in Germany.

In Prussia the Catholics are about half as numerous as the Protestants. Out of a population of twenty-four millions, at least eight millions are religious subjects of the Pope, and if their bishops were content for them to be only religious subjects the end of the controversy might soon be reached. Unfortunately for peace, however, the dogma of Papal infallibility has revived the medieval assumption of the Roman See, and Germany is forced into a conflict between the decrees of the Vatican and its State policy in matters pertaining exclusively te the temporal affairs of the Empire. The Roman bishops have defiantly affirmed their independence of the civil law. They are Catholics first and Germans afterward. Pius the Ninth has been held to be, even in civil affairs, a far higher authority than Kaiser William. Probably the large proportion of Catholics in Prussia emboldened the ultramontanists to select that country as the field in which to test its power and impudent assumptions.

Another fact which has encouraged the Romanists in their defiant evasion of the national authority is that Germany recognizes the union of church and state. The established religion is the Lutheran, but Popery has been patronized and subsidized by the State; and the principle of concurrent endowment being adopted, the Papists have hitherto received very considerable revenues, which have been voted year by year by the Reichstag. Several of their chief ecclesiastics have received from the national treasury five or six thousand dollars a year. The amount annually voted for their clergy, higher and lower, has been about $900,000; and their direct revenues, for which the State is administrator, have been considerably more. This State patronage has encouraged the belief that they were feared, and that their Master in Rome might with impunity claim their prime allegiance and direct their civil conduct. Eight millions of Catholic subjects were too many to be despised, and thus it was thought the Empire would fawn upon the Holy Father in his blasphemous assumption of infallibility. Of course those Catholics—clergy and people—had a perfect right to believe in Papal infallibility, but they had no right to hide behind that infallibility in disobeying the civil authority of the land. This they did, however, little dreaming that the statesman to whom they so defiantly threw down the gauntlet would accept the issue and engage in battle with the Holy Catholic Church, numbering as it did so many millions in this Empire.

The Catholic element was almos-universally opposed to the consolidation of the Germanic States into the Empire; and since the accomplishment of the union they have not ceased to hinder as much as possible its progress toward national power. The prosperity of Catholicism lay, in their estimation, in the weakening of Protestant, and in the strengthening of Catholic nations. Bismarck perceived their traitorous designs. He saw how they secretly sympathized with the enemies of their country. Every step he took in the strengthening of the bonds of the national unity he was confronted by Rome. What could he do? He must do something. To let them alone would be to build up a large party whose avowed desire was to frustrate the national purpose of union. He comprehended the situation, and fearlessly met the issue forced upon the Empire. Doubtless he has in some instances proceeded too far in his punishment of ecclesiastics, but these acts must not be judged of entirely in the light of our American religious polity, but in that of the peculiar circumstances existing in Germany, The fact that Rome has allowed her priests and bishops to be beneficaries of the public treasury effectually closes her mouth against remonstrating against the civil jurisdiction over those clergy. Prince Bismarck is not to be trifled with, and he intends that in the struggle the Ultramontane schemers against the Empire shall go to the wall. His latest move is the withdrawal of the State payments to the church. Hereafter the priests of Rome will receive no public money without signing a written document, in which they declare distinctly their submission to the civil power. This will test the pampered ecclesiastics. They have gone to prison with pride, under the glamor of a seeming religious martyrdom; but will they bear so willingly the depletion of their revenues. We will see. If they yield, let us remember the weakness of the flesh. Alas! the wily Bismarck has touched a tender place, and perhaps his latest weapon may considerably modify the conscientious opinions of the recalcitrant bishops.—Journal and Messenger.

Affairs at Lima, Ohio, Lutheran Church.

In the Philadelphia Lutheran of August, 19th, may be found an article touching the disgraceful work of the Council District Synod of Ohio at Lima, O., under the caption: "Things in Ohio," which professes to be a correction of sundry misstatements of Rev. H. H. Hinman in the Cynosure of June 17th. Mr. Hinman's article was reproduced in the Lutheran Standard, and subsequently translated into the German language, and published in the Luterische Herald of New York. The Herald being a General Council organ brought some wholesome truths to the attention of Council people in the above article. Some fellow who subscribes himself "One who knows," calls the above article a "tissue of falsehood." "Wounded birds flutter" and so we have concluded from the fluttering of the bird who the author of the article is.

But the real authorship does not matter so much, as we hold the editors of the Lutheran responsible for all the mischief and sin committed by the publication of the high-handed and God-insulting falsehoods set forth in said article. "Drowning men catch at straws" and so to defend the Council District, (a disciplined faction of the joint Synod of Ohio on account of secretism) and keep it from utterly sinking by the weight of its own corruption, the Lutheran comes to the rescue on the Masonic principle of "defending a brother right or wrong, murder and treason not accepted." The Masonic author, chafed by guilt and smarting under the rod of a merciful Providence for his sinful proceedings against God and his office in the Christian congregation, must be defended at all hazards, and so the columns of the quasi Lutheran are opened to him.

The points in that "Lewisburg sermon" which raised the rumpus in the Marion District Synod of Ohio, are already before the church (see Standard of Nov. 1st, 1873) together with the subsequent desperately high-handed acts of said Masonic District committed in the apostate Mission church at Columbus, Ohio, Dec. 23d, 1873, in the stupendous farce of deposing a pastor and ousting church officers (an independent, incorporated body) and robbing them by one fell stroke of their church property, and giving it over into the hands of a Masonic faction of the Lima congregation.

To show that Bro. Hinman is correct in his statement that "the real animus of the opposition to pastor Bartholomew, was, and is, his opposition to secret societies," we will quote from the famous letter of Mr. Overmyer, a high Mason, and a Red Man (who threatened his pastor that if he would not keep still about Masons and Odd-fellows in the pulpit, he would lead out a party against him and divide the congregation), to the President of the Council District, which accompanied a paper of complaint against his pastor and a petition for another pastor:

LIMA, O., August 12, 1872.

Rev. G. W. Mechling, Pres. Eng. Dis. Synod of Ohio, Lancaster, Ohio.

DEAR BRO.—With a sad and heavy heart I sit down to write you a letter, praying God for grace and wisdom that nothing may be said or written in malice or hatred. You will be made acquainted with our church troubles by a statement signed by 51 members of our congregation. My trouble is that I must be made the figure head of this trouble. . . . We felt secure in the General Council against any further quarrels in the Synod after the separation which took place at Lima. But not so. On Sunday preceding Good Friday Rev. Bartholomew preached a sermon upon a free text, theme: The Cross. The sermon was excellent. After finishing his manuscript he paused and then said that he had been an Odd-fellow, but had now renounced them, that all secret societies were sinful, and wicked, and opposed to Christ; that hereafter he would with all his power and on all occasions oppose everything opposed to Christ.

This at once presented to me the secret society question. I said but little about it for a few days. On Easter Sunday the Lord's Supper was to be celebrated. The more I looked upon the unfortunate introduction of this vexed question and heard the bitter denunciations of it, the more the old Joint Synod's feeling, caused by reading Prof. Loy's kind thrusts in the Standard, was aroused. After talking the matter over with some who were secret society men and some who were not, I at once determined to meet the issue then and not drag it along as the Synod did sixteen years. . . .

But this matter is not between Rev. Bartholomew and Overmyer. It is 51 members of the Lima congregation appealing to the Synod; and whilst it may not be the strictly formal mode of procedure, it is the only mode left us. Some of the signers have been out of full communion for three years, and now say if the Synod will assist us in getting a minister all right. But if not, then some other Synod will be appealed to. I trust this will not be permitted.

If the above letter from the "Figure Head" of nearly all our Congregational troubles in Lima, does not prove "the real animus of the opposition to pastor B. to be his opposition to secret societies" then human testimony is of no value. That there may be no doubt as to the authenticity of the above letter we will add that it is one of the documents now before the court of Common Pleas in Allen Co., Ohio, and marked No. 23; called, "The sad and heavy heart document.

Rev. Hinman says; "The Masonic leader sent a paper to Pastor B. demanding an answer in 30 days but just as the 30 days expired, this man's child was a corpse." To this the Lutheran is made to say by "one who knows," "I have positive knowledge that no such paper has been sent to Pastor B. If it was, I challenge him to produce it, or a proof of it."

For the information of the man, and in support of Rev. Hinman's assertion we will simply say: The document is now in our possession and is in Mr. Overmyer's own hand writing. It is dated April, 16th, 1873, and his child died on the 18th of May following, and was buried by an Episcopal Rector clad in a white clerical robe (unusual in Lima) and who intoned some kind of a service, sounding like a Romish priest, as he led the procession through the cemetery to the grave, to the disgust and mortification of all the true Lutherans present.

I will add that the said rector used the Book of Common Prayer and Church Book alternately during service and that there were two Lutheran pastors present, one of whom belongs to the Synodical Conference and the other to the General Council.

Rev. H. again says: "The same man together with others broke into the church and held service in it once, but before they could have a second service the young preacher (a student in college) suddenly died." In reply to this "one who knows" says: "No one 'broke into the church'. . . . The sheriff of Allen county opened the church, took possession of it, and restored it to the congregation. If anybody 'broke in' it was the sheriff."

This "breaking in" was not done in the dark, though it was near night (4 o'clock P. M.) It was done in daylight, in the heart of the city, and in the presence of seven eye-witnesses, besides the Masonic mob which broke in, and the carpenter with box of tools to change locks. The church is situated on adjoining lot to the pastor's residence, from which point the whole disgraceful transaction was seen. The sheriff and his deputy both solemnly aver that they did not "take possession of the church and restore it to the congregation," as stated by "one who knows." The sheriff again says: "I have not the keys of the church in my possession now, and I never had," though it is closed by injunctions.

*Of these 16 afterwards erased their names, while 23 were not members; leaving 13 actual signatures.

How they managed to get into temporary possession of the church, so that they could swear that it was in their possession, the following from the Lima Gazette of March 4th, 1874, will indicate:

"Last Thursday afternoon the Overmyer party, (for it resolves itself into the Overmyer party on the one side, and the Bartholomew party on the other,) gained possession of the church by prying open one of the rear windows and climbing in. When in they changed the locks, and thus had their opponents on the outside. Henry Reel [one of the mob trustees] was sworn in as a special constable, and since then has held possession."

Day and night, from the 26th of February, men and boys went in and out of the church, some smoking cigars and others pipes, till the next Thursday, the 5th of March, when the court, on their sworn petition that the property was theirs, granted them a temporary injunction under bonds of $1,000, till the case could be heard on the 13th of March, 1874.

Thus robbed of our church property by a Masonic mob, led and stimulated by their minions of the General Council in the Ohio District Synod, we at once rented a hall at $120 per annum until the court would restore to us our church. With undiminished confidence in Him who makes the wrath of man to praise Him and restrains the remainder, and, in humble reliance upon the promise of our Lord: "Lo I am with you always," we fitted up and cheerfully occupied our new, but humble house where we could again be blessed with "word and sacraments."

But we were not allowed long peaceably to enjoy our new church home. Lime mortar was splashed against the outer wall of our hall which gave it a most unseemly and uninviting appearance. A number of window glass were broken at different times and the key-hole of the front door was several times filled with paper-wads and gravel, so that with difficulty the mass was extracted. These annoyances were discouraging to our people, as we think they were intended to be by our enemies, but they were preparing their authors for more daring deeds.

"As the old cock crows the young one learns," and accordingly on the night of the tenth of June, 1874, our hall was violently broken into "through a rear window" and occupied by men with horns and other instruments of music producing such discordant sounds as to make night hideous in the vicinity. At the late hour of 9 o'clock the parties were detected and were so overwhelmed with fear of arrest that they offered to settle their crime by paying damages at once. Before a policeman could be found they all fled. Subsequently, one of them, less hardened than the rest, offered to pay all damages to one of our trustees and thus silence the matter. The man caught occupying the pastor's chair that night, and who seemed to be managing the whole affair, is a son-in-law to Mr. Overmyer and son of the notorious ' 'special constable," Reel, the two leaders who broke into our old church, and both are Masons.

These and other things compelled us to leave the hall and worship in a private house until we could build a temporary church. A lot was secured on one of the principal streets of the city, a cruciform frame building 36x 50 feet was soon put up, at a cost of about $12,000, and was formally dedicated on the 8th ult., in the presence of a large and intelligent audience of Lutheran Christians who will not bow the knee to the lodge. Dwelling in "tents" so long our congregation now breathed freely again and rejoiced in having a church of our own in which we could worship God without fear of man.

But our rejoicing was soon again to be interrupted. The new and beautifully painted picket fence 100 feet long, in front of the church was mutilated by an ax or hatchet, here and there from one end to the other. These criminal acts are certainly not done by friends. Other congregations in our city are not treated thus. The fact that certain prominent lodge men, not members of the Lutheran church, for months after our church was taken from us, could be seen loitering about our places of worship, just as the congregation began to disperse, so that it became notorious and a subject of remark among our people, points very plainly to the lodge. They were prospecting.

Putting all these things together we feel compelled to, and do hold the lodge and its minions of the General Council in Ohio, responsible for the above disorderly and unlawful acts.

Concerning the "young preacher," Rev. H. is correct in his statement. An appointment was made for said preacher by a man who preached in the church on the evening of the 12th of March, 1874, for the following Sunday; but on Saturday night the church was closed by a counter injunction and has not since that time been occupied by either party. The appointment was made for the "young preacher" to preach in the church, but before it could be occupied he died. It is not claimed that he died immediately after preaching; but that he suddenly died and that before the above appointment could be filled in the church, which is literally the fact. The poor man had been led astray and muddled by Council District men and Masons, and, contrary to all Lutheran usage be preached several times while in his sophomore year—never having studied theology. For this breach of good order he was arraigned before the University Faculty, Columbus, Ohio, and reprimanded. The matter was aggravated in this, that he had been a former member of the congregation at Lima, having been catechized and confirmed by pastor B , through whose instrumentality he had been sent to college, and who aided him in his studies at different times, and now led by desperate lodge men, and influenced to oppose his professors in the University by prominent General Council men, he insults both his pastor and also God by ignoring the pastoral office in the congregation. "God will not be mocked." In the midst of his blind zeal he was suddenly called away.

Instead of trying to explain away by wilful lies, God's wonderful dealings with insubordinate secret-societists and their sympathizers in the congregation, as truthfully given by Rev. Hinman, "One who knows" and the quasi "Lutheran" would better make confession of their sin, and reparation as far as they can, "lest peradventure they be found fighting against God.

Second Annual Meeting of the State Christian Association of Missouri.

Met at Avalon, Livingston, Co., Mo., August 16, 1875.

The Association was called to order by Rev. J. H. Brundige, President.

Rev. N. E. Gardner, acted as Secretary.

The Convention was opened by reading the Scriptures, singing and prayer.

In the absence of members from abroad, who were expected, a short time was occupied profitably by home-workers, in relating experiences and stating convictions.

The Editor of the American Freeman, of Gentry county, Mo., Rev. A. W. Geeslin, Editor of the Exposition of the Grange, Mr. West, Esq., and Revs. G. W. Meek, J. W. Estep of Scotland county, Mo., N. E. Gardner of Livingston county, Mo., and others, joined in the exercises, in the course of which many interesting and encouraging facts were developed, and many interesting reminiscences were given of the year's work in the anti-secrecy cause.

Committees were appointed on each of the following subjects: Organization, Publications, Resolutions, and Political Action, after which the Convention adjourned until after 4 o'clock P. M., to give the committees time to work up their reports.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The report on organization having been received and adopted, the Convention proceeded to organize as follows for the ensuing year, which resulted as follows:

D. Carpenter, Esq., Avalon.

J. F. Beauchamp, Esq., Worth Co.

The report of the Committee on Publication was presented and adopted, as follows:

Whereas, The Constitution of the United States of America guarantees to all loyal subjects freedom of speech and freedom of the press; and

Whereas, The press of our land has to a great extent been muzzled, and freedom of speech restrained by the influence of secret societies; therefore Resolved, 1. That we will patronize such papers only as open their columns to the discussion of all the moral issues of the day.

2. That we recognize the Christian Cynosure, the organ of the "National Christian Association," as the leading paper in the anti-secrecy movement, and that we do endorse also the Reformer and Free Press, Religious Telescope, American Wesleyan, and others of the same class, as being such papers as the crisis upon us demands; and we do also especially endorse the American Freeman, published at Albany, Gentry county, Mo., as long as it pursues its fearless, manly course in the advocacy of moral reform, and we will give it our support and influence, believing that a healthy public sentiment can be maintained only by a healthy public discussion of living ideas.

ON RESOLUTIONS.

Whereas, It is our conviction that the country generally is resting in a state of false security, while our (so-called) courts of justice are corrupted by favoritism, and the altars of our holy religion are defiled by the profane mingling of the things of Belial with the things of the Lord Jesus Christ, we are encouraged to learn that meanwhile in some portions of our country many are becoming aroused to a sense of their danger, and in their efforts to save themselves and their neighbors have demonstrated to the world the evil nature and tendency of all secret associations; therefore

Resolved, That we believe it to be our duty to perfect the organization and system of the State Association, that it may speedily become our effective agency in this important work of reform, and in order to accomplish this result we recommend

1. That a State agent and lecturer be put into the field immediately.

2. That we pledge ourselves to assist such State agent by securing him places for lectures and raising salary.

3. That the State Association hold annual meetings, the time and place hereof to be determined by the Executive Committee of the Association.

4. That we express our thanks to Hon. Philo Carpenter of Chicago, Ill., for the generous offer he has made to the N. C. Association of a building for a publishing house, and we hereby endorse the action of the National Executive Committee in accepting the donation, and pledge our assistance in raising the stipulated amount necessary to secure the gift finally as the property of the National Association.

ON POLITICAL ACTION.

Since it is impossible for a Christian to perform acts contrary to his belief of the teachings of the Lord Jesus Christ, and maintain a good conscience; and since we, as a Christian body, believe the principles of secretism as evinced by the practice of the lodges of this country, to be in direct opposition to those taught and practiced by our Saviour, and since we believe it to be dangerous to the well being of good government to elevate men to legislative or executive position who are opposed to the principles of a pure Christianity; therefore,

Resolved, That we endorse the action of the Convention at Pittsburgh, which put in nomination a ticket for President and Vice-President of the United States.

Also that we most heartily endorse the platform of the American Reform party.

Steps were taken to put a State Agent and Lecturer in the field, and a gentleman was selected subject to the action of the State Executive Committee, when they shall become satisfied of his fitness for the work.

After adopting a constitution, the Association adjourned.

E. W. CARPENTER, Sec'y.

Still in the Field in Indiana.

OXFORD, Ohio, Sept. 10th, 1875.

I ought to have written long since of my work in Fountain, Tippecanoe, and Carroll counties. But friends in Hillsboro and Pittsburgh have reported from two points, and I will only add to their reports the fact that I found many staunch and true friends to our cause in both these counties. I remember the name of Samuel Davidson, (father of Judge Davidson) Joseph Carder, and many more who do not fear to stand by the truth at Hillsboro; our good brother William Hoobler of Veedersburgh; Bro. S. B. Houston and Galloway of Pittsburgh. Brother Houston is a minister of the Associate Reformed Presbyterian church. He is now taking a course of theology at the seminary near here. It is certainly encouraging to find young ministers of intelligence and education in the fore front of reform; and this is where Bro. Houston is. I made my home in his family during my short stay at P——, and a pleasanter, more hospitable family no one could wish. Indeed one is overwhelmed with gratitude to God, in remembering the many, many kind families who assist to make the reformer's life pleasant, and to encourage his heart by offering him the hospitalities of their homes and bidding him a hearty God-speed. I am satisfied that the Anti-masons of this country are the best people in it.

I wish briefly to notice that I held a series of meetings at Transitville and Colburn in Tippecanoe county, where as at other points I found good friends to our reform, and I think good was done. At Colburn I had a debate with two "college-bred youths," one a lawyer and the other a preacher, which resulted in much good to our cause. A great interest was excited, and people came in throngs to hear and many to receive wholesome truths, who would not otherwise have come.

Sept 16.—I have just closed a pleasant and interesting series of lectures, six in number in this vicinity, in Union Co., Ind. From here I go to Bloomingsport, Randolph Co., to spend the 17th, 18th and 19th inst., then go to Marion; thence to Westfield, Hamilton Co., on the 25th and 26th; thence to Dayton, Tippecanoe Co., on the 28th and 30th, and thence home.

In this vicinity the "egg argument" was used last night, and three burrs taken from our buggy spindles, to be deposited, I suppose, in the archives of the lodge as "metallic substance." Friends in this region are preparing to attend our

STATE MEETING.

A local organization is started, and enthusiasm for our cause is manifested. Let everybody come to Marion on the 12th, 13th and 14th of October. We shall certainly have a refreshing time.

The Grand Lodge of I. O. O. F. of the United States, meets at Indianapolis soon to give secrecy a boost in Indiana. Senator Morton and Schuyler Colfax will orate for them. Let us rally and give the thing "a boost" in the other direction. Truly yours,

JOHN T. KIGGINS.

Jottings from the New York Field.

DEAR K.—Allow me to furnish your readers with a few incidents connected with my labors in Chautauqua Co. This county has, I believe, the oldest organization in the State, which still has vitality. On my way from Syracuse to Clymer, in the south-western corner of the county, I met with a new and very humbling experience.

Having traveled much for the last forty years in many States, coming in contact with all classes of people, and never having had my pockets picked, I had made up my mind that it was owing to my superior sagacity; and had come to look upon those who had been robbed with a pity—shall I say it—mingled with a slight degree of contempt. But on this journey, I, J. L. Barlow had this small modicum of self-conceit most effectually and forever taken out of me by some of the adroit chevaliers d' industrie who infest the Erie railroad. I take off my hat to you, gentlemen, thieves. You did your work well. The affair took place at Corning, while changing cars. The rascals only secured from me sixteen dollars and forty-five cents, with my nice new pocket-book; but it was my little all, except ten cents lying loose in my vest pocket, with which I purchased a ham sandwich for my supper, at Hornellsville, after which I was utterly penniless for the first time, if my memory serves me rightly, for over thirty years.

It was practically a new sensation for me, of which I am in no wise anxious to enjoy any more. And then, I was ticketed only to Wellsville, Allegheny Co., where I purposed to call on a cousin whose face I had not seen for more than thirty years, and on whom I must depend for help to reach Chautauqua Co.; and he was a Mason! Was'nt I in a fix?

I reached his place between the hours of ten and eleven in the evening, and was compelled to introduce myself to one of the craft as an Anti-masonic pauper, trusting to the ties of kindred to carry me through, and I am happy to say, my faith was not misplaced, though my Masonic kinsman, in furnishing me with means to continue my journey, did say, "I do not know about helping you on your way to fight the Masons!" It does me good, however, to put on record this instance of Masonic charity.

I reached Clymer late on Wednesday afternoon, expecting to be "taken in and done for" by the Rev. Knowles, a United Brethren pastor, in whose church I was to lecture. But when I reached his home he was not there, nor had he given out my appointments; alleging as a reason that he did not know Barlow—did not know whether he had a good reputation or not, &c! So I was compelled with Bro. Nessel, to retire to a hotel, where I was charged 50 cents for my supper, and Bro. Nessel 40 cents—the landlord himself taking the pay for one, and his son for the other. Up to this time I was in doubt as to whether any notice had been given for lectures, and I felt decidedly queer; but at this juncture Bro. Amidon found me, and I learned from him that my appointments had been given out that afternoon in the school. But few had learned the fact, however, as many of the children had forgotten to tell their parents. I however spoke on that and the following evening to such as came, with nothing of special interest occurring, save that pastor Knowles came home just before the meeting on the second evening, but so unwell as to render it necessary for him at once to seek his couch. I was thus deprived of the pleasure of forming his acquaintance and so of giving him an opportunity of knowing Barlow. My fears for him in view of his illness were somewhat allayed by a remark from a brother who felt confident that the sick man would convalesce in a day or two, at most, after my departure; leaving me to ponder over the problem as to what relation I could have to his painful attack. I have found many perplexing problems to solve in my life. Should'nt wonder if I should find some more.

After my last lecture at C. I left for the town of French Creek, in the company of A. M. Durfee, Esq., near whose house I lectured in a school-house the next evening. The next day (Saturday) he took me to the village of Sherman, where he left me in the hospitable hands of Rev. Mr. Pease, and his wife, who kindly cared for me until the following Wednesday. Here I preached twice on the Sabbath for Bro. Pease, whose church, much to his chagrin was overrun with secretism. Only two of his male members being free from lodge bonds of some kind. Here also I received many kindnesses from Rev. Mr. Robinson, and his estimable lady of the Congregational church. Here was a strong lodge of Masons, and a very strong organization of the grange, with other kindred societies ramifying through all the churches. The pastors I have named, however, stood by me like brethren; while the Methodist pastor chose to stand aloof and slander me on the strength of second hand reports of my lectures. Here, friend Durfee came to my relief, and from his own purse gave me more than half I had received thus far; and enabling me to pay back my borrowed money.

A day or two before commencing my labors in the county, Mr. Durfee was conversing with a Masonic physician in the village of S. as to my work. The Doctor in the course of the conversation told him that about four-fifths of the Morgan book was true! The next day Mr. D. was telling this to another Mason in the village, who replied that he should say that five-fifths of it was true!

From Sherman I passed on to Findley's Lake, where, under Bro. Amidon's care I gave two more lectures; finding good and true friends in Bro. A. and Bro. Asher Thompson, and their families. My next point was in the town of Ripley, where on account of a storm, I only gave one lecture and that to a small congregation. Here I spent the Sabbath with a good Methodist brother, whose name I cannot recall; but whose kindness I shall never forget.

On the following Monday I passed on to Fredonia, where Bro. Nessel supposed he had opened a door for a couple of lectures. I, however, found every door closed for my labors, but found a hospitable home with Bro. Geo. W. Lewis, a member of the Baptist church. Here I was quite unwell; but under his care soon rallied. Bro. L. is a true friend to our cause, and is now the President of the County Association. The Baptist church here is a large and flourishing body of some 300 members. I greatly desired to speak in their house of worship. In company with Bro. Lewis I called on one after another of the six trustees. Five of them were non-Masons. One of them said he wished to have me speak in their house, but could do nothing towards opening it for me. Four of the others had no personal objections, but———gave no answer. At last we met the sixth, who was a Mason, and who had a backbone running clear through him from his hat to his boots. Allow me to express my profound respect for his manliness. When he was asked for his consent for the use of the meeting-house, it did me good to see him straighten up his six feet or so of Masonic manhood, look me straight in the eye, and to hear him say in a clear, firm voice, "No Sir-r-r! I am a square-toed man, I am." I involuntarily cast my eyes upon that portion of his boots covsring the members of his person referred to, and then again to his manly face, as he went on to say—"Never, so long as I am a trustee, will I give my consent to have the church used for any such purpose; and I don't think much of such fellows as you are, running about the country on such a business!" I declare to you, this breezy talk was positively refreshing; and if I had been on the ground I could have fairly hugged the brave fellow; but then he had a strong Masonic lodge to back him, while the church and the other trustees had nothing to fall back upon but God, who in these days, is by many thought to be too weak to cope with the Grand Master of the lodges. More anon,

J. L. BARLOW.

The North Ohio U. B. Conference.

AUBURN, Ind., Sept. 11, 1875.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

The meeting of the North Ohio Conference of the United Brethren which lately convened at Waterloo, Ind., was an event which those present will not soon forget. The sermon on Sabbath by Bishop Weaver was such as might have been expected from the truly eloquent champion of the Cross. The resolutions gave no uncertain sound in regard to secrecy; but what gave to all a more than earthly interest was the manifest power of the Holy Ghost, exhibited by those bold soldiers of the Cross who dare to denounce popular heathenism, and rather choose to labor for Christ in obscure fields where the common people gladly hear the word than yield to the anti-Christ of the lodge, and sell the soul to nourish pride. The good people of Waterloo are noted for hospitality, as the undersigned can witness, having been entertained by the kind family of Bro. Franks during conference. In closing permit me to say that nowhere perhaps can be found a band of men more zealous for the Lord God of Hosts, more loyal to the King of Kings, or more determined in their resistance to popular evil than the U. B. ministers of the North Ohio Conference.

Yours, SUSAN EVANS.

A Dark Story of Masonic Duplicity.

FOUNTAINDALE, Ill., Sept. 10, 1875.

FRIEND KELLOGG:—It was my good fortune to visit the home of my childhood a few weeks since. Among many old acquaintances visited, was my good friend Mr. James R. a worthy man and well-to-do farmer, residing about four miles from of St. Charles, Ill. I found him to be a subscriber to your paper, and all alive on the subject of Freemasonry. He told me that his attention was first called to the dark workings of Masonry while acting in the capacity of constable.

The circumstances, as near as I can recall them, were these: Two neighbors, Capt. R——, a Mason, and John Hacket, "a cowan," (dog), got into trouble about some cattle. Mr. H——'s cattle broke into Capt. R——'s field, which so enraged the latter that, in getting them out of the field he injured one or more of them, so that they died. Mr. H——was willing to pay any damage done the Captain's crops, but wanted pay for his property. The Captain was unwilling to pay damages and a suit was brought by Mr. Hacket. On the day appointed, the parties met at Squire C——'s; the court was called to order, when Captain R——'s lawyer called him aside and the following conversation ensued which Mr. J. R. overheard:

"Captain R——, you must take a change of venue, for these men understand the case and you will lose it,

They will award H——the damages in full. You must bring the case before Squire Dearborn, for he is a Mason, and I am a Mason; then you will be all right."

The change was made and the suit was settled in some way unknown to Mr. R.

Mr. R. told me that about the year 1856 Mr. B——, his father-in-law, concluded that he would go to Missouri, and buy some land for his grown-up boys, then mostly married; and that he would spend a peaceful old age in the company of his children. Arrangements having been made, he started from St. Charles, where he then lived, to hunt land; arrived in St. Louis and fell in with a man, a Mason, and told him his wants. The mystic brother had a large tract of land and a bargain was soon made, the deeds made out, the land paid for, and the confiding old gentleman started home rejoicing that he had been so fortunate, without seeing the land. I still remember how pleased the old man was when he told my grandfather what a good bargain he had made, and how he should have his family all settled about him, and would live and die happy. When he told Mr. R. what a fine trade he had made, Mr. R. asked him how he knew since he had not seen the land? The old man answered in these words, "The man I bought it of is a Freemason and a Freemason don't lie to a Freemason."

The old gentleman being a man of some means aided his boys in fitting out several teams and wagons, and in a few weeks they started overland for their new home in Missouri. After a long and weary journey of weeks they arrived within five miles of the land; but could get no farther. The next day the men set out on foot and visited the land. They found it to be anything but the "beautiful rolling prairie, every foot of which was tillable, and well watered," except a small tract in one corner which was heavy timbered and would be "just the thing for building and fences," as described by the brother Mason. It was a rocky, barren, waste, covered with scrub pines and oaks, not ten acres of the vast tract was tillable, there was no water, and no road within miles. After a weary and distressing travel over rocks, through brush, briars and scrub forests they returned to the wagons with heavy hearts, to tell their wives and families how basely they had been swindled. After some consultation they turned their course homeward, and in a few days reached St. Louis, and there they disposed of their teams, wagons, and other property at great loss, and were ready to start home, but concluded that if possible they would dispose of the land. They found a brother Mason who traded them a jackass for it, which proved to be diseased and died before they left town. Upon their arrival at St. Charles the old man was taken sick and in a few weeks died. He was buried with Masonic honors, but the lodge with their characteristic benevolence did not fail to send in a bill of over sixty dollars for funeral expenses, which was paid. The old man's son Levi, who had lost everything by the trip, was compelled to work by the day for a living. In the course of time he was taken sick and died. The lodge to which he belonged was applied to but no aid was allowed, he was not even buried with Masonic honors, because they found that for a time he had not paid his dues, and the poor wife and children of him who had paid hundreds of dollars to the lodge were left to the tender mercies of "cowans, eavesdroppers and dogs."

The old lady, (Mrs. B——) lived many years, and used up the remnant of property, except a lot which two of he sons managed to cheat her out of, (they were high Masons) and was taken care of by her children. Mr. R. again appealed to the lodge to which the old man had belonged and which had buried him with such pomp; but as he knew and expected not a cent was given to the widow of a true Mason. She died and was buried at the expense of her sons-in-law, Mr. R. and Mr. W.

Trusting that the light of God may soon shut out the night of false worshipers and of sin, I am as ever yours for truth. R. T. Morgan.

Some Operations in Law.

Wellington, Ill., Sept. 1875.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

One has only to study the principles, obligations, oaths and work of the lodge and it seems to me that an expert might track the old handmaid (Masonry) and her whelps or daughters (O. F., Ku-Klux, White League, etc.) by their acts in this, any or every community. There is perhaps no community in which the mystic orders have not made more or less history for themselves; which is unintelligible unless studied and explained by and through their obligations, oaths, works, signs, and known love of trickery and disrespect for law and order.

With us a while back the son of a Mason did an act which to have passed it by entirely would have been too plain a case against the craft. Of course for the purpose of covering up the Masons must make a show of loyalty. A certain justice of the peace and the father of the boy met. Just what transpired we have no means of ascertaining, and perhaps may never know; but we have every reason for believing it was in every sense a Masonic meeting, for this justice soon issued his warrant which was placed in a Masonic constable's hands at Milford, and strange to say this constable traveled in a very zigzag course for seven miles and picked up on his way all Masons for jurymen, leaving only one to be selected after reaching the squire's office, and to fill out the jury they selected a young man they knew they could manage.

Masons are determined and bound in all Masonic acts to hide behind something, no difference how small. It is strictly Masonic to hide. In this case they attempted to hide behind this young man. The attorney for the boy was a Mason, and understood the matter Masonically without doubt and every thing being cut and dried in Masonic style, it is not necessary to inform the intelligent readers of the Cynosure, that the cable-tows had everything their own way, and that the boy was honorably (?) acquitted. There is scarcely a school district in the U. S., but what can show almost or quite a parallel case, in hundreds of cases even far worse.

We have seen in the above case what the State does in criminal matters. We will now see what Uncle Sam does. We should remark in the above case this justice had no right, as it was a criminal matter, to hold the party only under bond for his appearance at court time or release altogether; but instead he assumed all the rights of judge of circuit court, to sit in the the case, and that too when the lawyer knew better. But the thing was being put through the Masonic mill, and had to be ground without tolling; and as Masonry had passed on the case that was substantially the end of it.

We will see now how Uncle Sam deals with incorrigible Masons, or their near relatives. This same boy (I should say man, for he is of age and married) robbed the post-office, along with others (and admitted the crime if I am rightly informed) and was held for trial in the city of Chicago. His case was never brought to trial, and he says himself the Masons cleared him. Before the case was disposed of I inquired of a Mason and deputy post-master in Milford how the case was likely to go. He said, "They will send him up."

Said I, "They will do no such thing."

Said he again, "They will."

Said I, "They won't;" and seeing I was firm, he inquired, "Why do you think so?"

"Here is the reason," throwing my left hand forward palm up. To which he replied, "Are you one of them?"

Said I, "I am not."

The facts were, this Mason having just come to Milford, he did not know me and thus sold himself, supposing that I was a mystic brother.

This Mason who betrayed himself is now arranging to leave Milford, and I have asked myself, possibly it is on account of the brotherhood who do not desire that Masons shall converse Masonically with cowans. I took in a fellow-craft at Hoopeston, before he learned who I was and for some reason, this or some other, he did not tarry long.

These so-called honorable and benevolent orders upon a close examination are found to be the very embodiment of selfishness, clannishness, and disloyalty; their pretensions to these great principles are a mere sham to cover their real disguise. The American people are fast learning to distrust their pretensions, and soon they will stand before all in their naked deformity, and then will they be seen and judged properly and in their true light.

OUR MAIL.

Mrs. Wm. Ducker, Heyworth, Ill. writes:

"My husband died on the 16th of July last, after a long illness. I like your paper very much, but do not feel able to pay for it. It has been sent to us by some kind and unknown friend for the last nine months, for which we were very thankful. May the blessing of heaven rest on you and the cause you advocate."

Adelbert Gates, Barnerville, N. Y., writes:

"We are trying to make arrangements for some lectures in this vicinity, and hope to get the people waked up on the subject of secrecy, find out who are the friends of the reform and get the Cynosure circulated a little in this section. At present I have to content myself with handing out a few tracts and passing my papers around as soon as I have read them. Hoping we will soon be in line and duly arrayed against the powers of darkness, I remain yours for the war."

John Myers, Bourbon, Ct., writes:

"We have four different lodges in town. At the time of the Pittsburgh Convention there were four of my papers I never got. The secret society men will do all they can to keep your paper away from us."

J. B. Cressinger, Sullivan, O., writes:

"I think that I will be able to get more subscribers as soon as I shall commence lecturing this fall. I am selling your books and distributing your tracts and preparing the way for our State lecturer or any other that may favor us with a visit, and for myself at various centers around us. The Christian house of worship is open for us at any time in Sullivan. There are three lodges there; Masons, Odd-fellows, and the grange. But we have a check-bit in their mouths. I have made known all their secrets. Last winter I delivered a course of lectures in their midst and am keeping them well in hand since."

Isaac N. Jack, Pekin, N. Y., writes:

"I am so much interested in your paper that I miss it very much when it stops, though most of my tribe hate it. I am one of the chiefs of Tuscorora nation of Indians, and Superintendent of the Baptist Sunday School. Most of my church are in favor of the secret orders and most of the leading men of the nation are members of some such order. Now you see where I am. But still I feel it my duty to God and man to oppose all secret societies for several reasons: my own experience in their efforts to gain power and other worldly good; it is hostile to the Christian religion and the impartial administration of our law, not only among your people but among your red brethren is this so. If these secret societies are good it must be their fruit is good, as the Holy Bible says, "Even so every good tree bringeth forth good fruit but a corrupt tree bringeth forth evil fruit.'"

The Sabbath School.

Lesson for Oct. 3.—Jesus Lifted up.—John xii. 23-33.

23 And Jesus answered them, saying, The hour is come that the Son of man should be glorified.

24 Verily, verily, I say unto you, Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone: but if it die, it bringeth forth much fruit.

25 He that loveth his life shall lose it; and he that hateth his life in this world, shall keep it unto life eternal.

26 If any man serve me, let him follow me: and where I am, there shall also my servant be; if any man serve me, him will my Father honor.

27 Now is my soul troubled; and what shall I say? Father save me from this hour: but for this cause came I unto this hour.

28 Father, glorify thy name. Then came a voice from heaven, saying, I have both glorified it, and will glorify it again.

29 The people therefore that stood by, and heard it, said that it thundered. Others said, An angel spake to him.

30 Jesus answered and said, This voice came not because of me, but for your sakes.

31 Now is the judgment of this world: now shall the prince of this world be cast out.

32 And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me.

33 (This he said, signifying what death he should die.)

The Teacher's Harvest Time.

Earnest workers often waste in seed-sowing precious time which should be given to harvesting. Bitter memories are mine of opportunities of good to souls worse than lost through their ignorant misuse. I was called when a young superintendent, to visit a lad who was evidently dying of quick consumption. He had no hope in Christ He was sadly ignorant of the way of salvation. My heart was drawn out to him in sincerest interest from the moment I first met him. I longed to lead him to the Saviour. But I thought that as a matter of course, he must have no little preliminary instruction, and I set about securing that to him. I selected a little book which in the form of an attractive story, showed the necessity and the nature of regeneration, and commenced to read it to him. I did not do this abruptly or formally, but with all the tact and tenderness of which I was capable. I told him of my interest in him and of my desire for his welfare. I supplied his sick room with fitting delicacies. I visited him nearly every morning, talking familiarly with him and praying with him and reading from the book I had chosen, adding comment and explanations as I read. My hope was that God would save him through the agency of my instruction. My reliance was largely on the truth presented in the volume. When that should be fairly in his mind, I might confidently ask God for his regeneration. I could not, I thought, look for it before. The poor lad grew weaker. I grew more and more anxious. I wished he had been better instructed before I found him; but now I saw no way but to keep on teaching. I was compelled to read briefer portions of the book daily. One morning, I came as usual. The lad was dead. I had not yet reached the point of his instruction, where I could have faith in God to regenerate him; but he had reached the end of his probation. Oh! the fatal folly of my course with him. Had I gone to that lad on my first visit with the simple story of Jesus Christ as the Saviour of such sinners as himself, I might have asked of God in unwavering faith, his immediate salvation. I exalted the agency of instruction into the place of God's spirit, and that instruction inevitably failed to do the Spirit's work. My misdirected effort was useless.

In this experience a lesson was taught to me which I would emphasize to other teachers. God does indeed work by human agencies. He does put a special responsibility upon each Sunday-school teacher for every unsaved scholar of his class. But the teacher's agency in the work of his scholar's salvation, is in declaring to them the truth of Jesus Christ as the needed and the sufficient Saviour, and interceding for them at the mercy seat in faith. When his scholars know that they are sinners, and that Jesus Christ is the Saviour of those sinners who come to him in trustful submission, they have all the knowledge that is essential in the plan of God for their salvation. But the teacher has a further duty to pray in faith for the immediate regeneration of his scholars. "Now is the accepted time" for salvation. His scholars need salvation now. He should ask it for them now. His every prayer should be in faith; hence he should expect salvation, regeneration, for them now.—S. S. World.

Lodge Jewelry Defended.

[A few Masons, the wiser heads of the order, discountenance the wearing of Masonic decorations, but the thousands of the lodge prove their innate love of trinkets and advertise their shame by a pin prominently displayed. How can one who professes to give to Christ all honor and praise, read and endorse or encourage others in the practice, of such sentiments as these which follow?—Ed. Cyn.]

Primarily, it is a time honored custom that has prevailed since the four sides of the ancient pyramids formed deltas, with their apexes towering toward heaven, to symbolize all those attributes, incentives, beliefs and stations of honor that are conceived, comprehended, and aspired to by man, and more especially those attainments most loved and appreciated as worthy, and entitled to our regard and defense.

The ancient priest, prince and soldier all with pride wore the insignia of their calling upon their breast. The Emperor's crown and necklace, the Lord Cardinal's ermine and jewel, the Pope's seal and the footman's badge, were, and are, alike insignia of rank and title.

Where was the soldier under Napoleon I. that would hide his golden honors? Where was the knight that did not, with pride, display his escutcheon? Where is the soldier of to-day who is not proud, and justly so, of his corps-badge that symbolizes and brings to view, with new-born pride, the Wilderness, Antietam, Pittsburgh Landing, Gettysburg, and Malvern Hill?

He loves his country and the service, and is proud of his own identification with the struggle for life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.

Every order, station, position and calling in life has its emblems, and if honorable, its disciples should be proud of them. But the followers of any order that reflects shame or disgrace, may well conceal her symbols and decorations.

It is natural for man to desire to possess the badge, symbol or decoration of such orders or attributes as are most appreciated and most pleasing to him, and if honorable, can but reflect honor upon him.

Masonry is given us as being "more ancient than the Golden fleece or Roman Eagle, more honorable than the Star and Garter, or any other order that can be conferred by king, prince, potentate, or any other person except he be a Mason."

Is it then, improper to wear the jewel or decoration of so noble an order as this?

Our observation has shown that those who love and honor Masonry, those who are proud of her precepts, and zealous in promoting her prosperity, and quick to defend her cause, are not loth to let even the world know that they are clad in the armor of her faith, and when modestly and worthily worn, no disciple of Masonry should blush to wear the insignia of rank and honor. It is given us as an institution of most ample charity, and world wide famous for that noble precept, and if a brother be chary of his charity, then may he well "lock up" the emblem that would give his heart the lie, and prove him faithless to the cause he has allied himself withal.—Correspondence Hebrew Leader.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, SEPT. 23, 1875.

PLATFORM AND NOMINATIONS FOR 1876.

FOR PRESIDENT
James B. Walker,
of Illinois.

FOR VICE-PRESIDENT
Donald Kirkpatrick,
of New York.

PLATFORM.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage, is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. The charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and heir oaths prohibited by law.

5. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by article 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate.

6. That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

7. That to cultivate the intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

8. That land and other monopolies should be discountenanced.

9. That the Government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency, and a return to specie payment as soon as practicable.

10. That maintenance of the public credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. And finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of Electoral Colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-president of the United States.

THE PEORIA MEETING.—As soon as Mr. Stoddard gets back from the West he will give his profound attention to the Peoria meeting. Meantime Mr. Hinman and others ought to be speaking at Farmington, Yates City, Elmwood, and other places near by. Peoria is a beautiful and central city, and a great and good meeting there will affect the whole State of Illinois.

SUCCESS.—We rejoice that Mr. Stoddard is meeting with good success in pushing toward the occupancy of the Carpenter Building. Let the "large upper room" of the building be speedily furnished and occupied by a daily prayer-meeting. The day that sees that room filled and dedicated to the uses of the National Christian Association, will set Christianity in Chicago squarely against the darkness of this world, and proved to be the Pentecost of our movement.

THE AMERICAN BOARD meets in Chicago early in October. As the oldest Mission Board (formed in 1810) and the one to lead the churches to the overthrow of idolatry, it owes our churches a distinct testimony against the idolatries of the secret orders. Will not Professor Boardman and his associates, and other theological faculties in and near Chicago, see that this matter is attended to; and a proper testimony given by this great Board. If the lodge is not heathenism there is no heathenism or false religion on earth. And if a Mission Board pretends to fight heathenism abroad, and winks at and scorns it at home, its professions are insincere; and conscientious people will forsake it, as a multitude did forsake and formed a free mission Board, when this same body connived and winked at the home heathenism of slavery. We believe Messrs Bascom, Roy, and others who are with us are corporate members of this Board.

OVERFLOWING ITS BANKS.

When the cause of Abolitionism began to exhibit the effects of diversity of judgments and diversity of interest in a free country; when The Emancipator became the representative of orthodox Christian Abolitionism, as the Liberator had set forth the views of Mr. Garrison and those who held with him; while Dr. Bailey's Philanthropist, afterward The National Era, added its peculiar glow of a western sun-set; the pro-slavery press hailed each new aspect of the cause, and especially every collision among Abolitionists as proof that "Abolitionism was going down;" while, as Joshua Leavitt used to say, it was only "overflowing its banks," and running on in separate currents. It is so with the cause which is to overthrow the lodge and emancipate its moral and intellectual serfs. In addition to the able prints which have long advocated our cause, Elder Parker Hurless is starting a monthly; Mr. Kiggins joins with Mr. Wallace and his Anti-masonic Christian Herald, which we have commended more than once; Rev. Mr. Pollock of Brooklyn, is launching his Patriot; and while the Cynosure shines steadily from our firmament promises soon to be aglow with stars of greater or lesser magnitude.

Meantime, as was the anti-slavery reform, ours will be beset by the generation of sore heads, greed-of-gain men, adventurers, men of personal ambition, secretists; in short the Sanballats, Tobias and Geshems of mankind. No good and holy cause ever moved on to success without collision and crimination from such minds. But their selfish clamor only proves that the cause is "overflowing its banks."

FINNEY'S ANTI-MASONRY.

We have called attention to the general omission by the public press, of all allusion to the testimony of this great and good man against the lodge. Such omission is ocular proof that American editors are living under fear and intimidation of the secret orders, as citizens dread the knives and brands of the secret Ku-Klux in the counties where those masked conspirators lurk and prowl. Mr. Finney became a Master Mason in Connecticut by advice of a weak old uncle who was a Master Mason. But in his own forcible words "As soon as I was converted to Christ my moral nature loathed it; and I went to the lodge and demanded my discharge" (demit). But full of the Holy Spirit, Mr. Finney had neither time nor taste for the political Anti-masonic movement, but devoted himself to direct efforts to arouse the churches and save men. He gave the testimony of his example and advice against the lodge, and kept steadily to his chosen work of an evangelist until dead Masonry revived and knocked for admission at the doors of his church at Oberlin. He then met it upon the threshold and published to the world his testimony in a book, "Finney on Masonry," which is the most powerful of all his writings. That book, which a cringing and venal press ignores, will yet be regarded as the crowning glory of his wonderful life devoted to the glory of God and the good of his fellow men.

NOTES.

—Pastor Bartholomew's statement in the present number and the notice of the dedication, will be read with greater interest when is known that his congregation were compelled to go to law to maintain their just cause, but the decision of the courts have been in favor of the lodge interests. Having read the decision of Judge Mackenzie, it does not appear that the secrecy question influenced the case, but an advantage was had against the congregation in some technical forms which the Judge felt compelled to recognize.

—Past Master Ronayne will speak in Ligionier, Ind., on Monday and Tuesday next, Sept. 27th and 28th; in Kendalville, on the 29th and 30th, at Albion, the county seat, on the 1st and 2nd of October. These meetings will give the friends of reform in Noble county an excellent opportunity of beholding the pitiable folly and weakness of the lodge.

—James Russel Lowell has appeared as a satirist, and his poem from the Nation we republish in part. The closing lines seem too illogical if not untruthful in referring to the institutions of religion, and are omitted.

—Attention is called to the generous proposition of Bro. Woodring of Waverly, Iowa, on opposite page. The "Revival Songs" are a choice four-page collection of popular Gospel hymns for use in large congregations where hymn books could not be circulated. They are just the thing for camp meetings, revivals, Sabbath-school gatherings, etc.

—We have received a pamphlet containing the addresses of Rev. J. D. Inman, before the Michigan Wesleyan Conference on "Freemasonry Antagonistic to our Republican Form of Government," and of Rev. Joel Martin, before the second Mich. Con. Association for Mutual Improvement on "Freemasonry Antagonistic to Christianity." Both are well-arranged and interesting arguments, calculated to arouse inquiry and convince the candid.

—At the late Indiana Wesleyan Conference Rev. J. T. Kiggins, State lecturer, presented a report from the committee on the "State of the Country and Reforms" which aroused much interest and is to be published in the American Wesleyan.

—The same Conference sustains a mission in North Carolina, the State where Rev. Adam Crooks labored and endured hardness for Christ's sake in the days of slavery. Rev. D. C. Lindville was sent to this field the present year.

—Arrangements are being made to organize a State Association in New Hampshire, in Lake Village, during the month of November, the time not definitely fixed. With the friends of the reform everywhere we rejoice that the work is progressing so well in New Hampshire. The bitter and domineering spirit of the lodge at the last Free Will Baptist State Association made the organization of the State necessary. Let prayers of faith arise from the New Hampshire brethren that from their trials with these "false brethren" there may come a great victory for the truth.

—During his trip in Iowa, Past Master Ronayne's expositions met with enthusiastic reception from the people and everywhere the lodge was put to rout. He spoke in Mason City, Clear Lake, Hampton, Colo, and Toledo. Bro. Hankins was with him at three places, and the General Agent at the last, where the lodge was at the highest pitch of its temper, and would have brought forth an arguments of eggs except for the interposition of the Master of the lodge. At Hampton also eggs were brought to the hall, but common sense got the better of lodge-wrath, and they were not used. At Toledo the Masons industriously published that the lecturers were both Jesuits in disguise, and stick to the lie though it was publicly exposed. There is surely answer enough to such a story in Mr. Ronayne's exposition. The Masons themselves are forced to acknowledge its genuine character and the fact of his lodge connection. So this fact and the hostility of the Romish church to the lodge are sufficient answer to the calumny.

—King Kalakaua lately spoke to the children of fourteen Sabbath-schools at a union celebration at Oahu, Sandwich Islands. He said he well remembered some of the verses which he learned when attending the Sabbath-school at the Bethel Church, one of which was "Give no place to the devil." This is surely encouraging for the Islanders, if it is any mark of a return to his early training by the King. In his visit to this country he had sadly forgotten this inportant admonition. Let us hope that he has found that wine, low women and the lodge make a place for the devil in every heart which yields to their seductions.

—The nomination of Mr. Charles Francis Adams for the last general election was far from withdrawing his name from popular favor as candidate for President. Among several notices we have seen lately of his name, the Brooklin Times has the following: "We have hopes that an aroused public spirit will find some way of making itself potent in the nominating conventions next year, and that Mr. Adams may be called from his retirement at Quincy, to restore to the Presidency its ancient dignity and legitimate influence. But if the reign of small men is not yet to be broken and some 'expediency' makeshift is preferred, let him take up the pen of the historian. He has already served this generation more brilliantly than any other man now living; let him serve posterity by leaving behind him an intelligent, comprehensive history of the United States."

—A most interesting case, and an emphatic contradiction of the claim that anti-secrecy tends to destroy the power of religion or the influence of testifying churches is given by Rev. S. P. Hoy, in the Telescope. He was appointed one year ago to the Streator mission station, and tells of the victory of grace and truth in these words: "We immediately commenced a series of meetings for the conversion of sinners. After five weeks' labor only 3 persons professed faith in Christ, and only 2 united with the church. Under this seeming defeat 2 of the original 8 members withdrew and joined another church, with the decision that we could never build up a society with that anti-secrecy clause in our book of discipline. But God has chosen the weak things of this world to confound the mighty. After resting one week the meeting was continued, our reliance being in power from on high. In the next seven weeks 115 persons professed conversion, and 98 joined the church. None of the conversions, or accessions were under sixteen years of age, and fifty-two of the accessions were heads of families. Only two of the converts chose to remain out of the United Brethren church rather than withdraw from the lodge, while many left the lodge for the sake of Christ. On the 8th of last May, Prof. C. A. Blanchard came here, by invitation, and delivered three of the most telling lectures against secrecy that we ever heard. Secrecy received such a waking up in this city, through the United Brethren church, that its principles will ever be remembered. From that time to this the church has been persecuted in such a way as Freemasonry only is capable of doing. But, thank God, the United Brethren church in this city is founded on true Bible principles, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it.' Not one man left the church under the opposition, and many have been saved from the lodge. Can we be successful in winning souls to Jesus in the cities, and oppose secrecy?"

A Looking Glass for H. W. Beecher.—Published by D. F. Newton, 303 W. 20th Street, New York; price 25c. This book written by a "classmate of H. W. Beecher," is the second by that author on the general subject of the spiritual and theological aberrations of the Plymouth preacher. While many have already settled in their own minds the position of Mr. Beecher, the reading of this little book will strengthen the Bible side of the case; in which everyone who has measured results by the legal developements of the trial alone has left out that which time and the judgment of men will hold as most essential, the influence of Beecher's preaching and loose life upon the churches. Send for this book.

—The National Christian Association opposed to secret societies has a good opportunity for obtaining a substantial basis upon which to operate. Philo Carpenter, Esq., of Chicago, offers to donate to the Association a building and lot free from all incumbrance, suitably located on West Madison street in that city worth $20,000, as soon as there shall be procured from other sources the sum of $30,000. The offer stands open until the first day of April, 1878. Mr. Carpenter proposes farther that as soon as $10,000 shall be secured, he will give for the use of the Association the possession and control of the building until April 1st, 1878, provided farther the said $10,000 shall be secured for the uses and objects of the Association before the 1st day of April, 1876. The proposition is a generous one, and shows that Mr. Carpenter's heart is in the cause. The friends of anti-secrecy should see to it that the benefits of this offer shall be secured. We understand that about $6,000 have already been obtained. As much more raised before the 1st of April next will give the association control of the building for two years. During that time the rest of the whole amount, namely, $20,000, can be raised if the friends of the cause will act with energy. United Presbyterians have a special interest in this matter, and they should promptly contribute their part of the sum necessary to obtain this home for the National Association. —Evangelical Repository.

The Christian Patriot.

Arrangements are being made to publish monthly in New York city, a magazine of thirty-two pages, to be called The Christian Patriot, for the discussion of such religious, moral, and political questions as affect Christianity, or morals in general. The social system is full of disorder. The political arena is grossly corrupted, and the Christian church is extensively infected, thus carrying moral pestilence into every department of society. The fruits are abundant and obvious. Bargain and sale enter largely into the plans of partisan leaders; members of secret orders secure the lion's share of public favors.

Rings "cut and fit" political issues to suit their own purposes. The judicial ermine does not escape the contagion. Commercial integrity is a rare commodity. The laborer and capitalist are in hostile array. Sinful extravagance leading to bankruptcy and crime is an order of the day. Lawlessness and immorality prevail in many places. Drunkenness and Sabbath-breaking with their train of results are shocking to contemplate. These evils have a disastrous effect on Christianity, and on society at large. Their existence calls for prompt and vigorous action. The design in publishing The Christian Patriot is to help in arresting the evil tendency of such things through a more enlightened public sentiment. Such an effort is worthy of the ablest statesman, jurist, or divine; and the humblest citizen cannot but be moved to cast in his "mite" to aid in such a contest.

The publication of the Christian Patriot will be commenced on the 1st of January, 1876, and it will be sent to all parts of the United States and Canada at one dollar a year in advance. Carefully written articles and reports are wanted from all parts of the country, and the largest possible circulation is desired. Will not our friends everywhere aid us to their uttermost in making the Christian Patrtot a true opponent of the principles which its name imports. Write to us; give your views; tell us of the doings in your neighborhood. Send us the names of subscribers as fast as you can, (the money need not be sent until the first number shall have been received.) All communications prior to the 1st of January, should addressed to Rev. T. H. Pollock, Jersey City, N. J.

New York, Sept. 1, 1875.

Note. Editors noticing the above enterprise will please send a copy of their paper containing the notice to the above address.

A Proposal.

Waverly, Iowa, Sep. 13, 1875.

Dear Editors:—I obtained the subscription for one year, which I send in this way. The minister who sends it was visiting us some months since, and was much pleased to find us engaged in the reform, although he confessed that he had not been actively engaged himself in opposing the evil. He said he wanted the Cynosure very much, but just then was not financially prepared to subscribe for it. Before leaving my house, I made him a present of a hundred sheets of my "Revival Songs" on condition that he promise to subscribe as soon as he could; which he did, and now sends me the money. These "Revival Songs" have been advertised, and samples sent to many of the ministers in the North-west; used at the Iowa State Convention at Clear Lake, and are very convenient for any religious meeting. I will send 500 of these sheets free, as a premium to the minister who will send in the largest number of subscribers to the Cynosure office during the two months of October and November, from Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas, Minnesota, Missouri, or Dakota Territory (where the samples have been mostly circulated.) I do not sell any of these hymns hereafter, but do this simply to increase the circulation of a paper worthy the patronage of every lover of truth.

These hymns are usually sold at one dollar per 100. The Cynosure will notify me at the expiration of the time who to send them to Yours &c.,

P. Woodring.

News of the Week.

The City.

The city officials were invited to inspect the county poor house and insane asylum last week and proved their fitness for incarceration in the latter by a drunken spree.——In the severe storm of Sep. 8 and 9 another propeller foundered in the lake with the loss of eight lives. A heavy gale on the night of Thursday last drove a lumber barge on the North pier causing a total loss.——The experiment of the fast mail trains is a success. The first train from New York over the N. Y. Central route came through five minutes ahead of time delivering the mail without failure at all points. No stops were made except to change engines. The last run was from Elkhart where the train was behind time so great was the nervous strain upon the engineer in making up this time that he fainted when the train came into the depot of the Lake Shore road here. This train arrives and departs daily. The Pennsylvania Company's train is also running on the same arrangement and takes passengers also.——The Episcopal Convention of the Diocese of Illinois have elected a third candidate for the Bishopric, Dr. McLaren of Cleveland. It is probable that the election will not fail as did that of Seymour and De Koven, but will be confirmed by the standing committees of the church at large.

General.

Galveston has been flooded by a storm. In many of the principal streets there are several feet of water; and it is supposed that thirty men who were engaged on a breastwork in course of construction by the United States Government, have been drowned. One railroad bridge has been completely destroyed, and another is partially demolished. The force of the gale is so great, that the water at Virginia Point is forced over the land about three miles.——Wheat fields in the neighborhood of Newbern, N. C., remain unreaped on account of the innumerable rattlesnakes therein.——Prof. Hayden, while in Omaha, a few days ago, related some of the results of his three years' exploration in Southern and Western Colorado. Coal of the best quality was found in large quantities, the veins varying in thickness from twenty to fifty feet. Large beds of iron were also discovered. Some of the mines of silver and gold, the Professor thought, would prove the richest in the West.——One of the special agents of the Pension Office has just returned from the West, and his report made to the Commissioner discloses a remarkable series of wholesome deceptions practiced on the Government. The Commissioner now states that he is convinced that the Government is annually paying from three to four million dollars to fraudulent claimants. ——Pres. Grant and family leave Long Branch this week on a special car for Colorado.——Severe frosts have been experienced along the Missouri river during the past week, but it is believed the corn crop is not materially injured.

Foreign.

Iceland has been so devastated by volcanic action that the people are impoverished and their means of living gone. They are proposing to emigrate. Alaska and Manitoba are points in which they will probably settle.——It is said that the Ultramontane majority in the Bavarian Diet are preparing to censure the Government by vote. They will ask the King to change his ministers, because they do not possess the confidence of the people.——The Turkish Government has concentrated 48,000 troops on the Servian border and the question of joining the revolted provinces in war or remaining neutral is to be submitted to the people of that province.

The Home Circle.

The Resurrection.

Lift up, lift up, your voices now,
The whole wide world rejoices now,
The Lord hath triumphed gloriously,
The Lord shall reign victoriously.

In vain with stone the cave they barred,
In vain the watch kept ward and guard;
Majestic from the spoiled tomb
In pomp of triumph, Christ is come!

He binds in chains the ancient foe,
A countless host he frees from woe,
And heaven's high portal open flies,
For Christ hath risen and man shall rise.

And all he did, and all he bare,
He gives us as our own to share;
And hope and joy and peace begin,
For Christ hath won and man may win.

O Victor, aid us in the fight,
And lead through death to realms of light;
We safely pass where thou hast trod;
In thee we die to rise to God.

Thy flock, from sin and death set free,
Glad Alleluia raise to thee,
And ever, with the heavenly host,
Praise Father, Son, and Holy Ghost.

The Box of Books.

You of seven or eight years old who have begun to study Latin think you are brighter than some of the other boys. Not that you say so but it is very evident you think the other boys ought to recognize the fact. Well, perhaps you are right; but I am going to tell you of one who wrote very respectable Latin verses when he was at your age. He was not, however, one of those who are prodigies at eight years old and are never heard of after, for he wrote many books which are highly valued to this very day. When at the age of eleven years he entered the great University of Leyden, he was addressed as Magne puer magni dignissime cura parentis. What does that mean? You, our young Latin scholars, must translate!

If I were to tell you what wise and learned books my hero wrote as he grew older, I am afraid you would skip that portion of this story, for boys are not found who are so fond of reading as was this great scholar. You deny it? Well, then go to Mr. Motley's last history and there you will find in a lengthy account of some twenty-five pages or more this story which I am about to tell you. I shall feel happy if I have induced you to study the works of that great historian. For the rest of you, who perhaps do not possess a copy of the book, or if they do who would tire of reading so many pages, I have condensed the following incident in the life of the great Hugo Grotius.

I have told you that he was a wise and learned scholar. You shall now hear how his books saved his life. If a story must have a moral you will find mine here. Verbum sat sapienti.

At the age of thirty-six, for some offense which in our time would be trifling, this great Dutch scholar was condemned to perpetual imprisonment in the fortress of Loevestein. This prison was situated on the river Waal, the greatest of the three branches into which the Rhine divides itself on entering the Netherlands; and so strongly was the castle fortified that there seemed to be no hope of escape from it. While in prison he spent nearly all his time in study, and for exercise he procured a huge top which he employed himself in whipping for several hours each day.

The great scholars in Holland did not forget him in his captivity, and they obtained permission to send him from time to time a chest full of books which were a great solace to him in his confinement. Thus in spinning his top, studying his books, and writing his great works, which were to be read and quoted for ages after, Grotius managed to spend comfortably the first two years of his prison life.

But one cannot be contented in captivity, even with plenty of books, and Hugo Grotius and his noble wife who shared his home in the castle had long been brooding over some means of escape. Madame De Groot, as she was called, often looked at the chest of books as it came and went to and fro. Alas! it was only four feet in length, and her husband was a very tall and stately gentleman; but they talked the matter over, and she did not easily yield to dispair. One day they tried an experiment; Grotius got inside the chest and his wife sat beside it with an hour-glass in her hand; for two hours at least he could lie there with the lid fastened down. The risk was great, but liberty is very sweet, and they resolved to try the dangerous experiment of gaining liberty for the captive by means of the book chest.

Madame De Groot was not a close prisoner as was her husband; while she and her children shared his captivity, she could go when she liked across the river to the town of Gorcum to purchase provisions for the family. One day she stood in the doorway of the house to which the chest of books was consigned before it was sent across the river to the fortress, and jokingly sounding the mistress of the house as to the reception her husband would meet if he, instead of the chest, were to appear.

"He shall have a warm welcome," replied the good woman. This answer gave great confidence to Madame De Groot.

The day of escape fixed upon was that of the great fair at Gorcum, at which time the commandant of the Fortress of Loevestein was to attend the fair and to remain all night absent. As husband and wife made their plans, it was thought advisable for the wife to remain in the fortress, so as to prolong ignorance of his flight, and thus give greater opportunity for escape.

There was in the family a courageous young maiden-servant by the name of Elsie Van Houwening, who was strongly attached to the family as they were to her; and she it was who undertook the care of the chest; this time not filled with books, but with the great scholar himself.

Early in the morning Grotius curled himself up in the chest. A large Testament was placed under his head for a pillow, with some bunches of thread to render it less hard, and some papers were stuffed around him to soften the fall should the chest be thrown roughly down. I do not think that trunks were handled as roughly as they are now-a-days, or the poor gentleman could scarcely have survived the journey in this cramped condition.

Madame De Groot took a solemn farewell of her husband, and kissed the key as she placed it in the brave Elsie's hand after locking the chest. She threw his clothing on the chair and placed his slippers near it, so as to make it appear that Grotius was in bed when the soldiers came up for the trunk. It happened to be a very stormy day, and she made that her excuse for sending Elsie with the books instead of going herself.

As the soldiers raised the chest they observed it was more weighty than usual, but some joke about the dul and heavy books inside diverted their attention, and they unbarred in turn all the thirteen doors that led along the passage way and down stairs out of the castle, dragging the ponderous box after them. When they reached the wharf one began to tell a story of some malefactor who had been carried out of the castle in a chest, but Elsie's quick and ready wit was equal to the emergency, and after examining the trunk to see if there were holes for air bored in it, and scarcely thinking that enough to support life could enter through the key-hole, they placed it on the shore.

When the trunk was first sent its contents had been examined, but finding after several examinations that it contained nothing but books, there had been no subsequent investigation made, so that there was no danger from that direction to be apprehended.

Elsie was not willing to trust the chest on the thin board upon which the boatmen proposed to slide it from the wharf to the vessel; she was much afraid that the valuable books might be damaged if it broke, and after much grumbling the skipper procured a plank. The troublesome passenger was even then not satisfied, for she would not give the boatmen rest until they had lashed the precious chest fast, for as the weather was very tempestuous, it seemed in eminent danger of sliding into the sea at the first lurch of the vessel. Elsie now composed herself and sat down, throwing a white handkerchief over her head which fluttered in the wind. This had been the signal arranged by her to let her mistress, who was anxiously watching them from the barred window of the fortress, know that thus far all had gone well. One of the crew observed her, and she was obliged to explain that one of the servants at the castle had taunted her with being too cowardly to sail on such a stormy sea, and she was signaling him that she was on board.

Now an officer of the garrison who happened to be on board seated himself on the box of books, and began drumming with his heels against it, and it again required all Elsie's wit to relieve her master from the unnecessary annoyance.

In due time the ship reached Gorcum, and Elsie paid the skipper and his son to place the chest on a handbarrow and transport it to the house from which the books had on each previous occasion been shipped. In the anguish of his confinement, the prisoner had been unable to refrain from some change of position, and the boy remarked to his father that there was "something alive in the box." The cheerful little maid readily suggested the probability of the books sliding about, and no more notice was taken of it. Finally the chest was safely placed in the back room of the house from which it had so often been sent out full of books to the grim fortress, this time returning not with its usual load, but conveying to his liberty the great scholar himself.

All danger was not yet past. Elsie at first feared she should see the dead body of her beloved master as she unlocked the trunk, for there was no answer as she tapped upon the lid, but as she opened it, he rose from his coffin-like confinement as one coming from the dead. At first he was faint from his suffering, but he rapidly revived as he felt the necessity of speedy flight, for in the book-shop next door there were even then preachers and professors, any one of whom might recognize him.

"You are the man of whom the whole country is talking. We must help you away at once," said his friends.

A mason, the brother-in-law of his hostess, procured for him the doublet, trunk-hose, and shoes of a brick layer, together with a trowel and measuring rod. Unfortunately, they belonged to a smaller man, and the doublet did not reach to the waistband of the trunk-hose, while those nether garments stopped short of his knees. His smooth white hands were very unlike those of a brick-layer, and they were obliged to smear his hands and face with chalk and plaster before the newly-made journeyman dared to follow his employer into the street.

When they reached the ferry across which lay their way to the Spanish Netherlands, the boatman refused to cross in such tempestuous weather for two such insignificant people, as the mason and his scarecrow journeyman, but money will effect much, and in course of time Hugo Grotius reached the great city of Antwerp, the end of the journey, in safety.

The commandant of the fortress when he returned home from the fair, discovered the flight of his prisoner, and in great wrath hastened back to Gorcum to examine the chest. He found in it the big Testament and some skeins of thread, together with a volume or two of theology and of Greek tragedies, but his prisoner was lost to him forever. His curses against Madame De Groot and brave Elsie were useless; Hugo Grotius was safe.

After a short captivity Madame De Groot was released and joined her husband, and the brave Elsie married a faithful servant of Grotius, whom his master had instructed in the rudiments of the law. He rose to be a thriving and respectable lawyer, and we must believe that in the brave Elsie he had a faithful and intelligent wife.—Christian Intelligencer.

Handfuls of Purpose.

Christian, you never go to your daily reaping but there comes a Ruth to glean after; and the Master says, "Let fall some of the handfuls of purpose for her." Mother, do you grow tired dropping handfuls for the busy little gleaners in your homes? When engaged in some great, good work for the Master, that requires all the time and energy you can spare from household duties, do you feel that your work will suffer if you stop every day to plant new seeds of goodness, and watch and water with loving care the beauty already growing? Your work goes on while you stop. Your children may be your best helpers. Then, mother, never be deaf to their questionings. Withhold nothing from them that God withholds not from you. Let your heart be an open treasury—a storehouse for the elder children, a nursery for the little ones. See that their tiny hands are full for Jesus, if you spend all your time dropping sheaves. If God gives each family its share of work to do, will he care how much the children help, if it is done?

The Ruth that came to glean in your field, the other day, Christian sister, was your poor washerwoman. Something in your morning chapter—"unto the least," was it ?—made you unusually kind and thoughtful, and out of your kindness you dropped a little handful of purpose that has been food, raiment and joy to her hungering, shivering heart ever since. Only a seat beside her; a few kind questions; a patient listening to the old story of suffering; a little word of sisterly counsel covered with ready tact, while you showed her some skillful work you had been doing, entertaining her for a little as kindly as you would have done a dear friend. You could tell as you saw that sad face transfigured, what a feast you were spreading for your sister, and somebody whispered, "You are speaking it for Me." That night perhaps your humble sister went home, on her knees for the first time in many years, to carry your handful changed into repentant tears, into God's garner. How she helped you work for Jesus that day!—Meth. Advocate.

Hindoo Prayer Mills.

At Jangi, says a recent traveler in the Himaliyan regions, there was a beautiful camping place between some great rocks and under some very fine walnut and ynew (edible pine) trees. The village close by, though small, had all the marks of modern affluence, and had a Hindoo, as well as a Lama, temple, the former religion hardly extending further into the Himaliya, though one or two outlying villages beyond belong to it. Both at Pangay and Rarang I had found the ordinary prayer wheel used—a brass or bronze cylinder, about six inches long, and two or three in diameter, containing a long scroll of paper, on which were innumerable reduplications of the Lama prayer—and which is turned from left to right in the monk's hand by means of an axle which passes through its center. But in the Lama temple at Jangi I found a more powerful piece of devotional machinery, in the shape of a gigantic prayer mill made of bronze, about seven or eight feet in diametor, and which might be turned either by hand or by a rill of water which could be made to fall upon it when water was in abundance. This prayer contained I am afraid to say how many millions of repetitions of the great Lama prayer; and the pious ritualists of Jangi were justly proud of it, and of the eternal advantages which it gave them over their carnal and spiritually indifferent neighbors. The neophyte who showed the prayer mill to me turned it with ease, and allowed me to send up a million prayers.

Antique Volumes.

A recent number of Potter's Magazine contains a description of what is claimed to be the most ancient bound volume in existence. It is a copy of the Old Testament, written nearly three centuries before Christ. It was found in the year 241 B. C., and has since then remained in the possession of the High Priest of the Samaritans, who have successively guarded it with jealous care. It was shown in 1866 to Mrs. Eliza Rogers by its then custodian, Selameh. The sheets are strongly bound together with stout cords, firmly fastened. The outer cover, which is of papyrus, like that on which the book is written, save that it is a little thicker, does not extend across the back, but wooden frames at top and bottom hold the binding firm. The volume is nearly four inches thick, and, except that the exterior is somewhat worn with handling, it remains in the exact condition in which it was found.

A psalter from the Monastery of St. Hubert, in Ardennes (Luxemburg), and known as the Psalter of Louis the Good, has been lately sent to Paris by an English bookseller who purchased it for 36,000f., and hopes to sell it for 6,000f. more. The book was described by Mabillon in the seventeenth century, but for upwards of seventy-five years has been missing, and was finally regarded as lost. It is written in gold uncials and contains verses in honor of the King to whom it was presented. One half of the cover is of ivory, exquisitely carved, and the other half is of wrought silver, representing the King who owned the manuscript. The work is one of the marvels of medieval caligraphy.

"Little Dan."

You see, the people at the post-office soon recognize faces and names, and after a man or woman has appeared at the general-delivery window three or four times, they are pretty well known. It is a real pleasure to hand out letters to some, while the clerks care little for the calls of others to get hold of their epistles.

One day a year or two ago, a funny-looking little old woman, wearing faded garments, but having a tidy look and a motherly face, appeared at the window and asked for a letter. There was one for her, sent from a distant city, and any one could have told that an unlearned boy directed the envelope. There was a little "d" in "Detroit," with a big "T" to end the word, and it seemed wonderful that the letter ever reached its destination.

The old lady felt so good that, tears in her eyes and yet trying hard to smile, she put her head into the window and said:

"Thanks! It's from my boy Dan, and you don't know how much good it does me!"

The lady delivery clerk rose up to look after the old woman, and when a second letter came she was looking and watching for "mother" a whole day before the letter was passed out.

"It's from little Dan again," cried the old woman, as she noted the superscription. "He's in Buffalo, learning a trade, He's only a bit of a boy, and there wasn't a show for him in Detroit, and beside he was running out nights and going to the bad. I sent him away and he's working hard and trying to be good; God bless my Dan! I'm a lone widow with only him to love, and I hope he'll be good!"

"I hope so, too," added the clerk, and after that the two were friends. Some times the letters were far between, and when the old woman would worry over the delay, and the big tears would fall, the lady would almost shed tears with her. "Mother" would open her letters at the window, and if Dan was feeling brave-hearted and getting along well both would rejoice, while both would still be anxious if he complained and was discouraged.

Almost every week for a year and a half the old lady received a letter, and just as regularly she came to post an answer. She wrote in a quaint old hand, but the boy could make out every word, and once when he wrote that her writing was improving, she felt all the pride which a school-girl could have shown. He improved as well. By and by he wrote "Detroit" plain and fair, and he took extra pains to commence his "Dear Mother' with a grand flourish, and to add something extra after the words:—"Your Son Dan."

Those letters were food and drink to the old lady, and she seemed to actually grow younger. Little Dan had many friends in the post-office, and had the mother been ill any carrier would have hunted till midnight to find her and hand her the looked-for letter. Three or four weeks ago when she opened her letter she wept and smiled as over the first. Dan wrote that he was coming home for a week, and her heart was full. She said she'd have the cottage looking like new to him, and she'd be at the depot to welcome him first of all. Every body felt glad with her, and the lady clerk was to go up some evening and have tea with her and see little Dan and praise and encourage him, for the more kind words a boy can have the better will he seek to do.

There was no letter the next Tuesday; but the two excused its absence by saying that Dan was getting ready to come home. That was early in February, and he was to come about the 1st of March. The next Tuesday there was a letter, but the hand-writing was not little Dan's. It was a strange, business hand, and the clerk felt a chill go over her as she turned it over. It might be good news, but she feared not. "Mother" came in at the regular hour, and she turned pale as she took the envelope. Her fingers trembled as she opened it, and she had to wipe the mist out of her eyes before she could decipher a word. She hadn't read over four or five lines when she uttered a moan and sank right down, like one crushed by some awful weight. They lifted her up and took her home, the letter clasped in her stiff fingers, and though she came out of the faint after a while, her heart was broken, and in a week she was in her grave.

Dan was dead! The letter said that he had been taken suddenly ill, and that nothing could save him. The blow was too heavy for one with her gray hairs and childish heart, and her little old cottage is without a tenant.

No more letters commencing "Dear mother" came for the dead, and the trembling hands which used to linger fondly over the words: "My dear boy, Dan," are folded over a lifeless breast, there to rest till the angels unclasp them.—Detroit Free Press.

A Nova Scotia Tide.

The scenery here is remarkable only in a single point, and that is the rise of the tide-waves. A gentleman said to me: "When I go away abroad, and in different lands they boast of their many advantages, I always stump them by asking: 'How high does your tide run? Ours rises sixty feet.'" The valleys and meadows that reach along the basin look very much like other fertile valleys. The orchards, on the fruit of which Longfellow still gives an annual premium, look just like the orchards of Eastern States. And the farm-houses differ from those in Maine and New Hampshire only by being a little more antique. But the tide is an institution. Every farmer on the lower land has a dike to keep the Atlantic Ocean from stealing his chickens and other things. When the tide is out, many miles of fine pasture offer a tempting bite to the cattle. They have learned, however, to be cautious, for when it comes in, the herd is put to their metal to keep ahead of it. The pigs of Nova Scotia differing from all their cousins, are especially shrewd on this subject. They follow the tide out closely to feed on the fish it strands in its rapid retreat. The finest runner takes the lead, keeping nearest the out-bound wave, with one eye on the crabs and the other on the tide. The instant the tide turns, and takes its first landward step, the porcine leader sounds a shrill note of alarm. The moment it is given the whole herd, without waiting for another bite, start for the highland, making such time as only Acadian pigs can. They never get fat, as that would interfere with agility and their mission in life, which is to keep ahead of the ocean.—Mirror.

Religious Intelligence.

The sixty-sixth annual meeting of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions is to be held in Farwell Hall, Chicago, commencing on Tuesday, Oct. 5th, and closing on Friday, the 8th. Several railroads have reduced their fares for those attending the meeting, information respecting which and also in regard to accommodation may be obtained, by immediate application, of E W. Blatchford, of the Committee of Arrangements, Chicago. The annual sermon is to be preached by Pres. Andrews of Marietta College, Ohio.

—Prof. J. R. W. Sloane, the delegate of the Reformed Presbyterian church to the late Presbyterian Conference in London contributes to the United Presbyterian a sketch of that interesting meeting. There were present from Britain, the Continent and this country 100 ministers and elders, representing 21 of the 49 organizations holding the Presbyterian name or government. The question of Psalmody was referred entirely to the "Alliance" which meets next year and to which this conference was preliminary.

—The fall Conferences of the Free Methodist church commenced Sep. 1st, with the New York Conference at Philadelphia, Pa., and the Michigan Conference at Spring Arbor, Mich. There yet remain the Conferences of Minnesota, Sep., 29th, of Wisconsin at Pierceville, Oct. 6th, and Illinois, at St. Charles, Oct. 13th.

—Rev. J. G. Terrill reports in the Free Methodist the conversion of thirty persons at a late camp meeting in Atkinson, Ill.

—The occasion of the dedication of pastor Bartholomew's new church at Lima, Ohio, is thus noticed in the Lutheran Standard: "The sufferings of the Lima congregation will redound to the good of the church at large, and the worthy people there will worship in their temporary church-building till their church-case shall have been finally decided. On the occasion of its dedication, the audience room, occupying the entire lower floor, was thronged with an earnest and appreciative audience. In addition to the pastor loci, the following clerical brethren were present: Rev's. W. M. Hering, G. W. Lose, E. Cronenwett, and F. Wendt; the last two preaching the dedicatory sermons in English and German during the forenoon and afternoon services.

—Some time since, Rev. W. D. Love of East Saginaw, Mich., proposed to his people to receive less salary in view of the hard times, but they have decided not to reduce it.

—Brigham Young does not feel tenderly toward efforts for evangelizing Utah. Recently on a visit to Mt. Pleasant with his twelve "apostles," he aroused much opposition to the Presbyterian mission in the place. During a two days meeting they took every occason to denounce the missionary and his work.

SERMON ON MASONRY.

BY REV. JAMES WILLIAMS.

Presiding Elder of Dakota District, Northwest Iowa Conference.

A Seceding Master Mason.

Delivered in the M. E. church, at Elk Point, D. T., Aug. 11 1875.

You will notice here that these four lodges first organized themselves into a Grand Lodge and then ordained "that the privilege of assembling as Masons, which had hitherto been unlimited should be vested in certain lodges, or assemblies of Masons. and that no others should have the right to assemble without the consent and approbation of and warrant from the Grand Lodge in communication;" and of course this "warrant" must be paid for. And here by the first act of speculative Masonry the "liberties of a large class of industrious men were seized, usurped and taken away without the slightest color or pretense of right, and the Grand Lodge or central government which they formed was, and is still, a simple, absolute despotism.

But do you say this was only in organization that this despotic character is found. Let us see what our modern authorized expositors of the institution have to say concerning it, and it would strike us with the greatest astonishment were it not a part and parcel with its many unwarranted assumptions. We will hear what Perfect Prince Albert G. Mackey has to say in his Lexicon, page 185: "A Grand Lodge is invested with power and authority over all the craft within its jurisdiction. It is the supreme court of appeal in all Masonic cases, and to its decrees unlimited obedience must be paid by every lodge and every Mason situated within its control. The government of Grand Lodges is therefore completely despotic. While a Grand Lodge exists, its edicts must be respected and obeyed without examination by its subordinate lodges. Chase in his Digest on pages 22, 23, says, "A Grand Lodge is the supreme Masonic authority within its jurisdiction. Its powers are three-fold: legislative, judicial, and executive. In its legislative capacity it has the power of enacting laws and regulations for the government of the craft, and of altering, repealing and abrogating them. In its judicial capacity it has the power of investigating, regulating, and deciding all matters relative to the craft or to particular lodges or to individual Masons which it may execute, either of itself, or by such delegated authority as it may appoint. In its executive capacity, it has the power of erasing lodges, and expelling brethren from the craft. These powers are subject to but one limitation which is that contained in the regulations of 1721, and expressed in the following concise language: 'Provided always that the old landmarks be carefully preserved.' By this standard and this only, are we to measure the powers of the Grand Lodge."

Here we have in the strongest language from Masonic authority the despotic character of the Grand Lodge asserted. Mackey goes on to state that there is no redress for its subordinates, and all that can be done is for the Grand Lodges of other States to take revolutionary action against the one that abuses its power, but even then their action is as fatal to the craft as it is to the Grand Lodge. See Mackey's Lexicon, page 185. The charters of these subordinate lodges would be worthless, and they would have to again secure and pay for new charters before they could proceed with work. But while there might seem to be the semblance of protection from downright outlawry, in this revolutionary provision it is only a semblance. See Mackey's Lexicon, page 185. We see that it is only in the violation of ancient "land marks" of the order that this action can be taken. If the Grand Lodge of this Territory should see fit to send an order to Elk Point Lodge stating that I was dangerous to the prosperity of the order, and that they must execute Masonic penalties upon me, they must do it and take my life, or violate their sworn obligation.

But let us trace this subject a little further and find the power that controls the rank and file of the Masonic body. Hear what Mackey and Chase say on the powers of a Master of a lodge; "The power of a Master in his lodge is absolute. He is the supreme arbiter of all questions of order, so far as the meeting is concerned nor can any appeal be made from his decision to that of the lodge. He is amenable for his conduct to the Grand Lodge alone, and to that body must every complaint against him be made. For no misdemeanor, however great, can he be tried by his lodge, for, as no one has a right to preside there in his presence except himself, it would be absurd to suppose that he could sit as the judge in his own case. This is the decision that has been made on the subject by every Grand Lodge in the United States which has entertained the question, and it may now be considered as a settled law of Masonry." Mackey's Lexicon, page 298.

Again in Chase's Digest, page 380 and 381, we read: "The powers and privileges of the Master of a lodge are by no means limited in extent. No one can preside in his lodge in his presence, without his consent, and it therefore follows that charges against him cannot be tried in his lodge. He may call to his assistance any Master he pleases, may call special meetings, and open, close, or call off his lodge at pleasure. He may command the attendance of his officers and members at any time by summons, may appoint all committees not otherwise provided for. We believe it is well settled by nearly every Grand Lodge in the United States, that agreeable to Masonic law, the power of a Master in his lodge is absolute."

We find no limitation of these powers only as he is subject to the Grand Lodge,—and where does the centralized power of the Grand Lodge lie? Mackey in his Lexicon, page 187, says, "The powers of the Grand Master during the recess of the Grand Lodge are very extensive. He has full authority and right not only to be present, but also to preside in every lodge, with the Master of the lodge on his left hand, and to order his grand wardens in that particular lodge. He has the right of visiting the lodges and inspecting their books and mode of work as often as he pleases, or if unable to do so, he may depute his grand officers to act for him." We find that the masters and lodges are under the complete control of the Grand Master at all times. And this power is centered at last in one autocrat. at whose behest the rank and file of the order must tremble and obey. And the time may come when Masonic infallibility will be proclaimed, the reins of government seized and the cowans of the outside world be forced to obey its commands.

I must pursue this phaze of the subject just a little farther. It is generally thought that if one is dissatisfied he can withdraw from the order and have that end the matter. Let us inquire of Masonic authors and see what we can learn on this subject. Chase Digest, page 78: "A lodge exercises penal jurisdiction over all its members, no matter where they reside, over all unaffiliated Masons living within its geographical jurisdiction (whether the residence be temporary or permanent), over all Masons living within its vicinity, but not over Masons (not its members) residing in a neighboring State. Its jurisdiction can extend no further than that of its own Grand Lodge." And on pages 73 and 74, we read: "A subordinate lodge has complete Masonic jurisdiction over any and every Mason residing in its vicinity though such Mason may not be a member of it, or of any other lodge, and it may exercise all the rights of discipline over him, the same as over one of its own members. We understand the rule to be, that a brother (non-affiliated) is amenable for any offense committed against the laws of Masonry, and in derogation of his obligations as a Mason to the particular lodge within whose jurisdiction he resides, and within which the offense is committed. A non-affiliated Mason still remains subject to the government of the order, and may be tried and punished for any offense as an affiliated Mason would be by the lodge within whose geographical jurisdiction he resides."

Thus we see that all the obligations are held to be perpetual, and no such thing as withdrawal in the sense in which we use the term ordinarily is known to the institution and it assumes to hold penal jurisdiction over all who have ever been Masons forever. So when one has been trapped there is no escape from its relentless grasp until death, and the only chance for a man when he feels that the system is evil, is to break his Masonic obligations and throw himself on the protection of the civil law, and even then its execution is often in the hands of men bound by their Masonic obligations to carry out the demands of this despot Do you wonder then that Washington in view of such organization as this, said in his farewell address to his country, that "All obstructions to the execution of the law, all combinations and associations, under whatever plausible character. with the real design to direct, control, counteract or awe the regular deliberation and action of the constituted authorities, are destructive to the fundamental principle, (that is obedience to the established government) and of fatal tendency." And in the words of the venerable Samuel D. Greene, I now say that "British tyrany never more completely swayed the destinies of America, than Freemasonry does now. That ruled openly; this rules secretly. This threatens all we hold dear; our liberty of speech and of conscience; our political and religious institutions; our confidence in men; our trust in God. No confidence can be placed in the word of a man while the gross falsehoods of Freemasonry pass current with him."

Let us look around us; the secular press is completely silenced on this question, unless it is to throw more vile slang at those, who seeing the danger, dare utter a warning word. And so strong is its grasp on even the religious press that it dare not open its columns to a frank discussion of the question. I appeal to you followers of Jesus Christ, to lift up a standard in the name of the Lord. As you love your honor, as you love your Saviour, as you love your church, as you love your fellowmen that are unsaved, yea, as you love your very enemies, strike! to break the shackles that bind them in a bitter bondage. I appeal to you honest Mason that is before me, in the fear of God, and as you love your native land, rise! throw off the yoke and assert your freedom. Allow me to call your attention to the statement made by Hon. W. H. Seward, one of the greatest statesmen our nation has ever known, "Secret societies, sir? Before I would place my hand between the hands of other men, in a secret lodge, order, class, or council, and bending on my knee before them enter into combination with them for any object, personal or political, good or bad, I would pray to God that that hand and that knee might be paralyzed and that I might become an object of pity and even the mockery of my fellowmen. Swear, sir! I, a man, an American citizen, a Christian, swear to submit myself to the guidance and direction of other men; surrendering my own judgment to their judgment, and my own conscience to their keeping? No, no, sir! I know quite well the fallibility of my own judgment, and my liability to fall into error and temptation; but my life has been spent in breaking the bonds of the slavery of men, I therefore know too well the danger of confiding power to irresponsible hands, to make myself a willing slave."

I now desire to notice the binding character of Masonic oaths.

I need scarcely say that oaths administered by unauthorized parties are not legally binding, and that no action for perjury can lie against the one who violates them. The most that can be said of such is that they are binding on the conscience of the one who takes them. I refer you to Bouviere Law Dictionary, Art. on Oath, vol. 2. and Greenleaf on Evidence, Sec. 328. Here are two essential elements. 1. That purity and truth are contemplated as the end; and 2. That God is understood to be a party to the transaction.

Hence every oath that is not in the interest of purity and truth is a profanation of the ordinance and a taking of the name of the Lord in vain. It stands side by side with profane swearing, only with ten fold, yea, an hundred fold its dangerous tendency. By referring to legal authority, we find a classification of oaths, among which are those of a promissory character, Bouviere, page 253. Here you will observe that in the breaking of this oath although administered by lawful authority, no action for perjury can hold. Thus we see that any oath that does not in its keeping promote the cause of purity, truth and justice, is profanity and a sin which ought to be repented of and abandoned, and if oaths voluntarily given to the general government may be lawfully abandoned under certain circumstances, then those taken through the deception of the parties administering them, ought to be abandoned so soon as it shall appear that they are not in the interest of purity, truth and justice. And if they are not necessarily binding when the things required are plainly set forth and specified beforehand, shall we hold them as sacred when the thing is carefully covered up until the obligation is upon the victim? The moral sense of every man that has not been corrupted by by this system of false oaths revolts at such a conclusion. God in his Divine Word has promised to be a party to, and bind with his sanction the obligations which are taken in these associations of men only, viz: the family, the State, and the church.

The Family—"Because the Lord has been witness between thee and the wife of thy youth, against whom thou hast dealt treacherously, yet is she thy companion and the wife of thy covenant." Mal. ii. 14. "What therefore God hath joined together let no man put asunder." Matt. xix. 6.

The State—"Let every soul be subject unto the higher powers. For there is no power but of God. The powers that be are ordained of God. Whosoever therefore resisteth the power resisteth the ordinance of God, and they that resist shall receive to themselves damnation. For rulers are not a terror of good works but to the evil. Wilt thou then not be afraid of the power? do that which is good, and thou shalt have praise of the same. For he is the minister of God to thee for good." Rom. xiii. 1-4.

The Church.—"Upon this rock I will build my church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it. And I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven, and whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth shalt be bound in heaven, and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven." Matt. xvi. 18, 19. And even in these there may be circumstances where God will release an individual from his obligations: In the family for adultery; in the State for despotism; in the church for disloyalty to Christ and the pure doctrine of the Word. As to those who have excrcised the right in the church, Luther is a notable example; and among those who have exercised it in the State, is the "Father of our Country," George Washington, one whom all love to honor. He had not only on himself the common obligation of citizenship, but the special obligation of an officer in the British Government. We hear no cry of "perjured villain" concerning him, although he had violated his most solemn obligation of fealty to the throne of a lawfully constituted government. Why did he take this step, and why do we justify him in it? He did not take it because taxation without representation would have materially injured him personally. On the contrary the probabilities were that it would be to his present injury to do so. He took it because he saw there a despotic principle asserted, that menaced the liberties and happiness of his fellowmen, and we justify him in his course; and we want to think as we see him bowing in prayer alone in the snow at Valley Forge, his whole army almost in mutiny, with famine staring him in the face, that the blessing of heaven rested upon him while he poured out his burdened soul to God who has said, "I will not hold him guiltless that takes my name in vain." And yet this heinous system of which I have shown you the true character, its bright and plausible side, which its wise ones thought would bear inspection, this despotism of darkest kind, based on error and fostered by deception, has the effrontery to brand as perjured any man whose conscience will not let him abide by its unlawful and blasphemous obligations. What does the Bible say of such oaths as Freemasonry imposes on the candidate for its mysteries: "And if a soul swear, pronouncing with his lips to do evil, or to do good, whatsoever it be that a man shall pronounce with an oath, and it be hid from him, when he knoweth of it then shall he be guilty in one of these. And it shall be when he shall be guilty in one of these things, that he shall confess that he hath sinned in that thing." Lev. v. 4-5. Here we have the Divine liberation. He shall confess that he has sinned in taking it, and of course it is of no avail that you confess unless you abandon the sin. Dr. Nast says, "An oath which promises the perpetration of crime, cannot be obligatory in the sight of God." Com. page 385. I here declare that Masonic oaths do promise the perpetration of crime by making its adherent the accomplice of another's guilt.

I have shown in a former part of my discourse that there is no way of peacefully severing our connection with the order, that it must be done with violence, as the system assumes to hold penal jurisdiction over one that has ever taken its obligation for his whole life. Do you ask what does this penal jurisdiction mean? It surely does not mean that it will take him up and try him for immoralities, for what does it care how many immoralities a man is guilty of, when he has said he is no friend to Masonry. On the other hand you will find the order gloating over the immoralities of the class. Is the right of expulsion what is contemplated in this jurisdiction? What would a man of that class, who has seen its deformity and left it because he felt it evil, care for expulsion? He would rather glory in it. It is something more than that as Masons well understand.

I will read you one more extract to bring before your minds clearly the position in which a man finds himself when he can no longer sanction such a system conscientiously, when his connection is as completely severed as it is possible for it to be. Speaking of those that are expelled, Mackey says, page 147, "He is at once as completely divested of his Masonic character as though he had never been admitted, so far as regards his rights, while his duties and obligations remain as firm as ever, it being impossible for any human power to cancel them." So when you cease to be a warm and active supporter, you have violated your obligation just as much as though you had revealed all the secrets of the system. But God is no party to any such system of oaths. He has never promised to do the dirty work for every vile system, and one is not only freed from them, but is in duty bound to let the world know of the snare that is laid to entrap the liberties of men, and our country, and effectually destroy the religion of Christ.

Said a prominent minister of the Des Moines Conference to me, "Before I joined the Masons I did not believe that the expositions were true; but after I was initiated I found that they were." And yet it lives by making the outside world believe a lie. And it is in vain that a minister quietly quits affiliating; he is still as great a strength to the institution as though he was an active member, and even greater, for I never knew one to try to defend without doing more harm than good to his cause. It will not bear agitation. For nearly one year and a half did I quit affiliating, and expressed my disapprobation of the system to the Master of the lodge where I lived, and I found myself all at once and very unexpectedly defending it. An Anti-mason lecturer came to the village and told the truth concerning the obligations. A prominent Mason who was present arose and said the lecturer lied; and then referring to me as being a good Mason said, "Would as good a man as he is take such oaths as this man says?" This was the last feather which broke the camel's back. To be dragged to the support of a system which my very soul abhorred, was more than I could bear. They expected to be able to keep me still, and thus make me assent to the lie. This act of despotism was too much; I defined my position and in doing so necessarily bore my testimony to the substantial correctness of the expositions.

Now come with me and let us take a short walk through some of these so-called glorious secret paths, and let us see what flowers we find blooming by the way. Do not be angry brother Mason. God, and this act to try to seize and bind my conscience, has unlocked the gate, and swung it wide open; for was I not told that these great and valuable secrets never had been revealed? and that there was nothing here which would conflict with my duty to God and to my country? Was I not told that a man could not be a good Mason, and not be a Christian? And did I not find Christ excluded? Was I not told that my liberties would be enhanced? And did I not find myself under a despotism more absolute than that of the Czar of Russia? If I have been deceived into bondage you must not blame me for pointing out the rocks to other mariners who sail these seas. I now propose to consider some points in Masonic oaths as they were sworn to before the Courts of Rhode Island by the Grand Lodge of that State. I might not have done this here had not the liberties of speech been menaced by the craft in our very midst.

We notice in the first degree the candidate is sworn to "always hail, forever conceal and never reveal, any of the secret arts, parts or points of the mysteries of Freemasonry." In the second degree, in addition to the above he promises to "answer all lawful signs and tokens, which may be given or sent unto me from a true and lawful fellow craft, or from the body of a just and lawful lodge of such, if within the first angle or square of my walk." In the third degree he promises, "To keep his brother's secrets, as his own, murder and treason only excepted. That he will not wrong a brother, or deprive him of his good name, or suffer it to be done by others if in my power to prevent it. That he will not violate the chastity of a Master Mason's wife, daughter, sister or mother, knowing them to be such." I now desire to read an article on "Masonic Chastity," by Emma A. Wallace. "When you take your seat in a handsomely furnished ladies' car, and casting your eye upward you read on a card near the top of the door, these words in plain English, 'Passengers are not allowed to smoke in this car,' does it strike you as anything unreasonable? If you are much of a traveler, and perhaps a smoker too, it does not, and gives you no uneasiness, for you very well know that attached to all trains is a 'smoking car,' where you can smoke and chew and spit without fear of interruption. But we will suppose that the writer is a foreigner, entirely ignorant of the habits and customs of American people. That card unmistakably informs him of three facts; first, that Americans smoke; next, that they would smoke in this car if they were not prohibited; and lastly, that railroad companies understand their business and provide the American public with accommodations for that purpose. If smoking were not tolerated upon railroads the card would read in plain terms, 'Positively no smoking,' and if tobacco were not used in America the card would not be there at all. Again, we suppose that the traveler visits the rooms of a Young Men's Christian Association, and on a card against the wall reads in large letters, 'Positively no swearing allowed in these rooms on the Sabbath day.' Monstrous as the thing may seem, the foreigner would be forced to the conclusion that our young men were frightfully given to swearing, to that extent that those who pass for the best of them would swear in these very rooms if they had the liberty. Moreover this card says as plain as A, B, C, "Upon week days you can do as you please.' Our traveler would at once set American morals down at a shockingly low standard. We will suppose again that he visits one of our churches, and finds that a young man is about to be ordained to preach the Gospel, and in the ordination ceremonies hears the officiating minister read from the discipline the following among other questions: 'Brother, do you faithfully promise that you will not violate the chastity of a brother Methodist's mother, wife, sister or daughter, you knowing them to be such.' The visitor would begin to think America was not a safe place for ladies to travel in, and would feel glad that he had left his female relatives at home. Is there a young man about to enter the ministry who would not be insulted, and a congregation which would not be outraged by such a proceeding? We will now change the hour from daytime to 'low twelve' at night, and shift our scenery from a church to an 'upper room,' curtained and guarded. We look in and see a number of men with queer little aprons on. The burning candles make the room sufficiently light so that we can clearly see a man kneeling before an altar, a man with a bandage over his eyes and a rope around his body, which is naked enough to shame a set of Digger Indians. His hands are placed upon an open Bible and we distinctly hear him repeating after the Master, 'Furthermore do I promise and swear that I will not violate the chastity of a Master Mason's wife, mother, sister or daughter, I knowing them to be such, nor allow it to be done by others if in my power to prevent it.' The only difference in these two pictures, is, that the first is a supposed case and the last is a real one, and is a scene in a Master Mason's Lodge. Do not squirm my brother Mason, we have all been there. Every man, every minister, who has gone as far as the third degree in Masonry, has been led around in this shameful plight, and has repeated these very words. How many of them in decent clothing would do the same thing in a public audience and in the presence of their female friends? What does this part of a Master Mason's obligation mean? what does it carry in its face? Exactly the same principle as the card above the car door in every particular. 'You smoke,' says the car to the public, 'and this car must protect itself accordingly.' 'We know your tricks,' says Masonry to 'the poor, blind candidate,' 'and merely from personal consideration are compelled to enforce certain limits.' 'We take no account,' says Masonry of our neighbor's wife, mother, sister or daughter, if he is not a Master Mason, and this obligation is simply a license to that effect.' 'This thing is actually humiliating,' replies the candidate, 'I am accustomed to perfect liberty in this little particular, and will hobble myself with no such restriction.' 'Oh,' replies Masonry, complacently rubbing its ancient hands, so to speak, 'this beautiful arrangment leaves you quite a margin, my dear sir; plenty of room outside of our immaculate brotherhood, and by the provision, knowing them to be such, you have a considerable field for operation outside.' Masons tell us they confer certain degrees upon women for protection. Protection from whom? From Masons? It certainly looks like it. A friend of ours once said, and so say we, that 'A Masonic lodge is a standing insult to every virtuous woman in the community,' and yet this thing, this brazen syren with her lewd suggestion, harlot favors, is fauted upon the world as the great promoter of virtue and morality, the twin sister of Christianity. We pity the virtue that must be trusted to this outrage upon common decency for safety, we blush for the morality born of such a parent, and nursed in such a cradle; and God help the Christianity that would sister such a twin."

Farm and Garden.

Value of Covered Manure.

When rough sheds have been built to cover the manure heap, the crops fertilized by this pile have been increased in productiveness sufficient to pay for the shed-covering the first year. We have never seen any exact figures of the proportionate value of covered and uncovered manures, that we remember, until the following, which we find by Lord Kincaid, a Scotch landowner and farmer. They present the best statement possible, we think, of the advantages of the plan:

Four acres of good soil were measured; two of them were manured with ordinary barnyard manure and two with an equal quantity of manure from the covered shed. The whole was planted with potatoes. The products of each acre were as follows:

Potatoes treated with barnyard manure—

One acre produced 272 bushels.

One acre produced 292 bushels.

Potatoes manured from the covered sheds—

One acre produced 442 bushels.

One acre produced 471 bushels.

The next year the land was sown with wheat, when the crops was as follows:

Wheat on land treated with barnyard manure—

One acre produced 41 bushels, 18 pounds (of 61 pounds per bushel).

One acre produced 42 bushels, 38 pounds (of 61 pounds per bushel).

Wheat on land manured from covered sheds—

One acre produced 55 bushels, 5 pounds (of 61 pounds per bushel).

One acre produced 53 bushels, 47 pounds (of 61 pounds per bushel).

The straw also yielded one-third more upon the land fertilized with the manure from the covered stalls than upon that to which the ordinary manure was applied.—Inter Ocean.

Gravel as a Mulch for Trees.

In the spring of 1870, I had the superintendence of planting some 200 trees of various kinds in and around our public grounds. The spring and succeeding summer was one of unusual and excessive drouth. About eighty of these trees, white elm, soft maple, American linden, catalpa, etc., were planted on the sidewalks for shade trees; they were on an average ten and fourteen feet high. They were planted in rather poor clay soil (mixed in planting with a rich, black, sandy loam), and within a few inches of the curb stones; the gutters being shallow and well bowldered. The walk was covered with about four inches of gravel. Every one of these trees grew finely, many of them making a growth of branches two or more feet in length. Some of the elms when planted seemed almost dead, but they started and grew well. None of them were watered artificially.

The same kind of trees planted within the enclosures in much better soil, but without the gravel mulch, grew very little, many of them, probably half, died, notwithstanding constant care in watering, deep and well drained soil, shortening in, mulching with grass and litter, etc. The same fate attended more than half the trees planted by others all over the country. Hence, I conclude that gravel and small stones are unsurpassed as a mulch. They allow the rains to readily penetrate the soil, retain moisture, absorb heat, and equalize the temperature. The practical utility of gravel as a mulch, where it can be easily procured, should be tested by all tree planters. It will not injure heavy clay soils at least, but will be beneficial.—Horticulturist.

Home and Health Hints.

To Put Nervous Babies Asleep.

A baby is a very tender thing, people say, but most of them are very far from knowing how tender. Imagine how nervous you are in certain stages—when recovering from illness, say, when the fall of a book or the slam of a door makes you quiver and feel faint, as if some one gave you a blow. That is the way a young baby feels at best. A puff of wind will set it gasping, its little breath blown quite away. A noise makes it shiver, a change of summer air makes it turn death cold. A baby is the most nervous of beings, and the torture it suffers in going to sleep and being awaked by careless sounds when just "dropping off," are only comparable to the same experience of an older person during an acute nervous headache. Young babies ought to pass the first month of their lives in the country, for its stillness no less than its fresh air. But where the silence is not to be commanded, baby may be soothed by folding a soft napkin, wet in warmish water, lightly over the top of its head, its eyes and its ears. It is the best way to put nervous babies to sleep. A fine towel should be wet and laid over its head, the end twisted a little till it makes a sort of skull cap, and though the baby sometimes fights against being blindfolded in this way, five minutes usually will send him off into blissful slumber. The compress soothes the little feverish brain, deadens sound in his ears, and shuts out everything that takes his attention, so that sleep takes him unaware. Teething babies find this very comfortable, for their heads are always hot, and there is a fevered beating in the arteries each side.—Ex.

To Sweeten Butter.—Cut the butter into small lumps, and then gradually wash it in blood warm water, stirring all the time to bring every particle of butter into direct contact with the water which will dissolve the rancid oil acids. When thoroughly melted, cold water should be gradually applied to cool and collect the mass so that it may be again handled and taken from the water, after which it must be salted and worked as if fresh butter.

Another method is to pour in sour milk or buttermilk, instead of cold water, and stir or churn the butter in it for some time, that the acid of the milk may seize the rancid flavor and remove or change it by a chemical or other process, in the same way that turnip or other flavors are believed to be removed from milk by the souring process.

Lime water is also recommended for washing rancid butter, as is also new milk, but whichever method is tried, it will be seen that the butter must be so nearly melted that every particle may come in close contact with the liquid in which it is agitated.—N. E. Farmer.

Milk Diet in Dysentery.

Dr. Barrett states in the Archives de Medicine Navale, that he has used milk in chronic dysentery among soldiers and sailors returning from China. He considers a milk diet superior to all other treatment in such cases. The milk must be pure, unmixed with water, fresh as possible, and not boiled. Sufficient milk was given to a patient, but nothing else was allowed to pass his lips. Diarrhea, if it appears, lasts but a few days. No change of diet is to be made, and no medicine given. If the physician fears the persistence of diarrhea, a small quantity of bismuth must be prescribed. If the milk pass through the bowels undigested, pepsin will remedy the defect in the digestive process. After a time the faeces become solid, the patient thinks himself cured, and craves other food. This is the dangerous period; for too early relaxation of the diet may cause a relapse. White of eggs, rice, cream, and the lightest possible things are to be admitted sparingly; and when the patient feels convalescent, and will endure the restrictions no longer, he is to return by the slowest degrees to his former diet.

An organ of the liquor dealers states that the local option law of Pennsylvania last year destroyed one hundred and forty-four of the five hundred breweries in the State, one hundred and thirty-four of the two hundred and two in Michigan, and sixty-eight of the two hundred and ninety-six in Ohio. It adds: "There is no doubt that the temperance agitation and prohibitory laws are the chief cause of the decrease of the 29,994 barrels in 1874, if compared with the preceding year."

FREE TRACTS.

A Tract Fund for the Free Distributirn of Tracts

HAS BEEN SECURED AND SHOULD NEVER BE EXHAUSTED. A friend has pledged this fund a dollar for every otherdollar received, so EVERY NEW SUBSCRIPTION TO THE TRACT FUND COUNTS DOUBLE, and thus $10.00 pays for 20,000 pages of tracts.

The distribution of these tracts has alrcady saved hundreds of young men from the lodge, but there is a great lack of funds to supply the constantly increasing demand for Free Tracts.

During the year ending July 1st, 1875 a little less than 150.000 pages of Cynosure Tracts were gratuitously sent out. mostly in very small lots. The present demand is fully 100.000 pages per month. but funds are lacking to meet it.

Many of our most earnest workers in this cause of God are poor men, who would be glad to circulate thousands of pages of Antimasonic literature if they could have them free.

SHALL WE NOT HAVE AN INEXHAUSTIBLE TRACT FUND?

"THE ANTI-MASONS SCRAP BOOK."

Contains 24 Cynosure Tracts, bound together and is just the thing to select from. Price 20 cents. See advertisement page 15.

Enoch Honeywell Esq., pays for an unlimited number of his tract addressed "To The Young Men of Amerioa." It is an excellent tract, bearing the printed endorsement of Executive Committee of the National Christian Association! He has furnished the public over 150.000 pages of these tracts during the past year.

Postage on the Cynosure.

THE POSTAGE ON THE CYNOSURE MUST BE PAID AT CHICAGO. It is twenty cents a year.

The cost of postage now depends entirely on the size and weight, and therefore some smaller papers charge but fifteen cents; and others about the size of the Cynosure charge twenty-five cents a year for postage.

If the subscription price of the CYNOSURE was $2.50 or $3.00 a year, the price of many religious papers containing no more reading matter, we might afford to pay the postage ourselves, but at $2.00 a year we cannot do this with our present Subscription list.

Therefore let all send the postage, 20 cents a year, 10 cents for half a year with their renewals.

The commission on one new subscription for a year will pay the postage on your own and the new subscriber's paper. We would rather have the postage paid by commissions than in any other way.

When postage is not paid we shall have to shorten the time of subscription sufficiently to pay it.

CLUBS OF TEN, FIFTEEN DOLLARS

CLUBS OF TEN, FIFTEEN DOLLARS!!

Clubs of Ten, Fifteen Dollars!!

CHICAGO, September 25th, 1875.

DEAR READERS OF THE CYNOSURE:

Although our reform has made most gratifying progress during the past year, the next year gives promise of witnessing

TEN-FOLD MORE ACTIVITY

and interest. This is because of the political nominations, the increased number of lecturers and other laborers and the prospect of having

A NATIONAL PUBLISHING HOUSE.

The clear and complete exposition of Blue-lodge Masonry by

PAST MASTER RONAYNE

commenced in this number of the Cynosure, together with his public exhibitions of lodge initiations, must also exert a powerful influence.

Many of you realize the value of

THE CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE

in promoting the Anti-masonic reform. We have again and again received letters from persons living North, South, East and West, expressing the conviction that it is the most important agent for extending and making permanent our work of reform. Some of you have labored arduously to extend the circulation of the Cynosure, and to such labors, under the blessing of God, the present publication of the paper is due. One agent in Indiana, in a locality where money was scarce, obtained nearly one hundred subscribers. At Coulterville, Illinois, our agent called upon every man in the town and obtained a respectable list of subscribers. His visits to those who did not then subscribe were not in vain, for later a lecturer was able to obtain eight subscriptions there in two hours, because thsoe to whom he applied had previously had the claims of the paper presented to them, and were half persuaded to take it before he called. From the Atlantic to the Pacific coast, now here and now there a friend has worked vigorously and with success.

From the time

THE CYNOSURE WAS ENLARGED,

April first, 1874, to November first, 1874, the receipts for the paper were less every month than the expenses; and it incurred during that time a debt of $1,398.13. From that time until February first, 1875, cash receipts were greater than expenses by $551.87, reducing the debt to $846.26. Ever since that time (February first, 1875), the expenses have exceeded the receipts and on September first, when the cash book was last balanced, the Cynosure debt $2,009.65. Do you exclaim after reading this: "The Cynosure cannot be sustained?" Listen a moment. During seven months in 1874 the paper lost $234.74 more than it lost during seven months in 1875. We consider this a positive advance on last year; and knowing that many of our readers desire to do all they can for the Cynosure, we have good reason to think that this debt will soon be canceled. Pres. J. B. Walker said before the Cynosure was started, that a list of ten thousand subscribers could easily be obtained.

THE PRICE OF THE CYNOSURE

($2.20 per year, post-paid), is but two-thirds the price of many weekly papers of its size; and as you have seen, with a list of 4,000 subscribers, is published at a heavy loss. All that is needed to remedy this is a large subscription list. In order to secure this list (believing that no true friend of the cause, after reading the Cynosure for a year, would discontinue it unless obliged to), we have decided to offer the Cynosure until January first, 1876, at

A GREAT REDUCTION TO CLUBS.

To clubs of ten or more sent at one time,

WITH THE CASH,

we will send the Cynosure at $1.50 per year, post paid. Will you not take time as soon as possible to make up a

CLUB OF TEN SUBSCRIBERS?

If you have not been very successful heretofore, try again. The fruit of our efforts is sometimes found after many days.

Of course you can take Cynosure subscriptions at $2.00 each, and then when you have ten subscribers with $20.00, you can reserve $5.00 for your trouble, sending us the

TEN NAMES WITH $15.00,

or you can give the subscribers the benefit of club rates and let them have the paper at $1.50 each for a year post-paid. The agent who has canvassed for the paper most successfully during the past summer tells us that when canvassing for subscriptions in communities of Covenanters and other religious bodies who testify against secret societies, he urged them to

on the ground that by sustaining the organ of the National Christian Association they could best

PROMOTE THE INTERESTS OF THE REFORM

for whose welfare they were so anxious. This is a good suggestion. The members of religious denominations interested in the Anti-masonic reform should give the Cynosure their liberal and constant support. There are who hate these dark orders where clubs of ten, twenty, thirty or more subscribers could and should be obtained. Do you live in one of them? President Wallace of Monmouth College said that the Cynosure ought to have two hundred subscribers in the city of Monmouth, Illinois. Who will collect them?

Have your neighbors just sold grain? Call on them before they spend their money and obtain their subscriptions. Do you have to pay cash for fuel, food and clothing? Persuade those from whom you buy to in exchange for their produce and send us the cash.

We would like to take each warm-hearted, earnest friend who has heretofore labored for the Cynosure, by the hand and

THANK YOU FOR YOUR PAST EFFORTS and encourage you to go on.

"To doubt would be disloyalty,
To falter would be sin."

Who will send in the most clubs of ten subscriptions each before January next? Who will send the largest club! We will send circulars and subscription papers whenever applied for. Commence now; wisely, vigorously, patiently, perseveringly and the dawn of will smile upon a Cynosure out of debt and with an increased capacity for usefulness.

OUR NATION'S CENTENNIAL YEAR

Yours truly,

Sermon on the Life and Character of C. G. Finney by Fulton.

BY NATHAN CALLENDER.

Being in New York on the 12th, and having seen a notice that Fulton was to give a sermon on the above subtect at Hanson Place Baptist Church, Brooklyn, in the morning, we made for that place. The preacher chose for his text, "I have fought a good fight," etc., and gave us a stirring and well illustrated discourse, "causing our hearts to burn within us" with strong aspirations to be made like Jesus, after whom the great evangelist and reformer walked so closely. The speaker did not omit, as many who would be glad to train in company with Finney do, one of the vital, prominent questions of this time, in which he figured as a true reformer. In speaking of him as a champion worker against pride, oppression, tobacco and whiskey he did not (as so many do), forget that Charles G. Finney was as strongly opposed to secretism, Masonry, as he was to pride, intemperance and slavery. He spoke out in a clear, ringing voice, "secret societies," "Masonry," so that none could charge upon him any ambiguity or truckling fear of men. Perhaps he may be the only Baptist preacher in Brooklyn, if not the only clergyman there, who dares to attack this Dagon of New York. But we hope better of the clergy of that city.

Now let us mark one fact. As we went out into the street some murmurings were heard. Not that Finney had been represented as against rum, tobacco, slavery, etc., but Masonry had been hit. This pet of Satan which sleeps so sweetly in the church must not be disturbed. It is his anointed and must be untouched.

This is the sin, holding within its slimy, filthy folds, like slavery, all the virus of the pit, which the watchmen of our land have agreed to humor. Editors, watchmen of Jesus, statesmen be still! On the subject of Masonry, be still! Denounce, if you will, intemperance and slavery. Fulminate, if you must, against Catholicism. Denounce infidelity. But there is a system which holds them all as a cage of unclean beasts and birds of every feather, let that system, that cage alone. Disturb it and you will hear the vultures scream, the vipers hiss, and the hyenas yell. The absolute and specific purpose of sin is to destroy, and the better any system of iniquity is adapted to this purpose, the dearer it is to the Royal Arch destroyer. Now since Masonry is the "touch-me-not" system, the real pet of Apollyon, the inference is that no system of false religion is, at this time, so well adapted to "drown men in perdition."

I wish I could give a true sketch of the sermon as it fell from the lips of the able and eloquent Fulton. Great as was the subject of that sermon he did not suffer in such hands in any particular. The speaker set him before us the sublime, the colossal character which his life-work proved him to be. Would to God there had been as many thousands as there were hundreds to hear it. Was it that Masons anticipated the faithful rod, so skilfully applied, that the eloquent speaker had not a crowd like that of Talmage, or such as have marked his own previous history in other fields of labor? Have Masons and sympathizers combined their forces to rob this man of his rightful influence in Brooklyn? These are questions which suggest themselves to those who know the sneaking power of that institution "ancient and honorable."

Slumbering Watchmen.

Why have moral wrongs been allowed to grow up to such proportions that God's watchmen are afraid to give the alarm lest it bring down upon their head the heavy hands of those who cater to popular wrong-doing? Shall we say simply because: 1st, they had a work of their own to do, which was not God's work; and 2d, that they therefore did not "watch" as commanded? Did not watch unto prayer and for their own spiritual progress, nor for souls "As they who must give account." Did not watch! Did not watch on Zion's walls to sound the alarm, when the enemy came; but rather watched lest the alarm should be given, while Satan's burglars are busy within, filching what of the precious metals, piety toward God, and graces of the Spirit, could be found in God's temple; and so changed from God's watchman to be Satan's sentinels with yet the livery of heaven upon them. Some probably with fraudulent and treasonable intent from the start, but in most cases, I hope, with honest purpose, but blinded and lured by flattery, fashionable society, glitter and show and falsely promised and hoped-for benefits.

Well now, can there be any good reason why the pulpit and Christian press should not speak out against any moral wrong, however popular? Should not the greater popularity any wrong may have attained be regarded the more dangerous and therefore impose the stronger obligation upon press and pulpit to speak against it? Will it, or can it endanger any enterprise God has instituted if the press, pulpit, or other Christian agencies give appropriate and needed warning against such wrong? Or will God allow any department of his kingdom to suffer essential loss, if his ministers and press do oppose all moral wrong wherever found or however popular, and also support all moral good, however unpopular?

And if these questions be answered, as they manifestly should be, from a Christian standpoint, why is it that the Christian press and pulpit are silent as to some of the most dangerous popular wrongs of the day? And why is this approved by a Christian reading public? This last question may be answered—Because kept in ignorance by the silence of the press and pulpit. Then must there not be great danger awaiting those filling such responsible positions? Who can or will avert that danger? God certainly will not while Divine authority is defied by a continuance in such neglect.

Let me inquire further. Is it as above suggested, because ministers and managers of the Christian press have interests of their own that are not and cannot be in harmony with the interests of God's kingdom, and they simply choose their own, and neglect God's, while they profess to do his and neglect their own? Have they not been born again? "Created in Christ Jesus UNTO good work?" Has God sent them to preach, or have men? Whose work are they doing? Have they not pledged themselves to merge all their own proper interests in God's, and forsake all else? Have they a right to have anything, do anything, or be anything that will not directly, or indirectly, and wholly, contribute to the building up of God's kingdom? Are they their own? Or have they been bought with a price? If not their own, and have been bought with a price, why set up an interest that conflicts with his whose they are? Why not sound the alarm when he bids? And if not bought with God's price, the blood of Jesus, why claim to be, and then assume that God has not required this work at their hands, nor of others, and so also proceed to close all the avenues to the people they can control? Why stand as a shield and protection of such wrongs when Christian honesty and charity should expose them to just and merited condemnation? Are God's ministers in the pulpit and at the press afraid to trust all their interests for both worlds in his hands who gives them "Life and breath and all things," and who has in his hands all the events, both great and small that make up their history for time and eternity? Are they doubtful of his sincerity, or his ability as to his promises of protection? If so, why not get out of the way and let those speak who dare obey and have not the temerity to disobey?

Machinists and Blacksmiths' Union.

Among the numerous secret trades organizations in the country, the Machinists and Blacksmiths' Union is prominent. The present membership is about 3,000, a falling off within three years of nearly 1,500 members, which is owing to the extravagance and mismanagement of the principal officers of the organization. The National Union or Grand Lodge meets once in four years. The last meeting was held in Louisville, Ky., Sept. 1874, at which time the name of the society was changed from Inter-national Union to National Union of North America. A reason assigned for the change was the fear entertained that the old name would prejudice the efforts to obtain a charter from Congress, as that body might suspect the Union of entertaining communistic views, or at least sympathy with European internationals. When compiling the ritual, the President of the National Union, John Fehrenbatch, a Royal Arch Mason, was indebted to the President of another secret trades society, the Cooper's Union, for a copy of their ritual. Of course the President of the Cooper's Union violated his oath or obligation in showing the ritual to Fehrenbatch, but my knowledge of secret organizations, whether so-called benevolent societies or trades unions, has led me to the conclusion that as a rule every feature of the oath may be violated with impunity, except giving aid and comfort to Anti-masonry. This is the unpardonable sin in the creed of secretism. "Permit no discord," are the words used to secure admission into a Machinist's and Blacksmith's Union, and the sign—the back of the index finger of the right hand covering the right eye-brow, the remaining fingers closed—is the sign of recognition. The answer is a similar use of the left hand and left eye brow. *

The Vienna Exhibition of 1873, and teh Sabbath.

As regards the Sunday, it may be said that Sabbath rest is unknown in the lovely city [Vienna]. Upon that as upon other mornings, the laborer goeth forth to his work, while the markets are crowded and the shops opened. Until the afternoon the churches are much frequented by the poor, who in their work-day clothes, or with market baskets, hurry in to perform their devotions. But as the day advances, these are all closed, and in the evening not a church bell was to be heard, or a light to be seen in one of them. The city by that time is given up to pleasure. Many of the shops are closed, and public and private vehicles drive in all directions. Crowds flock around the theaters and circuses, and stand in long lines beside the curbs, waiting for admission, while restaurants, drink-shops, and pleasure gardens are filled. In many of these, are billiard tables surrounded with excited players, and card parties occupy every table, in each of these is a crucifix, or an image of Virgin and child wreathed with flowers, and Madonnas and sacred images are to be seen at the corners of streets, and on the house-fronts; but to the eye of the English Christian there is scarcely a trace of the pure religion of the Bible.

Some months before the Welt-Ausstellung was opened, several gentlemen in London, who were preparing to exhibit, felt anxious that the Sabbath sign between God and his people should be observed in the British sections; and at a committee representing the various trades, it was agreed to ask the aid of the writer who had assisted them at the Paris Exposition. This help was cheerfully rendered, and the Lord's day Society prepared the way by sending a letter to each English exposant, reminding them of their responsibility, and a letter was sent to the British Ambassador, Sir Andrew Buchanan, requesting him to assist the English exhibitors to obtain and secure the rest of the Sunday to them and their servants. The required assistance was cheerfully rendered by his Excellency and the authorities of the British commission.

Among the 800 English, Americans, colonials and others who speak the language, there was much difference of opinion upon the subject. The family feeling, however, in favor of a proper observance was strong with the majority, others yielded, and as a result, the great English-speaking race gave a clear testimony in favor of man's natural and Scriptural right to the rest of the Lord's day. This was remarked upon the first Sunday after the opening. Under the vast dome in the long, wide transept, and in the spacious annexes, thousands of men and women were at work, while exhibitors, under the flags of all but two nations, were preparing their cases and exhibits. Multitudes of visitors were pressing in, and all was toil, noise and excitement, until the sections were reached over which the Union Jack and the Star Spangled Banner floated in the breeze. In them work had ceased, many of the cases were covered over, in others, papers, in several languages, stated that "the jewels were not to be exposed to-day." As Sabbath succeeded Sabbath, and the great show became finished, astonishment was expressed by men of many nations, and annoyance by the visitors. As the crowds circulated through the vast machinery annexe, they found a strange quiet at its chief end, as there the whirl of mighty wheels and spindles, and the clatter and noise of tools gave way to an expression of Sabbath rest. Buyers, and others in numbers, made their way into the attractive annexe where agricultural implements were exhibited, but they were covered over; while would-be purchasers turned with disappointment from our silent courts. To all it was a mystery, by many unsolved to this day, why Englishmen should refuse money on Sundays. The remark was frequently made, "They love gold, and gather it greedily from all parts of the world, and yet many of them here are losing scores and even hundreds of pounds in a day in order to keep their Sabbaths.'

After the novelty was over, the example had great power over the Viennese. The matter of Sabbath observance was discussed in their newspapers and places of business, and in the course of a few months led to very good results. One Sunday morning a number of leading tradesmen in the Ring-Strasse, as by agreement, kept their shops closed, and their example was soon followed by a number of shopkeepers in every part of the city. The workmen then began to consider the matter among themselves, and on the Sabbath morning 700 shoemakers absented themselves from work. Others including many of the building trades joined in the movement, and there is now a very marked diminution of Sabbath desecration in the "Emperor city."

It is to be regretted that Austria's splendid exhibition proved a financial failure, and that it has not as yet promoted the material prosperity of its capital, and people; we are however convinced that its influence will prove a lasting blessing to the Viennese themselves, and through them to the vast empire, and to Europe, of which it forms so large a section. It has widened the door and given effectual circulation to the Holy Scriptures. Where they are excluded, thick darkness covers the people, and despotism, priestcraft, and the oppressor reigns; there woman is dishonored, liberty restrained, and the Sabbath lost. An open Bible, however, is the light and the power of God; its radience of salvation dispels surrounding darkness, while its force of Divine authority breaks every fetter and lets the oppressed go free. The increasing desire of the people for the Book of God is the hope of Austria; may she date from the year of her great Welt-Ausstellung, a stream—an ever widening stream—of its blessings, until all her peoples rejoice on the day which the Lord has made, and learn to love righteousness.—Church Union.

Centennial Suggestions From 2,000 Years Ago.

The American people have learnt from the vicissitudes of their recent history many lessons of political wisdom which heretofore have belonged only to the erudition of students, and are watching the tendencies of our national life with that solicitude which is the guarantee of their safe issue.

The Roman Republic existed in the name less than 500 years, and in real power about half that time. Since the Christian era there has been hardly a free government which has attracted the attention of the world except during the single century of our existence. On the other hand the present despotisms of the Orient have their foundations beneath the ground of known history. Let us note several features of the time of Roman degeneracy which hastened the relapse of Republicanism to the control of the Emperors, an ogre power compared with that of the earlier kings.

The dissolution of Republican Rome kept pace with a growing tendency to regard the State, not as a common mother to be supported by, as she nourishes, all, but as the estimate of some dead ancestor, to be appropriated as much as possible to individual aggrandizement. Ambition for wealth, honors and influence was diverted from the field of the arts, literature and commerce, and went with the instinct of the leech to political affairs. The fat contractors became Tribunes, Senators and Consuls—the higher offices being purchased systematically with the means gathered by a shrewd use of the lower ones. Pompey and Milo built with their political gains immense amphitheatres which were filled with the populace who applauded this arrogant display as an evidence of their favorites' statesmanship. Political power was secured by just such rings as are constantly forming in our country, until finally the superior monetary, no less than military, ability of Caesar swallowed up all the rest.

Here, too, is a picture which is exceedingly American. A young profligate and ward politician of Rome, named Clodius, was notoriously guilty of a crime which tinged the cheek of all polite society, though so accustomed to scandals that it did not easily blush. The perpetrator was brought to trial. The public prosecutors were the famed advocates, Hortensius and Lentulus. Every point raised was decided in favor of the prosecution. Cicero appeared as a witness against Clodius, who had no case, and attempted no defense beyond the merest quibble. But notwithstanding the virtual confession of the crime, the verdict rendered was "not guilty." Cicero at once wrote to his friend Atticus a prediction that was soon verified, that the Republic was gone since thirty men (the number of the jurymen) could be bribed to trample the law under foot.

An illustration of the sense of justice which even tyranny does not destroy is refreshing in contrast. Cambyses, King of Persia, ordered that the Judge's bench should be covered with the tanned skins of those who were discovered taking bribes. Perhaps a few hemlock hides would be a not inappropriate decoration to some of our new court-houses, and would be a neat tribute to the memory of some of the justices whose regime is just passing away.

Another sign of the speedy dissolution of the ancient Republic was that even men of known virtue were compelled to make use of those known to be bad, in order to accomplish anything with the people; thus confessing that public virtue had become impotent, while vice held the balance of power. Thus, such men as Clodius, with their hired gangs, were the tools of either party, until they became the masters of both. Even Cato, whose name was the synonym for Roman integrity, accepted their fellowship in order to retain a hold upon public affairs. Just as to-day we are told that no party can succeed in the plain name of principle: it must use policy, by which is too often meant catering to the scamps it ought to hang. Our honored rulers complain of being under the necessity of appointing the vilest of men, whom they would not receive at their homes to the most responsible subaltern positions. There is no need of illustrating this remark by any reference to the Custom House system, or by a description of the beggared, thieving desperados, who at a recent election guarded the sanctity of the polls, wearing upon their uncollared breasts the badges of special United States Marshals.

Still another sad omen for the living which we find in the history of the dead Republic was the unsettled state of the laws. A law once made was originally regarded as permanent, unless stern justice or strong necessity demanded its modification or repeal. But the laws at length became subject to the caprices of each one acquiring power. The new legislator did not regard himself as in any sense a custodian of the law, and as a guardian of the existing order of civil affairs, but as a lawmaker and originator of some new order of affairs which should last during his time, and facilitate his projects. Thus the people soon lost all reverence for the code, since they knew not how soon it might be changed. And when the people lost their regard for the law as a permanent bulwark against the fluctuations of parties and the emergencies of temporary passions, the last prop of social and political order moved from its base. And if we are ever driven to demand a dictator, it will be by the blundering conceit of a set of Bohemians, who, through popular ignorance are annually permitted to call themselves legislators, and to tamper with the laws of the land.

The historian notices also that the setting sun of the old Republic witnessed the formation and arrogant assumption of the trade guilds, the associations of the different artisans and laborers to crowd their own interests into the scale which ought to have been free to weigh solely the general good. Cicero opposed these organizations on the ground that they were the nurseries of sedition; that the familiar use of private bonds of union and peculiar distinctions menaced the commonwealth.

The various politicians also curried favor with the lower rabble by timely-paraded propositions to revive the old Agrarian laws, which made the State the owner of all lands, which could be distributed at the sovereign will of the successful candidates. The general buzz of contentment in our bountiful land does not altogether drown the muttering of that thunder-cloud which may be heard any Sunday evening in the socialistic clubs of this and other cities.

Perhaps we cannot find a page of history so much like that we are making to-day as this which describes the sun of Republican liberty going down behind the seven hills of Rome to rise again with the burning splendors of Imperialism. But this need be no prophecy of such a final denouement of our affairs. There is a deep undercurrent of sober intelligence, honesty and purity of American life, and with al a national faith, such as were wanting in the ancient society. And there are many evidences that the great ship which we have freighted with our hopes feels this undercurrent more powerfully than it does the surface drift.—Christian Intelligencer.

CHALMERS says, "The mere existence of the prophecy, 'They shall learn war no more,' is a sentence of condemnation upon war, and stamps a criminality on its very forehead; so soon as Christianity shall gain a full ascendency in the world, from that moment war disappears."

—A Methodist minister of Breesport, N. Y., lately sent this word of cheer to the New York Witness:

"You seem, sir, with a few other brave men of the type and quill, to be resurrecting one of the lost arts—a free press. Continue to throw your 'words that burn,' like balls of Greek fire, into the earthworks of sin, and for 'stop my paper!' from the Ku-Klux, or murmur from the 'Sir Knights,' you will receive a smile from heaven, and a warm 'God bless you!' Editors will not so often fail to maintain true reform when they learn the people are with them."

An Open Letter to the General Conference of the Evangelical Association of North America.

RESPECTED BRETHREN In council assembled:—Let me take the privilege of addressing you, as one who for a quarter of a century has stood in your ministerial ranks, and has given the vigor of his life for the good of your Zion.

The subject upon which I assume to address you is that of secret societies. It must be evident to every observant mind that those societies are destroying and eating away vital godliness and spiritual life out of the churches of our land, and are threatening the future welfare of our beloved country. Your beloved Zion in this country is in great danger of having the simplicity and fervor of the spirit of its founder and early pioneers destroyed and set aside by the influence of those societies; as many of the membership and not a few of the ministry belong and hold to them.

Such societies bring in with them a spirit of vanity, worldliness and sensuality which is alarming, and is coming in like a flood throughout the land. Some are leaving the prayer-meeting for the lodge. Through the influence of Masonry and its daughters, many are led away from the church and suffer shipwreck of their faith. That Masonry, the mother of secret societies, is essentially and designedly anti-Christian and atheistical in its fundamental teaching, to the extent of denying and discarding the Bible and the God of the Bible, is proven by their own standard authors, such as Webb, Mackey and others, with numbers of their own periodicals. That Masonry was concocted and used in the last century by infidels for the vile purpose of undermining and overthrowing the Christian religion and all legal governments, and did bring about the French Revolution, has been proven by Robinson, who himself a high Mason, was a highly educated Scotchman of the last century who had extensively traveled throughout the continent of Europe, and saw the danger; and accordingly for a warning to the governments published the writings which had been placed in his hands.

Robinson says, "I have found that the covert of a Masonic lodge has been employed in every country for venting and propagating sentiments in religion and politics that could not have been circulated without exposing the author to great danger." He further says, "I have been able to trace these attempts through the space of fifty years; and all made under the specious name or pretense of enlightening the world by the torch of philosophy." Hence Masonry has its philosophical, and ineffable as well as its symbolic degrees. He quotes from Adam Weishaupt, a German infidel and Jesuit, who introduced the higher degrees into Germany. He says of his priest's degree, which was made to catch priests in, thus: "One would almost imagine that this degree as I manage it is genuine Christianity and its end was to free the Jews from slavery. I say that Freemasonry is concealed Christianity; my explanation of the hieroglyphics at least proceeds on this supposition; and as I explain things no one need be ashamed of being a Christian. Indeed I afterward throw away this name and substitute reason. . . You can't imagine what respect and curiosity my priest degree has raised, and what is wonderful, a famous Protestant divine, who is now in the order, is persuaded that the religion contained in it is genuine Christianity. O man, man! To what mayest thou not be persuaded! Who would imagine that I was to be the founder of a new religion!" "Sure enough who would imagine! And we may ask," says Levington, "who would imagine that thousands of Methodist preachers in these United States would embrace this new religion and still profess to teach the old. If the poor infidel who invented this new religion were here now, he would doubtless exclaim with still greater wonder, 'O man, man!' For he might point not to a single divine, but to thousands in different denominations and claim them all as his disciples. Read the Master's warning, Matt. vii. 22, 23. Thus already in the first degree the compass and the square are so artfully placed on the level with the Bible to teach certain moral qualities which according to that teaching that blessed book does not contain" See lecture on Entered Apprentice.

Again, it teaches man to worship by calling the leader of the lodge the worshipful master, which is expressly forbidden by our Lord. Matt. xxiii. 10. Further, its oaths are repulsive, disgraceful and barbarous, and a shame for any decent man to take. See Finney on Masonry. Futhermore, lodge-members are considered the sole property of the lodge. Hear what Webb says in the commencement of his book: "The first duty of the reader of this synopsis, is to obey the edict of his Grand Lodge, right or wrong. . . His very existence as a Mason hangs upon obedience to the powers immediately set above him; failure in this must bring down eventually expulsion, which as a Masonic death ends all. The one unpardonable crime in a Mason is contumacy, or disobedience." If this is not binding a man hand and foot, body and soul, to the car of Satan, we do not understand plain English. Truly this is the very spirit of Jesuitism. It is as clear and plain as the sun at noonday that they are disintegrating the churches. They acknowledge this to be their aim and design. The plea therefore which we often hear made, it must be a good thing, or not so bad, because there are so many good and great men and so many preachers in it, is misleading, false and deceptive.

Is it not therefore your duty as watchmen of your Zion to sound the alarm, and call the thing by its true name, a system of Satan and a great deception? Will any one who holds to, and cherishes the vile system in the face of such facts come to the favor of God without repenting of these things? Will our Lord and Master not remove the candlestick of a church from its place which hides this Babylonian mantle in its tents. (Rev. ii. 14, 16.)

Moreover, the spirit of those societies is revengeful and vindicative in such a degree that those who warn the church against them have their names cast out as evil by preachers and members of the same church, who hold to and cherish such societies. And to such a point has it come in some places, that for the sake of conscience and their Christian character, they are forced to leave the church of their choice and go to a church that witnesses against this evil. An old veteran told the writer a few years ago, that some forty years ago there was a camp-meeting on the charge where he then traveled under the supervision of Father Dreisbach who then was presiding elder. A certain minister of a sister church who was a Mason attended; they did not invite him to the stand because of that connection, the people refusing to hear a man known to be a Mason. Were they right in those days, or is the present position "hush up," "say nothing against it," right? (See 2 John, 9, 10, 11.) Is it not the watchman's duty to reprove those works of darkness, or else will he not be guilty of the blood of souls? (Read Eph. v. 11, 12, and Ezekiel xxxiii.) The handwriting of God is on the wall against it. "It is weighed in the balances and found wanting." True men will come out of it through repentance and bear witness against the vile thing. The words of our precious Lord will remain true, "There is nothing covered that shall not be revealed, and hid that shall not be known."

Brethren, souls are at stake. Hear what a certain preacher, who was a Mason, said on his death-bed, "Must I be lost for this one sin?" And another preacher who had gone through many of the higher degrees said, "When I think of the horrid oaths I have taken, I shudder and tremble. Freemasonry is the best defined blasphemy that I ever read of."

In conclusion, brethren, this evil spirit cannot be cast out by mere admonitions or mere church rules; it laughs at these. A strong testimony blessed by the power of the Holy Spirit and a call to repentance from those things will give this image of the beast the mortal wound from which it will not recover. Failure in this will eventually bring upon the churches a worse than Masonic death; corruption, pollution and crime will deluge the land like a flood. A pure Gospel and church are the safeguards of our country. Take these away and chaos reigns supreme. There is no peace without purity. "First pure, then peaceable," is the Bible order. The wisdom from above is first pure then peaceable.

This, brethren, is addressed to you in the spirit of love; therefore I speak so plainly. In prayer to God our great master, to whom we all stand or fall, and for the guidance of his Spirit I have written these lines. With malice toword none, but good will to all, faith in the right and in a present Saviour, I am your humble brother, in the Gospel of Christ, H. W. HAMPE.

Hates the Light.

In my daily visitation to careless families in the neighborhood, I found one which had come from the land of Chalmers and Guthrie. I knocked at the door, which was opened about halfway by the man himself. I stated that I had called to see if there might not be a disposition on the part of the inmates to attend the house of God. With a countenance flushed in anger, he answered in the negative, and declared that a paper had been left at his house by us which condemned Masonry, and this society he had never heard opposed by any church except the Roman Catholic. Reason and even simple conversation being out of the question, and as a disposition was manifested to shut the door in my face, of course I left the devotee of the lodge in his rage. Now, I had never seen this man before; but on a former visit to the house some three or four months previously, I had left, among other papers and tracts, a copy of the Chicago Cynosure, and its plain talk and fearless disclosures had stirred up his Masonic ire. In thousands of visits made to the homes of the negligent and besotted, I have never met with worse treatment, not even from Roman Catholics. Like Romanism, Masonry cannot bear the light, and the cruel and inhuman description of the punishment of those who disclose its secrets, which read as though they might have been copied from the low scenes of a slaughter house, together with the history of its cruelties and murder in such cases as that of Morgan, show that the two systems, although practically opposed to each other, are similar in the ways in which they would meet their enemies. There are two or three mighty contests coming in this land, and it may be that not a little blood shall be spilled before they are over. Truth, liberty and religion are beginning to be brought face to face with intemperance, Romanism and secretism; and the contest will be a terrible and desperate one, whether you consider the extent of territory which forms the battle-field, the numbers to be engaged, or the estimation in which victory shall be held.—Correspondence of the Chris. Instructor.

War and the Bible.

War transgresses almost every precept of Holy Scripture and all the commandments. For example:—

Thou shalt have no other gods before me. The laws of war require soldiers to obey their officers rather than God. Every man, whether a private, an officer, or even a chaplain, is bound by his oath to yield implicit obedience to his superiors. He is not permitted to follow his conscience; nor must soldiers scruple, at the bidding of a superior, to commit the grossest outrages ever recorded in the annals of crime.

Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain. War is a school of impiety and profaneness; blasphemy is the well-known dialect of the army and navy; you can hardly enter a camp or a war-ship without meeting a volley of oaths, or find a warrior on land or on sea who does not habitually blaspheme the name of God.

Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy. War scorns to acknowledge any Sabbath. Its battles are fought, its marches continued, its fortifications constructed, all its labors exacted, all its recreations indulged, quite as much on this as any other day of the week. It is the chosen time for special and splendid reviews; all the millions of soldiers in Christendom are compelled to violate the Sabbath; and where the war spirit is rife, it will be found well nigh impossible to preserve in any degree of vigor, this mainspring of God's moral government over our world.

Thou shalt not commit adultery. War is a hot-bed of the foulest licentiousness. It is deemed the soldier's privilege; and, wherever an army is encamped, a war ship moored, or a city taken, he is permitted to indulge his lusts at will. When an English man-of-war was accidentally sunk near Spithead, she carried down with her no less than six hundred lewd women; and amidst the fires of captured Magdeburg and Moscow were heard continually the wild, despairing shrieks of ravished mothers and daughters. War is a Sodom; and could all its impurities be collected in one place, we might well expect another shower of fire and brimstone.

Thou shalt not steal. War is a system of legalized national robbery; the very same thing only on a larger scale, and under the sanction of government, for which individuals are sent to the prison or the gallows; to plunder, burn, and destroy, is the soldier's professed business! At Hamburg 40,000 persons were driven from their homes, without clothes, money, or provisions, of which their enemies had despoiled them. "Out of a plentiful harvest," says a Saxon nobleman, "not a grain is left. The little that remained was consumed in the night fires, or was next morning in spite of tears and prayers, wantonly burned by the laughing friends. Not a horse, not a cow, not a sheep is now to be seen." The French troops, on their return from Moscow, often destroyed every building for leagues together; and around Leipsic nothing was spared, neither the ox, nor the calf two days old, neither the ewe, nor the lamb scarcely able to walk, neither the brood hen, nor the tender chicken. Whatever had life was slaughtered; and even the meanest bedstead of the meanest beggar was carried off. All this accords with the laws of war; and every government, in its letters of marque and reprisal, licenses men to commit piracy at pleasure.

Thou shalt not kill. It is the very object, the main business of war to kill men. It is the most terrible engine ever contrived for the wholesale destruction of mankind; incomparably more destructive to life than the Inquisition or the slave-trade, than famine or pestilence, or any form of disease that ever swept over the earth. Survey the butcheries of the battle field—50,000 at Eylan, 80,000 at Borodino, and 300,000 at Arbela. Look at the French butcheries in Spain or Portugal under Napoleon. Peaceful inhabitants massacred without distinction or mercy! "Often were the ditches along the line of their march," says an eye witness, "literally filled with clotted, coagulated blood, as with mire; the dead bodies of peasants put to death, like dogs, were lying there horribly mangled; little naked infants of a year old or less, were found besmeared in the mud of the road, transfixed with bayonet wounds; matrons and young women dead with cruel, shameful wounds; and priests hanged on the wayside like felons!"

Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. But can the soldier do this, and still continue his trade of human butchery? Love is said to be the fulfilling of the law, because it worketh no ill to his neighbor; but the soldier is required, as a matter of alleged duty, to do his neighbor all the ill he can! He is hired for this sole purpose; and he must do it, or die himself for neglect of duty! "Whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even so to them. But would you like to have a gang of men burn your dwelling over your head, butcher your whole family, and then send a bayonet or a bullet through your own heart? This is the whole business of war; its grand maxium is to do unto others just what we would not have done to ourselves. —Amasa Lord.

CHICAGO, Sept. 25, 1875.

The friends will be glad to learn that we have had stirring and profitable meetings in Iowa during my brief visit to that State. Toledo, Tama Co.; Western, Linn Co., and other less conspicuous points were visited and we trust by the blessing of the Master, something was done to hasten the coming of his kingdom. At Western I was cordially received by the professors and others, and the College chapel was well filled with attentive listeners the two evenings I was there. Our cause has many warm friends in Linn county, among whom I may mention J. C. Bartholomew and Bro. Curtis who will not hold their peace, and whose determination and labors are keeping the question before the people and saving young men from the lodge. As I start for Ohio very soon, I have no time to enter upon detail as I hope to do after my long list of unanswered letters are attended to. I will simply say that my effort for the Publishing House resulted in securing in notes $530 with prospect of as much more in the future. May God bless these brethren and all who battle for the truth.

J. P. STODDARD.

Past Master Ronayne in Colo, Iowa.

COLO, Iowa, Sep. 16, 1875

Editor Christian Cynosure:

It is with pleasure I inform you that Mr. Ronayne of your city gave us two lectures and worked two degrees, viz.: the Entered Apprentice and Master's degree of the ancient and honorable cable-towed and hood-winked Freemasonry, on Friday and Saturday, the 10th and 11th inst., in the town of Colo, Story Co., Iowa, in the Methodist church. On the second evening, the church of God had been previously engaged, but the Rev. A. Wilson, their leading past minister, having been cable-towed recently, sent strict orders not to let the church, and the key was somehow put in the possession of the right worshipful master of the lodge, and Satan had his way; but the Lord provided and a candidate was prepared who styled himself the Rev. Wilson, in honor of that so-called minister; and after being attired, and exhibited according to honorable Freemasonry, the large audience (a goodly number being ladies), were asked how they liked the appearance of their minister who would address them on the Sabbath from God's altar, and such looks and gestures were never seen or could be produced by any cause outside of honorable Freemasonry. But not many of the craft were present on the second night, having had more than enough the first evening. Mr. Ronayne is all engrossed in his business, and just the man for the place; may the good Lord sustain him. We hope to have him and Bro. Stoddard come this way once more when we will try and organize a county association. I shall want a quantity of those free tracts for distribution by the 1st of October as I am going to spend some time in preparing the way of the Lord, he being my helper. I shall also want a lot of books. Yours in haste,

J. J. HAYDEN.

Anti-masonic Meetings in Indiana Co. Pa.

DIXONVILLE, Sept. 16, 1875.

Rev. C. F. Hawley, corresponding secretary of the Western Penn'a Christian Association has been at work for the Master in this county, preaching Jesus and doing some sharp shooting into Masonic lines. At Dixonville, Sept. 8th; Gettysburgh, the 9th; Greenville the 13th and 14th, with ability, acknowledged even on the part of some who have been led captive at the will of Satan into the lodge. He showed us the anti republican and anti-Christian character of Masonry, so that thinking minds said it must be the enemy of church and state; and one M. E. minister who had labored in its defense, without comment inquired where Masonic literature could be procured, with the seeming desire of knowing for himself the theology of Masonic divines.

Anti-masons are just entering upon their work in this county. Not that nothing has been heretofore done, but comparatively it was skirmishing along the line to the great battle which is likely to open up now in connection with the work which will naturally grow out of a County Christian Association which Bro. Hawley was arranging with T. W. Stephens, the Vice President of this Co., to be formed this fall. Success is sure to us in this great struggle for the right, if we have faith and conrage united with the knowledge and zeal of veteran soldiers in the army of our King; for he is invincible, and if we fall into line and obey orders, then to doubt or be fearful is infidel. Yours truly, E. J. HAYES.

A Soldier's Experience In and Out of the Lodge.

CRYSTAL LAKE, Ill., Sept. 6, 1875.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Your cause is a just one and I want to contribute my experience in the dark kingdom. At the battle of Franklin, Tennessee, Nov. 30th, 1864, I received a wound in the head, for which I was sent home, and during my stay there was held at this place a religious revival, during which I became concerned in regard to the future, and through the mercy of God was led out into his marvelous light. But on my return I found some of my comrades in arms in high glee as they told me the Grand Lodge of Illinois had granted a charter and there was a lodge in full blast working under the name of "Sherman's Military Lodge," and advised me to join, assuring me that I would never regret it in my life, but I was a little doubtful, and I asked one of my comrades who was a Mason if it was not derogatory to the life of a Christian to be a Mason. He said Masonry was the exemplification of the religion of the Bible. So I filed a petition and sent it into the lodge, and was duly elected to become a Mason, and was regularly initiated as an Entered Apprentice, passed to the degree of Fellow Craft, and raised to the "sublime" degree of Master Mason. In taking the obligation of the first degree, I lost my religion and my manhood, for to have sustained either I should have been compelled to have torn the hoodwink from my eyes and demanded their authority to thus strip, hoodwink and cable-tow a man free born, and thus trample on his rights as a man and an American citizen by making him thus humble himself and then swear away the life none but God can give. But I knew full well did I do this what the result would be.

Well, the amount of it all was this that before one year had passed I was a confirmed infidel, all in accordance with the teachings of Masonry. I had fully imbibed the principles of the order, which are infidelity. In the fall of 1865 I was discharged from the army and returned home, and in the spring of 1866 I joined Nunda Lodge, No. 169, and paid my dues until the fall of 1868, which in the time amounted to somewhere in the neighborhood of $10 or more; and in the summer of 1868 I removed to Wisconsin. I lived in both Rock and Walworth counties, but affiliated with Fairfield Lodge, No. 100, Fairfield, Rock Co., Wis. But being very poor and my family suffering a great deal from sickness, I applied to the secretary of Nunda Lodge to know what my dues were. He wrote me they were $6.50. I wrote a statement of my inability to pay the amount, two Bro. Masons signing as my witnesses that what I said was true, asking the Lodge to grant me a demit, exonorating me from my dues. I immediately received a letter from the Secretary of Nunda Lodge, No. 169, that he had made a mistake, my dues were only $4.50. Now if the Secretary made that mistake on the dues of every man in the lodge the office of secretary would be quite a lucrative one providing he got the money. Well again I wrote, the secretary of Fairfield Lodge, No. 100, attaching the lodge seal and signing the document.

But all to no avail. Nunda Lodge, No. 169, would be benevolent for the sum of four dollars and fifty cents and not a farthing less. I then renounced Freemasonry as a swindle, but said little until one year ago. Last winter I was again alarmed for my soul and found safety in believing in Christ. Then I began to see the light and yet hated or feared to let it shine, but on being asked if Morgan's book on Masonry was true I refused to deny it, for all which I was served with a summons by the secretary of Nunda Lodge, No. 169, to appear forthwith. This was about sundown of the night the lodge was to meet. I asked the nature of the offense. To which he replied, "O nothing. We all have these served on us every so often." I knew this to be false, so I told him I should not go; and that I considered Masonry not only irreligious, but a humbug, and should have no more to do with it.

Well they did not further molest me, and this summer Mr. Edmund Ronayne came here to Nunda to lecture and initiate his candidate. At his third lecture I rendered him all the assistance I could, not being very well posted, having paid no attention to it for four or five years. After the lecture I felt it my duty to God, as my maker, to Mr. Ronayne as my brother, and to the audience as my neighbors, to acknowledge the truth of Mr. Ronayne's statements publicly. Since which I have not hesitated in the line of duty, answering any questions propounded to me; and I warn all young men to have nothing to do with this thing called the hand-maid of religion. It is false; it is anti-Christ; it is barbarous; it is heathenish; it is indecent. Just think what would any respectable young lady think of you, almost naked, swearing to keep the secrets of Masonry under the penalty of having your throat cut from ear to ear! Could you marry a good, pure woman and keep your obligation to the fraternity and be a good husband? I think not. Think well before you swear to keep the secrets of Masonry even from those whose friendship is most dear to you. Yours respectfully, GEO. L. PEELER.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

I am traveling and get but little assistance, yet such are the peculiar circumstances of the times, that some one should improve limited opportunities for scattering leaves of light among the benighted. The field here is white to harvest, earnest labor would be amply rewarded in fruit, if not in dollars, to the laborer. The little we are doing is stirring up the cohorts of darkness. We have the enemies' weapons and intend using them against them. The Captain of the Lord's hosts is upon the field and the Gibraltars of darkness are falling into the hands of their enemies. We hope the people will give evidence in the next canvass for chief executive of the nation that they are right on these great political and moral issues that so materially affect the destiny and perpetuity of our government and the church. We purpose lecturing on secretism some, and will recommend the Cynosure to all desiring light and reliable information, I could not do without it, if it cost double its present price.

OUR MAIL.

Hope Davis, Carpenterville, Ill., writes:

"I hope the Lord will send his good spirit into the hearts of all professors of the religion of Jesus Christ's Gospel to that degree which shall convince them of the great error into which they have fallen, especially the ministers of the Gospel. They do not realize that they belong to the image of the beast. I hope their eyes may be opened."

Enoch Honeywell, Atlay, N. Y., writes:

"Our brother, A. F. Dempsey, of Seneca Falls, lectured on Masonry last night at Altay, to a pretty full and attentive house. His points were forcibly expressed and well proven, mostly from Masonic authors. He showed us that the Latin names "Jubelahlolum," are claimed as lodge members, when in fact Latin had no existence till 350 years after their time. He said a million men, books, papers and tracts are now spreading light and the nation is awaking to its danger. He told us in substance—but my memory is too evanescent to use his words—that a certain short-sighted man said, "What a fool Lewis Tappan was to side with the niggers and get his store of silks robbed and himself driven from New York city." But St. Paul, Stephen, Jeremiah, and a thousand other Christian heroes were and are just such fools, and still more such are wanted, for such are the salt of the earth. Without such bold reformers heathenism and paganism would still to-day have ruled the earth. A "Pagoda" was lately dedicated by Masons in this town to the service of (?). Where light shines this kind of temple will get few recruits and those of the "baser sort." Not a single honest man in this vicinity has been entrapped for years. A deep undercurrent of mind is moving here, but is waiting for our ship to get more guns aboard before they dare take passage in it."

W. M. Love, Baker, Mo., writes:

"I read my papers, clip such pieces as are likely to be of use to me in lecturing and paste them in a lecture scrap book. Then I mail the papers to friends in different parts of the country, and thus let what light shine I can. If all would do this could we not have the Cynosure read by three or four hundred thousand in the United States each year? 'Tis true while Uncle Sam charges 2cts per single copy it will cost about half as much to distribute as the subscription, but then who can estimate the good it would do. It would make things smoke equal to Samson's foxes in the Philistine's corn."

M. A. Butts, Bucyrus, O., writes:

"I think the Cynosure one of the best religious papers I ever read. May God bless it to the saving of many from the dark illusions of secrecy."

Lesson for Oct. 10.—Washing the Disciples Feet.

SCRIPTURE.—John xiii. 1-9. Commit 3-9. Primary Verse, 8.

1 Now before the feast of the passover, when Jesus knew that his hour was come that he should depart out of this world unto the Father, having loved his own which were in the world, he loved them unto the end.

2 And supper being ended, the devil having now put into the heart of Judas Iscariot, Simon's son to betray him;

3 Jesus knowing that the Father had given all things into his hands, and that he was come from God, and went to God;

4 He riseth from supper, and laid aside his garments; and took a towel and girded himself.

5 After that he poureth water into a basin, and began to wash the disciples' feet, and to wipe them with the towel wherewith he was girded.

6 Then cometh he to Simon Peter: and Peter saith unto him, Lord, dost thou wash my feet?

7 Jesus answered and said unto him, What I do thou knowest not now; but thou shalt know hereafter.

8 Peter saith unto him, Thou shalt never wash my feet. Jesus answered him, If I wash thee not thou hast no part with me.

9 Simon Peter saith unto him, Lord, not my feet only, but also my hands and my head.

S. Jas. 4: 1-17. Giveth Grace to the Humble.

1.—Christ loves to the end. Nothing can separate us from his love, "neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature." He is called "Faithful and True." When shall we be able to take into our hearts the idea that with him there is "no variableness nor shadow of turning?" We may turn away from him, but never he from us. Ps. xxxvii. 28; John x. 27, 28; Rom. viii. 35-39; Phil. i. 6; 1 Thess. v. 23, 24; 2 Thess. iii. 3; 2 Tim. i. 12; iv. 18; Jas. i. 17.

2.—"What I do thou knowest not now; but thou shalt know hereafter." There is many a thing which now seems very strange in God's dealings with us, but by and by we shall see the reason of it. Even now we can look back and see wherein God's denial was a blessing, and the time shall come when we shall see that God never interfered with our plans except to make our lives better. Then we shall count every refusal better than an answer, every trial better than immunity, every chastisement better than blessing. Job v. 17; Ps. xxv. 10; cxix. 75; Prov. iii. 11, 12; Is. lv. 8, 9; lxiv. 4; Rom. v. 1-5; xi. 33; Heb. xii. 5-11

3.—One of the hardest and most necessary lessons for Christ's disciples to learn is that of humility. "God resisteth the proud, but giveth grace to the humble." Those who are lowly in spirit receive tokens of divine favor, and, unconsciously, Christian graces bud and blossom in them; just as in the valley the grass springs and the flowers bloom while the high peak above it is utterly barren. Ps. cxxxviii. 6; xxxiv. 18; Prov. xvi. 5; xxix. 23; Is. lvii. 15; lxvi. 2; Matt. v. 3; 1 Pet. v. 5, 6; Jas. ii. 5; iv. 6; 1 Cor. i. 28, 29; 2 Cor. vi. 10.

4.—It is easy to be humble—in theory. But it is not enough intellectually to assent to the obligation to be of a meek and lowly spirit. God wants and requires us actually so to be. "If ye know these things happy are ye if ye do them." Matt. vii. 21-27; Luke vi. 46; xii. 47; John xiv. 23, 24; Rom. ii. 13; Jas. i. 25; iv. 18.—Nat'l S. S. Teacher.

—A writer in the Baptisl Teacher does not speak at random, when in answer to the question, How better Sunday School teachers than those ordinarily engaged in the work can be secured? he says: 1. Let each one resolve to be a better teacher himself. 2. Let all together pray that the Lord of the harvest will raise up such lab rers as the whitening fields demand. 3. Let the pastor and superintendent conjointly seek out such elements of power in the church as ought to be employed in the school, and never let them go till they have brought them in. 4. Let a Normal Class be formed, in which the teachers of the future shall be trained, and thoroughly furnished unto all good works."

—An exchange says, "The truth is, the best Sunday School workers in this country by no means favor the teaching of Biblical Geography on Sunday, nor is it as far as we know, a common practice in our Sunday Schools." We do not quite agree with the sentiment of this remark. The teaching of Bible geography should of course come in as something by the way, and yet we suspect there is need of more rather than of less of it. Events recorded in the Scriptures will not seem so much like myths, if we know definitely their location. A story teller who wishes to make the impression of realness, is careful to indicate the place where his his incidents happened. Even the Evangelists do the same. Geography must not be neglected.

Masonic.

Some Degrees of the Scottish Rite Explained.

KNIGHTS ELECT OF FIFTEEN (10TH DEGREE.)

This degree is a continuation of the series known as the Elu, or Elect Degrees, and recounts in detail the mode of the arrest and punishment of the remaining assassins; and reminds us that the unerring eye of justice will discover the guilty, and they suffer the punishment their crimes deserve. It is intended morally to instruct us that ambition and fanaticism, enslavers of mankind, are overthrown and dispelled by the sword of justice, toleration and freedom.

SUBLIME KNIGHTS ELECTED (11TH DEGREE.)

This, the third of the Elu or Elect Degrees, was intended to emblematically illustrate the reward conferred by King Solomon upon twelve of the Knights elect of fifteen who were instrumental in bringing to justice the assassin of the Master Builder Hiram, constituting them governors over the twelve tribes of Israel, instructing us that the true and faithful brother will sooner or later receive his just reward, and morally teaching us to be earnest, honest and sincere, and to protect the people against illegal impositions and exactions.

In the French Rite the three preceding degrees constitute a separate degree called "Elu," and forming the fourth degree of that Rite.

GRAND MASTER ARCHITECT (12TH DEGREE.)

The degree of Grand Master Architect is alleged to have been established as a school of instruction for the more advanced workmen of the Temple, to assure uniformity in work, vigor in its prosecution, and to reward those more eminent in science and skill. The degree partakes of a scientific nature, in which the rules of architecture and the connection of the liberal arts with Masonry are dwelt upon, and portions of the Fellow Craft Degree are amplified and extensively illustrated. This grade requires of the neophyte that he be thoroughly qualified, intellectually and morally, to be admitted, and instructs him that virtue is as necessary as talents to every Grand Master Architect.

ROYAL ARCH OF ENOCH (13TH DEGREE.)

This degree, in fact, forms the climax of Ineffable Masonry; it is the keystone of the arch, and discovers that which is revealed in the succeeding Degree of Perfection. It is a most important and interesting grade, and so intimately connected with its successor as to appear like a section of that degree.

The shaded beauties of the sacred words that have been hitherto revealed, and the lessons and virtues that have so gradually been inculcated, in this degree culminate in the development of the great mystery of Ineffable Masonry.

GRAND, ELECT, PERFECT, AND SUBLIME MASON.

In this, the fourteenth grade of the Ancient Accepted Rite, and the eleventh degree of the Ineffable series, the lodge represents the sacred vault under the Sanctum Sanctorum, in which is the Pillar of Beauty, and on this is placed the holy four letter name. This degree reveals and explains the tetragrammaton, completes the construction of the Holy Temple, and narrates the destruction of both it and the city of Jerusalem, together with the death of King Solomon.

In all bodies of the Ancient Accepted Rite brethren who have attained this degree, are entitled to, and should, of right, be covered, except when a degree is being worked; at which time all should conform, and lend their endeavors to aiding in the effectiveness of the drama, by robing and costuming accordingly.—Hebrew Leader.

Forty Years Ago.

[From the Anti-masonic Review, 1829.]

Convention of Anti-masons,

Of the State of New York, at Albany, 19th February, 1829.

The 18th of February is a day to be remembered. Then our reproach was taken from us; our cause triumphed. Anti masonry, which had been unfeelingly dismissed without respect two years before from the halls of Legislation, was now permitted to take, by its 100 delegates, entire possession of that hall; and the same man whose reported bill for the investigation of the Masonic outrages, was then unceremoniously laid upon the table, now reported in the Hall of the Capitol a bill calling a National Anti-masonic Convention!

The 11th of September, 1830, was chosen for the meeting of that Convention, as the anniversary of the abduction of Capt. William Morgan, and, also, as the time in which the whole Union might be aroused. Let our friends in the East be assured, that Freemasonry will not have expended either its malice or its money before that time; and let our friends on the Western waters be assured, that though the institution draws in its head like a land turtle, expecting to thrust it out again and travel on with renewed spirit, the arrow of truth, winged with righteousness, will reach its heart, and through its thick armor of mystery and falsehood, pin the loathsome monster immoveable to the earth, the sport of children, and the contempt of women.

When thirty-seven respectable Freemasons have come out in a body in one county, and eighty in another, and the fence groans with the number and weight of those who stand ready to leap, Anti-masonry prospers and thrives. We count it a victory when the enemy disperse; yet we must stand by our colors, until every foeman has laid down is arms, his oaths, and his unholy allegiance. Ours is not a sham fight; and it is the discipline of riflemen to disperse at the word, and to rally at the bugle; it is the manner of Indians to scatter at a whoop, and to fall on with a yell. For Freemasons to throw up a charter and disperse, is well; but an individual surrender is requisite. We cannot object to the flight of our enemy; and it would be wrong to deny leg-bail to all who offer for it seasonably. But the terms of surrender by company, batallion, or regiment, to be acceptable, ought to include a renunciation of all Masonic allegiance for each individual severally, as well as for the whole party collectively. It is right to require that men who have taken wicked oaths, should renounce them.

No company is far preferable to bad, because we are more apt to catch the vices of others than their virtues, as disease is far more contagious than health.—Colton.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, SEPT. 30, 1875.

PLATFORM AND NOMINATIONS FOR 1876.

FOR PRESIDENT
James B. Walker,
of Illinois.

FOR VICE-PRESIDENT
Donald Kirkpatrick,
of New York.

PLATFORM.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage, is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. The charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and heir oaths prohibited by law.

5. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by article 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate.

6. That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

7. That to cultivate the intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

8. That land and other monopolies should be discountenanced.

9. That the Government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency, and a return to specie payment as soon as practicable.

10. That maintenance of the public credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. And finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of Electoral Colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-president of the United States.

CHRIST THE ONLY MOTIVE POWER OF REFORM.

"Without me ye can do nothing," an utterance of a Hebrew Prophet to a handful of followers in what is now the desert of Judea, is proving itself a universal truth; that that prophet was, as he claimed to be, indeed "The Son of God."

The true light shed by John Cuss was trampled out when his followers took arms and fought; and their John Ziska, dying, ordered his skin to be made a drum-head to lead his Hussites to battle after he was dead. Political action is necessary, but prayer, not politics, overthrew American slavery. "Our chief danger," said Duff Green in the United States Telegraph (1836) "lies in the Abolitionists action on the consciences of our own people" (the slave holders). There was then living a young Kentuckian, whose Presidential proclamation was to abolish slavery. And Lincoln gave this quaint and homely reason for its abolition, "If slavery ain't wrong then nothing's wrong." That word proved Duff Green's prophecy, written thirty-seven years before, to be true. "The chief danger" lay in the consciences of the Southern people. Let this word of Christ be our constant guide in the anti-secrecy reform. Without him we can do nothing. The false reforms of all ages, Mohammedanism, Buddism, Confucianism, all prove this great truth. They denounced evil but left the people abject as they found them. Even exposing their secret rituals will not destroy the lodges, any more than revealing the secrets of thieves, burglars, pickpockets will destroy their trade. While we expose, denounce, and reason against these pests, we must depend on Christ to destroy them.

CHRISTIAN INTEGRITY.

It is a standing imputation with irreligious men, their buckler against religious truth, that the profession of a Christian life is a mark of hypocrisy, that those who make it are the ones to be watched in business relations, the quickest to push a hard bargain to their own advantage, or break their word to save themselves from a bad one. This charge is generally met with a severe effort at candor by Christians, who give it a meek assent and very humbly protest that the principles of religion are opposed to such untoward practices. There are scores of proofs that the complaint is false. None who make it would care to live in a community where religion and its accessories were unknown. They would never exchange the pulpit for a stage, or the church for a market house. Speculators in real estate build churches to help sell off their town lots, and men who have had the misfortune to fail in reputation are again in business if they can trade on the standing of church members. Those who make the charge will be often found to do it to ease the sharp complainings of a once-awakened conscience, which they flatter themselves to calm by a threat of bad company. They have become conscious of the excellencies of Christianity, but are too proud to step down into the valley of of humiliation, and so nourish their pride with their imaginations.

While it must not be denied that the failings of Christians are many and real, and join to weaken faith and quench zeal, yet their general integrity as compared with men of the world is just as certain and should be earnestly and honestly maintained.

Under the title "Christians in politics" the New York Nation, one of the most influential of the independent political papers, discusses the question of Christian integrity in that of all places where integrity seems to-day most needed; its remarks sustain our position and a portion we quote herewith:

"We will say frankly that this selection of all employes from among the professors of religion would, for a while, be an enormous gain on the present system. It would supply a test of character of very great value the first time it was applied, because there is no question that, taken as a whole, the members of churches are more likely to be honest, upright, and trustworthy than the rest of the community. One sees that this may be so, without taking a very high, or spiritual view of the matter. Persons who make an open profession of religion may be divided into three classes: (1) really spiritually-minded persons of pure lives, who have a longing for communion with God which finds expression and satisfaction in the public worship and various other ministries of a religious organization; (2) persons with more or less desire for right living, but with so little strength of will and so much carnal weakness that they are constantly giving way to temptation and losing their self-respect, and join the church as a kind of external help in satisfying the demands of their own consciences; and (3) the worldly schemers who have no religious sentiment whatever, and no belief in God or devil, but have acquired skill in religious terminology, and see, or think they see that religious profession is a powerful help in trade and commerce. As regards the first two classes, church-membership is unquestionably a means and a sign of a higher than the average morality. As regards the last, it is unquestionably also a powerful restraint. There is many a man of this class whom the church probably keeps out of jail by the help and comfort it brings him in society and by the way in which it concentrates public opinion on him. If anybody were to determine, therefore, in a general way, that he would employ none but church members, he would find on the whole he was making his selections from an excellent class, and stood a better chance of being served well than if he trusted to the ordinary modes."

A Question from Pennsylvania.

TYRONE, Pa., Sept. 13, 1875.

Please inform a number of us through the columns of the Cynosure on this subject. I will state the case. We have a prohibition ticket in the field. The official organ is the Temperance Vindicator, printed in the Patriot office at Harrisburgh, Pa. Now the Vindicator is also the official organ of the Grand Lodge of Good Templars. The church we represent (the United Pres.) does not join anything that is tainted with secret societies, still we are temperance people and would like to hear your opinion. It would probably open the way for us, but as we now stand we are uncompromisingly anti-secret society men. Yours truly,

JACOB LIFFLER.

It may have been the misfortune of the Prohibition party of Pennsylvania to have chosen a secrecy journal for its organ, or the Vindicator may claim that place without any show of authority. At any rate our friends at Tyrone and elsewhere in the State can be assured that Mr. Brown is a straight-forward man, clear not only from any personal complication with the lodge, but opposed to the spirit and operations of organized secretism. Of Mr. Pennypacker there is little or no donbt that he stands equally high as an opponent of the lodge. He was a co-worker of Thaddeus Stevens and Governor Ritner, the Anti-masonic governor of 1831, and a life-long member of the society of Friends whose position on secret orders is well known. The convention that nominated these candidates was largely composed of men who reject the lodge and loathe its principles, and thousands of their supporters in the State are of like views. That secretism had no part in their nomination should be kept distinct from the probability that individual Masons, Odd-fellows, Good Templars, etc., will vote for the election of these gentlemen, and this should certainly not prevent their support by every opponent of secrecy.

NOTES.

—By mistake of the printers the issues of the Cynosure for July 8th and 9th last, were both numbered 39 in the volume and the whole number 211; and on June 10th, by another misplacement of figures the whole number was changed to 207 from what it should have been, 270. The present issue will be found correct, "Vol. vii., No. 51. Whole No. 286."

—Brother Callender's interesting and timely report on the second page will be gratefully welcomed by all who sincerely loved Mr. Finney. Rev. J. D. Fulton stands among the first Baptist preachers of the country. We hope his fearless and honest example may rally out many to imitate it. It is to be hoped that Dr. Fulton will furnish the discourse for publication.

—The Anti-Masonic Review, which began publication in charge of Henry Dana Ward, a reformed Mason in December, 1828, numbered among its agents Mr. Charles G. Hammond, who has since been a prominent railroad manager and capitalist in this city.

—The ex-Mason who assisted Past Master Ronayne at his last lecture in Crystal Lake was Bro. Geo. L. Peeler, whose interesting experience is given in our correspondence this week. The name was spelled Bieler in our first mention of the fact, from misinformation.

—The Sovereigns (!) of Industry have persuaded the Young Men's Christian Association to grant the use of their prayer-meeting room for a free lecture. This diluted form of grangerism has but little vitality, and will have less when it has been tried by the working classes.

—The Anti-masons of Cerro Gordo county, Iowa, are in the field with a local ticket having nominations for treasurer, auditor, surveyor, sheriff, supervisor, school superintendent and coroner. Their idea is one which may serve as a suggestion to other counties. Side by side on a small sheet they have printed: in one column the Republican State ticket, the American ticket for the county, leaving space for writing the township candidates; in the second column is the Americau platform and nominations for next year.

—The headquarters of the National grange have lately been removed from Washington to Louisville. At the formal opening of the establishment at the latter city, a dance formed a peculiar and attractive feature to show the excellent moral and agricultural advantages presented by the order.

—The plain talk on secret orders by the Chicago Tribune of last Saturday, reproduced in another column, will not fail to impress its thousands of readers. The particular application of the Tribune's remarks to the grange can be extended to the Masonic, Odd-fellow, or any other order whenever they come out from under their cover of secrecy, and enter the political contest in such overt manner as to be made publicly responsible. Such action they will be slow to take with the knowledge of the lodge system now prevalent; and we are unwilling to believe the opportunity for it will ever come.

—Speaking of lodge influence in politics, an incident occurred while the address on "Freemasonry a Fourfold Conspiracy" was being delivered on the second evening of the Pittsburgh Convention. The reporter of the Commercial of that city, a Freemason, and Sir Knight W. N. Riddle, who was not connected with the press, but sat at the reporter's table to criticize and joke at the proceedings, were somewhat excited under the heavy indictments that were being fixed upon their order. To the charge that the lodge filled with its members a large proportion of the political offices, and dictated in the affairs of the nation, and might, in some unguarded moment actually and openly seize the government, they replied with a sneering undertone to the Cynosure reporter, "There is no truth in that; for it is proof enough the Masons would never do any such thing, that they have the government offices in their control now, and could put themselves in entire charge of affairs if they wished." That is: they do not usurp the power of government with their present opportunities, and therefore never will: a remarkable admission for this Knight Templar, prominent in the Masonic celebration in Pittsburgh just before the Anniversary.

—An Episcopal rector of Brooklyn, Rev. S. M. Haskins has run afoul of the lodge in not an unusual manner, but with unusual independence on his part. An old parishioner died and the Masons wanted, as usual, a considerable portion of the church reserved for them and the entire charge of the services. Mr. Haskins was willing they should have two dozen seats and the ordering of the ceremonies after leaving the church. The poor fellows resented the insult, refused to parade, refused to pay for the coffin, and left the departed spirit of their Masonic brother like the ghost of an ancient heathen, when their mummery and green sprigs would have been as satisfactory as the fabled three handfuls of dust.

—The Wesleyan notices the return of Elder Barlow to Syracuse, and his lecture work in New York State with his harness on ready to do vigorous battle for the truth. His address will be 65 Johnson street, in that city. In the great Empire State there should be work enough for Bro. Barlow and another earnest worker like him, and ample support for the work done. Let here be a rally and charge all along the line this fall and winter. The Lord will bless the work if carried on as the Spirit leads.

The New York Witness:—This, the only religious daily in the country, announced last week that its receipts had all along been behind the expenses, and the conclusion had been reluctantly reached to suspend publication; the weekly Witness continuing as usual. The numerous and favorable responses from many friends have encouraged Mr. Dougall to continue for a short time longer in hope of a rally on the part of Christian people to sustain the paper. We sincerely hope he may not be disappointed. The daily and weekly Witness has, in the four years of its publication grown to be a great power for good. The weekly has reached a remarkable circulation of 82,000, while the daily has 10,000. The subscription has been very low for both: $1,20 for the weekly, $4,00 for the other. Now that the fast trains bring New York papers on the next day to Michigan, Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois, further inducement is given to subscribers in these States. On every important question of civil, social or religious reform the Witness has been uniformly true to the Word of God. Secretism, temperance, fashionable amusements, official fraud find no favor in its columns. It is a paper that cannot well be spared for the sake of the church, and Christians should, so far as possible introduce it into their homes. John Dougall, publisher, No. 2 Spruce St. New York.

[From the Chicago Tribune, Sept. 25.]

Secret Societies in Politics.

It is safe to say that there never was a secret political organization in this country whose existence was not very brief, whose influence upon public affairs was not pernicious in the end, and whose leading members did not live to regret their connection with the movement. Every student of history knows this from the lessons that he has gleaned from the past, and every man of mature years knows it from his own personal observation. In this country and in all other countries the banding together of men in the dark with oaths, signs, grips, pass-words, and penalties, —resolving in secret and acting in secret,—has always accomplished more hurt than good, and society, religion, individuals, and the State have each suffered more or less in consequence of such organization. This assertion is a very broad one, but it is proved to be correct by the workings of every secret political society that ever had an existence in the United States. Take, for example, the history of the Know Nothings—an order that sprung up in a night all over New England, and especially in Massachusetts,—getting temporary possession of all the State offices and electing Governors, Congressmen and Senators; what credit is now accorded to the men who belonged to the midnight band, or what permanent benificent measures of public policy did they inaugurate and crystalize into law? They stimulated passion, excited religious prejudice, fomented jealousies, and fostered traditional and sectarian hate—that was all. The same may be said, and much worse, of the Knights of the Golden Circle, the White League, and the Ku-klux Klans, of the South. The record of some of these gangs of secret plotters are as revolting and bloody as similar organizations in Paris, under the lead of the cruel and fiendish Robespierre in the dark days of the French Revolution. Even Freemasonry, that has kept itself generally free from all complicity with political movements, has never departed from its safe rule in a single instance without serious hurt to the organization, and without bringing confusion and disaster to the men who were directly engaged in the new departure.

Now this is briefly preliminary to the warning that the Tribune wishes to send forth to Col. John Cochrane, Grand Master of the Patrons of Husbandry of the State of Wisconsin, and to the men who are following his lead. Mr. Cochrane has recently issued an official proclamation to the grangers concerning the railroad legislation in that State, which he considers less stringent than it ought to be, and he therefore proposes to obtain "supplimental legislation" to "enable the State authorities to carry out the full spirit of the law." To obtain such legislation, he proposes to pack the next Legislature, and for this purpose he appends to his address a circular which he recommends "to the Masters of the grangers throughout the State to make free use of, addressed to candidates, and to make public the answers they return, and if no answer is returned, to make public that fact also, that the Patrons may govern themselves accordingly.

The italics are ours and not the Grand Master's, and possibly the language is significant and emphatic enough without any particular emphasis. This circular contains, after the preamble, thirteen questions, all bearing upon railroad legislation, and addressed to the candidates.

Now, asking questions of men who are candidates for public office is all well enough, but it is what lies back of it that we complain about,—the attempt to elect or defeat men by the machinery or connivance of a secret political organization and not in a fair field and by an open fight. If Col. Cochrane's thirteen questions mean anything, they mean to subject the candidate to the ordeal of the secret lodge-room, and in some sections where the grange is in the ascendant his fate will be decided weeks before the balance of the electors go to the ballot box. Here is the Grand Master of a numerous and widely-scattered secret society that seeks to put the machinery and power of his order into operation to obtain special legislation for the benefit of a special class of citizens. He prepares the catechism for the candidates himself, directs all his lieutenants of the subordinate lodges throughout Wisconsin to make "free use of it," and to publish the result, "so that the Patrons can govern themselves accordingly." Suppose the Masons, Odd fellows, Good Templars, and other secret societies, should endeavor to shape legislation for their especial benefit, would it not create an indignant protest from every fair-minded citizen in the State? Or suppose the Catholic Archbishop Henni, of Milwaukee, should prepare a list of questions upon the importance of the diversion of the common school fund for the support of sectarian schools, and recommend all the Catholic priests in the State "to make free use of it" before election-day, would not Col. John Cochrane and his granger friends send up one unanimous howl over the aggressive and anti-democratic tendencies of the Romish church? But Archbishop Henni and his Catholic associates have a far better right to seek to obtain legislation, if they can, that will give them control of a portion of the school fund than the grangers have to seek to obtain legislative control over railroads, because the former regularly and annually pay their proportion of the school tax, whereas Mr. John Cochrane and his granger friends pay no taxes for the support of railroads, but, on the contrary, there is not a granger in Wisconsin whose burden of taxation is not made annually lighter in consequence of the immense amount of taxes paid into the State Treasury by these same railroad corporations.

The Galaxy for October has a second paper on Sherman's Memoirs, a continuation of Codman's interesting account of travel in Utah, Claims to the Discovery of America, The Napoleon of History, English Pronunciation, and a sketch of Fenillet, the French author.—Sheldon &Co. New York.

The National S. S. Teacher has a good number for October. Mrs. Emily Huntington Miller, on "Leading in Prayer," Prof. Olney on "Mysteries in the Bible;" Dr. Hurd on "The Hate of the World;" "The Chautauqua Assembly," and "Children's Service" add to the full and useful notes, comments, etc., in forming a valuable helper for the Sabbath-school teacher in the month's work.—Adams, Blackmer and Lyon, Pub. Co., Chicago.

The Sanitarian for October covers a large field in the discussion of public health. The death rate of young children and preventive measures, the drainage system of New Orleans, infant diet, yellow fever and measures to prevent its infesting a country, are among the most important topics mentioned. Published at 234 Broadway, N. Y.

A Rare Opportunity.

Jason C. Barthlomew of Ely, Linn Co., Iowa, has four mules which he wishes to dispose of on reasonable terms to aid in securing the Carpenter Donation. The mules are young; brown color, above average size, three of them broken to the harness, and the other to the halter. They will be sold for cash or for good interest-bearing notes.

Any person wishing to aid in the anti-secrecy reform can render valuable assistance to the cause by securing a purchaser. Will not Bros. Dorcas, David Platner and others in that part of Iowa give special attention to this matter and write Brother Bartholomew at Ely, Iowa or to the subscriber at the Cynosure office.

The Home Circle.

Hazel Blossoms.

The summer warmth has left the sky,
The summer songs have died away:
And withered in the footpaths lie
The fallen leaves—but yesterday
With ruby and with topaz gay.

The grass is browning on the hills;
No pale, belated flowers recall
The astral fringes of the rills,
And drearily the dead vines fall,
Frost-blackened, from the roadside wall.

Yet, through the gray and sombre wood,
Against the dusk of fir and pine,
Last of their floral sisterhood,
The hazel's yellow blossoms shine—
The tawny gold of Afric's mine.

Small beauty hath my unsung flower,
For Spring to own or Summer hail;
But in the season's saddest hour,
To skies that weep and winds that wail,
Its glad surprises never fail.

O, days grown cold! O, life grown old!
No rose of June may bloom again;
But like the hazel's twisted gold,
Through early frosts and latter rain,
Shall hints of summer time remain.

And as within the hazel's bough
A gift of mystic virtue dwells,
That points to golden ores below,
And in dry, desert places tells
Where flow unseen the cool, sweet wells.

So, in the wise diviner's hand,
Be mine the hazel's grateful part
To feel, beneath a thirsty land,
The living waters thrill and start,
The beating of the rivulet's heart.

Sufficeth me the gift to light
With latest bloom the dark, cold days;
To call some hidden spring to sight,
That in these dry and dusty ways
Shall sing its pleasant song of praise.

O love! the hazel wand may fail;
But thou canst lend a surer spell,
That, passing over Barca's vale,
Repeats the old-time miracle,
And makes the desert land a well.

The King's Business.

Two hundred years ago England was severely sueffring in its finances by the constant parings and clippings made from its coins. Mr. Isaac Newton, as he was then called, had little fame beyond his own city, Cambridge. There he was not only known as a mathematician, but a mechanical genius. The water-wheels of his boyhood sang a strain in their revolutions which never died uway, until he listened for the grander music of the revolving heavens. The genius of Newton and his theory, laid before Montague, Locke and Somers, that the coin of England, if milled, would not suffer from such vandalism, reached the ears of King James. Newton was immediately sent for. His place was assigned for two full years within the massive and well-guarded doors of the treasury in the Tower of London. From fifteen thousand pounds of coinage per week, the weekly average increased to more than one hundred thousand pounds.

Just as honors began to cluster around him, just as new doors of enterprise were swinging open, just as distant lands were listening for the second calling of his name, he thus stepped from the ascending staircase into seclusion. Where he had gone or why, could not be fully explained to his clamoring friends. He only wrote, "I am about the King's business."

Did Newton ever accomplish a nobler work of hand or brain than this same business of the King? Did the Recording Angel ever write for him a fairer, better record than during those two weary, anxious years of the recoinage? Does his monument, in Westminster Abbey, bear any more significant marks of his great fame than those figures of the money coiners placed beside the representatives of the sciences?

Newton believed that a man who accepts public work should do it well, regardless of any sacrifice of his time, taste, or even comfort. Perhaps it is an old-fashioned doctrine, but there have been men in every age who have entertained it. One was called the the Father of his Country. Another mentions the martyr of our century.

When the burden of recoinage was passed, there came to Newton promotion in office. A fine income and leisure for study. No man living could have filled his place as a public servant, but, as is the case with every public servant, there were not wanting those—among them the poet Pope—eager to accuse him of incompetency. Inside the mint, however, there was neither officer nor clerk who was not spurred on to greater diligence and better service by the example of the chief.

So it is often with men who are self-forgetful, but thoughtful for the King. Though they deny themselves of place and power, money and influence, for the sake of duty to God and men, by and by they gain their sure reward. The place of true usefulness at length opens, and like as Newton, when his two years had expired he came to a promotion and leisure which allowed him to prosecute his philosophical work as he never could have done, but for his faithful service in the Mint of London Tower.

The King's business! How many are ready to give it the first place? How many who claim to be servants of Christ are willing to make every other issue secondary, and His business to occupy the first place? Terms often change; principles never. Our own lamented Agassiz, when offered a large sum of money to enter the lecture field replied, "I have no time to make money." Had he consented, it might have been generations before the chapters he opened could have been closed.

But fidelity and integrity in the King's business, though it must be performed most unselfishly cannot fail of its reward. "Peter said, Behold, Master we have forsaken all, and followed thee; what shall we have therefor? And Jesus said unto them, Verily I say unto you; every one that hath forsaken homes, or brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, of lands, for my name's sake, shall receive an hundred fold in this life, and eternal life in that which is to come."—*Am. Trial of Mr. Tongue.

Mr. Tongue was charged with being "an unruly evil, full of deadly poison," and in proof of the charge, the law book was produced, and a passage was cited from James iii. 8. The defendant replied that if it were not for Mr. Heart, who lived a little way below him, he should be as innocent as his neighbors, Mr. Nose, and the Messrs. Eyes, and in support of his position, he cited a passage from the same law book, Matt. xv. 18. The court decided that the defense was a sound one, and that nothing really good could be expected from Mr. Tongue, until a radical change should take place in his neighbor Heart.—Selected.

Purpose in Nature.

The scientists of a certain school tell us that we can find in nature itself no demonstrative evidence of a Creator. There is a sense in which this may be true.

A skilful musician sits down before an organ, and draws from it melodies and harmonies that delight every hearing ear within reach of the sweet sounds. But a man deaf from his birth is present, and to him all is silence and mystery. To him the motions of the performer are without meaning; and the apparent pleasure of those around him is without cause. Being of a scientific turn of mind, he waits till the others are gone, and then proceeds to investigate the subject. He opens the case and sees a complicated apparatus, but detects nothing that solves the mystery. The secret must lie deeper, and he is determined to find it. He procures a saw and an ax and begins the work. He strikes right and left till the instrument is laid in ruins, and he is sure that no secret cell remains to hide the marvelous something which he is seeking. He cuts open the bellows and finds nothing. He peeps into the pipes large and small, wood and metal, and finds nothing. He gets a microscope, and makes a minute examination of each fragment, and still finds nothing. He gathers up the fragments takes them into his laboratory, and subjects them to chemical analysis. He tests the wood, the iron screws, the ivory keys, the metal of the pipes, the leather of the bellows. Nothing escapes his search, and yet he finds no clue to the mystery. Then he gravely announces his conclusion, that there is no scientific evidence of the existence of sounds of any kind. To him there is none. He may know how to write the word which conveys the idea to others, but to him, it has no meaning. Music is something which lies wholly outside of his circle of thought and experience; his methods of investigation cannot reach it; and he falls into settled unbelief in regard to the whole matter.

Thus men may examine the visible creation, and tell us they see nothing of God. The geologist hammers the rocks, and discovers nothing of the supernatural. The chemist dissolves and analyzes, and finds no trace of a Creator. The astronomer searches the heavens with his telescope, night after night, and sees suns and systems, and constellations, but neither angel nor spirit. All this is true. The world by science knows not God. Unless a man adopts the right method of investigation, he gets no true knowledge on any subject of inquiry. Chemical analysis throws no light on the decline and fall of the Roman empire. Conic sections give us no information in regard to the immortality of the soul. Kepler's laws of the solar system demonstrated nothing in regard to the character of Julius Caesar. Physical law teaches little of spiritual things.—The Methodist.

How to Entertain.

Most visitors are best entertained when permitted to do about as they please. To sit up primly and be obliged to talk when one feels like being silent is a bore, and makes visiting the hardest kind of work. The first thing for a host or hostess to do is, if possible, to make their guests feel perfectly easy and at home, to permit them to lounge in the library, walk in the garden, sit under the trees, and be talkative or silent as the humor takes them. An appreciative guest enjoys looking over the family pictures, ranging through the book-shelves, and becoming acquainted with the elements of happiness in the household where he is for the time domesticated; then he knows how to adapt himself to the family he is in, and make his stay a pleasure to them no less than to himself. If one merely goes to spend all day with a friend, even then a lull in conversation, a nap after dinner of a hot day, a quiet looking over the newspaper is a great relief. Everybody knows, who has tried it, how fatiguing it is to talk six or seven hours without intermission, or to be talked to that length of time. Those who understand the art of entertaining, break up the time pleasantly with a ride, or a boat row, or a ramble, so as to vary the mental activity of their guests. And those who understand visiting without weariness contrive little ways of relief when they find their minds growing dull. When the sole object of visiting is enjoyment, the more all concerned can simply consult their own and each other's inclinations and simply seek to "have a good time," the more certainly will the end desired be obtained. Perfect simplicity of manner, unaffected sincerity of expression, and a genuine desire on the part of host and guest to make the time pass pleasantly, are sure to give to both the happiness they seek in each other's society; or perhaps to satisfy them that they must find elsewhere what they fail to find in each other. All people are not congenial; we have sympathies and antipathies for which we cannot be held responsible, and if we find the latter called out, courtesy will dictate their concealment, and good sense will prevent their being awakened unnecessarily. There should always be exercised great discrimination on the part of the host in bringing together those who will be likely to find mutual pleasure and profit in each other's society. To avoid errors of this sort a friend of ours fixes the number of visitors she can receive at one time, and the date of their coming and going; in this way making sure that her guests are entirely homogeneous, and thus ensuring their harmony, while herself enjoying to the utmost the administration of her hospitalities.

N. Y. Tribune.

John Quincy Adams Taking the Responsibility.

On the 2d of December, 1839, at the opening of the twenty-sixth Congress, the clerk began to call the roll, according to the custom. When he came to New Jersey, he stated that five seats of the members of that State were contested, and that, not feeling himself authorized to decide the question, he should pass over those names, and proceed with the call. A violent debate arose. It was declared by one party that it was a preconcerted plan to exclude these five members from voting in the organization of the House, and by the other that these members had no right to seats. Three days were spent in the most bitter controversy, and the close of the scene was described as follows, by an eye-witness:

"Mr. Adams, from the opening of this confusion and anarchy, had maintained a profound silence. He appeared to be engaged the most of the time in writing. To a common observer, he seemed to be reckless of anything around him. But nothing, not the slightest incident escaped him.

"The fourth day of the struggle had now commenced. Mr. Hugh A. Garland, the clerk, was directed to call the roll again. He commenced with Maine, as usual in those days, and was proceeding with Massachusetts. I turned and saw that Mr. Adams was ready to get the floor at the earliest moment possible. His eye was riveted on the clerk; his hands clasped the front edge of his desk, where he always placed them to assist him in rising. He looked, in the language of Otway, like a 'fowler waiting for his prey.' 'New Jersey' ejaculated Mr. H. A. Garland, and Mr. Adams immediately sprang to the floor. 'I rise to interrupt the clerk,' was his first exclamation. 'Silence! silence!' resounded through the hall. 'Hear him! Hear what he has to say! Hear John Quincy Adams!' was vociferated on all sides.

"In an instant the most profound stillness reigned throughout the hall. You might have heard a leaf of paper fall in any part of it, and every eye was riveted on the venerable Nestor of Massachusetts—to purest of statesmen, and noblest of men! He paused for a moment, and having given Mr. Garland a withering look, he proceeded to address the multitude.

"'It was not my intention,' said he, 'to take any part in these extraordinary proceedings. I had hoped this House would succeed in organizing itself; that a speaker and clerk would be elected, and that the ordinary business of legislation would be progressed in. This is not the time or place to discuss the merits of conflicting claimants from New Jersey. That subject belongs to the House of Representatives, which, by the constitution, is made the ultimate arbiter of the qualifications of its members. But, what a spectacle we here present! We degrade and disgrace our constituents and the country. We do not and cannot organize, and why? Because the clerk of this House—the mere clerk, whom we employ, and whose existence depends upon our will—usurps the throne, and sets us, the representatives, the vicegerents of the whole American people at defiance, and holds us in contempt. And what—this clerk of yours? Is he to suspend, by his mere negative, the functions of government, and put an end to this Congress? He refuses to call the roll! It is in your power to compel him to call it, if he will not do it voluntarily.' (Here he was interrupted by a member who said that he was authorized to say that compulsion could not reach the clerk, who had avowed that he would resign rather than call the State of New Jersey.) 'Well, sir, let him resign,' continued Mr. Adams, 'and we may possibly discover some way by which we can get along without the aid of his all-powerful talent, learning and genius! If we cannot organize in any other way—if this clerk of yours will not consent to our discharging the trust confided to us by our constituents—then let us imitate the example of the Virginian House of Burgesses, which, when the colonial governor, Dinwiddie, ordered it to disperse, refused to obey the imperious and insulting mandate, and, like men—'

"The multitude could not contain or repress their enthusiasm any longer, but saluted the eloquent and indignant speaker, and interrupted him with loud and deafening cheers, which seemed to shake the Capitol to its center. The turmoil, the darkness, the very 'chaos of anarchy,' which had for three days pervaded the American Congress, was dispelled by the magic, the talismanic eloquence of a single man, and once more the wheels of government and legislation were put in motion.

"Having, by his powerful appeal, brought the yet unorganized assembly to a perception of its hazardous position, he submitted a motion requiring the acting clerk to call the roll. Mr. Adams was interrupted by a burst of voices demanding, 'Who will put the question? How shall the question be put?' The voice of Mr. Adams was heard above the tumult, 'I intend to put the question myself.' That word brought order out of chaos. There was the master-spirit. As soon as the multitude had recovered itself, Mr. Richard Barnwell Rhett, of South Carolina, leaped upon one of the desks, waved his hand, and exclaimed, 'I move that the Hon. John Quincy Adams take the chair of the speaker of the House, and officiate as the presiding officer till the House be organized by the election of its constitutional officers. As many as are agreed to this will say aye, those'—he had not opportunity to complete the sentence—'Those who are not agreed will say no!' for one universal, deafening, thundering aye responded to the nomination. Hereupon it was moved and ordered that Louis Williams, of North Carolina, and Richard Barnwell Rhett conduct John Quincy Adams to the chair. Upon this, Henry A. Wise said to Mr. Adams, 'Sir, I regard it as the proudest part of your life; and if, when you shall be gathered to your fathers, I were asked to select the words which, in my judgment, are best calculated to give at once the character of the man, I would inscribe upon the tomb the sentence, 'I will put the question myself!''"—Selected.

Sowing and Reaping.

What we sow
Will surely grow,
Though the harvest may be slow!
It may be
We shall see
Fruitage in eternity,
For some deed
Dropped like seed,
For a soul that was in need!

Let us strive,
While we live,
Worthy things to do and give Striving still
With good will
Empty granaries to fill;
For what we sow
Will surely grow,
Though the harvest may be slow!

Good Advice to Boys.

Rev. C. H. Spurgeon gives boys the following bit of good advice:—"Do not imagine that you cannot now be Christians; the gifts of our heavenly Father's love are not reserved for a certain age; boys may be saved, boys may be workers for Jesus, boys may bring great glory to God. Hence it is that just now, at this particular turning-point in your lives, we are anxious to see you resolute for the right way. May the Holy Spirit incline you to resolve to be the Lord's! Others may despise your conscientious choice, and make mirth of your holy carefulness, but what matters it? Some of us have been laughed at for these twenty years, and are none the worse for it; we have had all manner of evil spoken falsely of us for Christ's name's sake. But we are all the happier for it. O boys, if you are renewed in heart, and become for life and death the Redeemer's, none can really harm you; all must be right with him who is right with God. Hold on, then, to the Sabbath-school, and when you cease to be taught, become teachers. Hold on by the Sabbath services and all the ordinances of the house of the Lord, and say, like Ruth to Naomi, 'Thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God.'"

Don't Throw Stones.

Boys don't throw stones. I have looked at it from every side, and it is a dangerous business. Nine times out of ten the spirit that whispers to boys who throw stones, and prompts them to do it, is an idle, mischievous, careless, wicked spirit. It says every time it sees a stone in Charlie's path, without giving him time to think what may come of it, "Now, just see how far, or how straight, or how high you can throw it." Away it goes, and "Oh! just my luck!" a window is broken.

I was once in a beautiful new church. The sexton came down from the gallery shaking his head and gritting his teeth. He had a little round stone in his hand. "I wish I had the boy who threw that," said he, "I'd jerk him out of his boots." I could scarcely blame him for being so rough, as he pointed up to one of the handsome windows that had a hole in it where the stone came through. I wondered just how the boy who threw it felt when he heard it crash. I have no doubt that he looked first this way and then that, then ran like a coward.

I pity the boy that finds any amusement in throwing stones at birds or their nests, or among a herd of cows or flock of geese. It's every time the old story over again of the frogs who said to the boys, "That may be fun to you, but it's death to us."

But I've known something worse to come of throwing stones than all this. A bright-eyed little boy was playing on the side-walk one day; a larger boy wanted one of his playthings, and was refused. Quick as a flash of light came the thought, "I'll pay you for that!" and a stone flying from the large boy's hand struck the little fellow between the shoulders. If the boy who threw that stone could have seen one of the hours of suffering that followed that revengeful act, I am sure he would never be very happy again. It was not only one hour of suffering, but four long years and then death.—S. S. Advocate.

The Good-Natured Bear.

In the valley of Tajarrau, in Siberia, two children, one four and the other six years old, rambled away from their friends who were hay-making. They had gone from one thicket to another, gathering fruit, laughing, and enjoying the fun. At last they came near to a bear lying on the grass, and without the slightest fear went up to him. He looked at them steadily without moving. At length they began playing with him, and mounted on his back, which he submitted to with perfect good humor. In short, both seemed inclined to be pleased with each other; indeed, the children were delighted with their new playfellow.

The parents missing the truants became alarmed, and followed on their track. They were not long in searching the spot, when to their dismay, they beheld one child sitting on the bear's back and the other feeding him with fruit! They called quickly, when the youngsters ran to their friends, and Bruin, apparently not liking the interruption, went into the forest.—Atkinson's Siberia.

Facts in Natural History.

Frogs, toads and serpents never take any food but that which they are satisfied is alive.

When a bee, wasp or hornet stings, it is nearly always at the expense of its life.

Serpents are so tenacious of life that they will live for six months and longer without food.

Turtles dig holes in the sea-shore and bury their eggs, covering them up to be hatched by the sun.

Lobsters are very pugnacious, and fight severe battles. If they lose a claw another grows out.

A single codfish produces more than a million eggs in a season.

A whale suckles its young, and is therefore not a fish! The mother's affection is remarkable.

Toads become torpid in winter, and hide themselves, taking no food for five or six months.

SERMON ON MASONRY.

BY REV. JAMES WILLIAMS.

Presiding Elder of Dakota District, Northwest Iowa Conference.

A SECEDING MASTER MASON.

Delivered in the M. E. church, at Elk Point, D. T., Aug. 11 1875.

[Concluded.]

Before I close I desire to notice briefly the testimony of some of America's noble sons on the subject of Masonry.

President Finney said, "God demands and the world has a right to expect, that the church will take due action and bear a truthful testimony in respect to this institution. She cannot now innocently hold her peace. The light has come. Fidelity to God and to the souls of men requires that the church, which is the light of the world, should speak out and should take such action as will plainly reveal her views of the compatibility or incompatibility of Freemasonry with the Christian religion."

Rev. Nathaniel Colver, D. D., in a letter dated June 15, 1867, states, that when taking the obligation in the Royal Arch degree, when he came to the words "Murder and treason not excepted," he rose from his knees, and in the face of threats of his life he left the lodge to return to it no more.

George Washington in a letter dated Sept. 25, 1788, speaks of his illness, "which allows me to add little more than thanks for your kind wishes and favorable sentiments except to correct an error you have run into of my presiding over the English lodges in this country. The fact is, I preside over none; nor have I been in one more than once or twice within the last thirty years."

President James Madison said, "I never was a Mason, and no one perhaps could be more a stranger to the principles, rites and fruits of the institution. From the number and character of those who now support the charges against Masonry, I cannot doubt that it is at least susceptible of abuses outweighing any advantages promised by its patrons."

Daniel Webster said in a letter dated Boston, November 20, 1835, "I have no hesitation in saying that however unobjectionable may have been the original objects of the institution, or however pure may be the motives and purposes of the individual members, and notwithstanding the many great and good men who have from time to time belonged to the order, yet, nevertheless, it is an institution which in my judgment is essentially wrong in the principle of its formation, that from its very nature it is liable to great abuses; that among the obligations which are found to be imposed upon its members there are such as are entirely incompatible with the duty of good citizens, and that all secret associations, the members of which take upon themselves extraordinary obligations to one another, and are bound together by secret oaths, are naturally sources of jealousy and just alarm to others, are especially unfavorable to harmony and mutual confidence among men living together under popular institutions, and are dangerons to the general cause of civil liberty and good government. Under the influence of this conviction it is my opinion that the future administration of all such oaths and the formation of all such obligations should be prohibited by law."

Governor John Hancoek said, "I am opposed to all secret societies."

President John Q. Adams said, "Secrets written in blood should be revealed; a tree that bears such fruit should be hewn down. No butcher would mutilate the carcass of a bullock or a swine, as the Masonic candidate swears consent to the mutilation of his own, for the breaking of an absurd and senseless secret. It is an oath of which a common cannibal would be ashamed."

I would like to have developed concerning Masonry its influence on governments and courts, the blasphemous character of its titles, and its deception concerning its antiquity, but my time has not permitted. And now in conclusion I acknowledge the charge of "small calibre," and "narrow mind," and I hope if I have missed the way of truth some brother of larger "calibre" and broader "mind" will restore me to the path of right, in love, by showing where my error lies. I have no personal enmity against any Mason. I number among them some I hold dear, and I only long to see you freed from this foul deceptive system, and brought to the liberty of the sons of God and joined to the great brotherhood in Christ, that is wide enough in its provisions to take into its membership even the poor, the lame, the blind, the deaf, women and all; and as you proceed to erect a spiritual building may it be founded on the "only name given under heaven among men whereby we must be saved."

BY EDMOND RONAYNE,

Late Past Master of Keystone Lodge No. 639, Chicago, Ill.

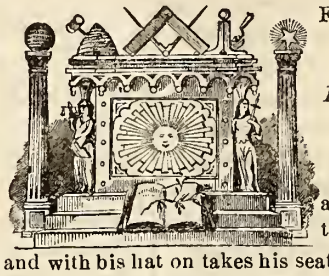
Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1875.
BY EDMUND RONAYNE.
In the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington, D. C.

In order to organize a lodge of Freemasons it is necessary that at least eight well-known brethren should petition the Grand Master of the State in which they reside, and which petition must be recommended by the nearest lodge to the place where they intend to locate, or if in a city it must have the endorsement of the three nearest lodges. The petition should also set forth the name of the brother nominated for Worshipful Master of the proposed lodge who must always be a Warden, Past Warden, or Past Master of some regular lodge and at the time of organization in good standing in the lodge from which he hails, also a plot or description of the room in which the new lodge is to meet. They must also forward to the Grand Master the sum of $100 which is in full of all expenses, charter included, should the Grand Lodge see fit to grant one. Having complied with all the requirements, a dispensation is granted and the District Deputy Grand Master of the district in which they are located "constitutes" the new lodge by installing their officers "in due and ancient form." Lodges holding and "working" under a dispensation are termed "Lodges U. D.," and those having a charter are called "Chartered Lodges." The meetings of a Masonic-lodge usually termed "Communications" are generally held in the upper story of a building and the lodge-room should be fitted up at least with two ante-rooms situated near the entrance to the hall, one for the "preparation room" and the other for the "ante-room" proper. The lodge-room itself ought to be situated due East and West, and is internally arranged as seen on page—. Every chartered lodge is governed by a code of by-laws which each member is sworn to "conform to and obey," as may be seen from Master Mason's obligation, page and hence if Masonic obligations have the least binding force the slightest deviation from the subscribed rule constitutes perjury and subjects the offender or offenders to expulsion or a violent death.



FIRST OR ENTERED APPRENTICE DEGREE.

OPENING CEREMONIES.

Both points of the compass below the square.

A sufficient number of the brethren (eight at least) being assembled the Worshipful Master puts on his apron and jewel and with his hat on takes his seat in the East; the Senior Warden in the West; the Junior Warden in the South and the other officers in their respective places as will be seen on page. The following dialogue then takes place, and is the only correct mode of opening a lodge of Masons in any State in the Union.

The Worshipful Master (giving one rap with his gavel) says: "Brother Junior Deacon, you will see that the tyler is at his post and close the door."

Junior Deacon:—(putting his head outside the door to see if the tyler is in the ante-room) closes the door and answers; "The tyler is at his post, Worshipful."

Worshipful Master:—(gives one rap) Brother Senior Warden.

Senior Warden:—Worshipful Master.

Worshipful Master:—Are you satisfied that all present are Masons?

Senior Warden:—I am so satisfied, Worshipful; or, All present are Masons, Worshipful.

Should there be any strangers or any brethren present whom he Senior Warden does not recognize as Masons he answers the Worshipful Master by saying, "I shall ascertain by my proper officers and report;" and immediately turning to the Junior Deacon, says: "Brother Junior Deacon proceed to satisfy yourself that all present are Masons."

The Junior Deacon then taking his rod proceeds around the lodge-room, stopping in front of every brother whom he does not recognize and that brother thus challenged if not vouched for by some one present should retire into the ante-room to await if he sees fit the action of an examining committee. The Junior Deacon in this manner having made the entire circuit of the lodge, returns in front of the Senior Warden's station and reports to that officer: "All present are Masons," and then resumes his former place in the lodge. The Senior Warden then reports as above explained: "All present are Masons, Worshipful."

Worshipful Master:—Brother Senior Warden, as a further evidence you will call the brethren to order as Entered Apprentice Masons, reserving yourself for the last.

Senior Warden:—(giving three raps) Brethren, come to order as Entered Apprentice Masons. (All the members rise to their feet and make the "due-guard" of an Entered Apprentice); (see page——) after which the Senior Warden makes the same sign and reports:

Senior Warden:—In order, Worshipful.

The Worshipful Master gives one rap and the lodge is seated.

The foregoing ceremony is by Masons technically called "purging the lodge," and must on no account be dispensed with or omitted. The work of opening the lodge is then proceeded with as follows:

Worshipful Master: (gives one rap) Brother Junior Deacon.

Junior Deason:—Worshipful Master.

Worshipful Master:—What is the first great care of Masons when convened?

Junior Deacon:—To see that the lodge is duly tyled.

Worshipful Master:—Perform that duty and inform the tyler that I am about to open Keystone Lodge, No. 639; direct him to take due notice and tyler accordingly.

The Junior Deacon opens the door without knocking, puts out his head and whispers to the tyler, who is standing outside the door that the lodge is about to be opened on the first degree. He then closes the door and gives three distinct knocks which are answered by the tyler in like manner. The Junior Deacon then gives one more knock which is answered by one knock by the tyler when the Junior Deacon faces toward the East and reports as follows:

Junior Deacon:—The lodge is duly tyled, Worshipful.

Worshipful Master:—How tyled, Bro. Junior Deacon?

Junior Deacon:—By a Master Mason armed with the proper implement of his office.

Worshipful Master:—The tyler's station?

Junior Deacon:—Outside the inner door with a drawn sword in his hand.

Worshipful Master:—His duty there?

—The English Wesleyans are discussing the expediency of employing evangelists to travel through England, after the manner of John Wesley and his first associates.

—At the late session of the General Synod of the (German) Reformed church, it was determined to establish a Christian mission in a foreign land. The Board of Foreign missions has accordingly met, and has appointed a special committee to procure information. The Board will meet again in the city of Lancaster, Pa., on the 3d of November next.

—The eighteenth annual meeting of the Fulton-street prayer-meeting took place on Thursday, September 23, 1875, at twelve o'clock, noon, in the Reformed church, corner Fourth street and Lafayette place, between Broadway and Bowery. The services continued two hours. This is the first observance of the kind in that church. The "Old North" being demolished, it is the most eligible building to be had.

—The United Presbyterian Theological Hall Edinburgh, was opened on the 5th ult., when Dr. Cairns delivered a powerful address on the "Christian Ministry." He considered the Christian ministry in its Divine appointment as a permanent ordinance, and spoke of its adaptation to the wants of all times. The recent revival he said, had visibly altered the aspect of the present, and brightened the horizon of the future. It was not going too far to say that, on the whole, this movement had brought spiritual religion to the front in a way without example in our times; had not only carried the seeds of saving truth into many hearts before without interest in it, but quickened and intensified the confidence of the living church, in all its sections, in the power of the Gospel and the efficacy of prayer. His own conviction of the soundness and solidity of the movement had only been deepened by growing experience, and he blessed God that many of their ministers, preachers and students had taken an earnest and effectual share in it.

—The Missouri Conference of the United Brethren church met Aug. 2d, at Avon, Mo., Bishop Glassbrenner presiding. The following is among the resolutions passed: "That we rejoice in the revival throughout our country of the anti-secrecy reform, and the proportions, form, and strength the work has assumed. We believe that this reform is a needed one, and one in the direct interest of a pure Christianity, and that it therefore merits and should receive the approval and hearty co-operation of all the churches. And now, as one means by which our co-operation with this movement may be made effective, we counsel our ministers in this conference to observe, in the strictest conformity, the letter and the spirit of our church law on secrecy." The Kansas conference of the same church has also spoken in favor of maintaining their rule.

—The General Assembly of the United Presbyterian church appropriated as follows at its last sitting: for Foreign Missions, $66,000; Home, $42,465; Freedmen, $15,000; Church Extension, $30,000; Education and Publication, $5,000 each.

—The Newark (N. J.) Presbytery has adopted a resolution of protest against the running of Sunday excursion trains between New York and Philadelphia over the Pennsylvania R. R.

—Dr. Speer, Secretary of the Presbyterian Board of Education has resigned that position to return to the missionary work in China, in which he was engaged from 1846 to 1857.

—The lodge-affiliating branches of the Lutheran church in Ohio are greatly stirred about the Lima affair, which has evidently brought to light much that is not easy-lying on the conscience. The controversy is cried down in favor of false peace. But the wisdom from above "first pure then peaceable" is firmly fixed in some steadfast hearts, and must conquer through grace.

News of the Week.

The City.

The last commission appointed by Secretary Bristow to examine the condition of the new Custom-House have reported. The report agrees substantially with the Chicago architects in declaring the stone generally good and that the foundations can be made secure without taking down the walls. Bad stone should be removed and a more honest selection of material made. The weight of the building is also recommended to be reduced. Sec'y Bristow has acted on this report without waiting for Congress and work will recommence without delay.——The city officials had their weekly spree to the Lemont stone quarries last week, running up a bill for liquor and edibles for the public treasury. The Citizens Association has been called on to put a stop to this disgrace by enjoining the payment of these bills.——This Association has enjoined the purchase of an imperfect set of abstracts of title to real estate by the county thus preventing a fraud which would have cost nearly $50,000.——Geo. W. Gage, a prominent local politician, and many years hotel proprietor in the Tremont, Sherman and Grand Pacific, died last week.——The Fourth National Bank suspended on Saturday.

General.

The resignation of the Secretary of the Interior, Columbus Delano, has at last become a fact. His resignation was dated July 1st, and Pres. Grant's acceptance Sept. 22 1875.——Ex-Senator Carl Schurz has returned from Europe to take part in the political campaign in Ohio. His first speech for the Republicans was made in Cincinnati Monday night.——A distressing accident occurred at Marshall, Michigan, Thursday morning. The Hernden House was entirely destroyed by fire, four lives were lost in the building. Several persons were severely injured by jumping from the windows. The loss of life was owing to the fact that the fire began in the office and the smoke and flames thus cut off the only means of exit.——The Cincinnati express was collided with the Bunton accommodation on the Pennsylvania railroad, ten miles from Pittsburgh Thursday morning, breaking both engines and tenders. Fortunately, there was not any person hurt. The engineers and firemen escaped by jumping off their engines. Pres. Grant and party were on the second section of the express, but so far to the rear as to escape the accident further than to suffer delay.——A wretch by the name of Shell was lynched at Bellfontaine, O., on the 24th. He had violated and then horribly killed a young daughter of a neighbor.——Charles Francis Adams is a leading candidate for the Republican nomination for Governor of Massachusetts.

Foreign.

A special dispatch to the Daily Telegraph from Vienna says that Servia and Montenegro have notified the powers of their determination to remain neutral on the troubles between Turkey and the northwestern provinces.——The Bonapartists of France, although in a hopeless minority at present, have not abandoned the idea of an ultimate restoration of the Napoleonic dynasty. At the recent conference in Switzerland, at the chateau of Eugenie, a policy was matured for the party. The ex-Empress resigns her regency, being, it is said, unpopular by reason of her Ultramontane proclivities, leaving the Prince Imperial as the sole head of the movement.

There is seldom a line of glory written upon the earth's face but a line of suffering runs parallel withit; and they that read the lustrous syllables of the one, and stop not to decipher the spotted and worn inscription of the other, get the lesser half of the lesson earth has to give.

Correspondence.

The Wine Remedy.

Dr Holland, editor of the Scribner wrote the following when in Switzerland:

"A large amount of land in this Canton of Vaud is surrendered to the cultivation of the grape; and as the wine of Switzerland is never heard of out of Switzerland, it is plain that it is all drank here. Indeed, I have been assured that the wine produced in this Canton is drank mainly in the Canton itself. Now, from near Villevenue to Morges, a distance of twenty-five miles, as I guess, somewhat at random, the entire lake-side, averaging half a mile in width, is a vineyard. One can say almost with literal truth, that throughout the entire territory I described to you, no crop is grown but grapes. For the last three weeks the whole working population, men and women, have been in these vineyards gathering the crop The teams are employed in transporting the immensely large casks of new wine from the presses to the cellars of their owners, to the vaults of the dealers who have purchased it, and to the railroad depot for transportation to the warehouses of speculators in other quarters. There is an endeavor on the part of these people to throw a romantic interest around their vintage. The casks go through the streets with gay bouquets of flowers in their bungholes; but, from what I have seen of the effect of wine here, the show is all a sorry farce. There is no question that the people would be better, healthier, happier, and much more prosperous if there were not a vineyard in the Canton. We have all been told in America, and I fully believed it, that if a people could be supplied with a cheap wine they would not get drunk—that the natural desire for some sort of stimulant would be gratified in a way that would be not only harmless to morals, but conducive to health I am thoroughly undeceived. The people drink their cheap white wine here to drunkenness. A boozier set than hang around the multitudinous cafes here, it would be hard to find in any American city. The grand difference in the drunkenness of an American and Swiss city is found in the fact that the man who has wine in him is good-natured, and the man who is equally charged with whisky is a demon. There is no murdering, no fighting, no wrangling. The excitement is worked off in singing, shouting, and all sorts of insane jabber. Then the steady old white wine topers come into blossom. If you can imagine a cauliflower of the color of the ordinary red cabbage, you can achieve a very adequate conception of faces that are not uncommon in all this wine-growing region. So this question is settled in my mind. Cheap wine is not the cure of intemperance. The people here are just as intemperate as they are in America, and, what is more, there is no public sentiment that checks intemperance in the least. The wine is fed freely to children, and by all classes is regarded as a perfectly legitimate drink. I, with many others, have looked with hope to find a remedy for intemperance in a cheap and comparatively harmless wine; but, for one, I can look in this direction hopefully no longer. I firmly believe that the wines of Switzerland are of no use except to keep out whisky, and that the advantages of the wine over the whisky are not very obvious. It is the testimony of the best men in Switzerland—those who have the highest good of the people at heart—that the increased growth of the grape has been steadily and correspondingly attended by the growth of drunkenness. They lament the planting of a new vineyard as we, at home, regret the opening of a new grog-shop. They expect no good of it to anybody. They know, and deeply feel, that the whole wine-producing enterprise is charged with degradation for their country."

Home and Health Hints.

Foolish Habits.

Dr. Hall enumerates several practices of the careless public, which are sometimes as dangerous as they are foolish:—Walking along the streets with the point of an umbrella sticking out beyond, under the arm or over the shoulder. By suddenly stopping to speak to a friend, a person walking in the rear had his brain penetrated through the eye in one of our streets and died in a few days. To carry a long pencil in vest or outside coat pocket. Not long since a clerk fell, and his long cedar pencil so pierced an important artery that it had to be cut down from the top of the shoulder to prevent his bleeding to death, with a three months' illness. To take exercise, or walk for the health when every step is a drag, and instinct urges a repose. To drink a glass of cold water on getting up in the morning without any feeling of thirst, under the impression of the health-giving nature of its washing out qualities. To sit down at a table and force yourself to eat, when there is not only no appetite, but a decided aversion to food. To take a glass of soda on a summer day, under the belief that it is safer and better than a glass of water. To persuade yourself that you are destroying one unpleasant odor by introducing a stronger one; that is, to sweeten your unwashed garments and person by enveloping yourself in the fumes of musk, eau de Cologne, or rose water; the best perfume being a clean skin and well washed clothing.

Winter Rooms.

In a short time the glories of October will be past, and chill November compel us to seek much of our enjoyment within doors. If we can find there the greenery of summer and the splendor of autumn, robbed indeed of their dreariness will be the clouded winter days. With just a little foresight and a few hours of pleasant toil this is within the reach of almost every family. Scarcely any house but has at least one sunny southern room; this should be the family room. Here should be gathered the books, the pictures, the pleasant furniture, and everything that will make the apartment attractive to visitors and enjoyable to its occupants.

Window gardening has become well nigh universal, and those who have once tasted its delights will be slow to relinquish them. The geraniums, and fuchsias, and heliotropes transferred from their beds in the open air to the sunny window shelf, will be green for us all winter. Hyacinth bulbs will send up their bright lances and disclose odorous spikes of flowers, filling the room with beauty and fragrance. The ivy, the maurandia, moneywert, and Wandering Jew ask only a little earth or a cup of water to give us delicate tracery of foliage the whole season If we but hide a slip of each in a bottle of water and suspend it on the back of our picture frames, presently the green leaves will peep out and twine themselves lovingly around the frame.

Hanging baskets of wire covered with gaily tinted tissue paper, or with bits of gray or brown moss, or with worsted ravelings of warm rich hue, may hold tin cans, otherwise useless, from which with only water and a sweet potato in them abundance of trailing vines will twine themselves whither a thread shall lead them.

Of ornaments made from autumn leaves there is no end. Harps, anchors, crosses cut from pasteboard and covered with leaves of crimson and russet, and brown and gold hanging on the walls, will perpetuate the memory and the beauty of this lovely October. Cornices may be made of them; they may be so tastefully arranged upon and glued to the window panes as to give the effect in the room of stained glass, or arranged in bouquets and placed in vases on brackets.

Time spent in making home thus attractive is most wisely invested. Rough manners, ill-temper, carelessness, with the ills that usually follow in their train, cannot find congenial resting-place in an apartment which refinement and taste have made their own. Boys will not leave a home thus beautified by the hand of a loving mother or sister, and filled with the charm of their gracious and sunny presence for the gilded saloons where pleasure allures but to destroy. There cannot be for the young or the old a stronger safeguard against vice than a cosy, happy, virtuous and beautiful home.—N. Y. Tribune.

Health Nevers.

Never eat hurriedly, because it causes indigestion.

Never speak in a hurry, because it is ominous of instability.

Never think on going to bed, because it makes wakefulness.

Never eat between meals, because it produces irritation.

Never dine in excitement, because the blood is called to the brain which ought to aid digestion.

Never swallow food without thorough chewing, because it brings on dyspepsia.

Never eat when you do not want it, because when you shall want you cannot eat.

Never sleep with your mouth open, because the air breathed with carbonic acid disturbs the mucous membranes.

Never go to rest without washing the hands and face, because more dirt accumulates on the skin in the day than night, and is re-absorbed during the night.

Farm and Garden.

An Improved Corn Crib.

The American Agriculturalist says: The waste caused by vermine in the corn crib is frequently very serious. Rats are the especial enemy of the farmer in this respect, and any means whereby their ravages will be prevented will be productive of a great saving. The burrowing rat, which makes its nest beneath the buildings or rubbish piles, does the most mischief in the corn crib, and unless the crib is so made that there are no hiding places about it, it is impossible to dislodge it from its retreat. Such a corn-crib is made so that it is inaccessible to rats or mice, and there are no hiding places beneath it. It is elevated three feet above the ground, on firmly set posts. The cribs are six to eight feet wide, and of any desired length; for 4,000 bushels of corn in the ear the building should be forty feet long, with cribs eight feet wide and twelve feet high. The outside is closely boarded and battened. The floors of the cribs are made of three-inch strips, set an inch and a half apart, to admit a current of air. The space between the cribs is twelve feet wide, and is closed inside from the bottom of the cribs to the ground, forming an inside shed, which is not accessible to any farm animals or vermin. This inner shed is closed by sliding doors at each end. The cribs are boarded up inside the shed with three-inch strips placed a quarter of an inch or half an inch apart to admit air. The cribs are thus weather-proof on the outside, and by opening the slide doors free circulation of air can be obtained in fine weather. Above, the shed is floored over, forming an apartment twelve feet wide by forty feet long for storage of corn. A trap door may be made in the center of this floor to hand up corn from below. Any corn that is shelled off from the ears and falls through the floor can be picked up by poultry or pigs, and none will be wasted. If desired lean-to sheds may be built against the sides of the crib, giving valuable room for many purposes. The shed between the cribs will make an excellent store-house for impliments, and as many doors may be made in the cribs as may be desired. These should be slide doors, and loose boards should be placed across the doorways inside to prevent the corn resting upon them. The roof should be well shingled, and a door made at each end of the upper loft, which may be opened as needed for thorough ventilation.

SAVING SEED-CORN.—This is an item that a great majority of farmers pass by unnoticed. In the fall of the year they gather their corn and put it in pens—good and inferior together. When the season comes to plant corn the farmer gets upon the top of the heap and selects out those ears that are the finest-looking, and which are likely to be the soundest for seed, never knowing what kind of a stalk produced them—whether it was a thrifty and well-matured stalk, or what position the ear occupied on the stalk, either high up or low down toward the ground. In a few years he finds his corn has hybridized, and runs out, and he wants a new kind; for that which has been raised for a succession of years on the same farm or immediate neighborhood is of little value when compared with carefully selected seed. The general complaint is that it yields a smaller amount to the acre, weighs light to the bushel, and matures late. We should remember that every new stalk raised is more or less a new variety; and to have corn constantly improving great care should be taken to save the very best.

1. In gathering corn, take such ears only as are finest and from the most prolific stalks.

2. Never take from a stalk having but one ear if large and thrifty stalks can be found with two or more good sized ears. Generally but one of them is fit for seed, and that usually the second from the ground. But if the lowest is the best, take that.

3. Always take ears that are filled out to the end, and that run beyond the husk, if such can be found.

When you come to plant, before shelling, break every ear and see if the pith of the cob is dried up; for if it is not the corn is not ripe.

If farmers would pursue this course yearly their crops would be greatly increased and improved.—Exchange.

FREE TRACTS.

A Tract Fund for the Free Distributirn of Tracts

HAS BEEN SECURED AND SHOULD NEVER BE EXHAUSTED. A friend has pledged this fund a dollar for every otherdollar received, so EVERY NEW SUBSCRIPTION TO THE TRACT FUND COUNTS DOUBLE, and thus $10.00 pays for 20,000 pages of tracts.

The distribution of these tracts has already saved hundreds of yonng men from the lodge, but there is a great lack of funds to supply the constantly increasing demand for Free Tracts.

During the year endiug Jnly 1st, 1875 a little less than 150.000 pages of Cynosure Tracts were gratnitously sent out, mostly in very small lots. The present demand is fully 100.000 pages per month, but iunds are lacking to meet it.

Many of onr most earnest workers in this cause of God are poor men, who would be glad to circnlate thousands of pages of Antimasonic literature if they could have them frce.

Postage on the Cynosure.

The postage on the Cynosure must be paid at Chicago. It is twenty cents a year.

The cost of postage now depends entirely on the size and weight, and therefore some smaller papers charge but fifteen cents; and others about the size of the Cynosure charge twenty-five cents a year for postage.

If the subscription price of the Cynosure was $2.50 or $3.00 a year, the price of many religious papers containing no more reading matter, we might afford to pay the postage ourselves, but at $2.00 a year we cannot do this with our present Subscription list.

Therefore let all send the postage, 20 cents a year, 10 cents for half a year with their renewals.

The commission on one new subscription for a year will pay the postage on your own and the new subscriber's paper. We would rather have the postage paid by commissions than in any other way.

When postage is not paid we shall have to shorten the time of subscription sufficiently to pay it.

CLUBS OF TEN, FIFTEEN DOLLARS

CLUBS OF TEN, FIFTEEN DOLLARS!!

Clubs of Ten, Fifteen Dollars!!

CHICAGO, September 25th, 1875.

DEAR READERS OF THE CYNOSURE:

Although our reform has made most gratifying progress during the past year, the next year gives promise of witnessing

TEN-FOLD MORE ACTIVITY

and interest. This is because of the political nominations, the increased number of lecturers and other laborers and the prospect of having

A NATIONAL PUBLISHING HOUSE.

The clear and complete exposition of Blue-lodge Masonry by

PAST MASTER RONAYNE

commenced in this number of the Cynosure, together with his public exhibitions of lodge initiations, must also exert a powerful influence.

Many of you realize the value of

THE CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE

in promoting the Anti-masonic reform. We have again and again received letters from persons living North, South, East and West, expressing the conviction that it is the most important agent for extending and making permanent our work of reform. Some of you have labored arduously to extend the circulation of the Cynosure, and to such labors, under the blessing of God, the present publication of the paper is due. One agent in Indiana, in a locality where money was scarce, obtained nearly one hundred subscribers. At Coulterville, Illinois, our agent called upon every man in the town and obtained a respectable list of subscribers. His visits to those who did not then subscribe were not in vain, for later a lecturer was able to obtain eight subscriptions there in two hours, because thsoe to whom he applied had previously had the claims of the paper presented to them, and were half persuaded to take it before he called. From the Atlantic to the Pacific coast, now here and now there a friend has worked vigorously and with success.

From the time

THE CYNOSURE WAS ENLARGED,

April first, 1874, to November first, 1874, the receipts for the paper were less every month than the expenses; and it incurred during that time a debt of $1,398.13. From that time until February first, 1875, cash receipts were greater than expenses by $551.87, reducing the debt to $846.26. Ever since that time (February first, 1875), the expenses have exceeded the receipts and on September first, when the cash book was last balanced, the Cynosure debt $2,009.65. Do you exclaim after reading this: "The Cynosure cannot be sustained?" Listen a moment During seven months in 1874 the paper lost $234.74 more than it lost during seven months in 1875. We consider this a positive advance on last year; and knowing that many of our readers desire to do all they can for the Cynosure, we have good reason to think that this debt will soon be canceled. Pres. J. B. Walker said before the Cynosure was started, that a list of ten thousand subscribers could easily be obtained.

THE PRICE OF THE CYNOSURE

($2.20 per year, post-paid), is but two-thirds the price of many weekly papers of its size; and as you have seen, with a list of 4,000 subscribers, is published at a heavy loss. All that is needed to remedy this is a large subscription list. In order to secure this list (believing that no true friend of the cause, after reading the Cynosure for a year, would discontinue it unless obliged to), we have decided to offer the Cynosure until January first, 1876, at

A GREAT REDUCTION TO CLUBS.

To clubs of ten or more sent at one time,

WITH THE CASH,

we will send the Cynosure at $1.50 per year, post paid. Will you not take time as soon as possible to make up a

CLUB OF TEN SUBSCRIBERS?

If you have not been very successful heretofore, try again. The fruit of our efforts is sometimes found after many days.

Of course you can take Cynosure subscriptions at $2.00 each, and then when you have ten subscribers with $20.00, you can reserve $5.00 for your trouble, sending us the

TEN NAMES WITH $15.00,

or you can give the subscribers the benefit of club rates and let them have the paper at $1.50 each for a year post-paid. The agent who has canvassed for the paper most successfully during the past summer tells us that when canvassing for subscriptions in communities of Covenanters and other religious bodies who testify against secret societies, he urged them to

SUBSCRIBE FOR THE CYNOSURE

on the ground that by sustaining the organ of the National Christian Association they could best

PROMOTE THE INTERESTS OF THE REFORM

Thurlow Weed's Letter, and Other Men's Comments.

Thurlow Weed's recent letter to the N. Y. Herald has revived the old stories originated by Masons to blind and confuse the public mind in regard to the fate of Morgan. Anti-masons, and the outside public generally, never had but one theory about this, which was that he was drowned at the mouth of the Niagara river by Masons. The inventions of Masons, however, were legion; but the best thing about them was that they canceled each other, and made it unnecessary for others to refute them. According to their stories, Morgan was seen in all the four quarters of the globe at the same time, and in each of the subdivisions of the four continents. Never was their a being so ubiquitous as he. In concocting their stories, Masons were so eager to mislead and divert the public that they forgot to study consistency, and thus exposed their lying propensities to the ridicule of the world. As they were sworn to lie in order to conceal the secrets of the craft, so in lying to conceal their crime and shame in the murder of Morgan, they only acted from the force of a habit which had been formed under the discipline of the lodge and through their exacting and immoral oaths. Mr. Weed's letter has also raised a question in my own mind, but I must first refer to Samuel D. Greene's criticism on that letter, in the Cynosure of Sept. 2d. It must be ascribed to a lapse of memory in Mr. Greene that he assigns, as he evidently does, to Bates Cook a part in the Batavia inquest which belonged to another man. Mr. Weed stated, correctly, that Ebenezer Griffin, a Rochester lawyer, who had been retained to defend certain of the Masonic conspirators and kidnappers, conducted the inquest at Batavia, and that Bates Cook cross-examined Mrs. Monroe. Mr. Cook was the leading spirit in the Morgan investigations in Western New York, and chairman of the committees which sat in various localities, and he wrote the famous "Report of the Lewiston Committee," one of the most important documents of the period to which it relates, and which should form an appendix to all books issued on the subject of Masonry. He was one of the purest and best of men, and as fearless as upright. He pressed the investigation in the face of threatening and danger, his only object being to develope the facts, and it was not he, but Griffin who acted as the tool of Masons in their efforts to mislead the the public mind and conceal their foul deeds. Mr. Greene's statement does great injustice to the memory of Bates Cook, whom the people of New York afterwards elected Comptroller of the State, but of course the injustice is unintentional, growing out of some dimness or confusion of his impressions, and he will be prompt to make correction.

The point which Mr. Weed's letter raises in my mind relates to the particular night on which Morgan met his fate. He seems to put it on the night of the 19th of September, the night of the installation at Lewiston. He says that when the company at the table had become inflamed by wine and speeches, and their attention had been directed to the prisoner at Fort Niagara by a sentiment offered by the chaplain, Col. King called four men—Whitney, Howard, Chubbuck and Garside—away from the table, saying he had a commission from Gov. Clinton to execute which required their help; that the five repaired to Fort Niagara, and after a brief consultation, took Morgan into a boat, pretending they were going to remove him to a farm in Canada, rowed to the mouth of the river, and returned to the boat, "having lost one of their number." This, apparently, differs from the story as told by Giddings, also said the consultation on the night of the 14th broke up without agreement; that there were consultations on the 15th, 16th and 17th, on which night he left for Canada, and that when he returned on the 21st, he was told by Masons that Morgan finally disappeared on the 19th. If there be a discrepancy in the two accounts, I do not here undertake to reconcile them; but may be permitted to say that Mr. Weed's opportunities for getting the best information on the subject were probably second so those of no other man, and that he believes implicitly the truth of his version. He received it from John Whitney, with whom he was well acquainted. Whitney related the account to him twice, once in Albany, in 1831, in the presence of Mr. Jewett of Lewiston, and Samuel Berton of Lewiston, and again in Chicago in 1846, and Whitney's manner was such as to carry to Weed's mind the conviction that his story was the solution of the mystery. If Weed's statement is true, it stamps the so-called "Confession" of H. L. Vallance as a fabrication. Vallance confesses himself to have been one of three who threw Morgan into the Niagara river. His story is ingeniously framed of truth and fiction, and well calculated to impress one with the idea of its being true. But those who know the facts, see in it the evidence of fabrication. No such name as Vallance appears in the history of the trials and investigations. The writer refers to the keeper of the fort as against Morgan, while the keeper's wife was in sympathy with him. But the reverse was the fact. The keeper was Giddings, whose narrative shows that he would have released Morgan if he had been allowed to. His wife, however, was a sister of John Jackson of Lockport, a high Mason, who knew of the fact of Morgan's abduction and confinement.

I am constrained to give up Vallance as a fraud, until I can learn something better about him. As for the discrepancy between Weed and Giddings, it may be more apparent than real, and possibly Mr. Weed can suggest the way by which it can be harmonized.

The Romanists are not yet done making articles of faith. Perhaps since the anti-Christ at Rome has been declared infallible the business has but fairly commenced. He can impose on the consciences of his people what he pleases, and it may suit his pleasure and promote his plans to impose many things. Just now the assumption of the Virgin Mary's body into heaven is talked of as a dogma. The rector of the Jesuits at Liverpool, recently said in a sermon that it is not yet an article of faith, but plainly intimates that it soon will be, as he attributes it merely to some untoward circumstances that it was not brought before the Vatican Council. Cardinal Manning also advocates it. All that is needed yet to make the salvation of the soul dependent on believing it is the voice of him at Rome who "as God sitteth in the temple of God, showing himself that he is God." Poor papists!—Lutheran Standard.

Appearance vs. Reality.

The Bible has cautioned us against judging from appearance. Nature gives the same caution. The appearance of a star is more that of a diamond than of a world, till science comes to the rescue; and the real direction of a star differs from its apparent direction. The real place of a fish in water is as far from its apparent place that great allowance must be made for refraction. In all physical phenomena, there is apt to be a wide difference between seeming probability and actual fact. So with man; the appearance often contradicts the reality upon which it depends. There can be no doubt of this. He that judges from the appearance does not always form a just verdict. Even in the sacred Scriptures, as our Saviour's own expositions have shown, the apparent sense is not the real meaning of some passages. So with some human associations. The worst societies on earth generally appear, on the mere outside, to be the best. Men denounce the Ku-Klux of Southern Illinois in the same breath with which they praise Freemasonry—scourging the little evil while they laud the great one.

The General Disgust Which Precedes a Reformation.

Any one acquainted with the literature of the times that preceded the Reformation of the sixteenth century is familiar with the fact that ridicule of ecclesiastics was one of its leading features. Bishops, parish priests, friars and monks, figured largely in it, and almost always in a most unenviable light. Gluttony, drunkenness, laziness, tyranny, luxury, deception and especially lechery, were the leading characteristics of these characters in the ballads and novels of the period; and the leading feelings on the part of the people toward them were contempt and disgust. This state of things could not last. Institutions may survive for a while after popular favor has been withdrawn, but not long. A great reformation in one form or another was inevitable. And that reformation, be it observed, affected the church of Rome nearly as much as it did those who seceded from it. The tyranny, luxury and licentiousness of the clergy of that church were wonderfully restrained by the convulsion which took away half its people and wealth.

Just so the universal feeling in France previous to the grand convulsion of the French Revolution was contempt and hatred for the monarchy, the nobility and the church; and all three were involved in one common ruin.

These precedents, which are in accordance with the laws that govern the human mind, may be applied to our day and to this State. Our laws and judiciary have fallen into public contempt and disgust. Either the laws or the judges are at fault, or very likely both, when wealthy criminals can rob the people with impunity, and defiantly retain their stolen wealth.

If the decisions of our judges in the cases of Tweed, Lord, and Denison are in accordance with law, then our laws are radically defective, seeing that they promote rascality instead of righteousness. If these decisions are contrary to law the judges who make them should take the place in the penitentiary which the robbers whom they protect deserve. In either case it is clear that a reformation must come, and that reformation, to be complete, must include three things:

1. Modification and simplification of the laws and modes of procedure.

2. Appointment by the Executive with the consent of the Senate of all judges for life or during good behavior, as is the case now with the Supreme Court of the United States. The election of judges by the criminal classes should be rendered impossible.

3. Rendering judges ineligible for any other office.

When a judge is thus rendered independent of party politics and of executive and popular favor, his chief temptations to biased judgment are removed; and when a party—any party—in power knows that its appointments to the judiciary are for life, and that the whole party is responsible for them, it is likely to seek men of much higher grade that when judges are selected for a short term by local constituencies or even by general ticket.

There is, of course, danger of incompetent, prejudiced, or corrupt judges in any mode of appointment, but the danger is greatly diminished when the Executive, chosen by a majority of the votes of the whole State, and the Senate, representing the majority of each district, are jointly responsible for permanent appointments.

In Britain and Canada all judges are appointed for life, or during good behavior, by the Executive—that is, by the Ministry or Cabinet which possesses the confidence of both Houses of Parliament. But the Executive can only fill vacancies; it cannot create them, except by impeachment, trial and conviction—a process alike difficult and rare. Judges appointed in this way are independent both of executive and popular favor, and the consequence is such trials and sentences as that of Colonel Baker of the Guards, for assaulting a lady in a railway carriage. Both in Britain and Canada judges so appointed unseat nearly every Member of Parliament, whether Ministerial or Opposition, whose return is petitioned against, and who can be found guilty of corruption, though that corruption was merely the hiring of a voter's vehicle, or treating to a glass of liquor, by the candidate or any of his agents, even without his knowledge. Would or could judges who look forward to a re-election by their party unseat members of that party for any infraction of the law, however slight?

If we want to have just and effective laws they must be codified and simplified; that is, made clear, consistent, and intelligible. If we want upright, just and independent judges, they must be appointed for life.—N. Y. Witness.

The Atonement Made of None Effect.

BY WILLIAM FENTON.

Behold and see on Mount Calvary! Was it a pious fraud? Was it a solemn farce? Was there darkness at noon for three hours? Did the rocks rend? Were the graves opened? Did the bodies of the saints arise and appear unto many in the holy city? Was the veil of the temple rent, and the Holy of Holies opened for God's people to enter and get something? Enter then. But stay, leave all the world at the door, put off thy shoes for the place is holy and the King in his beauty meets thee there. Does he give thee something? Is it real? Does it ravish thy soul with joy? Dost thou feel the sweet music of the blood washing thy soul whiter than snow? Does the blessed Spirit witness with thy spirit? God is just and the justifier of them that believe. If the music of the righteousness of his precious blood is not sweeter than honey to thee; if he is not "the rose of Sharon and the lily of the valleys" to thee; if he is not the one altogether lovely, the fairest of all the fair, the chief among ten thousand to thee, it is because thou hast not entered, thou hast not left all the world for him. And there is no rea thing there for thee. The apple of his eye is very tender, the slightest touch of this world will blind that vision to thee. If thou hast seen the King in his beauty thou wilt never touch this world again. Thou canst never be plucked out of his hand; for he holds thee, and his honor he will not give to another.

But, ah me! what must he do when he cometh in his wrath, as Enoch prophesied, "with ten thousand of his saints to execute judgment upon all!" What will he do with those wicked men who are bound to each other by oaths having such monstrously wicked penalties attached to them, and tear the name of King Jesus out of the Bible in order to join in a common worship with the world which "lieth in wickedness," and then for a pretence restore that name again to catch some of the silly sheep out of the fold, or to steal their way into the church of God with a monstrously false religion on their backs. They say that they have the only true name of God (See Mackey's Lexicon, p. 110). "According to our traditions Enoch was a very eminent Mason, and the conservator of the true name of God which was subsequently lost even among his favorite people the Jews." See also the method of revealing this word revealed in "Richardson's Monitor," p. 155. So these men are diabolical enough to keep the true name of God, if they could get it, from all old men in their dotage, all young men in their nonage, all the female sex, all cripples, all who will not consent to join in a common worship where the name of Jesus is cast out, and all but a few of their own order who have money enough and intellectual capacity enough to attain to the "degree of Perfection or Grand Elect Perfect and Sublime Mason." And they induce these last named, a few privileged victims, to think that Enoch engraved that "mysterious word" (!) with the vowel points attached on a triangular plate of gold which was hidden for many ages in the bowels of the earth and lost to mankind. For they say in communicating the degree that "In this engraving the vowel points are so arranged as to give the pronunciation thus Yowho." Here they make a sad blunder, because they use the Hebrew consonants of the word Jehovah, and it is impossible to so arrange the vowel points as to make the pronunciation Yowho. But again, vowel points were not used or known while the Hebrew language was spoken, but they were invented, not until several hundred years after the coming of Christ, by the Maserites in order to preserve the pronunciation of the language when it became a dead language. What must Jesus do with these wicked men! See his word Deuteronomy xxvii. 15: "Cursed be the man that maketh any graven or molten image an abomination unto Jehovah, the work of the hands of the craftsman and putteth it in a secret place, and all the people shall say amen." What then shall Jesus at his coming do with these wicked men who treat a falsification of his name in the manner spoken of concerning the molten or graven image! "I spake openly to the world," "In secret have I said nothing."

The First Resurrection,

OR A COMMENT ON REV. XX. 4–6.

BY HIEL LEWIS.

"And I saw thrones, and they sat upon them, and judgment was given unto them; and I saw the souls of them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and for the word of God, and which had not worshiped the beast, neither his image, neither had received his mark upon their foreheads, or in their hands; and they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years. But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished. This is the first resurrection. Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection; on such the second death has no power, but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years."

The difficulty in the way of a plain, rational understanding of this text has arisen from a pre-conceived idea of a millenium, or the assumed thousand years's reign of Christ on the earth before the general resurrection, which theory makes it absolutely necessary to put a figurative construction on the whole. In this article we shall endeavor to relieve the subject of these difficulties, and make it plain. We will first consider the figurative theory, and to aid us we will call in the sayings of Christ on spiritual life (John xi. 25, 26), "Jesus said unto her, I am the resurrection and the life; he that believeth on me, though he were dead, yet shall he live. And whosoever liveth and believeth in me, shall never die." This evidently should have a figurative or spiritual construction, because if we construe it literally we are driven to the sad conclusion that none but Enoch and Elijah believed in Christ, for all others have died or must die, except those that live and remain till Christ comes. Consequently this is figurative language.

Again the figurative theory conflicts with the plain language of the text, "they lived and reigned with Christ." Now to live and reign with Christ, it is necessary that they should not only be where Christ is, but where he reigns. What says the Word of God, see Acts i. 9–11, "While they beheld, he was taken up, and a cloud received him out of their sight. And while they looked steadfastly toward heaven as he went up, behold two men stood beside them in white apparel, which also said, Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye here gazing up into heaven? this same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come, in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." Now this passage plainly declares that Jesus has gone into heaven and is to remain there till he comes in like manner in the clouds of heaven.

Again, see Acts iii. 20: "And he shall send Jesus Christ, which before was preached unto you; whom the heavens must receive until the times of restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." Let the reader take notice that Christ is not only gone into heaven, but is to remain there until the restitution of all things, and two of the principal features of this great restitution are the raising to life of the bodies of all the dead, and the renovation of the earth so that the theory of martyr principles reigning on the earth, is not reigning with Christ, who is in heaven.

I know there is much said in Scripture (as well as out of it), of Christ being with his disciples, and all Christians, to the end of the world, and reigning in their hearts, of his spiritual kingdom, etc., which is all good and true, but still the fact remains that Christ is on the earth only by his substitute, the Holy Ghost. "But the comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things." John xiv. 20. But Christ is in heaven, "where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God." Col. iii. 2. And there is where he reigns, for his reign on earth will not commence till the time spoken of by Paul. "I charge thee therefore, before God and our Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and the dead, at his appearing and his kingdom," 2 Timothy iv. 1, showing plainly that his kingdom is to be set up, when he comes to judge the quick and the dead, and not before, referring to the same time and the same subject spoken of in Luke xix. 19 h. Then he will set up his kingdom on the earth, and those resurrected saints that now reign a thousand years with Christ in glory, will return with him and make good what they say in Rev. v. 10, "we shall reign on the earth."

The word souls occurs more than one hundred times in the New Testament, but is never used to denote characteristics, attributes or principles, and this passage cannot reasonably be called an exception. It should be noticed that the revelator does not carry the idea that he saw the first resurrection then transpiring, but after the transaction was accomplished, that in the past they lived and reigned. Now let us see what the Scripture says about those that were raised at the first resurrection. See Matt. xxvii. 52, 53: "And the graves were opened, and many bodies of the saints which slept, arose, and came out of the graves after his resurrection, and went into the holy city, and appeared unto many.' See also John v. 25. "Verily, verily, I say unto you, the hour is coming, and now is, when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God; and they that hear shall live." Christ declared that the hour was almost due, when a part of the dead (they that hear) should be raised, should live, not in the sense that Lazarus was raised to life to die again, but to immortality. "For as the Father hath life in himself, so hath he given to the Son to have life in himself, and to quicken whom he will." If this does not refer to the resurrection spoken of by Matthew, that took place at Christ's resurrection, what does it mean? It certainly does not refer to the genera resurrection, for Jesus goes on to say, "Marvel not at this," etc. This first display of the resurrection power of the Son of God is now almost due. "For the hour is coming, in which all that are in the graves, shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil unto the resurrection of damnation." There is but one reason why Christ should repeat this declaration of his resurrection power, and that is, that it refers to two different displays, and this is further shown in the variation of the two sentences; the first is "they that hear shall live," and the second is all that are in their graves shall hear his voice, and come forth to the general judgment, both to the resurrection of life, and also to the resurrection of damnation. At the first all that were raised were raised to life, perfectly agreeing with the statement of Matthew, "Many of the saints arose."

We may as well right here answer one objection, which some stumble at, because it is said "Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection, on such the second death hath no power." That is, all the righteous will be raised at the first resurrection. Inferring that the second death will have power on all others. This inference would be good if it were not that every place, in both the Old and the New Testament, that speaks of the general judgment, refers to both the good and the bad. "And many of them that slept in the dust of the earth, shall awake, some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt." Again, "And these shall go away into everlasting punishment, but the righteous into life eternal." Also in this same chapter xx. of Revelation, it speaks of the second resurrection and the general judgment: "And I saw the dead, small and great stand before God; and the books were opened, and another book was opened, which is the book of life; and the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works." Is it not plain from this verse, in the same chapter, that speaks of the first resurrection, and here speaking of the general resurrection and general judgment, by referring to another book, which is the book of life, that some of those judged according to their works, were righteous? "Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection, on such the second death hath no power," etc. Jesus saith, "I am the resurrection and the life," John xi. 25; that is, the very essence and power of the resurrection, the first and the general resurrection. It follows as a matter of course that all that have part in Christ, will be exempt from the power of the second death, or in other words, the second death can have no power on those that have part in Christ. This may be better understood to read it thus: "Blessed and holy is he that hath part in Christ, and is of the first fruits of the resurrection." For the first fruits imply a general harvest. And in Rev. xiv. 4 it is declared, "These were redeemed from among men, being the first fruits unto God and to the Lamb." There are many other passages of Scripture which support a mixed resurrection, but these should suffice. But we were going to tell what became of this multitude of saints that arose at Christ's resurrection. It is said, "Many of the bodies of the saints arose;" many, but not all. This agrees perfectly with the saying of Christ, "They that hear shall live," and also with Revelation: "On such the second death hath no power." And the meaning of all is, that part of the saints arose,—but not all, but all that did arise were saints,—and went into the holy city, and appeared to many. That Jerusalem is frequently referred to as the holy city is true, but it was anything but a holy city at this time. And what is still more to the point is, that it is passing strange to say the least, that if a multitude of the old saints and prophets had entered Jerusalem at this time and made themselves known to many, that there should be no other account of it. It would seem impossible that such a wonderful and miraculous a thing should come to the knowledge of so many, and only Matthew say any thing about it. To me it seems psrfectly plain, that they entered the holy Jerusalem above, and there they appeared to many, and there they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years in glory. That Christ does reign in heaven, see Matt. xxviii. 18: "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth." See also Rev. v. 9, 10, 12: "Worthy is the lamb that was slain, to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honor, and glory, for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation; And hast made us unto our God kings and priests; and we shall reign on the earth." There is quite a number of things in these verses that should be duly considered. First, the reign of Christ is recognized. Secondly, those that are speaking are, or were, human beings. They were once inhabitants of earth, and from every nation—they were redeemed by the blood of Christ, and were filling the measure of those raised at the first resurrection, reigning with Christ, and were priests of God and of Christ. See the same language used in Rev. xx. 6. And they say plainly, that they shall reign on the earth. There they reign with Christ in glory the thousand years, (a long indefinite period, says Dr. Barnes). They are now in possession of all that is promised to those that have part in the first resurrection; they are priests of God, and of Christ, and thus reign with Christ, where he is and where he reigns. Notice their triumphant shouts. How different from the language of those souls that John saw under the altar, which cried: "How long, O Lord, holy and true, dost thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth."

A Free-will Baptist Conference Puts Itself on Record.

BUTLER, Mich., Sep. 27, 1875.

BRO. K.—The following preamble and resolutions were passed at the August session of the Calhoun and North Branch quarterly-meeting conference of the Free-will Baptist church and forwarded to the papers referred to for publication, but returned unpublished, though the editors both claim to be strong Anti-masons. O, the power of the secret lodge! I forward them to you for publication in the faithful and devoted Christian Cynosure.

Yours for the truth,
H. S. LIMBOCKER.

"WHEREAS, we as a Christian denomination, refer to the Bible as the source of our doctrine and discipline, and to Christ as our example; and the Bible says, "Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them;" and, "Be not unequally yoked together with unbelievers," and Christ also says, "Swear not at all," and "In secret have I said nothing." And,

WHEREAS, secret societies of our day are constantly violating those precepts, and

WHEREAS, our denomination, when standing up boldly against the organized sins of our country, such as slavery and Freemasonry, prospered and multiplied, but since it began to cower and cringe before, and at the behests of, Freemasonry, it has been withering and staggering under its loathsome burden of oath-bound lechers; therefore,

Resolved, 1*st*, that we, as a Quarterly-meeting Conference, regard secret societies in general and Freemasonry especially, of evil origin, injurious to society, and anti-Christian in their religion, and unworthy the approval or patronage of a Christian man. And further we regard the almost entire silence of the Morning Star and Baptist Union on the subject of secretism (except to give notice of its false and deceptive display), as unworthy the position they occupy and the people they represent, and a continuation in that course will lead us to seriously consider the propriety of changing them for papers that will speak against so great a sin.

Resolved, 2*d*, That we request the Morning Star and Baptist Union to publish the foregoing preambles and resolutions.

Jottings from the New York Field.

DEAR K:—My last left me at Fredonia, Chautauqua Co. I left that place on a bright Wednesday morning for the village of Cassadaga, not far away, hoping to give a couple of lectures in the Baptist church, far which consent had been obtained by Bro. Nessell. But on the Sabbath previous the church had called as their pastor a Rev. Trowbridge, one of the bond slaves of the lodge, and he had suggested that it might not be best to let me have the house, and so rather than "have any trouble, you know," the house was shut on my arrival, and the previously given consent withdrawn. I passed on the next day to Sinclearville, one day in advance, where I found a pleasant home and prayerful sympathy from Rev. W. Lincoln, pastor of the Congretional church. Here I gave three lectures, two in the Baptist, and one in the Congregational church.

During my first lecture, I was many times interrupted, the M. E. pastor and one of his members, with an infidel doctor, making themselves quite prominent. The next day the Methodist member called and had a conversation with me, during which he informed me that the craft were coming out in force that evening, and were to have their books on hand, to attack me. I assured him that they could not please me better. But when night came, a change had "come o'er the spirit of their dream." Not a word could I get them to say. During the day, the Methodist minister had said, in the presence of the Congregational minister, that the Morgan book was true; but that Masonry now was no more like Masonry then, than a little girl was like her mother. The illustration pleased me, and I used it to say; "if the little child' (Masonry in Morgan's time) "had so much of the devil in her, how much worse the old woman must be." This seemed to be a new way of looking at the subject. I hope our confessing brother will ponder it well. I also commend him to the tender mercies of the craft, hoping that they will deal mercifully with him, though he did expose his jewel so badly to the cowans. He meant well for the craft, but rather over-did it.

After closing up here, Bro. Lincoln went with me the following week to Ellington, to attend a meeting of a couple of days, of the County Association. It being a very busy time but few were present, but we had a spirited and interesting meeting. Here I found one of those homes the weary lecturer delights in with Bro. Nessell, whose wife and daughter are true yoke fellows.

After closing here I gave two lectures each in two other villages in the county, in the Free Will Baptist church in one place, and the Baptist church in the other, and then closed up my work in that county for the time being. I draw from what I saw the following conclusions, which will well apply to other localities:

1. There is much latent Anti-masonic sentiment which requires much active labor to bring it into action.

2. There is a fearful ignorance of lodge principles and aims among the mass of the people, who are yet so happy as to be free from their obligations.

3. With this ignorance, there is an apathy and indifference respecting the existence and workings of secret societies which is harder to overcome than the lodges themselves.

4. A subtle influence has gone out from these secret societies which is throwing an appalling terrorism over all our popular churches, under the influence of which their houses of worship are closed against all light on the subject, while the lips of the ministry are so padlocked that no warning voice issues from them.

5. There are a few faithful ones whose number is constantly increasing, and whose influence for good is gradually making itself felt.

6. There is need of more consecration to the work; more trust in God, and the ultimate triumph of the truth; more activity, and more liberality in behalf of those who are in the field; and a more generous support to our National organ, and other outspoken papers.

Further Report of the Pennsylvania Agent.

BROOKLYN, Pa., Sept. 28, 1875,

DEAR CYNOSURE:—In reporting further work in the Pennsylvania field, I would say that I find much to encourage wherever I go. For the last month, by correspondence with many, I have sought to excite to new interest and effort, and have been very desirous of securing a political ticket for our county, of temperance and anti-secret nominees. There are many dissatisfied with the lack of true moral principle in the other parties, and a considerable number would vote for "true men," but it is so great a step to sunder old party ties, and strike out anew for righteousne s at the polls that the men of right principle, who are willing just now to be candidates and stand forth for truth's sake with the likelihood of present defeat, are very few. Many men stand aloof from politics, because of its bad practices and bad men, whereas they ought to do their part as Christians in securing the civil power from corrupting leaders, and this is what we aim at in our reform. I shall continue to labor for a county ticket of upright, honest, worthy, untrammeled citizens, and even though I fail in this this fall, yet I shall vote only for such myself. I have spent considerable time in presenting this, and in due time, many will come up to this standpoint of temperance and anti-secrecy. They need "more light."

On Wednesday and Thursday evenings, Sept. 15th and 16th, I lectured in Franklin township. Susquehanna Co., on the grange and Odd-fellowship, and the way is open for further effort in that community. This was the first presentation of our cause to them, but in that immediate vicinity secret society power is not strong. After preaching on the Sabbath at Brooklyn, on Monday, Sept. 20th, I drove 14 miles to Jessup, and lectured in the Bolle's school-house that evening.

Near this school-house there is an old dilapidated two-story house, in the second story of which, some forty years ago, a Masonic lodge was held. A man by the name of John Hancock wa made a Master Mason in that lodge, and in initiating him, the fraternity broke one of the joists that supported the lodge floor, so that it had to be fastened together with iron bolts. This man at one time was a county commissioner, but in his old age the fraternity allowed him to come on the town, and thus he died, though he remained a Mason till the last. Another man, made a Mason in the same lodge-room, still lives, an estimable Christian, respected by all, who, at the close of one of my lectures in Bradford Co., rose up in the congregation, and declared publicly that Morgan, and Bernard, and Stearns gave a correct view of Masonry. This good brother's name is John Bolles. He renounced Masonry some time ago.

Tuesday evening, 21st, I spoke at the Grangeville Baptist church, to a good audience, who gave first rate attention. and were greatly interested. As the Odd-fellows had lately started a lodge here, I gave their false system especial consideration. There are here some good friends of our cause, as A. Carter, Nelson Bolles, Edward Stewart, Lyman D. Picket, and Deacon Charles Bolles, and others.

Wednesday, seven miles from here, to the Birchardville Baptist church, where, to a good audience we aimed to hold up the fallacies and falsities of secretism, and as the grangers had a picnic in the place the day before, that secret humbug was considered to the lecture of the evening. A man directly in front of me, being a Mason, Odd-fellow, and granger, found his secret idols so assailed, that by frequent interruptions he made himsel a target for closer shots and a laughing stock to the assembly. But so mote it be; he was fretted and I was glad.

On Thursday evening, some six miles further, to Forest Lake church, where I made Masonry the chief topic of consideration. Here one Mason left the house, finding truth too strong for his hood-winked, cable-towed nature. Last night I spoke in Springville township, to the acceptance of all but a few grangers and Odd fellows. To-day back to Brooklyn, where I preach tomorrow, and then homeward for a few days.

The field visited on this trip is new ground. The subject had never been publicly presented before. The way is now open. There is a desire to hear further. The people have been set to thinking, and this is all our cause needs to make it prosper. In all these places are good friends of our cause, and when the ground is properly canvassed, I shall look for earnest defenders of the anti-secret faith in these Baptist communities. I found welcome and encouragement with Edgar Bolles, Nelson Bolles, Lyman Picket, George Hamlin, Wm. A. Sothwell, and others interested in our work. Will report other and further work ere long. Yours truly,

J. W. Raynor.

Rev. H. Cogswell in Wyandot Co., O.

Sycamore, Ohio, Sep. 24, 1875.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

Let me say a word of cheer to the friends of our cause. At the arrangment of the executive committee of the Wyandot county association, three evening meetings were held in the U. B. church of this place, Sep. 14th, 15th, and 16th. The congregation the first evening was good and much interested in hearing a seven degree Mason, Rev. Mr. Cogswell of Mansfield. His subject was "the Blue Lodge." Among the many present were three or four Blue Lodge Masons, and judging from their looks, they felt more than unusually blue. Bro. Cogswell said that the next evening he would give his inside experience, and the house though large for the place, was full, and some Masons present. He told us the inside work, so that we feel that the inside of the huge concern is fairly inside out. One Mason could not sit still and see the lodge so exposed, and he got up and left; but I will say for him and all the craft, they hold their peace well, even to this date. At the close of the meeting, the secretary announced that the annual election would be the next evening before the public speaking. and the speaker said that the next evening he would tell the people something about the four higher degrees. This time the house was crowded and not all could get in though it rained and the roads were slippery; and there were all the Masons, to my knowledge, for miles around. Bro. Cogswell had told them the facts as far as they had gone, and they would try and get the other four degrees cheaper. But, cheaper or not when the speaker gave the signs and penalties in the seven degrees, the poor fellows looked very cheap.

The election for officers resulted in the choice of Mr. Thomas Cole for Pres't; Mr. Abraham Neible, Vice-pres't.; Mr. J. B. Crall, Treas.; Elder S. H. Randebaugh, Sec'y.; and Rev. George Bender, and Mr. Abraham Vangundy, Executive Committee.

I have this to say for our first annual meeting. God blessed us with a good Christian minister as speaker, and one who knows whereof he affirms, and Bro. Cogswell has many friends here that say, "God bless him." We had large and attentive congregations, and good evidence that the God of light and truth was with us at every meeting. Should we not be encouraged? The Executive Committee was instructed to arrange the time and place for holding the next meeting, so that said meeting be inside of six months. God being our helper we will do our duty to save our young men from being stripped of their clothes and manhood, and hood-winked and cable-towed. Lovers of our cause pray for us.

S. H. Randebaugh, Sec'y.

Correspondence.

A Pair of Spectacles.

Dear Bro. K.—I was yesterday walking along the streets of the pleasant village of Wyanet, when I accosted two gentlemen, whom I soon found to be M. E. ministers. I explained to them my work and asked them for sympathy and aid. They told me they had no sympathy with me and regarded my work as calculated to destroy the churches and do great harm. It soon appeared that they were both Masons and felt very strong in their position. A young man in the company expressed his approval of my views and immediately the elder minister commenced an attack intended to annihilate him. After a time I took my turn and suggested that as we were both ministers, we had a right to feel interested in each other, and that I would like to ask him if it was true that he entered the lodge "neither clothed nor naked, barefoot nor shod, with a hood-wink over his eyes and a cable-tow round his neck," and then swore to always conceal and never reveal the secrets of Masonry under penalty of having his throat cut from ear to ear, and his tongue torn out by the roots? and whether he did, as a Master Mason, swear to conceal all the secrets of a brother Mason except murder and treason, and then asked God to help him do it? He very frankly told me that was none of my business and that I had no right to assail him on the street. I disavowed any intention of assailing him, but said that it was doubtless true that the things of which I had asked him did transpire in the lodge, and that any Mason who pretended that they did not, practiced dissimulation. He then said that he did not dissimulate, for he did not pretend that these things were true or not true, and that it was simply nobody's business whether it was so or not. From this view I dissented. I thought that the world and the church had a right to know whether accredited ministers of the Gospel swore to do wickedly and asked God to help them do it or not. Some one in the crowd remarked that Masonry professed to be a religion, and Masonic minister No. 2 denied that it claimed to be a religion at all. I then produced and read from Mackey's Masonic Lexicon, Sickels' Monitor and Mackey's Ritualist which affirms that Masonry regenerates men and prepares them for heaven, and closed with what Mackey says of the neophite, that "comes to the door of the lodge seeking the new birth and asking a withdrawal of the veil that conceals divine truth from his unitiated sight," and that the solemn admonition was given him to put off his shoes, for the place where he stood was holy ground. He also says that here "a great change takes place in his moral and intellectual condition." I asked my ministerial friend if it was true that men were born again when they joined the lodge. He said it was, I asked if men went there to find divine truth. He said they did. I asked if the putting off the shoes referred to the manner of going into a Master Mason's lodge. This he declined to answer. I asked if a great change took place in a mans moral and intellectual condition when he became a Mason. He said, "Yes." To this I assented and assured him that, in my opinion, many a man went into the lodge as innocent and simple-hearted as a child, and came out (Masonically) as cunning and crafty as the devil wanted him to be. In reply, he politely assured me that I lied, and that I was an impudent fellow. I told him that he could be entirely free to talk in that way as much as he chose, but that if I had lied, it was the first time a minister had ever told me so. I then shook hands with my two Masonic ministerial brethren and left them, a pair of spectacles to men and angels. Yours for the war,

H. H. Hinman.

OUR MAIL.

Amos Kingsley, Lansing, Mich., writes: "You requested me to solicit subscriptions, but it will be of little use until we have a course of lectures on the subject to wake up the people to their danger from secrecy. They don't seem to understand that they are sleeping over a volcano that will ere long, if not checked, send forth the scorching, withering lava of secrecy, until it destroys everything that we hold dear. Of all the places on God's footstool that needs lecturing on the subject of Masonry, Lansing is the first. The people here need an Anti-masonic earthquake to wake them up and now is the time, for one of their big men is advertised to speak here next month, and it might be well to follow him up."

E. Darling, Paint Creek, Mich. writes: "The Anti-masonic Convention for this State is to be held at Ypsilanti. I wish our friends to understand that it is all important that the strongest speakers we have in the Anti-masonic army should be at the head of the battle in this stronghold of the enemy. Nothing short of complete victory will answer the full demands of the cause."

J. A. Conant, Willimantic, Conn., writes: "I hope to send you an order before long for the American Platform and Walker's letter of acceptance. They ought to be put into the hands of every voter in the country just now when honest people are inquiring as to what can be done to check the stream of corruption and fraud in this country."

L. H. Pierson, Goodrich, Mich., writes: "We want a State lecturer here very much. The people need light. They want to be awakened to the subject so that they will realize the importance of taking a bold stand for the right. I will do all that I can to help in the good cause."

N. R. Corning, Lanark, Ill., writes: "We are having pretty lively times at the present with the Masons and Odd-fellows. To-morrow our Association meets to make arrangements to have Mr. Ronayne come to Lanark to lecture and initiate some candidates publicly. You may expect to hear from Carroll county this winter. There is going to be an effort made to have C. A. Blanchard come here this winter."

Mrs. L. W. Rowly, Utica, Minn., writes: "A great many persons in every age are led blindfolded by human influence. The influential person or persons rule with irresistible power. The captive soul thinks not for itself. God be praised that those secret clans that cover sin with fantastic enchantments and pay homage to external glitter, have had their day. Their glory has had its season and its period. The unsealed lips that have satiated the brilliant heads with laurel crowns with their plaudits, now fill their ears with fearful execrations."

The Grand Object of Freemasonry.

In this day of benevolent enterprise, associations of individuals for the accomplishment of a specific object, are frequent. By concentrating single efforts to one point, as the burning-glass brings the bright sunbeams to a focus, these associations easily effect important changes in the moral aspect and true happiness of the world. They rally the friends of the good cause around a common standard, and exercise that sway in the empire of opinion, which belongs to the nobility in a monarchical government. The cause they espouse assumes dignity; the end they seek swells in importance, and is almost sure to be attained. The ease with which they gather their treasures from ten thousand springs into one great stream and apply their energies even to the remotest parts of the earth, is a matter of daily observation. Bible societies, missionary societies, Sunday-school societies, charitable societies, literary societies, agricultural societies, and useful societies of every name and denomination, are the glory of our country, and among the highest hopes of the age. Our illustrious citizens preside over them, our enterprising citizens direct them, and the most industrious and valuable of our fellow citizens sustain them.

It is not necessary that the design be benevolent or holy, to test the importance of associated effort for its accomplishment. Conspiracy and treason draw their chief strength from a thousand secret channels, and effect their aim by bringing the energies of all, unexpectedly to burst upon a single point.

They can show kindness and patriotism, when it is necessary for their better concealment; and oftentimes do much good with the sole purpose of getting a better opportunity to do evil. But these do not lightly admit or dismiss members. Those who have been once in their secrets, must be silent for ever after. They must have the consent of all to enter, and having entered, their allegiance ends only with life.

But every benevolent society has a specific object to attain, which distinguishes it from all the rest: as the Bible society, to circulate the Scriptures; and the missionary society, to support teachers. They all are by nature charitable societies, and seek to ameliorate the condition of sinful man. They hold membership to be an honor, and count it no disgrace to invite the just and merciful to enroll their names in the register of the society. They agree, generally, in allowing an annual, or a life membership, at the option of the subscriber; and in either case leave him free to attend the meetings or not, as he chooses. The benevolence of these societies beams in every direction from an open center, as light from the unclouded sun; and leaves none to doubt their character, or to mistake their object.

Of all the great associations of the present day, Freemasonry is peculiar and extraordinary. It claims with the others to be benevolent in its designs, while it hides itself like treason. It professes to ameliorate the condition of man, not by supporting teachers, or by rewarding agriculture, or by any other single operation; but altogether in a general way. While other benevolent societies uniformly agree to strengthen themselves in public esteem by the fullest display of their proceedings, this alone strengthens itself in secrecy; while the others have invariably a single benevolent aim in view, which they carefully proclaim, this alone carefully wraps up itself in mystery, folds its precise object in thick darkness, and leaving the inquirer to study its direct aim, replies with manifest importance—"I am a secret."

Now this is singular, the members of all other benevolent societies exhort their fellow citizens to join in the work of benevolence, and aid in effecting the proposed good. Freemasonry is independent and indifferent to all the world besides. It is a rule of the institution, (we do not say it is strictly observed,) never to solicit any to join her ranks, to favor her schemes, or to aid by membership in accomplishing her plans.

This remarkable trait in the constitution of the society has undoubtedly led many reflecting minds to conclude, that the institution is merely frivolous. If it had an object in view worth naming, it could not fail, in setting it forth, to invite all good men and true to inlist in its attainment. If it can teach mathematics by a royal way, or extract Hebrew roots with a stump machine; if it can teach men to circumscribe their passions with a pair of compasses, and to reform their hearts with a mason's hammer; if it can teach brotherly love by a mortar cement, and benevolence in donations exacted by an oath; it should entreat youth to join and receive its benefits. But as Freemasonry never legally invites new members, it is legally inferred to be an empty thing, without any object to set before them; and and so thousands of our youth are tempted to join the institution with the hope of filling it with a scheme or two of their own, and of engrafting upon a mighty stock some object of private interest, or of personal ambition.

It is impossible, however, that a society should accumulate funds, build splendid halls, command the precious time of the statesman, hold in subservience the pen of the scholar, try the intellects of the orator, gain the support of the divine, and yet be merely frivolous. It is impossible that a society merely frivulous should find sensible men willing to give to it all their time as Grand Lecturers, much of their time as Masters, and invariably their money as members. It is impossible that a society merely frivolous should constantly refuse to take a member without the consent of all; or to take members for a month, or a year, or any less term than for life; should never discharge them from service; but, under its full penalties, require them forever "to obey all regular signs and summons, given, sent, or thrown by the hand of a brother, or from the body of a legally constituted lodge, provided that it be within the length of the cable-tow."* There is something earnest in all this, but the object is concealed.

Great men are not always occupied with matters of importance; yet, when they give themselves to Freemasonry, not as a pleasant recreation, but as a laborious business, committing its minute details, and feeding on its boasted mysteries, at the same time they pay much attention to the outward prosperity of the order, great men give all the evidence in their power to give, that Freemasonry is a weighty matter.

Freemasonry embraces within its secret ties, men of distinguished literary attainments, and of the most exalted reputation in civil and military life; and it must have in its interior something more than the usual revelations of its mysteries declare; must have something which can occupy the mind of a man of serious reflection, who cannot be satisfied with puerilities, nor accept of mere jargon in requital for the time he devotes to the order. We do not mean to call in question the verbal accuracy of a work, which Freemasonry has sanctioned with her utmost efforts, and sealed, like a worshiper of Moloch, with the life-blood of her own son, but he institution must have a secret, must have an aim, must have a something about it, yet untold, or requiring to be explained, in order to have wrought into its woof of glory the time, and talents, and name of many honored dead, the revered among the dead.

If the institution has any specific object of pursuit, it should, like other societies, steadily set forth that object; but if its object be independently to inculcate a reverence for the Deity, and love to our neighbor as is often professed in the constitutions of Masonry, the institution undertakes too much, undertakes the proper office of Christianity; we disapprove its design, and dispense with its incompetent services.

"Very well," says a Mason, "you are at liberty to do so; while with Washington and Franklin, and the good La Fayette, I both approve the design and employ the services of Freemasonry."

This is the thing we sadly fear, that men using the rickety steps of Freemasonry, to scale heaven, reject the sure way of faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; that men hearkening to the dogmas of a human institution, turn away their ears from the heavenly doctrines of the cross; that men seeking out to themselves this new found invention of Freemasonry, receive a stone for bread; and for a fish, a serpent.

If any human institution offers itself to perform the proper office of Christianity, it should be rejected at once. Christianity will do its own work better than any contrivance we can use in its stead: and the very offer of another institution independently to inculcate in the human mind a reverence for the Deity, and love to our neighbor, is proof that such institution is an imposture. So certain as it is another institution, having for its grand object to inculcate religious fear and neighborly love, so certain it is another Gospel, and not that of our Lord; and it should be rejected as a broken staff, "on which if a man lean it will pierce his hand."

"General Washington did not use Freemasonry as another Gospel, but in aid of that already given of heaven."

We allow it; but observe, this makes a most important change in the professed object of Freemasonry. Its grand object now is not itself to serve for religion; but to serve the Lord by aiding his Gospel. No doubt Washington so regarded it, and so also does every Christian Mason; and if it be a faithful servant of the Lord's Gospel, well; if not, Christian brother, it is time we knew it.

"Freemasonry is the handmaid of religion." This is often said, and by pious Masons is truly believed. Now, a handmaid waits near her mistress to receive all her commands. When did religion bid her handmaid Freemasonry to hide her light under a bushel? utterly to refuse her services to the fairer half of the human family? and to invite never a man to enter her gates, or to communicate her blessings? Freemasonry is a faithless servant acting contrary to orders.

Lesson for Oct. 17.—Many Mansions.

SCRIPTURE.—John xiv. 1-7. Commit 1-7; Primary Verse, 3.

1 Let not your heart be troubled: ye believe in God, believe also in me.
2 In my Father's house are many mansions: if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you.
3 And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself: that where I am there ye may be also.
4 And whither I go ye know, and the way ye know.
5 Thomas saith unto him, Lord, we know not whither thou goest: and how can we know the way?
6 Jesus saith unto him, I am the way, truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the Father, but by me.
7 If ye had known me ye should have known my Father also: and from henceforth ye know him, and have seen him.

1.—None but Christ can say; "Let not thy heart be troubled." When the soul is, like the sea, tempest-tossed, do its billows go down at any other bidding? In the moment of distress and of agony, then we know how comfortless and empty are all other sources of solace. Ps. lv. 48; Is. xxvi. 3; lvii. 21; John xiv. 27; xvi. 33; 2 Cor. i. 3, 4; ii. 14; 1 John iv. 4; v. 4, 5.

2.—What a debt of gratitude do we owe to Christ that he not only unlocked the gates of heaven, but made it seem like home to us, thereby taking away the terror of the grave and of the life beyond, so that his saints, like Paul, often long to depart and be with Christ. 5 —Christ is The Truth—the mirror in which we behold ourselves as we actually are. Is any one satisfied with his own goodness, let him look into the perfect goodness of Christ. Does any one pride himself on his wisdom; how tawdry will it seem beside that divine wisdom of Jesus that encompasseth all things. Or is one a philanthropist; what comfort can he gain by placing his love of men beside that of the great Shepherd who gave his life for his sheep. Temperance.

Relations of Whisky to Labor.

According to the internal revenue returns, the annual production of spirits from grain in the United States is over one hundred millions of gallons. At seventy drinks to the gallon this would furnish seven thousand millions of drinks. Divide this by forty millions, and you have an average of one hundred and seventy-five drinks per annum for each man, woman and child in the country. At an average price of five cents a drink this beverage costs the consumer $350,000,000, to say nothing of the increase of quantity (about twenty-five per cent.) by reducing in the process of compounding it. This article yields a revenue of $70,000,000 to the Government. It kills sixty thousand drunkards every year. These sixty thousand men, estimating their labor at $1 net per day each, takes from the wealth-producing labor of the country $18,000,000.

To produce this annual death crop requires an army of habitual drunkards, amounting to six hundred thousand men, as only ten per cent. of our drunkards die annually. Suppose this army engaged in preparing the death crop makes half time at labor, which is a high estimate, and the country loses by them $90,000,000 more of the wealth-producing labor of the country. Here is $108,000,000 dead loss. If we add to this the cost of grain consumed in the manufacture of the spirits, and which may be considered worse than wasted, especially the portion that is not made into alcohol for manufacturing and medicinal purposes, and which amounts to about twenty millions of bushels, worth an average of at least $1 per bushel to the bread consumers, it will be seen that we have one hundred and twenty-eight millions of charges against the whisky trade.

But this is not all. We have already seen that the conversion of this large amount of breadstuffs into spirits costs the consumer at least two hundred and fifty millions, after it is put upon the market at one dollar a gallon, and before he drinks it over the bar. Here is a gross profit of two hundred and fifty per cent. upon an article universally admitted to be a damage to the interests of labor. If such a profit were taxed upon the staff of life, the whole community would rise in a burst of indignation which nothing could withstand. Bread riots, such as were never known in the history of England, France, or the world, would be the immediate result. This article might easily stand an increased tax of one hundred per cent. without additional costs to the consumer.

The best authorities agree in admitting that seven-eighths of the crime, vagrancy and pauperism in this country may be traced directly to the use of spirits as a beverage. If this be true, then there must be charged up to the debit of the account, seven-eighths of the cost of building and maintaining our prisons, criminal courts, almshouses, houses of correction, county jails and orphan asylumns. Calling these expenditures one hundred millions per annum, we have now a grand total annual debit chargeable to the whisky trade of five hundred and seventy-eight millions of dollars. If this view of the subject be correct, it is submitted that there should be no surprise exhibited at the crusade of the wives and daughters of the laborers of the West against this traffic.

This is a tax in double the amount of the expenses of the General Government, freely and voluntarily paid by the people of the United States in gratification of an acquired appetite. Is it not a little remarkable that more attention is not given to it by our political economists? The granger movement has been organized to save an estimated annual unnecessary expenditure of one hundred millions in freights. This charge of seven hundred and fifty millions passes unnoticed. The politicians both in and out of Congress, are endeavoring to give most respectful heed to the demonstrations of the grangers. They are afraid to increase taxation by a single cent. They are devising ways and means to increase the tax-paying capacity of the country, and adding to the gross revenue without augmenting the rates. And yet, here is a constant sinking of the aggregated wealth of the nation by hundreds of millions annually through one single avenue, one line of traffic which does not appear to receive a passing thought. Such is the force of habit.—National Republican.

RAILROADS AND TEMPERANCE.—An officer of the Missouri, Kansas, and Texas Railroad Company, having noticed the allusions in the Observer to regulations of other companies requiring abstinence from intoxicating liquors as a condition of employment, sends up the following rule adopted by that road:

RULE 38.—"The use of intoxicating liquors as a beverage will be followed by immediate dismissal from the service of the company."

The managers of our railroads are beginning to learn that it is a business question whether life and property shall be intrusted to men who destroy their wits, and unfit themselves for proper watchfulness by indulging in intoxicating drinks.—New York Observer.

Build "Inebriates' Asylums" of stately proportions, a thing of beauty in architecture, of Philadelphia brick with marble facings, as the graceful building to be seen on Randall's Island, in the East River, New York—build such at immense cost for the drunkards, if you will—send out your missionaries in the city to gather in and convert others, drunkards too poor to be sent to the marble palace; do all this heroically, and while you are doing your best, for every man and woman cured, and every one saved, the legalized rum traffic, supported by the Government of this nation, is turning out one hundred ready-made confirmed drunkards! O, tell it not in Gath, lest the Philistines rejoice over the people of the living God!

CHICAGO, THURSDAY OCT. 7, 1875.

PLATFORM AND NOMINATIONS FOR 1876.

FOR PRESIDENT
James B. Walker,
of Illinois.

FOR VICE-PRESIDENT
Donald Kirkpatrick,
of New York.

PLATFORM.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage, is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. The charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and heir oaths prohibited by law.

5. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by article 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate.

6. That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

7. That to cultivate the intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

8. That land and other monopolies should be discountenanced.

9. That the Government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency, and a return to specie payment as soon as practicable.

10. That maintenance of the public credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. And finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of Electoral Colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-president of the United States.

OUR PUBLISHERS.

We have requested the re-insertion of their very able and really interesting article on our first page. We hope it will be read and re-read and pondered by every subscriber.

There is a time in the life of every paper where the struggle is sharp between rising and falling. If its list can be made a strong one, other worldly interests will lean on it. The newsdealers of the whole country will patronize it; and it will take its place as a mighty spring-head of intelligence in the great American world.

Messrs. Cook & Co. have shown great courage and public spirit in doubling the size of the Cynosure without increasing its price; when in the smaller form it had just fairly begun to pay its way and leave a small margin of profit. If it can survive, and pay for itself at its present size the Publishers intend to increase the value of the paper to subscribers, as they have heretofore done, just as fast as its earnings leave any money to lay out on it. It is a great achievement to start such a paper in an expensive city; and in such a cause, against a secret combination which is working in every city, town, and hamlet of the country, the success of this paper is a marvel. Another paper in Chicago of similar dimensions with a strong denomination to back it, has sunk from 50 to 100 thousand dollars in starting. The Cynosure has sunk no man's money, nor has it leaned on Egypt by catering to popular and questionable interests. Again and again, we say, read the Publishers' paper on the first page.

When Mr. E. A. Cook came out of a three year's hard service in our army and began life a young man without means, and had started a successful business, the Cynosure was just resolved on by our first Pittsburgh Convention. Mr. Cook offered to publish it, at the risk of his business, and when asked what his motive was in doing so, he replied, "I feel as I did when I saw Lee and Grant facing each other, as if I wanted a hand in this fight. My principles are involved in it, and I am willing to risk incurring Masonic hostility to my business, and publish your paper though I knew I should never make one cent profit by it, beyond the naked printer's bills."

I need not say to those who know or will come here and examine the facts, that Mr. Cook has abundantly made his word good. The delicate touches of Mrs. Cook, too, are traceable in their first page article.

THE BIBLE CAST OUT.

The following rule has heretofore governed the schools of Chicago:—

"The morning sessions of the grammar and primary schools shall commence at 9 o'clock with reading the Scriptures without note or comment and repeating the Lord's prayer, and with appropriate singing, etc.

The Board of Education (Sept. 28th, 1875) voted nem. con. to strike from the rule the fourteen words printed in italics: leaving the schools to commence "with appropriate singing"; whatever that may be. This vote

1. Excludes the Bible entirely from the schools, a brand placed on no other book. If not read in the opening; it is not read at all there.

2. It is done in Chicago as in Cincinnati, by papists and infidels, stimulated by the former; to give truth to the declaration of the organs of the Vatican which call the free schools of the United States "Godless," and demand their destruction; and that the priests of Rome shall have their schools supported by the public money; that American children may be drilled in genuflections, etc., and taught obedience to the Pope.

3. The infidels are rowdies and care-for-nothings; the quiet unity of this infamous act shows that it was incubated and hatched by priests, and the American priests are not ordinary papists; they are Jesuits, a sworn order within an order. In short, Jesuits are the Freemasons of the Pope; suppressed 100 years ago for forty years by the reigning Pontiff, they worked in sworn secrecy till they got control of the church, and they have run it ever since. This move against the Bible is their movement, to make our free school system abjure God, then they can make their people reject them as "Godless schools;" then get their own schools on the public funds, and in the end control American education.

It looks to-day as though they were to succeed and make the United States another Mexico, or Spain, or Ireland. The Chicago Times hails and endorses the action, and sneers at "The Lord's Prayer," which the Chicago Board have cast out as "sectarian." Of course Christ, its author, is then a sectary and the Infinite and ever blessed God whose image he is must be a partisan divinity!!!

"Sect" means cut from or divided; but if Christianity, the ten Commandments, the Lord's Prayer, and the Sermon on the Mount are "sectarian," where and what is the universal religion from which they are cut off?

But Christianity is not sectarian, nor is Christ who "tasted death for every man" a partizan divinity. But such preachers as Dr. Patton, Prof. Swing, et id omne genus, and such papers as the Independent and Christian Union will hail this Chicago expulsion of the Bible as does the Times, and its ilk; and priestism is to have its day.

The only cure is that proposed by the National Christian Association, which rejects priests and their craft, whether in temple or lodge, church or pagoda. We must insist on the one infinite God, who fills the universe he has made, and Christ as the only "Way" by which mortals can reach him. The ceremonies of priests, whether Masonic or popish, are mere tricks of religious conjurers and quacks; and and our only deliverance and safety from them, is to enthrone Christ in our heart, home, school, state, church, and world. And if Christ makes us free, we are free indeed.

LODGE AND POLITICS IN MASSACHUSETTS.

The action of the Massachusetts Republican Convention last week presents a serious question to the Republican party throughout the country. The State elections of this fall have been regarded as influencing greatly the general one of next year, and hence the political acumen of both Republicans and Democrats has been taxed to present such platforms and candidates as shall guarantee success. In Massachusetts the Democrats had already renominated Gov. Wm. Gaston, a man of great popularity and political strength. Three names came prominently before the Republicans, Charles Francis Adams, Alexander H. Rice and Dr. George B. Loring. Before the convention even the shrewdest were unable to say which of the three would receive the nomination. Rice had numerical strength, but was not a man who had the element of enthusiasm before the people, and neither he or Loring were considered among careful observers outside the State to be able to compete with the strong Democratic candidate and redeem to the Republican party what had been lost by the shamelessness and ambition of Ben. Butler. There was a wide-spread hope that the convention would rise above its particular sectional issues and put in nomination a man who would give success at the polls.

The convention met on Wednesday and after two or three informal ballots it became evident that the issue would fall to either Adams or Rice. Thereupon the Loring adherents broke front and went over in a body to the support of Rice who was nominated on the third ballot. The result, says the Tribune of this city, "will occasion a general feeling of regret and disappointment among Republicans outside" Massachusetts.

The causes operating to produce this result may be numerous, but it will readily occur to the careful observer of events for the past four years which is the greatest. Mr. Adams has not scrupled to put himself on record as an American, a man who holds unwaveringly to the principles of the American movement, settled at Plymouth Rock and interpreted by the Declaration of Independence and the Federal Constitution. To these principles, Freemasonry, in both a specific and generic sense, is most abhorrent. To this fact we may add another from the Boston Herald of the 17th ult:

"Eminent Commander Pope then introduced Sir Knight George B. Loring, who was received with enthusiastic applause. He tendered his thanks for the kind and cordial welcome and said that it was another proof of the fraternal feeling which bound them as Knights Templars together, all classes and distinctions being buried. . . . . The great fraternity knows no distinction of race or sect of any race that dwells upon the face of the earth.

Sir Knight Charles P. Thompson, member of congress-elect from Essex, was then introduced and made a pithy and spirited speech."

This at a banquet in Boston, given to a lot of Templar Masons from Salem, Essex county, the home of Dr. Loring.

To these two facts we must add the clause from the Royal Arch oath:

"Furthermore, do I promise and swear, that I will aid and assist a companion Royal Arch Mason, when engaged in any difficulty, and espouse his cause, so far as to extricate him from the same if in my power, whether he be right or wrong. Also, that I will promote a companion Royal Arch Mason's political preferment in preference to another of equal qualifications. Bernard's Light on Masonry, pp. 142.

We here have the three members of a proportion which furnish the fourth with a degree of certainty hardly questionable. Mr. Rice is probably a Mason, or at least not a pronounced opponent like Mr. Adams, and so the lodge jumped its puppets upon his scale and gave him the day. It has also set itself against the interests of the Republican party in Massachusetts, and has probably caused its defeat in the State election, and the result may expand into a Democratic victory next year.

Will the Chicago Tribune, whose excellent article on the grange movement in Wisconsin we published last week, and Harper's Weekly, which, as seen in another column, takes issue with secret orders in the papist war, notice these features of the Massachusetts convention and tell us if Freemasonry, which operates in politics on such a scale, and yet utterly in the dark to casual observers, is not more detestable and dangerous than the grange or Know-Nothing organizations which politically make an open issue?

PRESIDENT GRANT MAKES A SPEECH.

At the meeting of the army of the Tennesee last week at Des Moines, Iowa, the President was wooed from his usual reticence into committing the longest speech recorded of him, and without doubt, on the whole, one of the best. Criticism we shall postpone for want of room, but shall refer to one or two leading points hereafter which are brought forward with less generalship than their author was accustomed to use on the embattled field.

Expressing his gratification in recalling the days when himself and companions had suffered together for a government they believed worth fighting and even dying for, he said:

"We will not deny to any of those who fought against us any privileges under the Government which we claim for ourselves. On the contrary, we welcome all such who come forward in good faith to help build up the waste places, and to perpetuate our institutions against all enemies, as brothers in full interest with us in a common heritage; but we are not prepared to apologize for the part we took in war. . . . I do not bring into this assemblage politics, certainly not partisan politics, but it is a fair subject for the soldiers in their deliberation to consider what may be necessary to secure the prize for which they battled. In a Republic like ours, where the citizen is the sovereign, and the official the servant, where no power is exercised except by the will of the people, it is important that the sovereign, the people, should foster intelligence, the promotion of that intelligence which is to preserve us as a free nation. If we are to have another contest in the near future of our national existence, I predict that the dividing line will not be Mason and Dixon's, but between patriotism and intelligence on the one side, and superstition, ambition and ignorance on the other. Now is the centennial year of our national existence. I believe it a good time to begin the work of strengthening the foundation of the structure commenced by our patriotic forefathers 100 years ago at Lexington. Let us all labor to add all needful guarantees for the more security of free thought, free speech, a free press, pure morals, unfettered religious sentiments, and of equal rights and privileges to all men, irrespective of nationality, color or religion; encourage free schools, and resolve that not one dollar of our money appropriated to their support shall be appropriated to the support of any sectarian school; resolve that neither the State nor nation, nor both combined, shall support institutions of learning other than those sufficient to afford to every child growing up in the land the portunity of a good common-school education unmixed with sectarian, pagan, or atheistical bias; leave the matter of religion to the family, the church and the private school, supported entirely by private contributions; keep the church and the State forever separate. With these safe-guards, I believe the battles which created the Army of the Tennesee will not have been fought in vain.

NOTES.

—Pres. H. A. Thompson of Otterbein University is speaking and writing in Ohio for the Prohibition ticket with great zeal and effect. The Telescope modestly suggests the propriety of voting for him as Lieutenant-Governor. Whether Pres. Thompson has received a formal nomination we do not know, but only that he is worthy of one; and we predict no more telling votes will be cast than those that bear his name, and of other men who maintain like principles.

—Rev. Wm. Slaughter, a colleague of Warner, Eberly, McKee, Rose, J. H. Young and a few other ministers of the United Brethren church in the U. B. (Masonic) Tribune, died lately in Westerville, O., and was buried by the Masonic lodge of which he was a clandestine member, and which he seemed to love more than the church of Christ. The Chapel of Otterbein University was refused for the "strange" and heathen ceremony, which was performed in a Presbyterian church. Only the lodge can lament the death of such a man, as men are usually mourned for; good men will weep that a professed Christian has entered the presence of his Maker with such a burden fastened on him, and can only hope in the mercy of Christ.

—Hon. F. D. Parish, President of the third general convention of the National Christian Association held at Cincinnati, has been a trustee of Oberlin college since 1839 and is now the oldest one living. He has long been well known as a leading member of the Congregational church in Sandusky, but has lately removed to Oberlin.

—The Grand Lodge of Odd-fellows met a week or two since in Indianapolis. Mr. Colfax came up as usual like a June sunrise, with his felicitations and flattery of the order. Senator Morton even, dropping for the time questions of finance and reconstruction, appeared to pettifog for a secret order. The statistics give the total membership of the order at 438,701. The total revenue for the year ending Dec. 31, 1874, was $4,510,980.49, of which sum about one-third, or $1,537,993.41 was expended for relieving members or their families. The total receipts since 1830 are said to be a little over $65,338,000 of which sum a little more than $20,542,000 was expended in relief—$45,000,000 worse than wasted.

THE "HAND-BOOK OF FREEMASONRY" begun in our last number will be continued from week to week until completed. It promises to be one of the most effective works against the lodge. The familiarity of Mr. Ronayne with his subject is probably excelled by very few in the country; and this, sustained by an excellent memory and facility of language promises an exposition complete in every detail as in its general character. As it appears in the Cynosure, it merits a careful reading and thousands of copies will be in circulation when it reappears in more convenient and permanent form.

Secret Political Societies.

[From Harper's Weekly.]

The Inquisition was the greatest, most terrible and cruel of secret societies, and in despotic countries the friends of liberty have often felt themselves compelled to conspire secretly in order to save their cause and themselves. But it is always a question whether, even under such circumstances, the secrecy is an advantage, and whether the universal distrust and consequent terror which it breeds are not the source of more cruelty and suffering than its benefits can offset. In this country, however, secret political associations are unnecessary and suspicious. What can not be done openly in such matters should not be done at all, and that man who proposes secrecy presumptively means mischief. The Know-Nothing was one of the most conspicuous illustrations of a political secret society, and it gave us neither great men nor good measures, and soon disappeared. The Knights of the Golden Circle and the Ku Klux were secret societies of treason and murder. The White League is, so far as known, a conspiracy of injustice and hostility of race. And in Ohio and Maryland there are reports of a new secret society for the purpose of excluding Romanists from office.

But if we cannot beat the political Roman church in a fair and open American contest, we deserve defeat. The intentions of the Roman hierarchy are frankly published. The Pope, who is received by his church as the infallible representative of God upon earth, has solemnly declared in the Syllabus that church and state should be united, and that the church should control the schools. The Freeman's Journal, in New York, says plainly "that the school tax in itself is an unjust imposition." The Tablet announces that it is opposed to "purely secular schools." The Catholic Telegraph, in Ohio, asserts that "it will be a glorious day for Catholics in this country when . . . . our school system shall be shivered." The Catholic Columbian, the organ of the Roman bishop at Columbus, in Ohio, says "that Catholic parents cannot be allowed the sacraments" who send their children by preference to the public schools. Archbishop Purcell of Cincinnati, writes that he does not approve the public school system. Bishop M'Quaid, of Rochester, insists that the question be brought to the ballot-box. And the Rev. Mr. Stack, a Roman clergyman who does not acquiesce in the war upon the schools, and who has been suspended by his bishop, said in his letters to Harper's Weekly last July that the school question will soon be made a distinct issue, and that then "the watchword for Catholics is likely to be the principle enunciated by Bishop Gilmour, of Cleveland. 'We are Catholics first, citizens next.'"

Here is a policy fatal to American republican institutions frankly announced by the Roman priests and press as one that will be pushed at the polls. There is no more reason for forming secret societies to oppose it than to oppose the party which is the instrument by which the policy is to be carried out . . . . There was no need of secret organizations to oppose the alliance with slavery, whose purposes were as plainly announced as those of Rome, and there is no need of such associations now. They breed only infinite mischief, and the American who will not openly declare his opposition to an open foe is a very suspicious and doubtful character, who deserves to be watched lest he be caught doing the dirty work of the enemy.

Religious Intelligence.

—Rev. D. S. Kinney, the publishing agent of the Wesleyan Methodist connection, visited the Illinois conference of that church at Wyanet, Sep. 16th. Ten hundred and seventy dollars were subscribed for the new Publishing House at Syracuse. Devotional meetings of great power were held during the conference and continued for days after.

—The Wesleyan church holds its General conference once in four years. Its ninth session commences on the 20th inst. at Sycamore, Ill. Rev. L. N. Stratton, Editor of the American Wesleyan is conference secretary.

—Rev. N. R Johnson, of the Reformed Presbyterian church, has resigned his mission charge in Elliota, Minn., and is about to remove to San Francisco, Cal., where he expects to be engaged in missionary labor among the Chinese.

—Eleven years ago Duhleen Singh, an Egyptian of rank, married one of the girls in the United Presbyterian mission school in Cairo, and has celebrated each anniversary with a donation to the U. P. Egyptian mission of 5,000 pounds sterling, amounting in all to nearly $55,000.

—The Presbytery of Steubenville, O., at its late session passed the following on dancing: "Promiscuous dancing as practiced at balls and social parties as an amusement is dangerous to good morals, is evil in its tendencies and is forbidden by the seventh commandment; and is at variance with standards and common law of the United Presbyterian church." The elders and pastors are admonished to guard their flocks against the entrance of this evil.

—The Congregational pastors of New Hampshire have entered their rebuke of the Sabbath desecration connected with and maintained by H. W. Beecher's preaching at the White Mountains. At their late General Association, President Smith, of Dartmouth College, offered the following resolution, which was unanimously adopted: "Resolved, That the practice, which has sprung up of late, of running railroad trains on the Sabbath, in connection with various religious services, is, in the judgment of this association, a desecration of the day, which should be discountenanced by all our pastors and churches."

—The United Brethren church at Calusa, Ill, has been enjoying an extensive revival which has continued during seven weeks of the busiest season of the year. Seventy-two persons it is believed received pardon for sins.

—R F. Markham, formerly of Wheaton, more lately residing at Oberlin, has resigned the pastorate of the Congregational church at Guy's Mills, Pa., to take charge of a colored Cong church in Savannah, Ga., under commission from the Am. Miss. Association.

—The annual meeting of the American Missionary Association is announced for Oct. 27. at Middleton, Ct. Prof. Barbour of Bangor, is to preach the sermon and an attractive programme, with eminent speakers, has been arranged.

—Bishop Cummins says that auricular confession is a habit in every large American city where the Episcopal church is established.

—A meeting of business men was held last week in Lower Farwell Hall, to confer on the invitation to Mr. Moody to engage in revival work in Chicago, at which it appeared that the business men had a mind to the work, and had no fears about the accommodations and means. A committee of five was appointed to nominate a financial committee of fifty, and to call the meeting together again when they were ready to report.

The Home Circle.

Sabbath Rest.

The Sabbath is a type of heaven's own sweetness,
A hallowed foretaste of its life and light;
A day of rest, foreshadowing the completeness
Of days which know no night.

Six days of weariness and toil, succeeded
By the calm quietude of Sabbath rest,
Train us to welcome what we so much needed,
And make it doubly blest.

Here our best joys and fairest flowers are mortal·
We can but rest in peace one day in seven;
Bnt yonder, soon as we pass Death's dread portal,
Eternal rest is given.

The Sabbath here, in high communion blending,
With Christ, and all the heaven-bound pilgrim train,
Is more than blessed, but soon it has its ending,
And earth is earth again.

But yonder, in the land of milk and honey,
Where Jordan flows, the rest is evermore—
One everlasting Sabbath, bright and sunny,
Shines on that blissful shore.

All is immortal there; joys never wither,
And days no longer shadow into night;
With steady pace our feet are traveling thither,
To gain that land of light.

O happy Sabbath! when the church shall gather
Escaped forever from earth's wearying strife,
Like children round the table of their Father,
To live the deathless life:

And join the raptnrous song of adoration,
With all who fought the fadeless crown to win,
O endless Sabbath! Chorus of salvation!
When will thy joys begin?

The Pride of Fashion.

"If self must be denied,
And sin no more caressed,
They rather choose the way that's wide,
And strive to think it best."

Follow the fashions? Why not? No matter how expensive, foolish, absurd, despotic, ridiculous, ruinous to body, mind or soul, take the popular course—in the church and out of it.

No matter whether the dress be long or short, hooped or not hooped, Bloomer or not Bloomer, up to the knees or trailing in the mud and dirt, so be it is in the fashion. Is it fashionable to wear tight shoes, pinching the feet and toes? wear them—corns or no corns, all the same. Is it fashionable to wear jewelry? wear it—on the breast, the arms, the fingers, in the ears, rings from one to four on each finger—earrings, large and showy—necklaces, two or three in number, with hearts and crosses dependent from the same—bracelets, casing the arms half way to the elbow—a minute watch affixed to the waist, and moored to the neck with a golden cable—a world of little knick-knacks called "charms."

All right, on with them, cost or no cost, Bible or no Bible—it's the fashion. If a dress or shawl cost fifty, a hundred, or two hundred dollars, instead of five or ten, on with it, bankruptcy or no bankruptcy—it's the fashion—we'll go it, sink or swim.

Is it fashionable to write, puff, and read novels, go to the theater, the dance, play the fiddle? "On with the dance, let joy be unconfined." It is the fashion.

"Help, Lord, for men of virtue fail,
Religion loses ground,
The sons of violence prevail,
And treacheries abound."

Is it fashionable to make holiday feasts, New Year's calls, load the tables and side boards with wines, cordials, rich dainties, poisonous confectionaries, eat, drink, gormandize, play the glutton, the drunkard, and starve the poor? Go ahead, it's the fashion—no matter. all right! "Like priest, like people."

Is it fashionable to hold fancy fairs, tea-parties, soirees, oyster suppers, picnics, etc., to raise money to sustain the pastor, pay off church debts, cushion the pulpit, etc., have a jolly time of it, eat and drink to the full, return home before the morning dawns—no matter, let us do evil that good may come. Sometimes, also, sinners, men of the world, have balls, dancing parties, etc., for the benefit of the poor, the widows, and the orphans, on the same principle—it's the fashion. Money we want—money we will have.

"Fashion rules the world, and a most tyrannical mistress she is, compelling people to submit to the most inconvenient thing imaginable, for fashion's sake. She pinches our feet with tight shoes, or chokes us with a tight handkerchief, or squeezes the breath out of our body by tight lacing.

She makes people sit up at nights when they ought to be in bed and keep them in bed in the morning when they ought to be up and doing.

She makes it vulgar to wait on ourselves, and genteel to live idle and useless.

She makes people visit when they would rather stay at home, eat when they are not hungry, and drink when they are not thirsty.

She invades our pleasures and interrupts our business.

She compels people to dress gaily, whether upon their property or that of others; whether agreeable to the word of God or the dictates of pride.

She ruins the health and produces sickness, destroys life and occasions death.

She makes foolish parents, invalids of children, and servants of all.

She is a tormentor of conscience, despoiler of morality, an enemy of religion, and no one can be her companion and enjoy either.

She is a despot of the highest grade, full of intrigue and cunning; and yet husbands, wives, fathers, mothers, sons, daughters, and servants, black and white, voluntarily have become her obedient servants and slaves, and vie with one another to see who shall be most obsequious."

Dr. Edward Dixon, in "Natural History of Crime," asks, "Is it saying more than can be substantiated, that our national taste for low and unintellectual adornments is the cause of half the dishonest failures, half the divorces, elopements, and crimes of a more secret and revolting character, that occur in our cities?"

There is no truth more firmly established among medical men, than that disease follows fashion as much as bonnets do. When thin slippers prevail, consumption is the prevailing epidemic with females in every fashionable community in the country. When the low neck-dresses are in the ascendant, sore throat and quinsy are the raging maladies. When "bustles" and "bishops" made their appearance, spinal affections became "the ton." The reign of corsets is denoted by collapsed lungs, dyspepsia, and a general derangement of the digestive organs. Indeed so intimately are dress and disease connected, that an eminent and skillful doctor says, that all he needs to determine of what a majority of the fashionable women are dying, is to have an inventory of their wardrobe handed to him.

If there is any one fashion more cruel and absurd than another, it is that of making little girl's dresses and skirts to be worn entirely off from the shoulder. One cannot meet a child whose mother is more fashionable than wise, without feeling distressed for the efforts of the little one to use its arms, and constant shrugging of the shoulders, to give one or the other a little liberty.

The fashion undoubtedly does much to cause the almost universal deformity of the shoulders observable in women.

And is there no other evil attendant on this loose mode of dressing, save ill-health and personal deformity? Take from a lovely girl, modesty, virtuous purity, a sense of female delicacy, and what remains?

"Whatever dims thy sense of truth
Or stains thy purity,
Tho' slight as breath of summer air,
Count it as sin to thee."

Author of "Shining Light."

Pray for him.

That is, pray for your pastor. He is a mortal man, and if a good one, is fully sensible of his weakness and shortcomings. He needs a knowledge of the fact that in your meetings and families you do not fail to plead with God that he will give his blessing. It is wonderful how a depressed pastor takes heart when he hears a good man or woman affectionately beseeching God to fit him for his work, and bless it to those over whom he has charge. He feels fortified and strengthened by the upholding hands and hearts of the saints, and looks for a blessing, because a blessing, such as God has promised, is asked by those most deeply interested.

We once heard a minister say in a sermon, "Brethren, it would be a happy thing for the church if people would pray more for their pastors and talk less about them." The discussions are supposed to indicate a certain kind of interest, and they do; but it is not the healthy interest exhibited by those who hold their connections with heaven. Pray for your minister, and beyond saying something to help now and then, talk but little. There will be enough to do all the criticising, fault-finding, and belittling; let it be your enjoyment to ask the blessing of God. And when you pray, it is not that you simply ask for external blessings, such as belong to his home and family, but that you seek the more important ones of spiritual strength and facility, and a blessing on his work. If you take his sermon as he preaches it, to God, asking him to make it effective, you infinitely add to its value. If you seek a blessing on him in his study, his walk among the people, his preaching and other public work, you will be like Aaron and Hur, holding up the hands of the leader of the congregation. Therefore, pray for him. If you do pray, pray more; if you do not, begin it at once.—United Presbyterian.

Prehistoric America.

Ever since the discovery of precious metals along the southern border of Colorado, prospectors and explorers have brought back vague and fabulous stories of a ruined civilization, entirely different and far superior to any now known among the aborigines. In some notes on this curious locality by Mr. Ernest Ingersoll, naturalist, who accompanied Hayden's expedition, he says:

Perhaps the most interesting section visited by us was included among the canyons which drain southward into the San Juan river. This "canyon country," as it is called, is of the most peculiar geological character, showing everywhere curious effects of erosion and atmospheric carving, resulting in a succession of table lands (mesas) cut into terrific canyons, having absolutely perpendicular walls and rocky faces from 500 to 1,500 feet high. This region is now occupied by Weeminches and Pi-ute Indians, but traces of a former inhabitancy were everywhere to be seen by those looking for them, and we here found evidences in profusion of a civilization antedating anything at present known in North America, that threw into the shade all else. We first found in the canyon of the Rio Mancos mounds of earth concealing piles of earthenware, masonry, and strewn with fragments of pottery, ornamented by imprinted designs on the outside, and glazed and painted within. Then the mounds become more numerous, and clustered into villages; vestiges of ancient walls of regularly cut stone, and round towers in an excellent state of preservation, together with the remains of underground workshops, appeared. These were in the villages, and recorded the prosperous condition at that time of this ancient people when all these fertile river bottoms blossomed and bore fruit in abundance. But afterwards adversity came. They evidently were a peaceful people, and, attacked by hordes from the north—a war of Goths and Vandals surging down upon their Roman civilization—they fled to the clifts of these wonderful canyons near by, and there erected houses upon ledges and benches in the very face of the bluffs, where nothing but a bird could reach them except by a single dizzy trail, capable of being defended by one against a thousand. Here they were secure from attack, but were ill able to stand long sieges, and gradually left even these swallows' nests to move south into the "mesas" of Arizona, and there, decimated in numbers and broken in spirit, hid away from their pursuers. Even now we can find their remnants in the Moquis villages. Now, this is not poetry, but reality, and you find their houses now, built of carefully cut stone, faced smoothly without, two and three stories high, plastered and painted within 200 feet sheer up to the top of the bluff, 800 feet sheer down to the bottom. How they got to them is in some cases yet apparent in the steps and zigzag paths cut in the face of the rock, but in most unknown, probably been eradicated by erosion through time.—Un. Presbyterian.

The Religious Press.

The religious press is an American institution, the parallel of which does not exist elsewhere. In England there are religious journals, but they are something between a tract and a magazine, and have but little influence on public affairs. An American religious journal, on the contrary, is strictly a newspaper, giving a weekly record of current events, which it makes the subject of its comments. It is not so occupied with the affairs of another world as to have slight concern with this one. It is rather an interested and close observer of the living, active world which we "secular" journalists regard—only looking at it from a different point of view, as it effects those moral and religious interests of society which it regards as supreme. It looks on public affairs not with the eye of a politician, to whom events are important or otherwise as they effect his party; nor of a man of business, who weighs everything in his financial scales; but as believing in human interests that are far more important; and which therefore tries to balance the engrossing excitement of politics and business by continually throwing into the public mind sobering religious reflections.—*N. Japanese Paper.

The Revue Orientale Mensuelle gives some curious details concerning the manufacture of paper in Japan. Most of this article is prepared from the bark of Broussonetia papyrifera, the paper mulberry cultivated in our gardens. The other materials that contribute a share are the bark of Passerina gampi, and some species of Edgeworthia, which generally yield a sort not unlike our straw-paper. But the first-named plant gives all kinds, from the coarsest packing to the finest note-paper, and even that which is used for filtering the well-known Japan varnish. The most remarkable of this bark is the tenacity it imparts to the paper made of it, which is owing to its fibers being preserved throughout all the manipulations it undergoes, whereas in our European sorts they are reduced to a pulp, both by chemical processes and the effects of machinery. Certain it is that our papers, dating from two or three centuries back, are infinitely stronger, though less pleasing to the eye than our modern ones, which, when folded, are sure to tear in a very short time along the fold. Japanese paper, on the contrary, like our old kinds, does not tear easily in any direction, and this is why it can be employed in many ways unknown to us in Europe. They make unbrellas, parasols, bags, and even carpets, window-panes, and ropes of it; it is woven into stuffs with silks or cotton. If dipped into the oil of Perilla yegoma, it becomes excellent packing paper; and the sort called "crape" has a wonderful elasticity, superior to that of our textile fabrics. Our paper has lost the qualities we find in that of old books; first, because rags are seldom used alone on account of their high price; then because even they have lost much of their tenacity by being woven by machinery; also, because they are bleached by means of chlorine. It would be well if our paper manufacturers were to borrow a few hints from their predecessors of at least a century ago.—Tribune.

The value of family worship is greatly dependent on the manner and spirit of its observance. That done carelessly and spiritlessly becomes insipid and distasteful. A spiritless manner of reading or of prayer is reflex in its influence on the soul. It tends to make the soul of him who practices it, and of those who join in the service, still more spiritless. On the other hand, animated, solemn reading and fervent style of prayer assists the soul of worshipers toward increased warmth and vitality. It is well that the Scripture to be used should have been previously read, meditated upon, and its spirit fully imbibed by the parent previous to its being read in family worship. It is also very important that a good degree of spirituality should be maintained by him who is to be as a priest in his own house. Otherwise the souls of others may fail of that degree of profit which should be expected from the service. But it must be remembered also that as cold pews induce coldness in the pulpit, so coldness in the hearts of the family group tends to coldness in the heart and service of him who leads in devotion. Family worship, when kept up in its true spirit, tends to the making of a paradise of home; it is the life of the church to which praying families belong; and it sends out an influence and secures results which tell on time and are harvested in eternity.—Telescope.

—If men plot against your interests, commit your way to God in prayer. Thus you will have the advantage, for those who secretly devour their neighbor cannot go to God and ask him to crown their efforts with success.

—Martin Luther, in writing to a friend said: "I regard it as an abundant reward of my labors to know that I live only to serve others."

—That is not the best sermon which makes the hearers go away talking one to another, and praising the speaker; but which makes them go away thoughtful and serious, and hastening to be alone.

—Writing, as multiplied by the printing-press, is the light which photographs, as it were, every step of human progress, in signs remaining visible and intelligible to all future generations; preserving and extending every branch of knowledge, and daily carrying the thoughts of the wisest into regions where knowledge has never penetrated."—Pumphrey's Art of Writing.

Children's Corner.

The Santal Cripple.

Among all the bright and attractive things, in sunny India, Santal girls are the brightest and merriest. Their bounding, free life, overflowing vivacity, sprightliness, and above all their warmth of heart, contrasts gratefully with the sickly delicacy and shyness of most Hindu girls and women.

At ten years of age, Santa Salma was the fairest of the many little brides that left their homes at R——to go to their mothers-in-law and become their pets or slaves, according to their prejudice or mood.

Salma soon won her new mother's heart, and her lovely face, robust health and merry heart, made her welcome everywhere; in the jungle chases, the rice sowing and reaping, the moonlight dances, and especially in the daily home life, where she spun her tark, cooked the rice and curry, and lent a helping hand constantly.

But the old story which has been many a lovely woman's heart experience in Christian lands in Salma's.

Strong drink made her husband a beast. The crops were left unreaped, the thatched hut began to tumble in, and her five little ones were hungry and naked. Then came the struggle for life. The heavy field-work fell upon her, day and night she strove to keep her little ones alive and support her wretched husband, but her fresh youth was gone, and her over-taxed energies gave way. Insidious disease developed itself and left poor Salma a cripple for life. Her weary limbs refused to do their wonted tasks, and the barest necessaries of life were wanting, and she was almost as helpless as the little ones that clung to her.

She says:—"The first day my husband found no curry and rice ready for him, he rushed at me in a terrible rage, beat me and told me to leave the house. But his passion died out that time, and I staid and tried to keep the family together, and by my spinning and planning the work for my children, I succeeded for one whole year, every day of which my husband told me that I was a burden to him; that he had another wife he wished to bring home, and I must go.

"Oh! those were dark days, but how good the Lord was to me, though I didn't know it then. One morning I went out on my little verandah and tried to get warm in the bright sun, and then the blessed truth began to warm my cold heart.

"A Santal teacher had a school of boys on the verandah opposite me, and he was just commencing school in the morning, and the children sang, "I'm a sinner, but Jesus can save me just now," and many other beautiful words about Jesus and heaven, and then altogether they said, 'Our Father who art in Heaven.' (Then the tears began to roll down her wrinkled face which fairly shone with joy, and seemed almost to reflect the glory beyond the veil of which she was catching bright glimpses.) I listened, and thought again and again. Yes, I'm a sinner, but who is Jesus that can save me just now? and who is my Father in Heaven who gives us our daily bread and forgives us our sins? Ah! how I longed to know, and every morning I went to hear the hymn and prayer until I had learned them by heart, and again and agin I asked the teacher what it meant? But he had not then learned who Jesus and our Heavenly Father are, and all he could say was, 'It's all written in the little books the Saheb gave us, and he told all the teachers to teach it to the children, and let them say it every morning. It's something that is written in the Saheb's Shasters: it's the Saheb's religion. They sing and pray a great deal.' Then I thought, 'I'll sing and pray too, may be some day in the future I will understand everything about it.'

"My husband grew more and more abusive, till one day my brother got a cart and put me on it, and we all went to my brother's, and how can I tell you about my great joy, when I found that they had just embraced the Saheb's religion, and could tell me all about it; and oh! what a blessed day it was to me when I knew that Jesus had forgiven me, and saved me just then. Soon after the Saheb came to see my brothers, and two or three other Christians in this little village, and after I had told him of my peace and hope, he spoke to me about confessing Christ publicly; so the next Sabbath morning my brothers put me on a little stool and carried me into the water and I was baptized in the presence of all my old friends, and now I try to tell everybody I see how precious Jesus is to me."

Salma's youth is all gone, a few thin gray hairs fall over her wrinkled brow, and her soft black eyes are fast growing dim, but she has learned to go on little errands for the great Master.

With one trembling hand she grasps her cane, and with the other the rafters, and drags herself along the edge of the verandah on some little mission of love for a poor sufferer, or for the little ones that cling to her. Every Sabbath she comes to the chapel in a little cart that her kind brothers have made for her, and her earnest attention is an inspiration to the speaker, and as she smilingly looks up and says, "My work is almost done, I shall soon go home,' our hearts respond, "How good it is to be a cripple like Salma." —Sel.

Serpents of all species shed their skins annually, like sea-crabs and lobsters.

It is believed that crocodiles live to be hundreds of years old. The Egyptians embalmed them.

The head of the rattle-snake has been known to inflict a fatal wound after being severed from the body.

Michigan State Meeting.

The friends in Michigan will take notice that their State Executive committee have appointed the first anniversary of their association to be held in Ypsilanti, Washtenaw county, October 27–29. Ypsilanti is easily reached from all parts of the State, being located on the Michigan Central railroad thirty miles from Detroit. Arrangements are being made for a good representation of good speakers and for a setting into activity the organization already affected. Let every reformer in the State make it a business to attend if possible and roll on the ball.

McHenry County, Ill.

We, the undersigned, believing that secret societies are in their nature contrary to the principles of Christianity and true republicanism, and that Freemasonry especially is a dangerous power in our government, do therefore invite and earnestly entreat all who believe with us in this matter to meet in convention at the court-house in Woodstock on Thursday, Oct. 14th, at 10 o'clock A. M., to discuss this whole subject and to consider the nomination of candidates for county officers who shall be free from all secret obligations of partiality towards any portion of the people.

Members of McHenry County Christian Association, opposed to secret societies, are especially requested to meet promptly at 10 o'clock A. M.

Chautauqua County, N. Y.

The semi-annual meeting of the Chautauqua Co., N. Y. Association opposed to secret societies will be held at Fredonia, 19th and 20th of Oct., commencing at 1 o'clock P. M., 19th. All who are opposed to having the church of Christ and our government ruled by secret cliques and clans, are especially invited to attend, male and female. Our State agent, J. L. Barlow, has promised to be with us, God willing. Other able speakers will address the convention, and by the blessing of God it shall be a glorious success.

Call for the Illinois State Convention Opposed to Secret Societies.

The Convention of the Illinois Christian Association will be held in the Congregational church, Peoria, Ill., commencing, D V., on Tuesday, the 9th day of next November, and ending on the night of the 10th.

The object of the Association is "To expose, withstand, and remove secret societies, Freemasonry in particular, and other anti-Christian movements, in order to save the churches of Christ from being depraved; to redeem the administration of justice from perversion, and our Republican form of government from corruption."

Questions of great public interest will form the topics of the distinguished speakers expected to address the Convention.

The banishment of the Bible from our public schools in Chicago, and elsewhere; the increase in activity and power of the Jesuits, and the oath-bound fraternity named Freemasons, &c., will each be discussed in their relation to the religion of Christ, and the politics of our country; and their abounding sophistries and delusions will be held up to the gaze of an enlightened people.

Freemasonry is the religion of deism and idolatrous rites. Its government is despotic, and demands a blind obedience from its votaries. It is an incubus upon free conscience and free speech. It has no need of a Mediator between God and man, and disregards the One, Christ Jesus; and it promises its faithful followers a happy eternity in its lodge above.

It is high time that our nation should awake to the danger which threatens it, and that sound views should be disseminated among the people. The forces against Christianity and republicanism are very active. Let us remember that our country drifted into one great civil war from over weaning confidence, and let us beware of committing the sad error regarding the usurper of the rights of conscience and free speech.

Eternal vigilance is the price of Liberty.

Your attendance at the Convention and your name in support of the good cause is respectfully solicited.

Late Past Master of Keystone Lodge No. 639, Chicago, Ill.

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1875.
BY EDMOND RONAYNE.
In the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington, D. C.

[Entered Apprentice Degree Continued.]

Junior Deacon:—To guard against the approach of cowans and eaves-droppers and see that noue pass or repass except those who are duly qualified and have permission.

Worshipful Master:—Thank you.

Worshipful Master:—(gives one rap.) Bro. Senior Warden.

Senior Warden:—Worshipful Master.

Worshipful Master:—Whence came you?

Senior Warden:—From the lodge of the Saints John at Jerusalem.

Worshipful Master:—What came you here to do?

Senior Warden:—To learn to subdue my passions and improve myself in Masonry.

Worshipful Master:—Then you are a Mason I presume.

Senior Warden:—I am; so taken and accepted among brothers and fellows.

Worshipful Master:—What makes you a Mason?

Senior Warden:—My obligation.

Worshipful Master:—Where were you made a Mason?

Senior Warden:—In a regularly constituted lodge of Masons.

Worshipful Master:—What number constitutes a lodge of Masons?

Senior Warden:—Seven or more.

Worshipful Master:—When of seven only, of whom do they consist?

Senior Warden:—Of the Worshipful Master, Senior and Junior Wardeus, Treasurer, Secretary, Senior and Junior Deacons.

Worshipful Master:—The Junior Deacon's place in the lodge?

Senior Warden:—At the right hand of the Senior Warden in the West.

The Worshipful Master gives two raps which calls all the officers to their feet.

Worshipful Master:—Your duty, brother Junior Deacon?

Junior Deacon:—To carry messages from the Senior Warden in the West to the Junior Warden in the South and elsewhere about the lodge as directed: to prepare and present candidates, and see that the lodge is duly tyled.

Worshipful Master:—Brother Junior Deacon, the Senior Deacon's place?

Worshipful Master:—Your duty, brother Senior Deacon?

Senior Deacon:—To carry orders from the Worshipful Master in the East to the Senior Warden in the West, and elsewhere about the lodge as required: to receive and conduct candidates, and to introduce and accommodate visiting brethren.

Worshipful Master:—Brother Senior Deacon, the Secretary's place?

Worshipful Master:—Your duty, brother Secretary?

Secretary:—To observe the will and pleasure of the Worshipful Master; record all the proceedings of this lodge proper to be written; transmit a copy thereof to the Grand Lodge when required; receive all monies from the hands of the brethren and pay the same over to the Treasurer taking his receipt therefor.

Worshipful Master:—Brother Secretary, the Treasurer's place?

Secretary:—At your right, Worshipful.

Worshipful Master:—Your duty, brother Treasurer?

Treasurer:—To observe the will and pleasure of the Worshipful Master; receive all monies from the hands of the Secretary, keep a just and true account of the same and pay them out by order of the Worshipful Master and the consent of the lodge.

Worshipful Master:—Brother Treasurer, the Junior Wardeu's station?

Treasurer:—In the South, Worshipful.

Worshipful Master:—Why in the South, brother Junior Warden?

Junior Warden:—As the sun in the South at meridian height is the beauty and glory of the day, so stands the Junior Warden in the South the better to observe the time, call the craft from labor to refreshment, superintend them during the hour thereof; see that none convert the means of refreshment into intemperance or excess; call them them to labor again at the order of the Worshipful Master, that he may have pleasure and the craft profit thereby.

Worshipful Master:—Brother Junior Warden, the Senior Warden's station?

Junior Warden:—In the West, Worshipful.

Worshipful Master:—Why in the West, brother Senior Warden?

Senior Warden:—As the sun is in the West at the close of the day, so is the Senior Warden in the West to assist the Worshipful Master in opening and closing the lodge: pay the craft their wages, if any be due, so than none may go away dissatisfied, harmony being the strength and support of all institutions, more especially ours.

Worshipful Master:—Brother Senior Warden, the Worshipful Master's station?

Senior Warden:—In the East, Worshipful.

Worshipful Master:—Why in the East, brother Senior Warden?

Senior Warden:—As the sun rises in the East to open and govern the day, so rises the Worshipful Master in the East [here the Worshipful Master rises to his feet] to open and govern his lodge, set the craft to work and give them proper instructions.

Worshipful Master:—Brother Senior Warden, it is my order that Keystone Lodge, No. 639, be now opened on the first degree of Masonry; this you will communicate to the Junior Warden in the South, and he to the brethren present, that all may have due notice thereof and govern themselves accordingly.

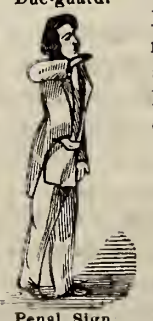
Senior Warden:—(one rap) Brother Junior Warden, it is the order of the Worshipful Master that Keystone Lodge, No. 639, be now opened on the first degree of Masonry; this you will communicate to the brethren present that all may have due notice thereof and govern themselves accordingly.

Junior Warden:—(gives three raps which call up the entire lodge.) Brethren, it is the order of the Worshipful Master communicated to me by way of the West, that Keystone Lodge, No. 639, be now opened on the first degree in Masonry; take due notice thereof and govern yourselves accordingly.

Worshipful Master:—Together brethren.—Here the Master and all the members present in concert make the due-guard and sign of the Entered Apprentice, the Master always leading off.

Due-guard.

The due-guard is made by holding out the left hand a few inches from the body and on a line with the lower button of the vest with the palm open and turned upward. Now place the open palm of the right hand horizontally across the left and about two or three inches above it. (See Fig.) This is in allusion to the manner in which an Entered Apprentice' hands are placed while taking the obligation; "The left hand supporting the Bible, square and compass, and the right resting thereon." [See Entered Apprentice' Obligation, page——.]



Penal Sign.

Now drop the left hand carelessly and draw the right gracefully across the throat (palm open) and drop it perpendicularly to your side. [See Fig.] This is called the "penal sign" or "sign of an Entered Apprentice," and alludes to the penalty of the obligation "having my throat cut across, my tongue torn out by the roots," etc. [See Entered Apprentice' Obligation.)

The Worshipful Master immediately after making the sign gives one rap with his gavel, the Senior Warden one, and the Junior Warden one; after which he proceeds:

Worshipful Master:—Brethren, before declaring the lodge open let us reverently invoke the blessing of Deity.

OPENING PRAYER.

Supreme Ruler of the universe, we would reverently invoke thy blessing at this time; wilt thou be pleased to grant that this meeting thus begun in order may be conducted in peace and closed in harmony. Amen. Response by the brethren: 'So mote it be."

OR;

Most holy and glorious Lord God, the great Architect of the Universe, the giver of all good gifts and graces: thou hast promised that "where two or three are gathered together in thy name thou wilt be in their midst and bless them." In thy name we have assembled and in thy name we desire to proceed in all our doings. Grant that the sublime principles of Freemasonry may so subdue every discordant passion within us, so harmonize and enrich our hearts with thine own love and goodness that the lodge at this time may humbly reflect that order and beauty which reign forever before thy throne. Amen. Response by the brethren: "So mote it be."

Worshipful Master:—Accordingly I declare Keystone Lodge, No. 639, opened in form on the first degree of Masonry. Brother Senior Deacon, arrange the altar. Brother Junior Deacon inform the tyler.

The Senior Deacon proceeds to the altar, (situated in the center of the room opposite the Junior Warden's station. See page —) opens the Bible usually at Psalm 123, and places upon it the square and compass (the latter open) with both points of the compass below the square in the manner shown at the head of this chapter, and returns to his place. The Junior Deacon at the same time gives three knocks at the door which are answered by three from the tyler outside. The Junior Deacon then gives one which is answered by one from the tyler; the door is opened and the Junior Deacon whispers to the tyler that the lodge is opened on the first degree, after which he closes the door and reports to the Master: "The tyler is informed, Worshipful," when the Master gives one rap and the lodge is seated.

The foregoing is literally the correct method of opening a lodge of Entered Apprentice Masons, which lodge is technically termed by the craft the "Ground floor of King Solomon's temple." In concluding this chapter it may be well to remark on the use of the gavel, that one rap calls the lodge to order, one beats the lodge when standing, two call up all the officers and any particular officer addressed, and three raps call up the entire lodge. Bearing this in mind the Masonic student, whether initiated or not, will be better enabled to understand the ceremony of opening and closing on the two degrees that follow.

CHAPTER II.

There is no material difference in the internal arrangements of a lodge of Entered Apprentices, Fellow Crafts, or Master Masons. The officers in each case are the same and although the rituals of the Second and Third degrees particularize the number of Masons which constitute each of these lodges, yet a lodge of Fellow Crafts or Master Masons is never opened and no work is ever performed unless there are at least seven members besides the tyler present. As the pretended ground-work of Freemasonry is laid at the building of King Solomon's Temple and as a lodge of Apprentices is termed the "ground floor," so a lodge of Fellow Crafts is technically called the "middle chamber" and that of Master Masons the "sanctum sanctorum" or more properly the "unfinished sanctum sanctorum" or "Holy of Holies" of King Solomon's Temple. It may be further remarked that in every case when Masons meet in lodge for Masonic work a lodge of Apprentices must invariably be opened first and the other two lodges afterwards in regular succession. This being therefore the invariable rule we shall now proceed in regular form to open a lodge of Fellow Crafts and after that a lodge of Master Masons; simply premising that the raps given by the Master and Junior Deacon are in all particulars similar to those given at the opening of a lodge in the first degree and hence no further mention is made of the raps either now or at closing the lodge in any or all of the three degrees. Supposing that the lodge is "regularly" assembled for work and that there is work to be done in all the three degrees we shall first explain how the various lodges are opened and then proceed to give the correct work. .

SECOND OR FELLOW CRAFT DEGREE.

OPENING CEREMONIES.

Worshipful Master:—(one rap) Brother Senior Warden, will you be off or from?

Senior Warden:—From.

Worshipful Master:—From what and to what?

Senior Warden:—From the degree of an Entered Apprentice to that of a Fellow Craft.

Worshipful Master:—Are all present Fellow Crafts?

Senior Warden:—All present are Fellow Crafts, Worshipful. (Should there be one or more Entered Apprentices present the Senior Warden will report "All present are not Fellow Crafts, Worshipful," upon which the Master will request "All those below the degree of a Fellow Craft to retire." Entered Apprentices step to the altar, give the due-guard and sign, and retire to the ante-room.)

Worshipful Master:—Brother Senior Warden, as a further evidence you will cause the brothers Senior and Junior Deacons to approach the West, receive from them the pass, cause them to proceed upon your right and left, collect the pass from the brethren and convey it to the East.

Senior Warden:—Brother Senior and Junior Deacon you will approach the West and give me the pass of a Fellow Craft Mason.

The Senior and Junior Deacons meeting at the altar, approach the Senior Warden's station to whom they communicate in a whisper the pass of a Fellow Craft which is Shibboleth; they then cross to opposite sides of the hall (the Senior Deacon being on the right of the Senior Warden and the Junior Deacon on his left) and in this manner proceed to collect the pass from every member in the room except the Master and Junior Warden. Having collected the pass they meet in front of the Master's chair where they again cross to their respective sides of the lodge when they face each other and the Junior Deacon gives the pass to the Senior and the Senior to the Worshipful Master, who answers: "The pass is right," and the Deacons return to their respective places.

I have been somewhat particular in describing this ceremony, because though simple in itself I have met but very few Deacons who were able to perform it with neatness and precision, and further because it is a ceremony which must on no occasion be omitted either in the Grand or Blue Lodge.

Worshipful Master:—Brother Senior Warden, are you a Fellow Craft?

Senior Warden:—I am: try me.

Worshipful Master:—How will you be tried?

Senior Warden:—By the square.

Worshipful Master:—Why by the square?

Senior Warden:—Because it is an emblem of morality and one of the working tools of a Fellow Craft.

Worshipful Master:—What is a square?

Senior Warden:—An angle of ninety degrees or the fourth part of a circle.

Worshipful Master:—What makes you a Fellow Craft?

Senior Warden:—My obligation.

Worshipful Master:—Where were you made a Fellow Craft?

Senior Warden:—In a regularly constituted lodge of Fellow Crafts.

Worshipful Master:—What number constitutes a lodge of Fellow Crafts?

Senior Warden:—Five or more.

Worshipful Master:—When of five only of whom do they consist?

Senior Warden:—Of the Worshipful Master, Senior and Junior Wardens, Senior and Junior Deacons?

Worshipful Master:—The Junior Deacon's place in the lodge?

Senior Warden:—At the right hand of the Senior Warden in the West.

Worshipful Master:—(two raps) Brother Junior Deacon, the Senior Deacon's place?

Worshipful Master:—Brother Senior Deacon, the Junior Warden's place?

Senior Deacon:—In the South, Worshipful.

Worshipful Master:—Brother Junior Warden, the Senior Warden's station?

Junior Warden:—In the West, Worshipful.

Worshipful Master:—Brother Senior Warden, the Worshipful Master's station?

Senior Warden:—In the East, Worshipful.

Worshipful Master:—Why in the East?

Senior Warden:—As the sun rises in the East to open and govern the day, so rises the Worshipful Master in the East to open and govern his lodge, set the craft to work and give them proper instruction.

Worshipful Master:—Brother Senior Warden, it is my order that Keystone Lodge, No. 639, be now opened on the second degree of Masonry. This you will communicate to the Junior Warden in the South, and he to the brethren present, that all may have due notice thereof and govern themselves accordingly.

Senior Warden:—Brother Junior Warden, it is the order of the Worshipful Master that Keystone Lodge, No. 639, be now opened on the second degree of Masonry. This you will communicate to the brethren present that all may have due notice thereof and govern themselves accordingly.

Junior Warden:—(three raps) Brethren, it is the order of the Worshipful Master, communicated to me by way of the West that Keystone Lodge, No. 639, be now opened on the second degree of Masonry, take due notice thereof and govern yourselves accordingly.

Worshipful Master:—Together, brethren.

The Master leading off and all the members present looking towards the East, then make the due-guard and sign of a Fellow Craft as represented.

Sign and due guard of a Fellow Craft.

The due-guard of a Fellow Craft is made by holding out the right hand a few inches from the lower button of the vest with the fingers extended and palm turned downward; raise the left arm so as to form a right angle at the elbow with the fingers extended and palm turned outward. This is in allusion to the position in which the hands are placed while taking the obligation, "My right hand resting on the Holy Bible, square and compass, my left forming a right angle," etc. Now drop the left hand carelessly to the side and draw the right hand (with the fingers a little bent and turned inward) swiftly across the breast from left to right and the hand perpendicularly to the side. This is called the sign of a Fellow Craft and is in allusion to the penalty of the obligation, "Having my left breast torn open," etc. (See Obligation of Fellow Craft, page .)

The Master gives two raps with his gavel, the Senior Warden two, and the Junior Warden two, and the Master exclaims:

Worshipful Master:—Accordingly I declare Keystone Lodge No. 639, open in form on the second degree of Masonry. Brother Senior Deacon, arrange the altar. Brother Junior Deacon, so inform the tyler. The Senior Deacon in this case lifts one point of the compass above the square; the Master gives one rap and the lodge is seated.

News of the Week.

General.

The army head-quarters long at Leavenworth are to be removed to Denver ——The State of Ohio has commenced the erection of its building in the Centennial grounds. Similar buildings will be put up by Massachusetts, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Illinois, Indiana, Michigan, Wisconsin, Kansas, and Missouri. The English Commission has applied for an extension of its space in the park for the erection of a third building. The reception of applications for exhibiting space will be discontinued after Oct. 30.——In the September statement of the National Debt a reduction is shown of $3,342,000. The coin balances amount to $67,500,000, and the value of the gold certificates in circulation is only $11,500,000 said to be the lowest of any time within the past seven years. The scarcity of gold in the market is thus indicated.—— Shepard, Hall & Co., lumber dealers of Boston, have failed for $1,500 000. ——The commissioners treating for the Black Hills reservation came near being massacred by the savages lately. The prompt action of a friendly chief and his tribe prevented it.

Foreign.

Last Sunday was selected by the papists of Toronto for a pilgrimage from church to church in the city in honor of certain promulgations. The procession was accompanied by a large force of police and military, but was attacked by Orangemen and several police and a large number of others were severely wounded with stones and pistol shots.——The 50th anniversary of the opening of the first steam railway was celebrated at Darlington and Stockton in Northeastern England, Sep. 27th. ——A special telegram from Berlin says that the Bishop of Breslau has notified the Ecclesiastical Court that he is determined not to obey its summons to attend for trial, on the ground that the court is not competent to try him ——A Breslau paper says that twenty-three priests in that diocese have announced their submission to the ecclesiastical laws.——A Paris dispatch says that special information received there confirms the impression that the Carlists gained considerable success near San Sebastian on Tuesday. L'Univers reports that one hundred Alfonsists were killed, and one thousand wounded.——An Imperial decree from Constantinople orders one-fourth the tithes exempted from the taxes of the agricultural populations that remain at peace. The insurgents have been defeated in northern Bosnia.——Immediate war between England and China is not considered possible.

Home and Health Hints.

A woman of the improved kind writes to the Agriculturist: "You will think I have improved some when I tell you that we have slept with the windows open all winter, and the children have never suffered so little from colds as this winter. We have no stove in the south-east bed-room, and like it better so. As soon as we are out of our beds in the morning I open them, and open the outside door in my room, and the windows, for an hour or so. It is so cold in my room at night that a cup of water will freeze solid, but we will get along with it nicely. None of us have frozen noses yet, which is almost a wonder. My husband used to think he could not sleep with a window open in moderate weather without catching cold, but there is no trouble now."

WASHING WOOLENS.—Professor Artus, who has devoted himself to the discovery of the reason why woolen clothing, when washed with soap and water, will insist upon shrinking and becoming thick, and acquiring that peculiar odor and feeling which so annoys housekeepers, says these evil effects are due to the decomposition of soap by the acids present in the perspiration and other waste of the skin which the clothing absorbs. The fat of the soap is then precipitated upon the wool. These effects may be prevented by steeping the articles in a warm solution of washing soda for several hours, then adding some warm water and a few drops of ammonia. The woolens are then to be washed out, and rinsed in lukewarm water.

To Extinguish Kerosene Flames.—One of the most ready means is to throw a cloth of some kind over the flames, and thus stifle them; but as the cloth is not always convenient to the kitchen, where such accidents are most likely to occur, some one recommends flour as a substitute, and which, it is said, promptly extinguishes the flames. It rapidly absorbs the fluid, deadens the flame, and can be readily gathered up and thrown out of doors when the fire is out.

Farm and Garden.

Facts about Shoeing Horses.

A writer in the New York Herald states some facts about how horses should be shod, which are worthy the consideration of blacksmiths and farmers as well: Most of the horse-shoers of the country prepare the foot, fit a shoe, and secure it to the hoof in the same manner that a wood-butcher fits a shoe to an old wood ox-sled. The mechanism of a horse's hoof is one of the most wonderful and ingenious structures that can be found in all the works of the Creator. Beneath and in the rear of every hoof there is a frog, which is a tough and elastic pad for preventing injury to the animal whenever he plants his foot suddenly on any hard substance. Large rolls or cylinders of india-rubber are placed beneath railroad cars to prevent injury to any part of the car or to the cargo with which it is loaded. The frog beneath the foot of a horse is designed to subserve a similar purpose. But the manner in which most horses are shod lifts them up, as it were, on short stilts, so that the frog cannot perform its appropriate functions. If we look carefully at the young horse when he is trotting or running, it will be perceived that every foot is brought down to the ground in such a manner that the frog receives the powerful blow By this means all injury to the animal is prevented. Science teaches us to permit the frog to develop and expand downward. But most blacksmiths seem to think that the all-wise Creator made a great mistake when he formed the hoofs of horses. Hence, they fall at the foot with red-hot burning irons, with edge tools, and with any other appliance that will enable them to remove this extraneous excrescence. Illustrious ninnies! Why not shave and burn away all the tough, callous, adipose tissue beneath their own heels, and allow the bare bones to rest on a plate of iron inside of their own boots and shoes?

Questions for Dairymen.

Mr. Willard says in his "Butter Book" that every dairyman should have a printed list of questions posted in some suitable place on his premises, where his family and those in his employ, as well as his visitors, will have opportunity to read frequently. We give some of them but the list can be extended:

Do your cows feed in swamps and on boggy lands?

Have you good, sweet running water convenient for stock, and is it abundant and permanent in hot, dry weather?

Have you shade trees in your pasture, or do you think that cows make better milk while lying down to rest in discomfort in the hot, broiling sun?

Do you use dogs and stones to hurry up the cows from pasture at milking time, thus overheating their blood and bruising their udders?

Do you cleanse the udders of cows before milking by washing their teats with their own milk, and practice further economy by allowing the droppings to go into the milk pail?

Do you enjoin upon your milkers to wash their hands thoroughly before sitting down to milk, or do you think that uncleanliness in this respect is not important for milk that is to be treated for butter making?

When a cow makes a misstep while being milked, do you allow your milkers to kick her with heavy boots, or to pound her over the back and sides with a heavy stool, accompanied by sundry profane remarks addressed to the cow to teach her manners?

Is the air about your "milk barn" or milk house reeking with the foul emanations of the pig sty, the manure heap, or other pestiferous odors?

Good, fresh, clean water, and in abundance, is one of the most important requisites for milk cows, and it should be in convenient places, where stock will not be required to travel long distances to slake their thirst. If springs and running streams cannot be had in pastures a good well, with windmill and pump, makes an efficient substitute, and the waste water may, if necessary, be conducted back into the well, so as to keep up a constant supply of good, fresh water.

A Rare Opportunity.

Jason C. Barthlomew of Ely, Linn Co., Iowa, has four mules which he wishes to dispose of on reasonable terms to aid in securing the Carpenter Donation. The mules are young; brown color, above average size, three of them broken to the harness, and the other to the halter. They will be sold for cash or for good interest-bearing notes.

Any person wishing to aid in the anti-secrecy reform can render valuable assistance to the cause by securing a purchaser Will not Bros. Dorcas, David Platner and others in that part of Iowa give special attention to this matter and write Brother Bartholomew at Ely, Iowa or to the subscriber at the Cynosure office.

FREE TRACTS.

A Tract Fund for the Free Distributirn of Tracts

HAS BEEN SECURED AND SHOULD NEVER BE EXHAUSTED. A friend has pledged this fund a dollar for every otherdollar received, so EVERY NEW SUBSCRIPTION TO THE TRACT FUND COUNTS DOUBLE, and thus $10.00 pays for 20,000 pages of tracts.

The distribution of these tracts has already saved hundreds of young men from the lodge, but there is a great lack of funds to supply the constantly increasing demand for Free Tracts.

During the year ending July 1st, 1875 a little less than 150.000 pages of Cynosure Tracts were gratuitously sent out, mostly in very small lots. The present demand is fully 100.000 pages per month. but funds are lacking to meet it.

Many of our most earnest workers in this cause of God are poor men, who would be glad to circulate thousands of pages of Antimasonic litcrature if they could have them free.

SHALL WE NOT HAVE AN INEXHAUSTIBLE TRACT FUND?

"THE ANTI-MASONS SCRAP BOOK."

ONE HUNDRED CLUBS OF TEN for the month of October! Shall we not have them? It would greatly encourage and strengthen us as well as confer a real favor on the thousand subscribers.

Postage on the Cynosure.

THE POSTAGE ON THE CYNOSURE MUST BE PAID AT CHICAGO. It is twenty cents a year.

The cost of postage now depends entirely on the size and weight, and therefore some smaller papers charge but fifteen cents; and others about the size of the Cynosure charge twenty-five cents a year for postage.

If the subscription price of the CYNOSURE was $2.50 or $3.00 a year, the price of many religious papers containing no more reading matter, we might afford to pay the postage ourselves, but at $2.00 a year we cannot do this with our present Subscription list.

Therefore let all send the postage, 20 cents a year, 10 cents for half a year with their renewals.

The commission on one new subscription for a year will pay the postage on your own and the new subscriber's paper. We would rather have the postage paid by commissions than in any other way.

When postage is not paid we shall have to shorten the time of subscription sufficiently to pay it.
